RULES OF PRACTICE

FOR THE

Supreme Court of the State of Florida.

RULE 1. It shall be required of an applicant for admission as an Attorney and Counsellor in this Court, that he shall have practised as such in a Circuit Court of this State, and have sustained a fair private and professional character, and that he take the following oath: "I, ———, do solemnly swear that I will demean myself as an Attorney or Counsellor of the Court, uprightly and according to law, and that I will support, maintain and defend the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Florida."

RULE 2. No cause standing for argument will be heard by the Court until the parties shall have furnished each member of the Court with a brief abstract of the cause pending, the substance of all the material pleadings, facts and documents on which the parties rely, and the points of law and facts, intended to be presented at the argument.

RULE 3. No original record shall be suffered by the Clerk to be taken from the Supreme Court room, or from the office of the Clerk thereof, otherwise to be responsible for it.

RULE 4. In every cause in which the defendant shall fail to appear, the plaintiff may proceed "ex parte."

RULE 5. If the defendant shall refuse to plead to issue, and the cause shall be called for trial, the Court may proceed to hear an argument on the part of the plaintiff, and give judgment according to the right of the cause.

RULE 6. Whenever pending a writ of error, or appeal in this Court either party shall die, the proper representatives in the realty, or personally of the deceased party, according to the nature of the case may, voluntarily come in and be admitted parties to the suit, and thereupon such suit shall be heard and determined as in other cases, and if such representatives shall not voluntarily become parties, then the other party may suggest the death on the record, and thereupon on motion in writing obtain an order, that unless such representatives shall become parties within the first three days of the ensuing term, the party moving such order shall (if defendant) be permitted to have the suit dismissed, and if the party so moving be plaintiff, he shall be entitled (a hearing being had) to have the judgment (if erroneous) reversed, provided that a copy of every such order shall be printed in some newspaper at the seat of government for three successive weeks, beginning at least sixty days before the first day of the term of the Supreme Court then next ensuing.

RULE 7. No cause shall be heard until a complete record shall be filed with the Clerk of this Court, containing in it without refer-VIII ence "aliunde," all the papers, exhibits, depositions and other proceedings which are necessary to a hearing in this Court.

RULE 8. All parties in this Court not being residents of the State, shall give security for the costs accruing in this Court to be entered on record.

RULE 9. If the Clerk of this Court shall produce satisfactory evidence thereto by affidavit, or the acknowledgement of the parties, or their sureties of his having served a bill of costs due by them respectively in this Court on such parties or sureties, and that such bill of costs has not been paid, an attachment may be issued against such parties or their sureties to compel payment of such costs.

RULE 10. Only two counsel shall be heard on either side of a cause, unless by special permission of the Court.

RULE 11. Whenever it shall be necessary or proper in the opinion of any Judge of a Circuit Court, that original papers of any kind should be inspected by this Court, on appeal or writ of error, said Judge may make such rule or order for the safe keeping, transporting or return of such original papers as to him may seem proper, and the Court will receive, and consider such original papers in connection with the transcript of the proceedings.

RULE 12. No certiorari upon a suggestion of a diminution of the record, shall be ordered in any cause, unless a motion shall be made therefor in writing setting forth the facts upon which the same is founded, verified by affidavit, and every such motion shall be made at the first term of the entry of the cause, otherwise it shall not be granted without special cause shown to the Court accounting for the delay.

RULE 13. In all causes brought up to this Court, it shall be the duty of the counsel for the plaintiff or appellant, to assign errors or file exceptions, as the case may be, and he shall not be permitted in argument to discuss any other matters on the record, save those in the errors assigned or exceptions filed.

RULE 14. Motions may be heard immediately after the orders of the preceding day are read, and the opinions of the Court are delivered in, but at no other time unless in cases of necessity, or in relation to a cause when called in course; all motions shall be heard in the order in which they stand on the motion docket.

RULE 15. That in all cases brought into this Court by appeal, writ of error or otherwise, either party may apply for and receive from the Clerk of this Court a copy of the records, the costs of which shall abide the event of the suit, and be taxed as other costs in the cause.

RULE 16. Upon the reversal of a judgment or decree of the Circuit Court, the party in whose favor the reversal is, shall recover his costs unless otherwise ordered.

RULE 17. The rules of practice of the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as the same are consistent with our constitution and statutes of force in this State, shall be the outline of the practice in this Court, in all cases not provided for by said statutes, or any rule of practice prescribed by the Supreme Court of this State.

RULE 18. The Clerk shall take charge of the Books of the Court, IX endorse on each the words "Supreme Court of Florida," make a catalogue thereof, arrange them in a conference room which he shall have fitted up in a proper manner, shall have such reports bound as may be received in boards or unbound, shall keep a list of all the law reports and statutes in some conspicuous place in said room, and shall not permit such books to be taken therefrom, except by order of one of the Judges of the Court.

RULE 19. In all cases where any suit shall be dismissed in this Court, except where the dismissal shall be for want of jurisdiction, costs shall be allowed for the defendant in error, or appellee, as the case may be unless otherwise agreed by the parties.

RULE 20. In all cases of affirmance of any Judgment or decree in this Court, cost shall be allowed for the defendant in error, or appellee as the case may be, unless otherwise ordered by the Court.

RULE 21. In all cases of reversal of any judgment or decree in this Court, costs shall be allowed in this Court for the plaintiff in error or appellant, unless otherwise ordered by the Court.

RULE 22. In all cases of dismissal of any suit, or the reversal of any judgment or decree of this Court, requiring further proceedings in the court below, it shall be the duty of the clerk to issue a mandate or other proper process, in the nature of a procedendo, to the Court below, for the purpose of informing such Court of the proceedings in this Court, so that further proceedings may be had in such Court, as to law and justice shall appertain.

RULE 23. When costs shall be allowed in this Court, it shall be the duty of the Clerk to insert the amount thereof in the body of the mandate, or other proper process sent to the Court below, and annex to the same the bill of the items in detail.

RULE 24. Rehearings must be applied for by petition in writing within fifteen days after the judgment or decree, setting forth the cause or causes for which Judgment or decree is supposed to be erroneous. The Court will consider the petition without argument, and if a rehearing is granted, direct it as to one or more points, as the case may require.

RULE 25. No copy of a judgment or decree of this Court shall be delivered, nor shall any mandate issue on such judgment or decree until after the final adjournment of the Court, without leave thereof; and that all rules heretofore adopted by the Court of Appeals of the late Territory, be, and they are hereby annulled.

Ordered, That the rules of practice heretofore provided by the XII Court of Appeals of the late Territory and not herein adopted, be, and the same are hereby annulled.

RULES OF PRACTICE,

IN SUITS IN EQUITY IN THE CIRCUIT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

RULE 1. The Circuit Courts, as Courts of Equity, shall be deemed always open for the purpose of filing bills, answers and other pleadings, for issuing and returning mesne and final process and commissions, and for making and directing all interlocutory motions, orders, rules and other proceedings, preparatory to the hearing of all causes upon their merits.

2. The clerk's office shall be open, and the clerk shall be in attendance therein on the first Monday of every month, for the purpose of receiving, entering, entertaining and disposing of all motions, rules, orders and other proceedings, which are grantable of course and applied for, or had by the parties or their solicitors in all causes pending in equity, in pursuance of the rules hereby prescribed.

3. Any Judge of the Circuit Court, as well in vacation as in term, may, at chambers, or on the rule days, at the clerk's office, make and direct all such interlocutory orders, rules and other proceedings, preparatory to the hearing of all causes upon their merits, in the same manner and with the same effect as the Circuit Court could make and direct the same in term, reasonable notice of the application therefor being first given to the adverse party, or his solicitor, to appear and show cause to the contrary at the next rule day thereafter, unless some other time is assigned by the judge for the hearing

4. All motions, rules, orders and other proceedings made and directed at chambers, or on rule days at the clerk's office, whether special or of course, shall be entered by the clerk in an order book, to be kept at the clerk's office on the day when they are made and directed—which book shall be open at all office hours, to the free inspection of the parties in any suit in equity, and their solicitors. And except in cases where personal or other notice is specially required or directed, such entry in the order book shall be deemed sufficient notice to the parties and their solicitors, without further service thereof, of all orders, rules, acts, notices and other proceedings entered in such order book, touching any and all the matters in the suits, to and in which they are parties and solicitors. And notice to the solicitors shall be deemed notice to the parties for whom they appear and whom they represent, in all cases where personal notice on the parties is not otherwise specially required. Where the solicitors for all the parties in a suit reside in or near the same town or city, the XIII Judges of the Circuit Court may, by rule, abridge the time for notice of rules, orders or other proceedings, not requiring personal service on the parties, in their discretion.

5. All motions and applications in the clerk's office for the issuing of mesne process and final process to enforce and execute decrees, for filing bills, answers, pleas, demurrers and other pleadings; for making amendments to bills and answers; for taking bills proconfesso; for filing exceptions, and for other proceedings in the clerk's office, which do not, by the rules hereinafter prescribed, require an allowance or order of the court, or of any judge thereof, shall be deemed motions and applications, grantable of course by the clerk of the court. But the same may be suspended, or altered, or rescinded by any judge of the court, upon special cause shown.

6. All motions for rules of orders and other proceedings, which are not grantable of course, or without notice, shall, unless a different time be assigned by a judge of the court, be made on a rule day, and entered in the order book, and shall be heard at the rule day next after that on which the motion is made. And if the adverse party, or his solicitor, shall not then appear, or shall not show good cause against the same, the motion may be heard by any judge of the court ex parte, and granted, as if not objected to, or refused, in his discretion.

PROCESS.

7. The process of subpoena shall constitute the proper mesne process in all suits in equity, in the first instance, to require the defendant to appear and answer the exigency of the bill; and unless otherwise provided in these rules, or specially ordered by the Circuit Court, a writ of attachment, and if the defendant cannot be found, a writ of sequestration, or a writ of assistance to enforce a delivery of possession, as the case may require, shall be the proper process to issue for the purpose of compelling obedience to any interlocutory or final order or decree of the court.

8. Final process to execute any decree may, if the decree be solely for the payment of money, be by writ of execution, in the form used in the Circuit Court, in suits at common law in actions of assumpsit. If the decree be for the performance of any specific act, as, for example, for the execution of a conveyance of land, or the delivering up of deeds, or other documents, the decree shall, in all cases, prescribe the time within which the act shall be done, of which the defendant shall be bound without further service to take notice; and upon affidavit of the plaintiff, filed in the clerk's office, that the same has not been complied with within the prescribed time, the clerk shall issue a writ of attachment against the delinquent party, from which, if attached thereon, he shall not be discharged, unless upon a full compliance with the decree and the payment of all costs, or upon a special order of the court or of a judge thereof, upon motion and affidavit, enlarging the time for the performance thereof. If the delinquent party cannot be found, a writ of sequestration shall issue against his estate upon the return of non est inventus, to compel obedience to the decree.

9. When any decree or order is for the delivery of possession, XIV upon proof made by affidavit of a demand and refusal to obey the decree or order, the party prosecuting the same shall be entitled to a writ of assistance from the clerk of the court

10. Every person, not being a party in any cause, who has obtained an order, or in whose favor an order shall have been made, shall be enabled to enforce obedience to such order by the same process, as if he were a party to the cause; and every person, not being a party in any cause, against whom obedience to any order of the court may be enforced, shall be liable to the same process for enforcing obedience to such order, as if he were a party in the cause.

SERVICE OF PROCESS.

11. No process of subpoena shall issue from the clerk's office in any suit in equity, until the bill is filed in the office.

12. Whenever a bill is filed, the clerk shall issue the process of subpoena thereon, as of course, upon the application of the plaintiff, which shall be returnable into the clerk's office the next rule day, or the next rule day but one, at the election of the plaintiff, occurring after twenty days from the time of the issuing thereof. At the bottom of the subpoena shall be placed a memorandum, that the defendant is to enter his appearance in the suit, in the clerk's office, on or before the day, at which the writ is returnable; otherwise, the bill may be taken pro confesso. Where there are more than one defendants, a writ of subpoena may, at the election of the plaintiff, be sued out separately for each defendant, except in the case of husband and wife, defendants, or a joint subpoena against all the defendants.

13. The service of all subpoenas shall be by a delivery of a copy thereof by the officer serving the same, to the defendant personally, or, in case of husband and wife, to the husband personally, or by leaving a copy thereof at the dwelling house or usual place of abode of each defendant, with some free white person, who is a member or resident in the family.

14. Whenever any subpoena shall be returned not executed as to any defendant, the plaintiff shall be entitled to another subpoena, toties quoties, against such defendant, if he shall require it, until due service is made.

15. The service of all process, mesne and final, shall be by the marshal of the district, or his deputy, or by some other person specially appointed by the court for that purpose, and not otherwise; in the latter case, the person serving the process shall make affidavit thereof.

16. Upon the return of the subpoena, as served and executed upon any defendant, the clerk shall enter the suit upon his docket as pending in the court, and shall state the time of the entry.

APPEARANCE.

17. The appearance day of the defendant shall be the rule day, to which the subpoena is made returnable; provided, he has been served with the process twenty days before that day; otherwise, his ap-

XV pearance day shall be the next rule day succeeding the rule day, when the process is returnable.

The appearance of the defendant, either personally or by his solicitor, shall be entered in the order book on the day thereof by the clerk.

BILLS TAKEN PRO CONFESSO.

18. It shall be the duty of the defendant, unless the time shall be otherwise enlarged, for cause shown, by a judge of the court upon motion for that purpose, to file his plea, demurrer, or answer to the bill in the clerk's office, on the rule day next succeeding that of entering his appearance; in default thereof, the plaintiff may, at his election, enter an order (as of course) in the order book, that the bill be taken pro confesso; and thereupon the cause shall be proceeded in ex parte, and the matter of the bill may be decreed by the court at the next ensuing term thereof accordingly, if the same can be done without an answer, and is proper to be decreed; or the plaintiff, if he requires any discovery or answer to enable him to obtain a proper decree, shall be entitled to the process of attachment against the defendant, to compel an answer; and the defendant shall not, when arrested upon such process, be discharged therefrom, unless, upon filing his answer, or otherwise complying with such order, as the court or a judge thereof may direct, as to pleading to, or fully answering the bill, within a period to be fixed by the court or judge, and undertaking to speed the cause.

19. When the bill is taken pro confesso, the court may proceed to a decree at the next ensuing term thereof, and such a decree rendered shall be absolute, unless the court shall, at the same term, set aside the same, or enlarge the time for filing the answer, upon cause shown upon motion and affidavit of the defendant. And no such motion shall be granted, unless upon the payment of the costs of the plaintiff in a suit up to that time, or such part thereof as the court shall deem reasonable, and unless the defendant shall undertake to file his answer within such time as the court shall direct, and submit to such other terms as the court shall direct, for the purpose of speeding the cause.

FRAME OF BILLS.

20. Every bill, in the introductory part thereof, shall contain the names, places of abode, and citizenship, of all the parties, plaintiffs and defendants, by and against whom the bill is brought. The form, in substance, shall be as follows: "To the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of ——. A. B., of ——, and a citizen of the State of ——, brings this, his bill, against C. D., of ——, and a citizen of the State of ——, and E. F., of ——, and a citizen of the State of —— And thereupon your orator complains and says, that &c."

21. The plaintiff, in his bill, shall be at liberty to omit, at his option, the part, which is usually called the common confederacy clause of the bill, averring a confederacy between the defendants to injure or defraud the plaintiff; also what is commonly called the charging part of the bill, setting forth the matters or excuses which the de-
XVI fendant is supposed to intend to set up by way of defence to the bill; also, what is commonly called the jurisdiction clause of the bill, that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and that the defendant is without any remedy at law; and the bill shall not be demurrable therefor. And the plaintiff may, in the narrative or stating part of his bill, state and avoid, by counter-averments, at his option, any matter or thing, which he supposes will be insisted upon by the defendant, by way of defence or excuse, to the case made by the plaintiff for relief. The prayer of the bill shall ask the special relief, to which the plaintiff supposes himself entitled, and shall also contain a prayer for general relief; and if an injunction, or writ of ne exeat regno, or any other special order pending the suit, is required, it shall also be specially asked for.

22. If any persons, other than those named as defendants in the bill, shall appear to be necessary or proper parties there, the bill shall aver the reason, why they are not made parties, by showing them to be without jurisdiction of the court, or that they cannot be joined without ousting the jurisdiction of the court as to the other parties. And as to persons, who are without the jurisdiction, and may properly be made parties, the bill may pray, that process may issue to make them parties to the bill, if they should come within the jurisdiction.

23. The prayer for process of subpoena in the bill shall contain the names of all the defendants named in the introductory part of the bill, and if any of them are known to be infants under age, or otherwise under guardianship, shall state the fact, so that the court may take order thereon as justice may require, upon the return of the process. If an injunction, or a writ of ne exeat regno, or any other special order pending the suit, is asked for in the prayer for relief, that shall be sufficient without repeating the same in the prayer for process.

24. Every bill shall contain the signature of counsel annexed to it, which shall be considered as an affirmation on his part, that upon the instructions given to him and the case laid before him, there is good ground for the suit, in the manner in which it is framed.

25. In order to prevent unnecessary costs and expenses, and to promote brevity, succinctness and directness in the allegations of bills and answers, the regular taxable costs for every bill and answer shall in no case exceed the sum, which is allowed in the State Court of Chancery in the district, if any there be; but if there be none, then it shall not exceed the sum of three dollars for every bill or answer.

SCANDAL AND IMPERTINENCE IN BILLS.

26. Every bill shall be expressed in as brief and succinct terms as it reasonably can be, and shall contain no unnecessary recitals of deeds, documents, contracts or other instruments, in haec verba, or any other impertinent matter or any scandalous matter not relevant to the suit. If it does, it may on exceptions be referred to a master by any judge of the court for impertinence, or scandal, and if so found by him, the matter shall be expunged at the expense of the plaintiff, and he shall pay to the defendant all his costs in the suit XVII up to that time, unless the court or a judge thereof, shall otherwise order. If the master shall report, that the bill is not scandalous or impertinent, the plaintiff shall be entitled to all costs occasioned by the reference.

27. No order shall be made by any judge for referring any bill, answer or pleading, or other matter, or proceeding depending before the court for scandal or impertinence, unless exceptions are taken in writing and signed by counsel, describing the particular passages, which are considered to be scandalous or impertinent; nor unless the exceptions shall be filed on or before the next rule day, after the process on the bill shall be returnable, or after the answer or pleading is filed. And such order, when obtained, shall be considered as abandoned, unless the party obtaining the order shall, without any unnecessary delay, procure the master to examine and report for the same on or before the next succeeding rule day, or the master shall certify that further time is necessary for him to complete he examination.

AMENDMENTS OF BILLS.

28. The plaintiff shall be at liberty as a matter of course, and without payment of costs, to amend his bill in any matters whatsoever, before any copy has been taken out of the clerk's office, and in any small matters afterwards, such as filing blanks, correcting errors of dates, misnomer of parties, misdescription of premises, clerical errors, and generally in matters of form. But if he amend in a material point (as he may do of course) after a copy has been so taken, before any answer or plea, or demurrer to the bill, he shall pay to the defendant the costs occasioned thereby, and shall without delay furnish him a fair copy thereof free of expense, with suitable references to the places, where the same are to be inserted. And if the amendments are numerous, he shall furnish in like manner to the defendant, a copy of the whole bill as amended, that if there be more than one defendant, a copy shall be furnished to each defendant affected thereby

29. After an answer or plea, or demurrer is put in, and before replication, the plaintiff may, upon motion or petition, without notice, obtain an order from any judge of the court, to amend his bill on or before the next succeeding rule day, upon payment of costs, or without payment of costs, as the court, or a judge thereof, may in his discretion direct. But after replication filed, the plaintiff shall not be permitted to withdraw it and to amend his bill, except upon a special order of a judge of the court upon motion or petition, after due notice to the other party, and upon proof by affidavit, that the same is not made for the purpose of vexation or delay, or that the matter of the proposed amendment is material, and could not with reasonable diligence have been sooner introduced into the bill, and upon the plaintiff's submitting to such other terms as may be imposed by the judge for speeding the cause.

30. If the plaintiff, so obtaining any order to amend his bill after answer or plea, or demurrer, or after replication, shall not file his amendments or amended bill as the case may require, in the clerk's XVIII office on or before the next succeeding rule day, he shall be considered to have abandoned the same, and the cause shall proceed, as if no application for any amendment had been made.

DEMURRERS AND PLEAS.

31. No demurrer or plea shall be allowed to be filed to any bill, unless upon a certificate of counsel, that in his opinion it is well founded in point of law, and supported by the affidavit of the defendant, that it is not interposed for delay; and if a plea, that it is true in point of fact.

32. The defendant may, at any time, before the bill is taken for confessed, or afterwards with the leave of the court, demur or plead to the whole bill, or to part of it, and he may demur to part, plead to part, and answer as to the residue; but in every case, in which the bill specially charges fraud or combination, a plea to such part must be accomapnied with an answer fortifying the plea, and explicitly denying the fraud and combination, and the facts on which the charge is founded.

33. The plaintiff may set down the demurrer or plea to be argued, or he may take issue on the plea. If, upon an issue, the facts stated in the plea be determined for the defendant, they shall avail him, as far as in law and equity they ought to avail him.

34. If, upon the hearing, any demurrer or plea is overruled, the plaintiff shall be entitled to the costs in the cause up to that period, unless the court shall be satisfied, that the defendant had good ground in point of law or fact to interpose the same, and it was not interposed vexatiously or for delay. And upon the overruling of any plea or demurrer, the defendant shall be assigned to answer the bill, or so much thereof as is covered by the plea or demurrer, the next succeeding rule day, or at such other period, as, consistently with justice and the rights of the defendant, the same can, in the judgment of the court, be reasonably done; in default whereof, the bill shall be taken against him, pro confesso, and the matter thereof proceeded in and decree accordingly.

35. If, upon the hearing, any demurrer or plea shall be allowed, the defendant shall be entitled to his costs. But the court may, in its discretion, upon motion of the plaintiff, allow him to amend his bill upon such terms as it shall deem reasonable.

36. No demurrer or plea shall be held bad and overruled upon argument ,only because such dmurrer or plea shall not cover so much of the bill as it might by law have extended to.

37. No demurrer or plea shall be held bad and overruled upon argument, only because such demurrer or plea shall not cover so much some part of the same matter, as may be covered by such demurrer or plea.

38. If the plaintiff shall not reply to any plea, or set down any plea or demurrer for argument, on the rule day, when the same is filed, or on the next succeeding rule day, he shall be deemed to admit the truth and sufficiency thereof, and his bill shall be dismissed as of XIX course, unless a judge of the court shall allow him further time for the purpose.

ANSWERS.

39. The rule, that if a defendant submits to answer he shall answer fully to all the matters of the bill, shall no longer apply, in cases where he might by plea protect himself from such answer and discovery. And the defendant shall be entitled in all cases by answer to insist upon all matters of defence (not being matters of abatement, or to the character of the parties, or matters of form) in bar of or to the merits of the bill, of which he may be entitled to avail himself by a plea in bar; and in such answer he shall not be compellable to answer any other matters, than he would be compellable to answer and discover upon filing a plea, in bar, and an answer in support of such plea, touching the matters set forth in the bill to avoid or repel the plea or defence. Thus, for example, a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, may set up that defence by way of answer instead of plea, and shall be entitled to the same protection and shall not be compellable to make any further answer or discovery of his title than he would be in any answer in support of such plea.

40. A defendant shall not be bound to answer any statement or charge in the bill, unless specially and particularly interrogated thereto; and a defendant shall not be bound to answer any interrogatory in the bill, except those interrogatories, which such defendant is required to answer; and where a defendant shall answer any statement or charge in the bill, to which he is not interrogated, only by stating his ignorance of the matter so stated or charged, such answer shall be deemed impertinent.

41. The interrogatories contained in the interrogating part of the bill shall be divided as conveniently as may be from each other, and numbered consecutively 1, 2, 3, &c.; and the interrogatories which each defendant is required to answer, shall be specified in a note at the foot of the bill, in the form or to the effect following: that is to say,—"The defendant (A. B.) is required to answer the interrogatories numbered respectively 1, 2, 3, &c." and the office copy of the bill taken by each defendant shall not contain any interrogatories except those which such defendant is so required to answer, unless such defendant shall require to be furnished with a copy of the whole bill.

42. The note at the foot of the bill, specifying the interrogatories, which each defendant is required to answer, shall be considered and treated as part of the bill, and the addition of any such note to the bill, or any alteration in or addition to such note after the bill is filed, shall be considered and treated as an amendment of the bill.

43. Instead of the words of the bill now in use, preceding the interrogating part thereof, and beginning with the words, "To the end, therefore," there shall hereafter be used words in the form or to the effect following: "To the end, therefore, that the said defendants may, if they can, show why your orator should not have the relief hereby pray, and may, upon their several and respective corporal oaths, and according to the best and utmost of their several and re-
XX spective knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief, full, true, direct, and perfect answer make to such of the several interrogatories hereinafter numbered and set forth, as by the note hereunder written they are respectively required to answer; that is to say,—

"1. Whether, &c.

"2. Whether, &c.

44. A defendant shall be at liberty, by answer, to decline answering any interrogatory or part of an interrogatory, from answering which he might have protected himself by demurrer; and he shall be at liberty so to decline, notwithstanding he shall answer other parts of the bill, from which he might have protected himself by demurrer.

45. No special replication to any answer shall be filed. But if any matter alleged in the answer shall make it necessary for the plaintiff to amend his bill, he may have leave to amend the same with or without the payment of costs, as the court, or a judge thereof, may in his discretion direct.

46. In every case where an amendment shall be made after answer filed, the defendant shall put in a new or supplemental answer, on or before the next succeeding rule day after that on which the amendment or amended bill is filed, unless the time therfor is enlarged or otherwise ordered by a judge of the court; and upon his default the like proceedings may be had as in cases of an omission to put in an answer.

PARTIES TO BILLS.

47. In all cases where it shall appear to the court, that persons, who might otherwise be deemed necessary or proper parties to the suit cannot be made parties by reason of their being out of the jurisdiction of the court, or incapable otherwise of being made parties, or because of their joinder would oust the jurisdiction of the court as to the parties before the court, the court may in their discretion proceed in the cause without making such persons parties; and in such cases the decree shall be without prejudice to the rights of the absent parties.

48. Where the parties on either side are very numerous, and cannot, without manifest inconvenience and oppressive delays in the suit, be all brought before it, the court in its discretion may dispense with making all of them parties, and may proceed in the suit, having sufficient parties before it to represent all the adverse interests of the plaintiffs and the defendants in the suit properly before it. But in such cases the decree shall be without prejudice to the rights and claims of all the absent parties.

49. In all suits concerning real estate, which is vested in trustees by devise, and such trustees are competent to sell and give discharges for the proceeds of the sale, and for the rents and profits of the estate, such trustees shall represent the persons beneficially interested in the estate or the proceeds, or the rents and profits, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as the executors or administrators in suits concerning personal estate represent the persons beneficially interested in such personal estate; and in such cases it shall not be necessary to make the persons beneficially interested in such real estate, or rents and profits; parties to the suit; but the court may, XXI upon consideration of the matter on the hearing, if it shall so think fit, order such persons to be made parties.

50. In suits to execute the trusts of a will, it shall not be necessary to make the heir at law a party; but the plaintiff shall be at liberty to make the heir at law a party, where he desires to have the will established against him.

51. In all cases in which the plaintiff has a joint and several demand against persons, either as principals or sureties, it shall not be necessary to bring before the court, as parties to a suit concerning such demand, all the persons liable thereto; but the plaintiff may proceed against one or more of the persons severally liable.

52. When the defendant shall, by his answer, suggest that the bill is defective for want of parties, the plaintiff shall be at liberty, within fourteen days after answer filed, to set down the cause for argument upon that objection only; and the purpose for which the same is set down shall be notified by an entry, to be made in the clerk's order book, in the form or to the effect following; (that is to say,) "Set down upon the defendant's objection for want of parties." And where the plaintiff shall not so set down his cause, but shall proceed therewith to a hearing, notwithstanding an objection for want of parties taken by the answer, he shall not, at the hearing of the cause, if the defendant's objection shall then be allowed, be entitled as of course, to an order for liberty to amend his bill by adding parties. But the court, if it thinks fit, shall be at liberty to dismiss the bill.

53. If a defendant shall, at the hearing of a cause, object, that a suit is defective for want of parties, not having by plea or answer taken the objection, and therein specified by name or description the parties to whom the objection applies, the court, (if it shall think fit,) shall be at liberty to make a decree saving the rights of the absent parties.

NOMINAL PARTIES TO BILLS.

54. Where no account, payment, conveyance, or other direct relief is sought against a party to a suit, not being an infant, the party, upon service of the subpoena upon him, need not appear and answer the bill, unless the plaintiff specially requires him so to do by the prayer of his bill; but he may appear and answer at his option; and if he does not appear and answer, he shall be bound by all the proceedings in the cause. If the plaintiff shall require him to appear and answer, he shall be entitled to the costs of all the proceedings against him, unless the court shall otherwise direct.

55. Whenever an injunction is asked for by the bill to stay proceedings at law, if the defendant do not not enter his appearance and plead, demur or answer to the same within the time prescribed therefore by these rules, the plaintiff shall be entitled as of course, upon motion without notice, to such injunction. But special injunctions shall be grantable only upon due notice, to the other party by the court in term, or by a judge thereof in vacation, after a hearing, which may be exparte if the adverse party does not appear at the time and place ordered. In every case, where an injunction, either XXII the common injunction, or a special injunction, is awarded in vacation, it shall, unless previously dissolved by the judge granting the same, continue until the next term of the court, or until it is dissolved by some order of the court.

BILLS OF REVIVOR AND SUPPLEMENTAL BILLS.

56. Whenever a suit in equity shall become abated by the death of either party, or by any other event, the same may be revived by a bill of revivor, or a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, as the circumstances of the case may require, filed by the proper parties entitled to revive the same; which bill may be filed in the clerk's office at any time; and upon suggestion of the facts, the proper process of subpoena shall, as of course, be issued by the clerk, requiring the proper representatives of the other party to appear and show cause, if any they have, why the cause should not be revived. And if no cause shall be shown at the next rule day, which shall occur after fourteen days from the time of the service of the same process, the suit shall stand revived, as of course.

57. Whenever any suit in equity shall become defective, from any event happening after the filing of the bill, (as, for example, by a change of interest in the parties,) or for any other reason a supplemental bill, or a bill in the nature of a supplemental bill, may be necessary to be filed in the cause, leave to file the same may be granted by any judge of the court on any rule day, upon proper cause shown, and due notice to the other party. And if leave is granted to file such supplemental bill, the defendant shall demur, plead or answer thereto, on the next succeeding rule day, after the supplemental bill is filed in the clerk's office, unless some other time shall be assigned by a judge of the court.

58. It shall not be necessary in any bill of revivor, or supplemental bill, to set forth any of the statements in the original suit, unless the special circumstances of the case may require it.

ANSWERS.

59. Every defendant may swear to his answer before any justice or judge of any court of the United States, or before any commissioner appointed by any Circuit Court to take testimony or depositions, or before any master in chancery appointed by any Circuit Court, or before any judge of any court of a State or Territory.

AMENDMENT OF ANSWERS.

60. After an answer is put in, it may be amended as of course, in any matter of form, or by filling up a blank, or correcting a date, or reference to a document or other small matter, and be re-sworn, at any time before a replication is put in, or the cause is set down for a hearing upon bill and answer. But after replication, or such setting down for a hearing, it shall not be amended in any material matters as by adding new facts or defences, or qualifying or altering the original statements, except by special leave of the court or of a judge thereof, upon motion and cause shown after due notice to the adverse

XXIII party, supported, if required, by affidavit. And in every case where leave is so granted, the court, or the judge granting the same, may, in his discretion, require that the same be separately engrossed and added as a distinct amendment to the original answer, so as to be distinguishable therefrom.

EXCEPTIONS TO ANSWERS.

61. After an answer is filed on any rule day, the plaintiff shall be allowed until the next succeeding rule day to file in the clerk's office exceptions thereto for insufficiency, and no longer, unless a longer time shall be allowed for the purpose, upon cause shown to the court or a judge thereof; and if no exception shall be filed thereto within that period, the answer shall be deemed and taken to be sufficient.

62. When the same solicitor is employed for two or more defendants, and separate answers shall be filed, or other proceedings had by two or more of the defendants separately, costs shall not be allowed for such separate answers or other proceedings, unless a master, upon reference to him, shall certify that such separate answers and other proceedings were necessary or proper, and ought not to have been joined together.

63. When exceptions shall be filed to the answer for insufficiency, within the period prescribed by these rules, if the defendant shall not submit to the same, and file an amended answer on the next succeeding rule day, the plaintiff shall forthwith set them down for a hearing on the next succeeding rule day thereafter, before a judge of the court; and shall enter, as of course, in the order book an order for that purpose. And if he shall not so set down the same for a hearing, the exception shall be deemed abandoned, and the answer shall be deemed sufficient; provided, however, that the court, or any judge thereof, may, for good cause shown, enlarge the time for filing exceptions, or for answering the same, in his discretion, upon such terms as he may deem reasonable.

64. If, at the hearing, the exceptions shall be allowed the defendant shall be bound to put in a full and complete answer thereto, on the next succeeding rule day; otherwise the plaintiff shall as of course, be entitled to take the bill, so far as the matter of such exceptions is concerned, as confessed or, at his election, he may have a writ of attachment to compel the defendant to make a better answer to the matter of the exceptions; and the defendant, when he is in custody upon such writ shall not be discharged therefrom but by an order of the court, or of a judge thereof, upon his putting in such answer, and complying with such other terms, as the court or judge may direct.

65. If, upon argument, the plaintiff's exceptions to the answer shall be overruled, or the answer shall be adjudged insufficient, the prevailing party shall be entitled to all the costs occasioned thereby, unless otherwise directed by the court, or the judge thereof at the hearing upon the exceptions.

REPLICATION AND ISSUE.

66. Whenever the answer of the defendant shall not be excepted
XXIV to, or shall be adjudged or deemed sufficient, the plaintiff shall file the general replication thereon on or before the next succeeding rule-day thereafter; and in all cases where the general replication is filed, the cause shall be deemed to all intents and purposes at issue, without any rejoinder or other pleading on either side. If the plaintiff shall omit or refuse to file such replication within the prescribed period, the defendant shall be entitled to an order, as of course, for a dismissal of the suit; and the suit shall thereupon stand dismissed, unless the Court or a judge thereof shall, upon motion for cause shown, allow a replication to be filed nunc pro tunc, the plaintiff submitting to speed the cause, and to such other terms as may be directed.

TESTIMONY, HOW TAKEN.

67. After the cause is at issue, commissions to take testimony may be taken out in vacation as well as in term, jointly by both parties, or severally by either party, upon interrogatories filed by the party taking out the same, in the clerk's office, ten days' notice thereof being given to the adverse party to file cross interrogatories before the issuing of the commission; and if no cross interrogatories are filed at the expiration of the time, the commission may issue ex parte. In all cases the commissioner or commissioners shall be named by the Court, or by a judge thereof. If the parties shall so agree, the testimony may be taken upon oral interrogatories by the parties or their agents, without filing any written interrogatories.

68. Testimony may also be taken in the cause, after it is at issue, by deposition, according to the acts of Congress. But in such case, if no notice is given to the adverse party of the time and place of taking the deposition, he shall, upon motion and affidavit of the fact, be entitled to a cross-examination of the witness, either under a commission or by a new deposition taken under the acts of Congress, if a Court or a judge thereof shall, under all the circumstances, deem it reasonable.

69. Three months, and no more, shall be allowed for the taking of testimony after the cause is at issue, unless the Court or a judge thereof shall, upon special cause shown by either party, enlarge the time; and no testimony taken after such period shall be allowed to be read in evidence at the hearing. Immediately upon the return of the commissions and depositions containing the testimony into the clerk's office, publication thereof may be ordered in the clerk's office by any judge of the Court, upon due notice to the parties, or it may be enlarged as he may deem reasonable under all the circumstances. But by consent of the parties, publication of the testimony may at any time pass into the clerk's office, such consent being in writing, and a copy thereof entered in the order-book, or endorsed upon the deposition or testimony.

TESTIMONY DE BENE ESSE.

70. After any bill filed, and before the defendant hath answered the same, upon affidavit made that any of the plaintiff's witnesses are aged or infirm, or going out of the country, or that any of them is a single witness to a fact, the clerk of the Court shall, as of course, XXV upon the application of the plaintiff, issue a commission to such commissioner or commissioners as a judge of the Court may direct, to take the examination of such witness or witnesses de bene esse, upon giving due notice to the adverse party of the time and place of taking his testimony.

FORM OF THE LAST INTERROGATORY.

71. The last interrogatory in the written interrogatories to take testimony now commonly in use, shall in the future be altered and stated in substance thus: "Do you know, or can you set forth any other matter or thing, which may be a benefit or advantage to the parties at issue in this cause, or either of them, or that may be material to the subject of this your examination, or the matters in question in this cause? if yea, set forth the same fully and at large in your answer."

CROSS BILL.

72. Where a defendant in equity files a cross bill for discovery only against the plaintiff in the original bill, the defendant to the original bill shall first answer thereto, before the original plaintiff shall be compellable to answer the cross bill. The answer of the original plaintiff to such cross bill may be read and used by the party filing the cross bill, at the hearing, in the same manner and under the same restrictions as the answer, praying relief, may now be read and used.

REFERENCE TO & PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MASTERS.

73. Every decree for an account of the personal estate of a testator or intestate, shall contain a direction to the master, to whom it is referred to take the same, to inquire and state to the Courts what parts, if any of such personal estate are outstanding or undisposed of, unless the Court shall otherwise direct.

74. Whenever any reference of any matter is made to a master to examine and report thereon, the party at whose instance or for whose benefit the reference is made, shall cause the same to be presented to the master for a hearing on or before the next rule-day succeeding the time when the reference was made; if he shall omit to do so, the adverse party shall be at liberty forthwith to cause proceedings to be had before the master, at the costs of the party procuring the reference.

75. Upon every such reference, it shall be the duty of the master, as soon as he reasonably can after the same is brought before him, to assign a time and place for proceedings in the same, and to give due notice thereof to each of the parties or their solicitors; and if either party shall fail to appear at the time and place appointed, the master shall be at liberty to proceed ex parte, in his discretion, to adjourn the examination and proceedings to a future day, giving notice to the absent party or his solicitor of such adjournment; and it shall be the duty of the master to proceed with all reasonable diligence in every such reference, and with the least practicable delay; and either party shall be at liberty to apply to the Court, or a judge thereof, for an order to the master to speed the proceedings and to XXVI make his report, and to certify to the Court or judge the reasons for any delay.

76. In the reports made by the master to the Court, no part of any state of facts, charge, affidavit, deposition, examination, or answer, brought in or used before them, shall be stated or recited. But such state of facts, charge, affidavit, deposition, examination, or answer, shall be identified, specified, and referred to, so as to inform the Court what state of facts, charge, affidavit, deposition, examination, or answer, were so brought in or used.

77. The master shall regulate all the proceedings in every hearing before him, upon every such reference; and he shall have full authority to examine the parties in the cause upon oath, touching all matters contained in the reference; and also to require the production of all books, papers, writings, vouchers, and other documents applicable thereto; and also to examine on oath, viva voce, all witnesses produced by the parties before him, and to order the examination of other witnesses to be taken, under a commission to be issued upon his certificate from the clerk's office, or by deposition according to the acts of Congress, or otherwise as hereinafter provided; and also to direct the mode in which the matters requiring evidence shall be proved before him; and generally to do all other acts, and direct all other inquiries and proceedings in the matter before him, which he may deem necessary and proper to the justice and merits thereof, and the rights of the parties.

78. Witnesses who live within the district may, upon due notice to the opposite party, be summoned to appear before the commissioner appointed to take testimony, or before a master or examiner appointed in any cause, by subpœna in the usual form, which may be issued by the clerk in blank, and filled up by the party praying the same, or by the commissioner, master, or examiner requiring the attendance of the witnesses at the time and place specified, who shall be allowed for attendance the same compensation as for attendance in Court; and if any witness shall refuse to appear, or to give evidence, it shall be deemed a contempt of Court, which being certified to the clerk's office by the commissioner, master, or examiner, an attachment may issue thereupon by order of the Court, or of any judge thereof, in the same manner as if the contempt were for not attending, or for refusing to give testimony in the Court. But nothing herein contained shall prevent the examination of witnesses viva voce, when produced in open Court, if the Court shall in its discretion deem it advisable.

79. All parties accounting before a master shall bring in their respective accounts in the form of debtor and creditor; and any of the other parties who shall not be satisfied with the accounts so brought in, shall be at liberty to examine the accounting party viva voce, or upon interrogatories in the master's office, or by deposition, as the master shall direct.

80. All affidavits, depositions, and documents, which have been previously made, read, or used in the Court, upon any proceeding in any cause or matter, may be used before the master.

XXVII 81. The master shall be at liberty to examine any creditor or other person coming in to claim before him, either upon written interrogatories, or viva voce, or in both modes, as the nature of the case may appear to him to require. The evidence upon such examination shall be taken down by the master, or by some other person by his order and in his presence, if either party requires it, in order that the same may be used by the Court, if necessary.

82. The Circuit Courts may appoint standing masters in Chancery in their respective districts, both the judges concurring in the appointment; and they may also appoint a master pro hac vice in any particular case. The compensation to be allowed to every master in Chancery for his services in any particular case shall be fixed by the Circuit Court in its discretion, having regard to all the circumstances thereof; and the compensation shall be charged upon and borne by such of the parties in the cause as the Court shall direct. The master shall not retain his report as security for his compensation; but when the compensation is allowed by the Court, he shall be entitled to an attachment for the amount against the party, who is ordered to pay the same, if, upon notice thereof, he does not pay it within the time prescribed by the Court.

EXCEPTIONS TO REPORT OF MASTER.

83. The master, as soon as his report is ready, shall return the same into the clerk's office and the day of return shall be entered by the clerk in the order-book. The parties shall have one month from the time of filing the report, to file exceptions thereto; and if no exceptions are within that period filed by either party, the report shall stand confirmed on the next rule-day after the month is expired. If exceptions are filed, they shall stand for hearing before the Court, if the Court is then in session; or if not, then at the next sitting of the Court, which shall be held thereafter by adjournment or otherwise.

84. And in order to prevent exceptions to reports from being filed for frivolous causes, or for mere delay, the party, whose exceptions are overruled, shall, for every exception overruled, pay costs to the other party, and for every exception allowed, shall be entitled to costs —the costs to be fixed in each case by the Court, by a standing rule of the Circuit Court.

DECREES.

85. Clerical mistakes in decrees, or decretal orders, or errors arising from any accidental slip or omission, may, at any time before an actual enrollment thereof, be corrected by order of the Court or a judge thereof, upon petition, without the form or expense of a rehearing

86. In drawing up decrees and orders, neither the bill, nor answer, nor other pleadings, nor any part thereof, nor the report of any master, nor any other prior proceeding, shall be recited or stated in the decree or order; but the decree and order shall begin in substance as follows: "This cause came on to be heard (or to be further heard, as the case may be) at this term, and was argued by counsel; and thereupon, upon consideration thereof, it was ordered adjudged and decreed as follows: viz. [Here insert the decree or order.] XXVIII

GUARDIANS AND PROCHEIN AMIS.

87. Guardians ad litem to defend a suit may be appointed by the Court, or by any judge thereof, for infants or other persons, who are under guardianship, or otherwise incapable to sue for themselves; all infants and other persons so incapable may sue by their guardians, if any, or by their prochein ami, subject, however, to such orders as the Court may direct for the protection of infants and other persons.

88. Every petition for a rehearing shall contain the special matter or cause on which such rehearing is applied for; shall be signed by counsel; and the facts therein stated, if not apparent on the record, shall be verified by the oath of the party, or by some other person. No rehearing shall be granted after the term at which the final decree of the Court shall have been entered and recorded, if an appeal lies to the Supreme Court. But if no appeal lies, the petition may be admitted at any time before the end of the next term of the Court, in the discretion of the Court.

89. The Circuit Court (both judges concurring therein) may make any other and further rules and regulations for the practice, proceedings, and process, mesne and final, in their respective districts, not inconsistent with the rules hereby prescribed, in their discretion, and from time to time alter and amend the same.

90. In all cases, where the rules prescribed by this Court, or by the Circuit Court, do not apply, the practice of the Circuit Court shall be regulated by the present practice of the High Court of Chancery in England, so far as the same may reasonably be applied consistently with the local circumstances and local convenience of the district where the Court is held, not as positive rules, but as furnishing just analogies to regulate the practice.

91. Whenever under these rules an oath is or may be required to be taken, the party may, if conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath, in lieu thereof make solemn affirmation to the truth of the facts stated by him.

92. These rules shall take effect, and be of force, in all the Circuit Courts of the United States, from and after the first day of August next; but they may be previously adopted by any Circuit Court in its discretion; and when and as soon as these rules shall so take effect, and be of force, the Rules of Practice for the Circuit Courts in Equity Suits, promulgated and prescribed by this Court in March, 1822, shall henceforth cease, and be of no farther force or effect. And the clerk of this Court is directed to have these Rules printed, and to transmit a printed copy thereof, duly certified, to the clerks of the several Courts of the United States, and to each of the judges thereof.

RULES OF PRACTICE.

ADOPTED BY THE SUPREME COURT, FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CIRCUIT COURTS OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

I—OFFICERS OF COURT.

1. PERSONS making application for admission to the Bar, shall apply by petition to one of the Judges, presenting evidence of his having attained the age of twenty-one years, and of his being of a good moral character; whereupon said applicant shall be examined in open court, as to his capacity and fitness.

2. That on his being found duly qualified, the following oath shall be administered to him:—"You do swear [or affirm] that you are duly qualified, according to the constitution and laws of this State, to exercise the office of counsellor and attorney at law and solicitor, and will, to the best of your abilities, discharge the duties thereof, and truly and honestly demean yourself in your practice, and preserve, protect and defend the constitution of this State, and of the United States." IV—PLEAS AND SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS.

1.—GENERALLY.

1. The defendant shall cause his pleas to be filed sixty days before the first day of the trial term, and in case such plea, or any subsequent plea, requires a replication thereto, the opposite party shall be allowed thirty days to reply; and the other issues shall be made up before the cause is called for trial; and when a case is called upon the trial docket, if either party is in default by reason of not pleading, or answering any pleading which he was bound to answer, the opposite party may obtain such judgment or order as may be appropriate in such default.

2. A defendant shall be allowed the same time for pleading after the delivery of particulars under an order of the court, which he had at the return of the summons.

3. The defendant shall not be at liberty to waive his plea without leave of the Court or a Judge.

4. No plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of any person as a defendant, shall be allowed, unless it shall be stated in such plea, that such person is resident within the jurisdiction of the court, and unless the place of residence of such person shall be stated with convenient certainty, in an affidavit verifying the same.

5. To any plea in abatement for nonjoinder of another person, the plaintiff may reply that such person has been discharged by bankruptcy and certificate.

6. No plea in abatement for a misnomer shall be allowed in any personal action, but in such case the defendant shall be at liberty to cause the declaration to be amended at the costs of the plaintiff, by inserting the right name, upon an order of the Court, or Judge, founded on an affidavit of the right name; and in case such application shall be discharged, the cost of the same shall be paid by the party applying.

7. No formal defence shall be required in a plea, and it shall commence as follows:—"The said defendant by ——— his attorney, (or in person,) says that"—

8. No protestation shall hereafter be necessary in any pleading; but either party shall be entitled to the same advantage in that or other actions, as if a protestation had been made.

9. In a plea or subsequent pleading, intended to be pleaded in bar of the whole action generally, it shall not be necessary to use any allegation of actionem non, or to the like effect, or any prayer of judgment; nor shall it be necessary in any replication or subsequent pleading intended to be pleaded in maintenance of the whole action, to use any allegation of "precludi non," or to the like effect, or any prayer of judgment; and all pleas, replications, and subsequent pleadings, pleaded without such formal parts aforesaid, shall be taken, unless otherwise expressed, as pleaded respectively in bar of the whole action, or in maintenance of the whole action; provided, that nothing herein contained shall extend to cases wherein estoppel is pleaded.

10. All special traverses, or traverses with an inducement of affirmative matter, shall conclude to the country: Provided, that this regulation shall not preclude the opposite party from pleading over to the inducement when the traverse is immaterial.

11. When money is paid into court, such payment shall be pleaded in all cases, and as near as may be in the following form mutatis mutandis:—

C. D. ats. A. B. } The defendant, by ——— his attorney, (or in person, &c.) says that the plaintiff ought not further to maintain his action, because the defendant now brings into court the sum of ——— dollars, ready to be paid to the plaintiff; and the defendant further says, that the plaintiff has not sustained damages, (or in actions of debt, that he is not indebted to the plaintiff) to a greater amount than the said sum, &c., in respect of the cause of action in the declaration mentioned, and this he is ready to verify—wherefore he prays judgment if the plaintiff ought further to maintain his action.

12. In all cases in which a plea puis darrien continuance is now by law pleadable, the same defence may be pleaded with an allegation that the matter arose after the last pleading.

13. The plaintiff, after the delivery of a plea of payment of money into court, shall be at liberty to reply to the same by accepting the sum so paid into court in full satisfaction and discharge of the cause of action in respect of which it has been paid in; or the plaintiff may reply that he has sustained damages, (or that the defendant is indebted to him, as the case may be,) to a greater amount than the said sum, and in the event of an issue thereon being found for the defendant, the defendant shall be entitled to judgment and his costs of suit.

14. When the defendant shall plead a plea of judgment recovered, he shall in such plea, state the date of such judgment, and the book and the page on which such proceedings are entered, and in default of his so doing, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to sign judgment as for want of a plea, and in case the same be falsely stated by the defendant, the plaintiff, on producing a certificate from the proper officer or person having the custody of the records or proceedings of the court where such judgment is alleged to have been recovered, that there is no such record or entry of a judgment, as therein stated, shall be at liberty to sign judgment as for want of a plea, by leave of the court.

PLEADINGS.

II—IN PARTICULAR ACTIONS.

1.—Assumpsit.

1. In all actions of assumpsit, except on bills of exchange and promissory notes, the plea of non-assumpsit shall operate only as a denial in fact of the express contract or promise alleged, or of the matters of fact from which the contract or promise alleged, may be implied by law.

Ex. gr., In an action on a warranty, the plea will operate as a denial of the fact of a warranty having been given upon the alleged consideration, but not of the breach; in an action on a policy of insurance, of the subscription to the alleged policy by the defendant, but not of the interest, of the commencement of the risk, of the loss, or of the alleged compliance with the warranties.

In actions against carriers and other bailees, for not delivering, or not keeping goods safe, or not returning them on request, and in actions against agents for not accounting, the plea will operate as a denial of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, and of such bailment or employment as would raise a promise in law to the effect alleged, but not of the breach.

In actions of indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, the plea of non-assumpsit will operate as a denial of the sale and delivery in point of fact; in the like action for money had and received, it will operate as a denial both of the receipt of the money and the existence of those facts which make such receipt by the defendant a receipt to the use of the plaintiff.

2. In all actions upon bills of exchange and promissory notes, the plea of non-assumpsit shall be inadmissible. In such actions, therefore, a plea in denial shall traverse some matter of fact—ex. gr., the drawing, or making, or endorsing, or accepting, or presenting, or notice of dishonor of the bill or note.

3. In every species of assumpsit, all matters in confession and avoidance, including not only those by way of discharge, but those which show the transaction to be either void or voidable in point of law, on the ground of fraud or otherwise, shall be specially pleaded: ex. gr.: infancy, coverture, release, payment, performance, illegality of consideration, either by statute or common law, drawing, indorsing, accepting, &c., bills or notes by way of accommodation, set-off, mutual credit, unseaworthiness, misrepresentation, deviation, and various other defences, must be pleaded.

2 In Covenant and Debt.

1 In debt on specialty or covenant, the plea of non est factum shall operate as a denial of the execution of the deed in point of fact only, and all other defences shall be specially pleaded, including matters which make the deed absolutely void, as well as those which make it voidable.

2. The plea of nil debet shall not be allowed in any action.

3. In actions of debt on simple contract, other than on bills of exchange and promissory notes, the defendant may plead that "he never was indebted in manner and form as in the declaration alleged," and such plea shall have the same operation as the plea of non assumpsit in indebitatus assumpsit; and all matters in confession and avoidance shall be pleaded specially as above directed in actions of assumpsit.

4. In other actions of debt in which the plea of nil debet has been hitherto allowed, including those on bills of exchange and promissory notes, the defendant shall deny specially some matter of fact alleged in the declaration, or plead specially some matter in confession and avoidance.

3—Detinue.

The plea of non detinet shall operate as a denial of the detention of the goods by the defendant; but not of the plaintiff's property therein, and no other defence than such denial shall be admissible under that plea.

4.—In Case.

1. In actions on the case, the plea of not guilty shall operate only as a denial of the breach of duty, or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant, and not of the facts stated in the inducement, and no other defence than such denial shall be admissible under that plea: All other pleas in denial shall take issue on some particular fact alleged in the declaration. In an action on the case for a nuisance to the occupation of a house by carrying on an offensive trade, the plea of not guilty will operate as a denial that the defendant carried on the alleged trade in such a way as to be a nuisance to the occupation of the house, and will not operate as a denial of the plaintiff's occupation of the house.

In an action on the case for obstructing the plaintiff's right of way, such plea will operate as a denial of the obstruction only, and not of the plaintiff's right of way: In an action for conveying the plaintiff's goods, the conversion only, and not the plaintiff's title to the goods.

In an action of slander of the plaintiff in his office, profession, or trade, the plea of not guilty will operate precisely to the same extent as at present, in denial of speaking the words, or of speaking them maliciously, and in the sense imputed, and with reference to the plaintiff's office, profession or trade, but it will not operate as a denial of the fact of the plaintiff's holding the office or being of the profession or trade alleged.

In this form of action against a carrier, the plea of not guilty will operate as a denial of the loss or damage, but not of the receipt of the goods by the defendant as a carrier for hire, or for the purpose for which they were received.

2. All matters in confession and avoidance shall be pleaded specially as in actions of assumpsit.

5.—Trespass.

1. In actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, the plea of not guilty shall operate as a denial that the defendant committed the trespass alleged in the place mentioned, but not as a denial of the plaintiff's possession, or of his right of possession of that place, which if intended to be denied, must be traversed specially.

2. In actions of trespass de bonis asportatis, the plea of not guilty shall operate as a denial of defendant having committed the trespass alleged by taking or damaging the goods mentioned, but not of the plaintiff's property therein.

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the State of Florida,

AT

JANUARY TERM, 1846.

CHARLES D. STEWART, vs. THOMAS PRESTON, JR.

The Act of the General Assembly, "that all cases now pending in said Court of Appeals, shall be transferred to said Supreme Court, and tried and decided therein and thereby, except cases cognizable by the Federal Courts" as imperative, and there is no cause for questioning the power of the General Assembly to pass such a law.

An appeal suspends the judgment until some Superior Tribunal makes a rightful disposition of the case.

The laws of the United States, do not provide for the transfer by appeal or Writ of Error of a judgment rendered by the Superior Court of a Territory, to a District or Circuit Court, or to the Supreme Court of the United States.

This case having been docketed, and being called, Appellee by his Attorney, made and filed the following motion to dismiss the same which fully sets forth the facts.

And now on this 6th January, 1846, on the calling of this case, comes Thomas H. Hagner, an Attorney of this Court, and gives the Court here to understand and be informed, that the cause now placed upon the Docket of this Court, was heretofore, on the 31st December, 1844, docketed in the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida, being an appeal to that Court, from Gadsden Superior Court. That on the 14th January, 1845, the cause was argued and submitted to said Court of Appeals, and that afterwards on the 8th February, 1845, the said Court of Appeals announced that it would hold the same under advisement, and the said Court adjourned with said case in that posture—and now he moves to dismiss the cause from this Court:

1st. Because it has no rightful place here, and this Court has no
1 jurisdiction of the asme, the said cause coming here neither by Writ
2 of Error, nor Appeal, nor by agreement of parties; the agreement of appeal being to the Court of Appeals.

2d. Because the cause has not been legally transferred to this Court, from the Court of Appeals, nor has any mode been ordained by competent authority, whereby said cause has a day in this Court.

3d. Because the Judgment of Gadsden Superior Court, is final until reversed by the proper Appellate Tribunal to which the cause was by consent of parties transferred, and to which an appeal lay by the laws of the United States.

4th. Because this Court has appellate jurisdiction only over those inferior Courts, which the Constitution of the State of Florida hath established, and which compose with it, the Judiciary powers of the State.

T. H. HAGNER, for Appellee, said:

It would be necessary to take a view of the constitution of the late Superior Courts, and of the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida; and also of the effect of the formation of State Government upon those tribunals, in order to present the questions involved in this motion.

The whole system of government established by the United States over the Territory of Florida, owed its existence to the constitutional power of Congress, "to dispose of, and make all needful rules and "regulations, respecting the Territory and other property belonging "to the United States," and the Judiciary established as part of that system, "are not Constitutional Courts, but are Legislative Courts, "created in virtue of the general right of sovereignty, which exists in "the Government of the United States." Again, "the jupridiction "with which they are invested, is conferred by Congress, in the ex- "ecution of those general powers which that body possesses over the "Territories of the United States." By C. J. Marshall—Am. Ins. Co. vs. Canter. 1 Peters' S. C. Rep. 546.

The several acts of Congress, therefore, organizing the Territorial government in Florida, were but the repeated exercise of Constitutional power, of the general right of sovereignty; and though expressed merely by legislative enactment, was a legitimate government, which Congress alone was competent to organize, and which edew its duration, as well as its existence, to the continuance of the same constitutional power in Congress.

The Judicial power was "vested in two Superior Courts, (after- "wards increased in number.) and in such Inferior Courts, and Jus-
3 "tices of the Peace, as the Legislative Council of the Territory might "from time to time establish." And writs of Error and Appeal were at first allowed, immediately, to the Supreme Court of the U. S. Afterwards, by art of Congress, approved 26 May, 1824, the Court of Appeals was established, to which Appeals and Writs of Error were required to be made in the first instance; thence causes might be removed by like process to the Supreme Court of the U. S.—The judgments of the Superior Courts, both before and after that change, however, were complete and final, until reversed by the appellate tribunal constituted by the same power to which the Courts of original jurisdiction owed their existence, and forming with them an entire system.

The State of Florida was admitted into the Union on 3d March, 1845. No provision was made by Congress for the transfer, either to the State Courts, or to the District Courts of the United States, of the causes pending at the date of the admission; and the question arises: What was the consequence upon causes pending in the late Court of Appeals, of the act of admission? Did the causes then pending upon appeal abate? And do the original judgments stand as if no Appeal or Writ of Error had been sued out? Or are the State Courts competent to take up and decide pending causes?

It is clear that the admission of Florida into the Union at once deprived those Legislative Courts, established by Congress, of all vital energy, as such—for the general right of sovereignty which gave them birth, was gone, and the power of Congress over this soil, as Territory of the United States, became at once, "among the things that were." True, these Courts still existed as State Courts ad interim, by force of their adoption by the State Constitution; but they commenced by new tenure—they formed an entire system—not united to the new—not consolidated with the old, but adopted for the time for the convenience of the State—a provisional arrangement. To do all this, the power of the State of Florida was undoubtedly sufficient. But when the Schedule and Ordinance, declaring that, "all "actions at law, or suits in Chancery, or any proceeding pending, or "which may be pending in any Court of the Territory of Florida, "may be commenced in, or transferred to such Court of the State as "may have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof," is held to demand, in the absence of any Legislative action by Congress, and of all consent between parties litigant, that the State tribunals shall take the place of the Superior Courts, and of the Court of Appeals, I insist that this is a wrong construction of the Schedule, or else that the State had no such power to confer this jurisdiction. All pending ac- 4 tions or proceedings "may be commenced in or transferred to," &c. Why this alternative expression? Why not transfer all pending actions? Why are some pending proceedings to be commenced in the State Courts, while others are transferred to those tribunals? Clearly, because where the parties consent, they may be transferred as they are—without consent, must be commenced anew. Other interpretations involves the constitutional objection which I shall proceed to enforce.

I deny the authority of the State Government to transfer pending causes to her Courts! There is no affinity nor affiliation between the Legislative Courts, established by Congress, and the Courts established and ordained by the State Constitution. Different in origin —different in jurisdiction—different in their powers and capacities—subject to revision by different tribunals. They form parts of entire different systems of government, constituted by different authority. The one was temporary—the other perpetual—the one must end when the other begins. How can thy coalesce? From the Court of Appeals, a writ of error or appeal lay, in all cases of sufficient mere numerical amount, to the Supreme Court of the United States; from the Supreme Court of the State, questions of principle, or some constitutional provision, alone can warrant the supervision of the Federal Judiciary. The defendant had consented to the appeal, without security, which should take this cause to that Court, whence an appeal lay to the Supreme Court of the U. S. If his case is reversed here, he must submit to the sentence of this Court as a Court of last resort,—to the judgment of a Court not in existence at the period of his consent, and foreign to the whole system, under which the judgment in his favor was rendered—of a Court not bound, as was the Court of Appeals, by the decisions of the appellate tribunal, but a State Court, with power to declare the law as a Court of last resort. Surely no fair construction of that consent, can lead to consequences such as these.

If it be contended that the State Constitution has been approved by Congress, and that thus this Ordinance may be said to be the act of the National Legislature, we say that Congress has not passed upon the subject. In the preamble to the act for the admission of Florida into the Union, will be seen the extent of its action. It declared that the people of Florida did, by their delegates, on the 11th January, 1839, form for themselves a Constitution, which said Constitution is Republican. This is all Congress has done, and this is

5 all it had power to do, in passing upon that instrument. New States may be admitted into the Union, and the United States guarantees to every State a Republican form of government—and under these provisions of the Constitution, the action of Congress was had. The act of admission into the Union cannot supply the place of such legislation by Congress, if any were necessary, to prevent the abatement of causes, or to authorize their transfer to State Courts. In the case of Bermudez vs. Ibanez—3d Martin's Louisiana Rep. 2—the question was submitted to the decision of the Supreme Court of that State, whether there existed a right of appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of the Territory, rendered since the adoption of the Constitution, and while the Court was acting as a State Court. The Court say: "The Superior Court of the late Territory of Orleans "was vested with original and appellate jurisdiction. Such were "the duties it exercised—such were its powers. That therefore "must be the jurisdiction in which it was continued, for it cannot be "pretended that its judgments have become subject to an appeal, "without admitting that there has been an innovation, and a change "in that branch of the former government—that is to say, without "admitting that which is expressly provided against by the Schedule. "But it has been contended that the right of appeal to the Supreme "Court being secured to the citizen since the day on which the Con-"stitution was approved by Congress, all the judgments rendered "since that time must be subject to it. This appears to the Court "to be a forced construction of the 2d sec. of the 4th art. The "right of appeal, no doubt, was guaranteed by the Constitution, but "when was it to take effect? Which were the tribunals over whose "decision the Supreme Court was to exercise the appellate jurisdic-"tion assigned to it by the Constitution? Undoubtedly those inferior "Courts which the Constitution directed to be established, and "which composed with it the Judiciary powers of the State. The "Superior Court was no part of that system—it had no concern with "it—its authority under the schedule was a continuation of its former "jurisdiction—it was independent of the future authorities, and its "judgments must stand as irrevocable as they were under the Ter-"ritorial Government."

True it is, that no appeal had been provided by Congress, from the Judgment of the Superior Court, but can this vary the case? Can this ward off the force of the argument? Was not the State powerless to graft upon the provisional system thus adopted, appellate juris-6 diction? Do not the Court declare that system must be continued as before? Must not the State take it as she finds it? Must not the judgments of the Superior Courts, stand as irrevocable as they were under the Territorial Government? Reversible only by the Appellate Tribunals, to which those Courts were amenable? Were they not independent of future authorities? Surely when our Court of Appeals was done away, then the judgments of the Superior Courts were as final and irrevocable as those of the Superior Court of Louisiana—as irrevocable as if no appeal had ever been allowed—as though an Appellate Tribunal in the Territory, had never been established, they stood then as they stood prior to 1824, and the State Government was quite as powerless to turn the causes into a new channel, as they would have been to destroy the judgments already rendered by an edict of the Constitution.

The case from Louisiana is in fact stronger than the case at bar; the decision there appealed from, was made by the Superior Court, while a State Court, adopted by the Constitution; here the judgment was rendered long before the admission into the Union, and before the Constitution of Florida had been called into life.

I have shown that the Courts of the Territory were Legislative Courts; as Legislative Courts created by written law, their jurisdiction is defined by written law and cannot be transcended. Exparte. Bollman and Swartout, 4 Cranch, 93.

Can that jurisdiction done away in the Court itself, be taken up and exercised by a State Tribunal, established by a different government, and called into existence only when the former has expired? The admission into the Union was a virtual repeal of the act creating those Legislative Courts, and it is a repeal without any saving of proceedings commenced and pending before it. In such case the whole power and authority cease, and the Court cannot proceed with what may have been commenced. 6 Pickering, 501.

If those Legislative Courts, the Courts of the Territory, could not proceed to finish what was before them, can it be that the State Constitution or State law, can eke out the expired jurisdiction, can supply omitted Legislation of Congress, can add the saving of proceedings commenced and pending? Indeed not only so, but can create and establish another tribunal, who shall commence where Legislative Courts established by Congress left off, and carry on the proceedings in a tribunal foreign to the jurisdiction which commenced them.

7 The consequence which I insist followed this admission into the Union, is not novel principle—the abatement of proceedings pending, unless saved by competent provision of a competent Legislation. It is a familiar principle that when an act of parliament is repealed, it must be considered, except as to transactions passed and closed, as if it had never existed. Prosecutions are thus oftentimes brought to a sudden end—condemnations of prize rightful when made reversed by the appellate tribunal—the discharge of bankrupts who had complied with all the requirements of the statute, refused because of the repeal of the statute; and no proceedings whatever can be pursued under a repealed statute, though begun before the repeal, unless such proceedings are authorized under a special clause in the repealing act. 1 Wash., C. C. R. 84. 4 Dallas R. 372.

So where the amendment to the Constitution of the United States was adopted, providing that the Judicial power of the United States, should not be construed to extend to suits against one of the States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State, the Supreme Court of the United States unanimously decided that no jurisdiction could be exercised in such suits against a State, though they had been previously brought, and were depending when the amendment was adopted. Hollingsworth vs. Virginia; 3 Dallas' Rep. 378.

What was the principle of this decision? clearly that from the moment the power to sue a State was annulled and revoked, the power ceased to be a part of the Constitution—not existing there, the source of its origin, it could be found no where else; bearing in mind then that "the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals was conferred by Congress," in virtue of the general right of sovereignty, which is now clearly gone, how can this case be proceeded in, under a jurisdiction not conferred by Congress? The State Government is incompetent to confer it. The appellate tribunal being done away the cause cannot rightly be proceeded in—the original judgment must stand—there is no appellate tribunal to review it.

S. W. Carmack, for Appellant.

Baltzell, Justice, delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a case from the docket of the late Court of Appeals of the territory, having been transferred by act of the Legislature to the docket of this Court.

A motion is made to dismiss, on the ground that the appeal having been taken to that Court, this Court being a Court of the State, has 8 no jurisdiction to dispose of it.

A question to the jurisdiction is at all times a delicate one, and would have influenced the Court to pause and hesitate, before assuming it in this case, if the power had been at all doubtful. But we see no room to question the jurisdiction. The act of the Legislature of the State, organizing the Supreme Court, is imperative, "that all "cases now pending in said Court of Appeals, shall be transferred "to said Supreme Court, and tried, and decided therein, and thereby, "except cases cognizable by the Federal Courts." Acts 1845, p. 14, sec. 14.

We see no cause for questioning the power of the Legislature to pass this law, and none has been alleged in argument. There was obviously a necessity for it, from the fact that cases appealed from, must be disposed of by some tribunal, and who so appropriate as the jurisdiction, under the new organization, taking the place of, and substituted for the old one. We do not concur in the opinion of counsel, that if this Court does not take jurisdiction, the judgment of the Court below is revived; on the contrary, we strongly incline to the opinion that the appeal suspends the judgment, until some superior tribunal makes a rightful disposition of the case.

But the question occurs, is this case exempt from the jurisdiction of the Court, by being cognizable in the Federal Court. If so, it must be in a Circuit Court of the U. S. or a District Court having Circuit Court powers, vested with appellate jurisdiction. The law of Congress on the subject provides, "That final decrees and judg-"ments in civil cases in a District Court, when the matter in dispute "exceeds the sum or value of $50, may be re-examined and reversed "or affirmed in a Circuit Court on a writ of error," &c. Story's laws, 60.

Does an appeal lie to the Supreme Court of the United States? The act of Congress provides, "That final judgment and decrees in "civil actions and suits in Equity in a Circuit Court, brought there "by original process, or removal there from Courts of the several "States, or by appeal from a District Court, when the matter in dis-"pute exceeds $2,000, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed "in the Supreme Court." Story, 61.

But it is alleged that the citizenship of the party, or alienage, in some of the cases pending before the Court, creates a difference in 9 favor of the application. The laws of Congress referring to the subject, contain the following provisions:

"The Circuit Courts shall have original cognizance concurrent "with the Courts of the several States, of all suits in a civil nature at "common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute, exclusive "of costs, exceeds the value of $500, and the United States are "plaintiffs or petitioners, or an alien is a party, or the suit is between "a citizen of the State where the suit is brought and a citizen of an- "other State." Story, 57.

"That if a suit be commenced in any State Court against an alien. "or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought against "the citizen of another State, the matter in dispute exceeding five "hundred dollars, and the defendant shall, at the time of entering "his appearance in such State Court, file his petition for the re- "moval of the cause for trial into the next Circuit Court, on giving "bail, &c.; the cause shall there proceed as if brought by original "process." Story, 58.

These two provisions are inapplicable to the case of an appeal from another tribunal, and were designed for suits in their original institution, and before judgment.

None of these laws of the U. S. nor any others we have been able to find, provide for the transfer by appeal or writ of error of a judgment rendered by the Superior Court of a Territory to a District or Circuit Court, or to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The case then must be tried by this Court, or not tried at all. Were it a case of admiralty, or other case exclusively cognizable by the United States Court, the Court would at once make the transfer, as has been already done in cases on the docket; but it is not of this character—on the contrary, being a case for the recovery of money, and within the ordinary common law jurisdiction of Courts, it is clearly within the appellate jurisdiction of this Court.

For these reasons, we think the case is rightfully before the Court, and the motion is therefore overruled.

Per Curiam. Motion overruled.

10 CHARLES D. STEWART, vs. THOMAS PRESTON, JR.

A mortgage, by A to indemnify his endorser B, from loss or damage in consequence of his endorsement, and stipulating that if A shall fail in payment of said Note, and suffer the same to be protested or remain over due, in whosoever hands the same may be found, then that B, on making affidavit of such non-payment and the amount, may foreclose, &c., and which mortgage was afterwards transferred by B, "without recourse" to C, the endorsee of the note by B, also "without recourse"—held that the mortgage is valid in the hands of C, and may be foreclosed by him, and the mortgaged property subjected to the payment of the debt due C on the note.

In construing an instrument of writing a Court cannot consider one part of the exclusion of another, but must look at the whole to perceive the design of the maker.

As a general rule, the endorsement of the notes secured by a mortgage carries with it the mortgage

Whatever interest would pass by a general or full endorsement, it seems, will pass by a qualified endorsement.

An interlineation or erasure apparent on the face of a deed, does not of itself avoid it; to produce this effect it must be shown to have been made under circumstances which the law does not warrant.

All defences not made in the pleadings are considered as waived, especially such as are connected with the facts of the case.

Held that the mortgage in question created a trust for the payment of the notes, and that the mortgagees who had assigned "without recourse," might have been decreed to allow the use of their names, if necessary to a suit, to have the mortgaged property applied to their payment.

APPEAL from Judgment rendered in late Superior Court for the County of Gadsden, at its Fall Term, 1844, on petition to foreclose a mortgage under the statute.

The motion to dismiss this case having been overruled, the Court proceeded to consider the same. The facts are these:

Preston on the 2d January, 1839, made six several promissory Notes, payable to the joint order of Edward Carey, James R. Jones, Thomas Hoxey and Hines Holt, Jr., which the said Carey and others, as the joint sureties of Preston, endorsed in blank, and of which appellant became the holder. The endorsement on each of the Notes, is, "we endorse the within, 'without recourse,' to Charles D. Stewart," signed Carey and others, and is without date; and on each of the notes there are credits by Stewart.

The defendant Thomas Preston, Jr., on the same day of the making and endorsing of the notes, executed and delivered to Edward Carey, and others, the endorsers, an indenture of mortgage on certain 11 property therein described, "for the purpose of securing the said Edward Carey, James R. Jones, Thomas Hoxey and Hines Holt, Jr., jointly and severally from any damages, loss or liability, in consequence of their said endorsements." The indenture of mortgage further recited, that "all of which said several promissory notes are endorsed in blank," and that Carey and others, by such endorsements became the joint securities of the said Thomas Preston, Jr., for the payment of the several amounts of money specified in the said several promissory notes, at the time they severally became due." The condition of the mortgage is as follows: "Provided, always that the fore- "going is subject to the conditions and stipulations herein after "written to wit: That if the said Thomas Preston, Jr., shall pay all "and each of the several promissory notes herein mentioned as they "severally become due and payable, and shall not make default in "any or either of the same, then the above obligation to be void, "and the title thereby conveyed. And it is further expressly stipula- "ted and understood that if the said Thomas Preston, Jr., shall fail "in the payment of any or either of the said promissory notes, and "shall suffer the same to be protested or to remain over-due and un- "paid, in whosoever hands the same may be found, then the said Ed- "ward Carey, James R. Jones, Thomas Hoxey and Hines Holt, Jr., "or either of them, upon making affidavit of such non-payment and "the amount thereof, shall be permitted to foreclose the said mort- "gage and take out execution and bring to sale the said negroes or "any portion thereof necessary to payment of such sum as may re- "main due and unpaid, notwithstanding the said sum due may not "have been paid, or any part thereof, by the said Edward Carey, "James R. Jones, Thomas Hoxey and Hines Holt, Jr.

On the 20th October, 1840, Carey and others, the mortgagees, assigned and transferred to Stewart, the Petitioner, the mortgage with all their rights under the same as fully as they could exercise the same, "without recourse" on them. In the assignment of the mortgage the words "the Bank of Columbus" are stricken out, and the name of Charles D. Stewart interlined; the petition was filed by Stewart, under the statute, "to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages by the Courts of Common Law, and for other purposes."

The plea of Preston, by way of objection to the foreclosure, alleged that the mortgage, (if executed at all by him,) was executed and delivered to Carey and others, to indemnify them as his endorsers on the notes therein named, and was intended to operate only as a 12 personal covenant of indemnity, and was not therefore subject to the operation of the assignment as set forth in the petition; and that the assignment does not convey to petitioner such an interest as would give him a right to foreclose the said mortgage.

On the trial of this cause in the Court below, the original mortgage, and the original notes filed, and the endorsements on the notes, were all proved, and the same given in evidence. The signatures to the assignment on the mortgage were proved, but no evidence was offered, explaining the erasure and interlineation in the assignment. The admission of the assignment was objected to by defendant, on account of no such evidence being adduced, but the Court admitted it in evidence. The defendant also objected to the admission of the mortgage in evidence, on the ground that it was variant from the petition. The defendant also objected that the mortgage was a mortgage for indemnity merely, from certain endorsements, that it appeared the endorsement of the notes to petitioner was "without recourse" on the endorsers and mortgagees, and that thereby the endorsers being released and exonerated, they could not be damnified, or the condition of the mortgage forfeited, and that thereby the mortgage was extinguished: and that the same could not be assigned to petitioner by mortgagees, and that petitioner had no right under the same. The petitioner contended that the assignment was made in consideration of the release by petitioner of the endorsers, (but no evidence was given thereof except the papers,) and that therefore the assignment was valid.

The Court sustained the objection of defendant, and dismissed the petition on that ground; to which petitioner excepted.

S. W. CARMACK, for appellant:

1st. A transfer of the debt carries with it the mortgage as an incident; there is no necessity for a written transfer of the mortgage; the possession of the mortgage by the assignee of the debt secured by it is sufficient; he is entitled to the benefit of it. Green vs. Hart, 1 John's Rep. 580.

But here we have a transfer of both the mortgage and the debt which it was intended to secure; this is proved by the deposition of Arthur B. Davis, which from any thing that appears on the record was admitted to be received without objection. The case of the City of Pensacola vs. ————————, decided in 1840, shows that the deposition cannot now be objected to.

13 Again the assignment of the mortgage is stated in the petition, and it is not put in issue by any one of the pleas; no objection then can be taken to the assignment,

2nd. If property is conveyed by mortgage for the payment of a particular debt, or for the indemnity of any one of the parties who are bound for the debt, it is immaterial with whom the contract contained in the mortgage is made; a person not a party to the mortgage, may, if interested in having it applied to the payment of the debt, have it so applied.

1st. If a surety pays the debt of the principal, he is entitled to have the benefit of all the sureties that the creditor has received from the principal debtor; he has the right to be substituted in the place of the creditor with respect to them; to be subrogated to all his remedies. 17 John, 384; 2 John, ch. Rep. 554; 2 Yerger, 346; McNairy vs. Eastland, 2d Yerger, 310; Scantland vs. Little, Meig's Rep. 168; 9 Cowen Rep. 206.

2nd. This right is reciprocal, the creditor is entitled to all the securities which the surety has received from the principal debtor; the surety holding them is but a trustee for the use of the creditor. Moses vs. Murgatroyd, 1 John's, ch. rep. 119; Breedlove, et al vs. Stump et al, 3 Yerger, 257; Wright vs. Marley, 11 Vesey, Jr., 262; 7 Cranch 97; Nelson vs. Blight, 1 John, cases 205; Philips vs. Thompson, 2 John ch. rep. 418; 2 American, ch. Dig. 511, citing 4, Dana, 27.

If therefore, this was a mortgage merely for indemnity and reimbursement of the sureties, like the cases in 1 John, ch. rep. and 3 Yerger, a Court of Equity would compel the sureties to assign it to the creditor, or allow the creditor to have the property sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of his debt; and this too, before the sureties were damnified, and consequently before they would have a claim to reimbursement.

This brings us to the question:

3d. May not the parties do that by contract which a Court of Equity would do for them? In other words, if a Court of Equity would compel the sureties to assign the mortgage to the creditor may they not do so without such compulsion? and if the sureties have done so, may not the creditor, having the entire interest in the mortgage by the assignment, proceed to foreclose it.

But this is not a mortgage for indemnity and reimbursement merely, but it is likewise, by its very terms, a mortgage to secure the pay-14 ment of the debt for which the sureties were bound; see the condition of the mortgage; it is to be void if the mortgagor shall pay the debt. Also, if the notes are protested for non-payment, the sureties may proceed to foreclose and sell to pay the notes; to whom? to the creditor certainly. Here then is an appropriation of a particular fund by contract, for the payment of a particular debt, and by operation of the assignment the creditor becomes the mortgagee, and has the same right to proceed to have a foreclosure, as if the mortgage had been originally made directly to him as the mortgagee. See Stat. DuVal.

4th. It will not be denied that if this mortgage had been made directly to Charles D. Stewart, the creditor, to secure the money due on the notes in his hands, that he would have had the right to proceed, under the Statute, to foreclosure. Now, I ask, in what consists the difference between that case, and this? Here the mortgage is made to sureties to pay the debt. Does not the transfer, by operation of law, make Stewart, the creditor, the mortgagee, just as effectually as if he so appeared in the face of the mortgage?

5th. If this view of the subject be correct, it is wholly immaterial whether the sureties had any interest in the mortgage at the time of the assignment or not. If they had none, the creditor, Stewart, had a right to have his debt paid out of the mortgaged property. His right is independent of the right of the sureties, and does not depend on the question whether they were ever bound as sureties; or if bound, whether they were afterwards discharged.

Every case of the subrogation of sureties to the rights of the creditor, proves the truth of this position. As soon as the sureties pay the debt to the mortgagee creditor, the debt is extinguished, and the mortgage is discharged—the creditor being the mortgagee, has no longer any claim or interest in the mortgage—and yet the sureties may set up this extinguished mortgage by substitution of themselves as mortgagees. See 17 John. 2 John Ch. Rep. 2 Yerger already cited. The right of the sureties, then, does not depend on the question whether the mortgagee's interest is extinguished. So say I in this case, the right of the creditor Stewart, does not depend on the question whether the rights of the sureties, the present mortgagees, is extinguished by their release from the payment of the debt.

If the notes were endorsed without recourse before the assignment of the mortgage, the assignment is good; the law regulating such transfer would make it good without any new consideration. It is absurd to say that a consideration is necessary to support an assign- 15 ment to a man who is entitled to have it by law.

6th. Through the endorsement on the notes are not dated, yet it is proved from the circumstances of this case, that the assignment of the notes were filled up over the blank endorsement on the same day that the mortgage was assigned, to wit: 20th October, 1840; and the one assignment, without recourse, was the consideration of the other.

7th. No variance between the petition and mortgage; it is referred to and made a part of the petition.

8th. The rasure and interlineation do not affect the assignment—it is not under seal, and need not be explained by parol evidence. 1 Peter's Rep. 369. 2 Starkie Ev. 271—2. 1 Dallas 69. But a decisive answer to this objection is, there is no plea putting in issue the assignment.

T. H. Hagner, for appellee, argued:

That there is no error in the judgment of the Court below, for the petitioner was not entitled to a decree of foreclosure of the instrument of writing proceeded on. For it is shown:

I. That the deed was made and delivered upon a state of circumstances, developed by the proofs in the cause, which afterwards became changed and altered, and to effect purposes afterwards abandoned; and that in truth the deed was delivered upon condition NOT PERFORMED.

The recital of the deed shows its object, "for the purpose of securing" the payees of the notes who had, "by their endorsements become the joint securities of the said Thomas Preston, junior." And the notes themselves, were not securities of any debt due to the payees, but were to have been negotiated on the strength of the names of these mortgagees.

Now that the mind of the parties changed,—that the original intention was not consummated,—that the condition to become liable never was performed,—is all shown by the proofs adduced by the petitioner himself.

The notes are endorsed by them without recourse—that endorsement was cotemporaneous with the making of the notes in point of law, and thus evinces an entire change of the original design of the parties; it shows a non-performance of the condition precedent, until performance of which the estate could not vest. If not absolutely null and void in the outset, it exhibits a cancellation of the instru- 16 ment of writing in point of law.

To show that this change was made, and the design of the parties altered, we come to the consideration of the design of this mortgage. If not already made apparent, let us examine more fully the deed of mortgage, and the accompanying proofs.

That the saving harmless was the gist of the matter, look at the condition of the deed. The recital shows the purpose to be for securing the parties from all loss, damage or liability. Saved harmless the condition is saved—whether by payment, by release of the obligation, or by failure to incur the intended liability—by whatever mode, they are saved from all loss, damage or liability. It likens itself to the case of a condition to be discharged by any one of several acts; and one act, which shall save harmless from all loss, damage or liability, is a discharge of the condition. In this mortgage, the statement of payment required to be made, at a day named, is only one mode—the ordinary but not the only mode—of discharging the condition; a time must be limited, and a day fixed when the defeasance shall take effect.

The essence of the condition here is the saving harmless; and thus we prove that indemnity against securityship intended to be undertaken, was the object, scope and purpose of the deed.

That condition precedent must be shown to be performed, before the Estate vests. See Dallas Reports, 317.

Upon the 1st point, I would refer the Court to the case of Johnson and others vs. Baker—4 Barnwell & Alderson, 441. Where a deed, though delivered to one of the grantees, upon a condition previously expressed, although not introduced into the act of delivery, was held sufficient to make the delivery as an escrow, THOUGH TO A PARTY TO THE DEED. And as it appeared that the condition had not been complied with, Abbott, Chief Justice, held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

II. Coming then to the next view of the case, imagine the counsel right in the true date of the assignment being 20th October, 1840, what then is the posture of the case?

A mortgage in fee is defined to be, "An estate upon condition de-"feasible by the performance of the condition, according to its legal
"effect."

As the estate cannot vest till performance of the condition precedent, so the estate terminates the moment the condition is per-

17 formed. That this principle is incontrovertible, we are well assured, and no authority can be necessary to satisfy the Court of these principles.

Now quite equivalent to the performance of the condition, in any of the modes enumerated, is the saving of the condition; and this by any means operating in law to the discharge of the liability, the indemnity against which was the purpose of the instrument.

The condition may be saved in sundry modes; either by the non-performance of the condition precedent by the other party, or, by the exoneration and discharge of the sureties in this case.

The sureties are to be saved from loss—they are to be saved from damage—they are to be saved from liability. If, by any act, their indemnification is MADE COMPLETE, THE CONDITION IS SAVED.

This was the case in that cited, Luther Abbot vs. Nancy Upton, 19 Pickering, 334. There the condition of the mortgage was in the alternative, either to pay the money, or to indemnify the surety. The debtor substituted with his creditor another note, in lieu of that embraced in the mortgage. Surety held to be exonerated, and the condition of the mortgage saved. The estate upon condition is defeated, the defeasance takes effect. The estate of the mortgagor is again complete, ipso facto, by the saving of the condition.

The grantor being in the possession of the property, it being personalty, his title is again complete without conveyance. This is a familiar principle of law.

Thus, it will be seen, that if this deed of mortgage was at any time valid and binding, it has been cancelled and destroyed; if at any time of vital energy, that energy is gone. To save from liability its purpose, their exemption from liability extinguished its existence. It lived but for one object, that accomplished died.

III. The condition of the mortgage was never forfeited, for they have never been hurt. No loss, damage or liability has ever happened to them. Their assignees can stand in no better situation than the assignor.

In 2 Gallison, 564, Judge Story lays it down as a broad general principle, that the assignee of a chose in action can stand in no better situation than the assignor. If this be so, the condition has never been fortified; the estate of Preston is not forfeited.

Now it is urged that these mortgagees stand also in the posture of trustees, for whomsoever shall become owners of the promissory notes. This is derived singly from the fact, that the payment of the 18 notes at or before a day named, is set forth as a mode of extinguishment of liability; is "the saving harmless from loss, damage or liability." When we show, from the fair meaning of the instrument, that its object and intention was this indemnity; that this is the purpose of the deed; that the notes were not the property of the endorsers, nor they in any wise interested therein, except as sureties in the outset; and this interest extinguished by their discharge; in no mode interested at all—what interest could they assign to the present holder of the mortgage?

The numerous cases shown are all cases of the action of a Court of Equity to compel the application of the debtor's property, in the hands of the surety still bound, to the satisfaction of the debt due the creditor. And it is held that a surety shall be compelled to make application of the property held by him on deposit, for the payment of the debt of his principal.

Here the possession of the property never was with the mortgagees—the liens only was granted to them for a special purpose. The general rights of property, and the possession also, remained with the mortgagor. Here is no application to make a surety disgorge, but a claim made by the holder of promissory notes to the benefit of a lien never granted to him—never operative for any person's benefit—or if ever operative, extinguished and released as soon as made. There is no substitution—there can be none. If any, it is to be the endorser, without recourse of the mortgagor, and to hold an EXTINGUISHED SECURITY.

The creditors never held any interest in this mortgage, independently of the sureties. Had that suretyship been in existence, and the property of their debtor held by the endorser, the creditor might have compelled its application to the debt.

To apply this property to the payment of the money raised upon Preston's sole liability, when it was his act and deed, to apply it only to the indemnification of the mortgagees, if they became his sureties, is to make a new and different contract and engagement for the grantor.

Now it is no answer to say that sureties may extinguish mortgages, and then set them up, and have themselves paid out of the property.

If the surety pays the debt he is damnified; the condition of the mortgage is broken; the estate becomes complete in the mortgagee.

If the surety is liable, (where the indemnity, as in this case, is against all loss, damage, or liability,) and the debt due, the surety is 19 damnified.

The cases of 17 Johnson, Rep. 384, 2 Johnson Chy. 560, 2 Johnson, 554, 2 Yerger, 346, are all of this class; and the general rule laid down by appellee's counsel, that the mortgage must in every such case remain unextinguished, is not infringed.

Now to afford the relief here asked for, is to give the assignee that recourse the assignor never had; is to declare the condition of the deed broken as against Stewart, when it never was, and is not now broken, as against Hines, Holt and others, the mortgagees.

They, (the mortgagees,) could not at this hour proceed upon it, either for themselves, (if they had, after Preston negotiated the notes,) become the holders for value. Nor could they proceed upon it, (not being bound as endorsers,) for the benefit of the holders of the notes, whomsoever they are.

Now if they, (the endorsers without recourse,) could not proceed upon this mortgage, how can their assignee?

This is no proper case for subrogation, nor substitution. There is nothing to operate upon. The grantees never did comply with the condition precedent; the estate never vested.

If in face of the endorsement of the notes, it can be considered as having vested, it was afterwards divested; the condition of the mortgage is saved, and the mortgagor is in, of his original estate.

IV. The objection was taken, in the Court below, to the mortgage going in evidence under the petition. The Court will find that this is not the mortgage set up in the petition.

V. Again, the petitioner claims in his petition through the assignment on the mortgage of 20th October. He can only claim through that assignment.

The objection to that assignment is patent. There is an alteration on its face, of no less moment than involving the very right of action itself. If the assignment was shown to have been made to the Bank of Columbus, and is now set up as made to Charles Stewart, is it not apparent that the assignment fixed the title in that bank, and how does it come out again? Is it enough for the petitioner to draw black lines across the paper and insert his own name. The Court will see that the objection was made in the Court below, and no evidence offered by the petitioner to do away the objection. The Court then must presume it cannot be done away, and if unexplained, it would be fatal. Then it is fatal to this case, and the 20 judgment of the Court below must stand.

Carmack, in reply:

It is true that a note endorsed without date is presumed to have been endorsed on the same day, and at the time it was made. This is true in regard to the notes secured by this mortgage. It may not only be presumed, but the mortgage made contemporaneously with the notes, states that the endorsements were on the notes and in blank; the mortgage proves that the endorsements were made, and it also proves that they were afterwards filled up.

When was the endorsement filled up? It is not dated, but the endorsement on the mortgage is dated; it was filled up then on the same day that the mortgage was assigned; the one endorsement was the consideration of the other; the very nature of the transaction shows this.

As a general rule, it is true that the assignee can stand no better situation than the assignor. But, it is true only in this sense; the assignee after the assignment is in the same, and no better situation than the assignor was before; it was never designed to mean that they are both in the same situation at the same time, viz: after the assignment; because if it was true in that sense, the assignor having parted with all his rights by the assignment, the assignee being in the same situation would be without rights also; under this application of the rule there would be no situation to occupy by any body—the rights of both assignor and assignee, would be destroyed by the assignment. We are willing to take the situation of the assignors under our construction of the rule; and indeed we have, by taking the whole risk of the debt and the right of the assignors under the mortgage.

BALTZELL, Justice:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the late Superior Court for the County of Gadsden, rendered on a petition filed by appellant to obtain the foreclosure of a mortgage, under the Statute "to regulate "the foreclosure of mortgages by the Courts of Common Law, and "for other purposes."

The plea filed by defendant is, "that the mortgage was executed and delivered to Edward Carey and others, to indemnify them as endorsers on certain notes therein named; that it was intended by the terms thereof to operate only as a personal covenant of indemnity, and therefore not subject to the operation of the assignment set forth 21 in the petition, nor does the assignment convey such an interest as would give him the right to foreclose against the respondent."

An examination of the deed will at once show the fallacy of the position that it was given for indemnity merely. It is true the recital of the instrument expresses its "purpose to be the securing Carey and the other endorsers from any damage, loss or liability, in consequence of their endorsements," but the conveyance is made subject to "the conditions and stipulations, that if Preston shall pay all and "each of the notes as they become due, and not make default in any "of them, then the above obligation to be void, and the title thereby "conveyed; and it was further expressly stipulated, that if Preston "shall fail in payment of said notes and suffer the same to be protes-"ted, or to remain over due in whosoever hands the same be found, "then the said Carey and others, on making affidavit of such non-"payment, and the amount thereof, shall be permitted to foreclose the "mortgage, take out execution and bring to sale the said negroes, or "any portion necessary to the payment of the sum due, notwithstand-"ing said sum may not have been paid or any part thereof, by said "Carey and others."

We are not permitted in the construction of this or any other instrument, to consider one part to the exclusion of another, but must look at the whole to perceive the design of the maker of it. Indemnity was certainly its purpose, but there was an object beyond this, plainly expressed, by which indeed it was to be accomplished, which was to provided for "payment of the notes," and payment in whoso-"ever hands the same might be found." It is on payment alone of the notes that the "title conveyed and the obligation are to be void," and extraordinary means are provided to coerce payment even before the endorsers sustain any damage. Now if indemnity had been the sole object, these provisions would have been excluded, and others introduced to the effect that the title and obligation should be void on the endorsers being relieved or released from their responsibility. Such however is not the case.

It is then in the opinion of the Court not a mortgage of indemnity to the endorsers merely, but to secure the payment of the notes in addition. The decision of this point carries with it the other one taken by defendant's counsel dependent upon it, that being for indemnity merely, the mortgage was not assignable. As a general rule the endorsement of the notes secured by a mortgage carries with it the mortgage; this has not been denied in argument and it has not been 22 deemed necessary to cite authorities in support of it. In the present case there is an endorsement by Carey and others to the plaintiff "without recourse," and we proceed to inquire as to its effect upon the transfer of the mortgage.

"A qualified endorsement in no respect affects the negotiability of "the instrument, but simply qualifies the duties, obligations and res-"ponsibilities of the endorser resutling from the general principles "of law. Thus for example an endorsement of a note to A, without "recourse will not restrain the negotiability of the note, but will sim-"ply exclude any responsibility of the endorser on the non-accep-"tance or non-payment thereof." Story on Prom. notes 160, Section 146.

The form of such an endorsement best expresses its nature and character: "James Atkins sans recourse or James Atkins with in-"tent only to transfer my interest, and not to be subject to any liability "in case of non-acceptance or non-payment." Story on Notes, 149; Chitty on Bills, 250—251.

Whatever interest then would pass by a general or full endorsement, it seems will pass by a qualified endorsement. If right in this respect, the endorsement in this case carried with it the right and interest of the mortgage, as it certainly did the right to the note itself. This however is not so material, as there is a direct assignment and transfer of the mortgage by Carey and others, the grantees, to the plaintiff. It is alleged that this is invalid on account of the erasure of the words Bank of Columbus, and interlineation of the name of plaintiff, but the law is too well settled to admit of controversy on this point: "An interlineation or erasure apparent on the face of "the deed," said Chief Justice Marshal, in the case of Speake and others vs. The United States, does not of itself avoid it. To pro-"duce this effect it must be shown to have been done under circum-"stances that the law does not warrant." 9 Cranch, 28; 3 Condensed rep. 244.

In that case the facts were distinctly put in issue by the plea of non est factum, whereas in the case under consideration, there is neither averment nor proof that the alteration was illegally or improperly made.

We might here close our examination of the case, having disposed of the objections raised by defendant in his pleading, and show a clear and sufficient right in the plaintiff to recover. All other defences, according to the rules of pleading, are considered as waived, 23 especially such as are connected with the facts of the case; and the rule in this respect is founded upon principles of justice and propriety. Where a defence is made in appropriate season, the opposing party may prepare to meet it, to explain and remove whatever may be prejudicial to his case. But when made at an unsuitable time, it may surprise, and if received, do injury and injustice.

With these remarks, we proceed to notice objections urged in this Court by defendant's counsel with great zeal, and on which great reliance has been placed, which though not presented by the defence below, it may be more satisfactory to have considered. "That the mortgage was made and delivered upon a state of circumstances which afterwards became changed and altered, and to effect purposes afterwards abandoned, and that in truth the deed was delivered upon conditions not performed. The notes were endorsed by them without recourse, that endorsement was contemporaneous with the making of the notes in point of law, and thus evinces an entire change of the original design of the parties. In argument it was said that Carey and others, never were bound, they did not become liable on Preston's account, they never were sureties at all, they never run any risk on his account."

If all this be true, it was certainly most material to Preston's defence: it must have been known to him at the time of filing his plea and his failure to rely upon it, if not entirely at variance with its existence, to say the least, is wholly inexplicable. The position "that Carey and others, were never sureties nor liable on Preston's account, nor run any risk for him," is rather broad, considering the character of the deed and its provisions, declaring expressly that they had endorsed for him, and had become his secureties." The other points are based on the assumption that "the endorsement of Carey and others, was contemporaneous with the making of the notes in point of law," and that Preston derived no benefit or advantage from it.

Such a presumption would be a very forced one, opposed as it is to the recital of the deed, dclaring that they had endorsed in blank, to its objections and purposes—its delivery and possession by plaintiff, and the direct object and end of Preston in making and procuring them all. The notes are payable at either of the Banks in Columbus, and were obviously designed for discount. The fact of the endorsement shows that he could not get money on his own credit or the discount without endorsers may have been against the rules of the Bank; hence he procured them—that he could not get it on endorse- 24 ment alone; hence he gave security on property. Now that Preston, after completing his arrangements and before presenting the notes for discount, should have filled up the endorsement so as to destroy the liability of the endorsers, is wholly incredible; the more so if the effect of the act were to invalidate the mortgage also. He would then, according to the argument of defendant's counsel, have presented his notes for discount with no security. But if the endorsement was of no use to him nor the mortgage either, why not destroy them and substitute his individual note in their place? He certainly could not in honesty and fairness have presented a note secured apparently with endorsement and mortgage, for discount, which he knew at the time to be invalid and worthless. We will not presume a state of facts so injurious to fair dealing and common honesty. On the contrary the fair and rational inference is, that these instruments were made for an object which was attained, and that they were of use to him. The fair presumption is that the notes were discounted whilst the endorsements were in blank, on the faith of them and the mortgage, and that the endorsers either took them up by payment or otherwise, and afterwards transferred them to the present holder, he taking them with the qualified endorsement; or that the endorsers, the notes having been discounted at Bank, bargained for their exoneration from the endorsement by giving an assignment of the mortgage, an arrangement which they had a right to make, and which Preston could not object to, as by it his purpose of saving his endorsers through means of a deed made expressly for that object, was fully attained.

We have seen, however, that the effect of the qualified endorsement was to transfer the right and interest of the mortgage, so that the effect would be the same, whether the endorsement was filled up contemporaneously with the note or afterwards. If the Bank, or party negotiating the notes, dispensed with the endorsement, so far as to take it without recourse, their design must have been to rely on the mortgage; and from the fact that it was not discharged, or in any way cancelled, but placed on the record found in possession of plaintiff, the inference is conclusive that Preston regarded it as valid and a subsisting security. Strong as the above positions are, they are fortified by the fact that credits appear on the note for monies received by plaintiff of defendant, to nearly half his indebtedness.

We fully concur in the position taken by defendant's counsel, that the mortgage created a trust for the payment of the notes, and that Carey and others might, in a proper case, have been decreed to allow the use of their names, if necessary to a suit, to have the mortgaged property applied to their payment. This was not necessary in this case, as they have assigned their mortgage to plaintiff.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the judgment of the Court below was erroneous, and should be reversed. It is therefore considered by the Court, that the judgment of the Superior Court be, and the same is hereby reversed and set aside, with costs. And it is further ordered, that this case be remitted to the Circuit Court for the county of Gadsden, for further proceedings to be had in conformity to this opinion.

Per Curiam. Judgment reversed.

RICHARD WHITAKER, vs. CHARLES MORRISON.

IN an action against the endorser, the true and correct enquiry seems to be whether the holder of the note has made use of due and reasonable diligence to bring home notice of the dishonor of the note to the party whose contingent liability depends upon having such notice. Due diligence on the part of the holder to obtain payment from the maker, being a condition precedent on which the liability of the endorser depends, it is well settled, must be proved, to enable the party to recover.

Proof of demand and notice of dishonor of a bill or note, must not rest on mere inference or light presumption, but must be of a stronger and more affirmative character.

Reasonable notice is a compound of law and facts, and when the facts are clearly ascertained, becomes a question of law and is to be decided by the Court.

The testimony of a notary that it was his invariable habit to give notice, and believes he gave it in this case, but that he had no recollection of the present case except from the papers shown him, and that the answers he gave were not from knowledge or recollection but from his habits of doing business; held to be insufficient evidence of notice to fix liability of endorser.

A payment on a note, or a promise to pay, after full knowledge of the default, precludes the party making the one or the other from insisting on a want of notice; but the promise must be clear, explicit and unconditional, and the facts of such a nature as clearly to warrant a presumption of a waiver.

A part payment of a note by the endorser, not explained or qualified by any accompanying circumstances, will be held to be sufficient evidence of waiver of notice. But where the payment by the endorser was made with the money of the maker, and by his request, the endorser acts as mere agent of the maker, and the transaction is so qualified and explained as to preclude all idea of an actual or intended waiver on the part of the endorser.

It is a general rule that an endorser once discharged by want of notice, or laches of the holder, is always discharged, and cannot again be rendered liable except by some voluntary act or agreement; if an act, it must be clear and unequivocal and incapable of explanation or qualification; if an agreement, it must be so clear that a new promise is inferred, and the original liabilities by force of this promise incurred anew.

APPEAL from Leon Superior Court.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. & L. Branch, for appellant:

1st. That the maker of the note having become endorser subsequent to appellant, extinguished the liability of all prior endorsers, and cited:—Bayley on Bills, page 153. Chitty on Bills, pages 248—265. Blake vs. Sewal, 3 Mass. 556. Long vs. Bank of Cynthiana, 1 Litt. 290.

2d. That sufficient notice of non-payment was not given by holder to defendant, to fix his liability as endorser; and that it is incumbent on the holder to prove by distinct, positive and precise evidence, that due notice of non-payment was given to party sued; and that it cannot be left to inference or presumption, and cited:—Lawson vs. Sherwood, 1st Starkie, 314. Hetherington vs. Kemp, 4 Camp. 193. Chitty on Bills, 511—12—646—7. Taylor vs. U. Bank, decided by Court of Appeals of Florida. Flack vs. Green, 3 Gill & Johns. 474. Bank of U. S. vs. Corocoran, 2 Peters, 121.

3. That sufficiency of notice is a question of law, the facts being ascertained. Taylor vs. U. Bank, decided by the Court of Appeals of Florida. Chitty on Bills, 506—642—3. Darbishine vs. Parker, 6 East. R. 3. Hussey vs. Freeman, 10 Mass. R. 84. Bank of Columbia vs. Lawrence, 1 Peters, 578. Bryden vs. Bryden, 11 Johns. R. 187.

4. That the payment by Whitaker as credited on the note cannot, under the circumstances, be construed to be a waiver of his right to demand due notice, it having been made with the money, and by the request of the maker, and in effect, only as his agent. And that even had the payment been made by Whitaker with his own money and of his own accord, it does not appear that it was made after a full knowledge of all the circumstances necessary to apprize him of his discharge from responsibility by the laches of the holder, which is necessary to constitute a waiver. And furthermore, that the facts attending the payment, are not sufficiently clear and unequivocal to warrant the presumption of a new undertaking being voluntarily and intentionally made. Chitty on Bills, 540—1. Thornton vs. Wynn, 12 Wheat. 187. Ritcher vs. Selin, 8 Sergt. & Rawle, 425. Tower vs. Durell, 9 Mass. R. 332. Crogher's vs. Wolf, 2 Monroe, 88. Garland vs. Salem Bank, 9 Mass. R. 408. Story on Bills, 362—367. Goodall and others vs. Dolley, 1 T. R. 712.

T. H. Hagner, for appellee, argued:

Objected to entering into the argument of the first error assigned. It had not been taken in the Court below. Undoubtedly if a note after being in circulation, is taken up by the maker, it is extinguished, and if put into circulation again by him, creates no liability against the prior endorsers. But the mere fact of the name of the maker by his agent having been endorsed on this note, and then erased, does not establish the fact of such putting into circulation a second time. It may have been, and doubtless was, endorsed by mistake, and had the plaintiff below been there called upon, it might have been explained.

Upon the ground taken by him that this Court could not inquire into objections not made in the Court below, he cited:—9 Peters, 731. 10 Peters, 208. 3 Howard's Mis. Rep. 105. 1 Mass. 208. Rule XVI Court of Appeals of Florida, adopted by sec. 3d of an act to organize the Supreme Court of the State of Florida.

He argued the 2d error assigned—the question of the sufficiency of notice to charge the endorser, and relied upon the fact of the two payments made by Whitaker, as acts done importing clearly admissions of the right of the holder to restore against him. He cited Rogers vs. Stephens, 2 Durnford & East, 719. Opinion of Ashhurst, Justice, where it was held that the defendant's subsequent acknowledgement, "that the bill must be paid," amounts in law to a promise that it shall be paid, and does away the necessity of considering the question relative to the want of notice.

He insisted that the act of payment was an admission of liability—a declaration that all had been done which need be done, to fix the liability—like any other acknowledgement of an existing fact, precluded the party from denying it. Gibbon vs. Coggon, 2 Campbell, 188. Or if viewed as a waiver of laches, it is an admission that he received no damage from want of notice. Thornton vs. Wynn, 2 Wheaton, 187. Buller's N. P. 276. 6 East. 16. 2 Strange, 1246. 2 Starkie's Evid. 272.

Lord Mansfield in Borradaile vs. Lowe, 4 Taunton, 97, mentions the several cases where defendants have been held liable by their own act, and he distinguishes express from implied promises. He says, "In most of the cases where the defendants have been held liable, they have either made an express promise to pay, or a promise when they had a full knowledge at the time that they were discharged, or where there was a real debt binding in conscience due from them." And Story on Bills, p. 363, declares that payment of a part of the money due on the bill, is an express promise. And on p. 365, the author distinguishes the ground of the decision—"the act done must be of a nature clearly importing a like admission of the right" of the holder.

Conscious of the force of this fact of payment, the counsel for appellant sought in the Court below to avoid its effect, by introducing proof that the money paid was paid by Maner, the maker, into his endorsers hands, and by him paid into the Bank. Now, so far from this fact lessening, it actually strengthens the admission which the act of payment clearly imports. There is no proof that Whitaker was Maner's general agent. Maner was largely indebted to the bank. Why then should Maner pay to the endorser on this note the money, except to be applied to its liquidation particularly? And why should Whitaker be interested to apply it there, unless Whitaker was bound? The note had been discounted on Whitaker's responsibility—had been protested for non-payment—and upon no other supposition than that of his being bound, can the payment to him be accounted for. The proof shows that two payments were made at different periods, and each were applied to this note. If the payments were made by Whitaker with Maner's funds as insisted on, then Maner's supplying his accommodation endorser with funds wherewith to discharge the note, proves Maner's knowledge of the existing liability, while Whitake's receipt of funds on two occasions, and applying them to this note, are renewed acknowledgements of the same fact; "admissions that the note had been rgularly presented and protested, and that due notice of dishonor had been given."

In Chitty on Bills, ch. 10, p. 533—538, (8th edit.) this is the light in which such partial payments are viewed, and this "even in cases where the party who paid or promised, afterwards stated that in fact.

29 he had not had due notice," &c.; and he then states the reason of the rule, to which I call the attention of the Court:—"because, (says he,) it is to be inferred that the part payment or promise to pay would not have been made, unless all circumstances had concurred to subject the party to liability, and induce him to make such payment or promise." And on page 536, he says, "it seems to have been once considered that a misapprehension of the legal liability would prevent a subsequent promise from being obligatory," and that "from subsequent cases it appears such docrine is not law."

The ground contended for here, however, is, that a failure to prove notice given, settles the fact of a failure to give the notice; and the counsel establishes thereby, as he contends, a laches; and that the payment, if made in ignorance of the facts of the discharge does not bind him. But this is not the true position of the matter—the appellant has, by two unequivocal admissions, declared his liability. It is for him to show that he did it in ignorance of the facts. If it be true that whenever the plaintiff fails to prove notice, or relies upon the admission, he must go on and prove that notice was indeed duly given, then the endorser's admission even in writing, is held of no force or effect, and in every case, the very fact which he has admitted is obliged to be proved. The more unqualified the admission, the worse for the holder. He may rely on the party's own act —he is told on the trial, you must prove all the admission contains—in other words, the admission means nothing.

HAWKINS, Justice:

Assumpsit by the appellee, Morrison, as the endorser of the following promissory note, against the appellant, Whitaker, as an endorser thereof:

"No. — TALLAHASSEE, August 18th, 1837.

"Sixty days after date, I promise to pay to the order of Thomas "Brown, at the Central Bank of Florida, Thirty-five hundred Dol- "lars and —— cents, value received.

"WILLIAM MANER,
"$3500 Per L. P. TAYLOR.

(Endorsed,)

"THOMAS BROWN,
"RICHARD WHITAKER,
"WILLIAM MANER, per

30 "May 10th, 1843—Rec'd from R. Whitaker on acc. $140o 51-
"100 dols. H. L. R. May, 10, 1838. Rec'd on acc. $891 75
"—rec'd 24th March, 1838."

The declaration contains a count on the note, setting out the endorsement from Brown to Whitaker, and from him to the plaintiff, and the usual money counts. It also avers that the note sued upon, was duly presented to Maner, the maker, and payment demanded, which was refused, and that (the appellant) Whitaker, had notice thereof.

The defendant pleaded non-assumpsit, issue joined, and a verdict was rendered for the plaintiff.

In support of his action, the plaintiff offered in evidence the original note and protest. John J. Rowles, a witness for plaintiff, testified to the truth of the facts as set forth in the protest, viz:—That he duly presented for payment the note sued upon, at the time it fell due, at the Central Bank, where it was made payable; which was refused. That it was his invariable habit to give notice to endorsers, when a note was protested by him; in case they lived in town to give personal notice, and if in the country, directed to the nearest post office. Believing that notice was given to the endorser, Whitaker, through the post office, directed to Tallahassee, the one at which he received his letters. That it was his habit to make a memorandum on the copy of the protest kept by him, and not on the one now exhibited. That this copy was lost. That he did not remember an instance in the whole course of his life, in which he failed to give notice, on refusal to pay by the maker. That his usual way of doing business, induced him to believe that notice was given defendant, but could recollect no circumstances about this case, and that he did not recollect to have put a notice in the post office for Whitaker, or to have presented the note and demanded payment thereof. That he had no recollection of the matter whatever, except from the papers shown him. That he recollected to have put letters containing notice of notes falling due, or of protest, in the post office for defendant, but had no recollection of this case. That the answers which he had given were not from knowledge and recollection, but from his habit of doing business, and that he had no knowledge as to the post office of defendant, and that he did not then know where he resided.

Henry L. Rutgers, also swore for the plaintiff, proved the credit given upon the note on May 18, 1838, and that he received the money from the defendant, Whitaker. 31

On the part of the defendant, Leslie A. Thompson was called, who testified that he was cashier of the Central Bank at the time of the transfer to the Union Bank. That in 1837, William Maner, the maker of the note, was indebted to the Central Bank in a large sum of money, and that it had received from Maner, heavy collateral security which was good. The defendant also instructed William Maner, the maker of the note, who testified, that the money credited upon the note, as received from Whitaker, was his. That he furnished Whitaker with the same, with the request that he would pay it to the Union Bank, (at that time) the holder of the note.

The defendant at the trial prayed the Court to instruct the Jury, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover against the defendant, because sufficient legal notice of the non-payment had not been given defendant, nor due diligence used to fix the endorser. This instruction the Court refused to give, and instructed the jury, that due and legal notice of non-payment of the note sued on, was sufficient to establish the liability of the defendant as endorser.

The defendant excepted, and the verdict and judgment being against him, he appealed to his Court.

It is contended for by the appellant:

That upon the record, the plaintiff in the Court below was not entitled to recover against the defendant.

2d. That the liability of appellant as endorser on the note sued on, was extinguished by the maker becoming an endorser thereon, subsequent to the endorsement of defendant, and that no recovery could be had against him on his said endorsement.

3d. That sufficient notice of the non-payment of the note, at its maturity, was not given by the holder thereof to defendant, to fix his liability as endorser.

4th. That upon the evidence, the Court should have instructed the jury, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

On the part of the appellee, it is contended.

That the evidence of notice to the defendant in the Court below, was sufficient, and that due diligence had been used, and that even if not sufficient, the payment by Whitaker to the Bank, the holder previous to the appellee, was an admission of notice, and waiver of his rights as endorser as to the requirement of notice of the demand upon the maker, and his refusal to pay, and as such, sustained the 32 averment of notice as set forth in the declaration.

It is also contended for the appellee, that inasmuch as the second point, viz:—the re-endorsement to the defendant, was not taken in the Court below, and does not come up to this Court in the bill of Exceptions, it is not the province of this Court to notice it, and adjudicate thereupon, and in support of this, cites 16 Peters' U. S. R. 618.

The Court will, in their decision, only notice those points which appear directly decisive of the case.

The first question is: Whether Whitaker, the appellant, has received due and proper notice of the dishonor of the note sued upon? And,

Secondly: If such notice was not given, whether there has been any act on the part of Whitaker, amounting to a waiver of proof of demand and notice.

The true and correct inquiry, in all cases of this nature, seems to be, whether the holder of the note has made use of due and reasonable diligence to bring home notice of the dishonor of the note, to the party whose contingent liability depends upon his having such notice. Due diligence on the part of the holder to obtain payment from the maker being a condition precedent, on which the liability of the endorser depends, it is well settled must be proved, to enable the party to recover. The attention of the Court has been called by the counsel for the appellant to Chitty on Bills, page 646, (9 Am. ed.) where it is laid down, in speaking of the requisite proof of the fact of notice to the endorser, that the notice must be "proved precisely, and not left to inference, at what time and in what manner, the letter (containing notice) was sent.

The law in relation to this matter seems clearly laid down. In an action by the endorsee against the endorser of a bill of Exchange, a witness testified, that either two or three days after the dishonor of the bill, notice was given by letter to defendant. Notice in two days being sufficient and in time, but notice on the third too late. Lord Ellenborough said: "The witness say, two or three days, but "the third day would be too late. It lies upon you to show that notice was given in due time, and I cannot go upon probable evidence, "without positive proof of the fact." Byles on Bills, 163, citing Lawson and another, assignee of Shifner vs. Sherwood, 1 Starkie R. 314.

33 In Hetherington vs. Kemp, 4 Campbell's nisi prius cases, 192, the only question was, whether the defendant had received due notice of the dishonor of a bill of exchange. Lord Ellenborough lays it down in this case, that even general evidence of a course of business, is not sufficient to carry with it proof of the dishonor of a bill: The facts were proved, that the plaintiff, after the bill was due, wrote a letter containing a statement of its dishonor to the defendant; that this letter was put on a table, where according to the usage of his counting house, letters for the post were always deposited, and that a porter carried them from hence to the post office. But the porter was not called, and there was no evidence as to what become of the letter after it was placed upon the table.

In Flack vs. Green, 3 Gill & Johnson, page 475, it was proposed to give in evidence, and prove as to the giving of notice, "that it was "the invariable and uniform practice of the endorsers house and "counting room to which the notices had been directed, to forward "such notices immediately upon their receipt, and the witnesses "who were employed in such counting room, had no doubt, and "believed from the course of their business, that they had forwarded "one of the notices to the other endorser." This being the only evidence adduced as to the notice of dishonor, it was ruled out in the Court below, as being incompetent and inadmissable, and the opinion of the Court below was sustained by the Court of Appeals of the State of Maryland.

From these and the general current of authorities, there seems no doubt, that proof of demand, and notice of dishonor of a bill or note, must not rest on mere inference or light presumption, but must be of a stronger and more affirmative character.

Reasonable notice is a compound of law and fact; but when the facts are clearly ascertained, becomes a question of law, and is to be decided by the Court. 3 Wendell, 75. 2 Peter's U. S. R. 100. The facts in this case are of a nature as to render them a question of law. The inquiry now arises, was the proof of notice in the Court below, of a character to bring it within the purview and spirit of the rules of evidence as laid down, as to the requisite notice to be given in cases of dishonor of a bill or note? Rowles, the sole witness as to the notice, testifies that it was his invariable habit to give notice, and believes that he gave it in this case—that he could recollect no circumstance as to the present instance—and had no recollection except from the papers shown him—and winds up his testimony by 34 saying, that the answers he gave were not from knowledge or recollection, but from his habits of doing business.

His evidence is based on belief, without knowledge or recollection, and that belief arising too from the simple incident, his habit of doing business; and indeed by a close inspection, it seems but little more than vague conjecture, or at most, slight presumption.

The law requires something of a more explicit and definite character, and we are clearly of opinion that the Court below erred in not giving the instruction as prayed for by the defendant's counsel, as to the insufficiency of the testimony in relation to the notice.

The next question remaining for the consideration of the Court is: Whether as contended for by appellee, there has been a waiver of want of notice, or laches of the holder of the note, by appellant —that payment by Whitaker was a direct admission of notice.

To support the affirmative of this proposition, the appellee relies on the evidence of Rutgers, while the appellant assumes the negative, and endeavors to rebut the evidence of Rutgers by that of Maner.

There can be no doubt, that payment on a note or a promise to pay, after full knowledge of the default, precludes a party making one or the other, from insisting on a want of notice; but the promise must be clear, explicit and unconditional, and the facts of such a nature as to clearly warrant the presumption of a waiver; and in 2 Starkie on evidence 272, it is said that part payment amounts to the strongest of all evidence as to waiver, affording presumptive proof, that all things have been rite acta, Vaughn, vs. Fuller, 2 Strange, 1246; Buller N. P. 276; 5 Burr, 26, 70. Thornton, vs. Wynn, 12 Wheat. 183; 16 John, R. 152; 1 Martin and Yerger, 74. Judge Story on speaking of the doctrine of waiver says: "If he makes such a waiver in "ignorance of facts he will not be bound thereby—but if with full "knowledge, he will. Indeed, a promise by the party entitled to no- "tice, to pay the bill, is deemed a full and complete waiver of the "want of notice, and payment of part of the money due on the Bill "will have the same effect. But then in all cases of this sort, the "promise must be unequivocal, and amount to an admission of the "right of the holder; or the act done must be of a nature clearly im- "porting a like admission of his right. If it be defective in either "respect, or if it be a conditional offer of payment, then and in such "case, the holder has no right to insist upon it as a waiver." Story on Bills, page 363, 4, 5 and 6; Cayuga Bank, vs. Dill, 5 Hill, 103.

The part payment of a note not explained or qualified by any accompanying circumstances, will be held to be sufficient evidence of 35 waiver of notice; 450 Story on promissary Notes; and on page 454 of the same work, he lays it down among the cases which will not constitute sufficient excuse for the want of due notice of the dishonor of a note, where the maker in contemplation of his inability to pay the whole at maturity, has lodged money with the Indorser for part payment thereof, when due.

The evidence of Rutgers, certainly makes out a prima facia case of payment, with its legal consequences, on the note by Whitaker, and but, that it is rebutted by the direct and positive evidence of Maner, would entitled the appellee to all the benefits arising from a waiver on the part of Whitaker, were it shown likewise that the payment was not made under a mistake or ignorance of facts. But Maner's testimony is clear and direct; he says that the money was his, not Whitaker's, and paid in accordance with his request; and we think, that this evidence, using the words of Judge Story, so "qualifies and explains" the transaction, as to preclude all idea of an actual or intended waiver on the part of Whitaker.

There was no evidence showing that a promise of payment on the part of Whitaker, and the bare fact of his delivering the money is not enough—as to this, Whitaker seems to have acted as the mere agent of Maner, and it would be at variance with all ideas of justice, explained as the occurrence is, that Whitaker, acting in the capacity of an agent simply, should be rendered subject to legal liabilities, by the virtual act of his principal.

Liabilities for the acts of others may be created either by a direct authority given for their performance, or it may flow from the adoption, or in some instances from acquiescence in those acts. But presumptions can only stand when they are compatable with the conduct of those to whom it may be sought to apply them; and still more must give place, when in conflict with clear, distinct and convincing proof; 16 Peter's U. S. R. 331.

Could Whitaker, by any possibility, recover the money endorsed upon the note in an action, for so much money paid for the use of Maner? It is true the payment enured to the benefit of Whitaker, in lessening his liability protanto upon the note; but a payment by any body else would have the same effect, and we cannot think, that there existed that privity between Maner and Whitaker, as to have produced that identity, contended for by the appellee. The evidence of Rutgers does not extend beyond the receiving of the money from there is no evidence to shew that Whitaker intended, wished, or directed, that the delivery of the money should be considered as a payment specifically made by him, thereby rendering himself liable to the legal consequences arising from the act.

But the presumptions which might otherwise arise in this case from the face of the paper sued upon, must give way to facts clearly and unequivocally stated in the evidence of Maner; and this Court cannot permit the inferences arising from the act of a party opposed in interest, however innocently done, to weigh against positive and direct proof.

It is a general rule, that an endorser once discharged by want of notice or laches of the holder, is always discharged, and he cannot again be rendered liable, except by some voluntary act or agreement. If an act, it must be clear and unequivocal, and incapable of explanation or qualification; if an agreement, it must be so clear, that a new promise is inferred, and the original liabilities by force of this promise incurred anew.

In this case at least, the waiver should have been established, in clear evidence, and not upon suppositions arising from the act of third persons, or the peculiar and adventitious situation of parties.

With these views, the Court is of opinion, that the Court below erred in not giving the direction to the jury as prayed for, in relation to due diligence and requisite notice on the part of the plaintiff Morrison; and that the facts, as before us, do not constitute a waiver, on the part of Whitaker, of such diligence and notice, or an admission of notice by Whitaker.

It is therefore Ordered, that the judgment in the Court below be reversed, and that a venire de novo be awarded.

Per curiam. Judgment reversed, and venire de novo.

37 FREDERICK R. COTTEN, vs. ROBERT W. WILLIAMS, Trustee, &c

WHERE a plea alleged, that long after the signing, sealing and delivery of the bond, as a joint and several obligation, and after it had been endorsed and assigned, and also, after the death of one of the obligees, the said bond was altered and changed materially, by the assignee thereof procuring the name of N. T. to be added thereto as one of the obligors; and also, that about one year after the procuring of the name of N. T. to be added, the said bond was again altered and changed materially, by the assignee thereof procuring the name of defendant to be added thereto, as one of the obligors, but did not allege that the alterations were made without the knowledge license or consent of defendant; held that a demurrer was well taken and that the plea was defective.

It by no means follows, because the allegation, that the alteration was made without the knowledge, license or consent of defendant, is of a negative character, that it is not essential the validity of the plea; or that the defendant, had he have made the allegation, would have been required to prove it, there being many negative allegations which must be made in the pleading, but which the party pleading them, is not by law required to prove.

A plea alleging merely that seals were affixed to a bond without the consent of defendant, without also alleging that it was done with the knowledge, or by the authority or direction of the plaintiff, is not sufficient.

A plea, having on its face two intendments, ought to be construed most strongly against the party who pleads it.

If several persons sign an instrument concluding with "witness our hands and seals," some putting seals opposite their names, and others not, such as did not affix seals, will be presumed to have adopted the seals already there.

If the name of an obligor be added to a bond after it has been executed and delivered, whatever effect it may have on the rights of parties who signed it before him, the person who thus signed cannot avail himself of it to defeat his own deed—such an instrument is good as to him.

The 34th section of the "act regulating judicial proceedings," does not place the several classes of instruments therein mentioned upon a footing, in all respects, with commercial paper, yet the effect of it is to make them negotiable by assignment or endorsement.

It is not necessary that the assignment of a bond, or writing obligatory, should be under seal.

APPEAL from Leon Superior Court, transferred from the late Court of Appeals. The facts and pleadings are fully set forth in the opinion of the Court.

J. & L. Branch, for the Appellant.

1st. There being neither a scrawl nor a seal to Cotten's name, it was not his bond.

38 2nd. Cotten having signed the instrument after its negotiation, and after the death of one of the obligees (Nuttall,) his contract must have been either with the original obligees, Nuttall, Braden and Craig, or with the present holder. If with the former, the instrument was void as to him ab initio by the law of nature, as well as the law of the land, because one of the obligees was dead, and there could be no delivery to him. If his contract was with the present holder, then the proof not only does not support the declaration, but is utterly irreconciliable with its allegations, because he is declared against as having executed the instrument "jointly and severally," with others, and "delivered it to Nuttall, Braden and Craig, who then and there endorsed and delivered it to" the present holder.

3rd. The addition of the name of an obligor, not originally such, without the consent of all the parties, is such a material alteration as vitiates the bond, and it rests on the person claiming under it to show that the alteration was made with the consent of the parties Bayley on Bills, 44, 45, 92. Chitty on Bills, 211. O'Neal vs. Long, 4 Cranch, 60. Speake et al vs. United States, 9 Cranch, 28. Selwyn, N. P., 547, 549. Shep. Touchstone, 69.

By a statute of this State, Duval's Comp., 103, co-sureties can recover pro rata contribution of each other by action at law; suppose A executes a bond for 1,000, with B and C as sureties. If B is compelled to pay the whole, he can recover back $500 from C. But foreseeing that, B, will be compelled to pay it, C, by collusion with the holder, procures the names of two insolvent persons to be added to the instrument; B, then can recover only one fourth of the debt, or $250 from C. Would it not be equivalent to permitting a party to an instrument to increase or diminish the amount of it at his pleasure?

4th. If the above position is correct, it follows that the bond was rendered utterly void, as to all prior obligors, by the addition of Thompson's name, long before Cotten became a party to it; whatever obligation Cotten's signing it subsequently, imposed on him, it certainly could not revive it as to them. Then how can he be recovered against as a joint and several maker with them?

5th. The case is not at all changed by the fact that the special pleas were defective, (if they were so). It was not necessary to plead specially. All the facts of the case on which appellant relied, could be proved under non est factum; Selywn, N. P., 569, et passim.

The case was tried on that plea; appellant offered to prove that the addition of Thompson's name was made; that it had been made 39 without the knowledge or consent of the obligors; that the bond had been transferred by Nuttall's endorsement two years after Nuttall's death, and that Cotten had signed it after it had been so transferred, and the whole evidence was rejected by the Court as immaterial.

6th. The Court erred in rejecting the testimony of Rutgers, because, even if the facts proposed to be proved by him, did not constitute a legal defense to the action, they were relevant to the issues, and ought to have gone to the Jury, along with proper instructions as to their effects.

7th. It will require three legal anomalies to support the judgment rendered in this case. 1. A dead man must be made to enter into a contract. 2. A dead man must be made to indorse an instrument with his own hand. 3. A living and a dead man must be made to endorse and deliver over a bond, long before the bond itself is executed or delivered to them.

Long & Walker, for Appellee.

T. H. Hagner, for Appellee, in reply to the point first made, viz:—That there being no scrawl or seal to Cotten's signature, he was not bound—said:

That the adoption of a seal already made, is as good as making a new seal for himself. That a recognition of the impression already made is sufficient—and he cited: Hurlestone on Bonds, p. 7. 3 Scammon's Rep. 41—and again 51. And one seal is enough for several parties. 1 Espinassi Rep. 97.

Upon the second point, that the contract of Cotten was made after Nuttall's death, and so was made with a dead man, he argued:—That Cotten adopted the contract as made. He became surety to the holder of the obligation. That obligation had been made during Nuttall's life-time; had been endorsed by him, and was then held by a third party; payable as a bond or note to bearer. Cotten's signing and sealing it, made him surety for the performance of the obligation of the former obligors, that they would pay to the order of Nuttall, Braden & Craig, which order he, Cotten, knew had already been made thereon, for it was held by a third party. The legal effect of his act was, to oblige himself to pay the money to whomsoever should become the holder of that obligation. He referred to the case of deeds, and to the doctrine of relation. That deeds may have double delivery—and such shall take effect, and have relation to first delivery, or not, as circumstances may require—"ut res valeat"—for if 40 relation may hurt, and for some cause make void the deed, then it shall not relate. Shepard's Touchstone, 72. Butler & Baker's case, 3 Reports, 25. Jennings vs. Bragg, Croke Eliz. 446—7. That where an obligation is made by two, and the one seals at one time, and the other at another time, yet it is one entire deed, and shall relate to the time of the first delivery, and the party shall declare accordingly. And he cited: Colling's vs. Harding, Croke Eliz. 622. Lord Coke declares that the relations depends on the nature of the transaction, and the presumable intention of the parties "Semper ita fiat relatio, ut valeat dispositio."

Upon third point: That the adding new names is a material alteration—he admitted it was a material alteration to vitiate the bond as to parties not consenting—but contended that there was no alteration here—but the making an obligation by another party. So every new name added by endorsement to a note or bill of exchange creates a new obligation. That the case cited from Bayley on Bills, and Chitty on Bills, were of alterations made within the province of the revenue laws—to defraud the exchequer—to make a new contract out of an old one without paying stamp duties, and void because of that fraud. Yet admitting, for the sake of the argument, that this is an alteration which the defendant could set up, yet the demurrer must be held good, because there is no averment that the alteration was made without the knowledge of defendant. A reference to the citations made by appellant's counsel proves this. In 4 Cranch, 60—an alteration made without the knowledge of a party, declared to make the contract void as to that party. 9 Cranch, 28—the erasure of one name and substitution of another, "without the knowledge of the party sought to be held bound." Selwyn's N. P. p. 547, (258,) bill of exchange altered without the knowledge or privity of the defendant—citing 4 Term Rep. 320; and Grose, J. cited Pigot's case, 11 Rep. 27.

It is alleged that there could be no endorsement to the plaintiff, to sustain the allegation in the declaration—because there could be no delivery to the obligee—Nuttall being dead. The case of Adams vs. Jones, 12 Adolphus & Ellis, shows that a blank endorsement, with a delivery of the obligation to any party as such endorsee, would be a sufficient delivery to any subsequent holder. It becomes as a note payable to bearer.

On the whole case, he contended that there was nothing antago-

41 nist to sound principles of law in the judgment below. To have decided otherwise would have been to allow the obligor to defeat at will, by mere parol, his own solemn deed. He thought there was nothing strange or inconsistent in a man's adopting an obligation already made by others; and his signing and sealing the obligation, placed him just where he would have been, had he signed and sealed it at its date. That date he cannot controvert.

He instanced the case of a deed, signed, sealed and delivered. Suppose that, subsequently, and after the assignment of that deed, another party, who claimed an interest in the land, should also sign and seal the same deed, then in possession of the assignee, would it not be a valid conveyance? Would it not be an acknowledgment and adoption of every antecedent act? Could the party be allowed to invalidate it by parol proof of what was contradicted by his seal, without averment of fraud, or deception, or failure of consideration?

J. & L. Branch, in reply:

It is admitted that any number of persons may adopt a single scrawl or seal, but there must be something in the relative positions of the names, or some other circumstance, from which such an intention may be inferred.

It may be true, that Cotten made himself liable to the holder for the payment of the debt; it is not necessary for us to deny that in this case. But if so, it was a new and substantive contract between him and the holder, and should have been sued on as such. He never made such a contract as that described in the declaration. Who ever heard of a bond or note being endorsed specially or in blank, and passing about from hand to hand, payable to bearer, before the note or bond itself was executed?

How can the doctrine of relation and double delivery be made applicable? The doctrine of relation only applies when there has been a double delivery. But the whole difficulty in this case arises from the fact, that there has not been a single, must less a double, delivery to Nuttall, Braden & Craig, by Cotten. If a party execute and deliver a deed, and at the time some disability exists, as that the grantor is a minor, femme covert. &c., and afterwards the disability ceases, as that the grantor has attained his majority, and the grantor makes a new delivery, then the second delivery relates back to the first. These are precisely the cases cited for the appellee.

42 We admit, and all the authorities we have cited prove, that if it was part of the original contract that a new obligor should be added, it may be done without injuring the deed. We do not understand the case from Croke Eliz. to prove anything more.

If it is admitted that the addition of the name of an obligor vitiates the instrument as to all prior signers not consenting to it, the Court clearly erred, in rejecting testimony going to prove that Thompson's name had been added, without the consent of the prior obligors. If the addition of Thompson's name invalidated the instruments as to the prior signers, it had ceased to be their bond before Cotten signed it. When he did sign it, whatever obligation it imposed on him, it certainly could not revive it as to others and his contract could not therefore, be jointly and severally with them, having ceased before that time to be their bond.

If we have failed to prove that the instrument sued on, is of no validity as to Cotten, it is sufficient for our purpose, if it has been shown that he is not bound, jointly and severally, with Taylor and others—that he did not execute and deliver his bond to Nuttall, Braden and Craig—and that Nuttall, Braden and Craig, did not assign his bond to the appellee. He insists that he made no such contract as that declared on; and it is not sufficient for the appellee to show that he made some other contract as onerous to himself, and as beneficial to the appellee.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This is an action of debt, instituted by Robt. W. Williams, Trustee, &c., against Frederick R. Cotten, in the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida, for Leon County, upon a written instrument, a copy of which is contained in the bill of exceptions, that makes a part of the record in this cause.

The declaration contains two counts—the first upon said written instrument, and the second upon an account stated.

The pleas are—First: Non est factum—(not sworn to.) Second: A special plea, alleging: "That long after the said writing obligatory had been signed, sealed and delivered, by John S. Taylor, John Taylor, and Henry B. Bradford, to Wm. B. Nuttall, Hector W. Braden and Wm. P. Craig, as their joint and several deed, and long after it had been endorsed and assigned by the said Braden, Nuttall and Craig, to the Union Bank of Florida, and long after the death of Wm. B. Nuttall, one of the obligees, the said Union Bank procured him, the said defendant, to sign and seal the same, as one of the joint and several obligors or makers thereof; whereby it is not, and never 43 was of any force or effect whatever, as the joint and several bond of this defendant"—concluding with a verification. Third: Another special plea setting forth that long after the making, sealing and delivery of the said writing obligatory, by John S. Taylor, John Taylor and Henry B. Bradford, to said Wm. B. Nuttall, Hector W. Braden and Wm. P. Craig, as their joint and several obligation, and after the assignment and endorsement thereof by said Nuttall, Braden and Craig; to wit: about five years—and long after the death of Wm. B. Nuttall, one of the obligees, to wit: about four years—the said writing obligatory was altered and changed materially, by the said Union Bank, the endorsee thereof, procuring the name of one Noah Thompson to be added thereto, as a joint and several maker thereof and also that afterwards, that is to say, after the procuring the name of the said Noah Thompson to be added thereto as aforesaid—to wit: one year—the said Union Bank again altered and changed materially the said writing obligatory, by procuring the name of this deefndant to be added thereto, as a joint and several maker and obligor; whereby, and by means whereof, the said writing obligatory has become, and was rendered void"—concluding as before. Fourth: Nil Debit.

To the second and third pleas, the plaintiff demurred specially. To the second: "Because the same is inconsistent, insensible, irregular, and defective, and is equivalent to the general issue." To the Third: Because the same is defective in this—that it avers the said bond sued on, was altered and materially changed, without stating that the same was done without the consent of the defendant; and because the same is inconsistent, argumentative, irregular and defective. To this demurrer there was a joinder; and after argument had thereon, the demurrer was sustained in the Court below. The case was submitted to a jury, upon the issues made upon the other two pleas; who returned a verdict for the plaintiff, viz: "That the defendant owed the debt in the declaration mentioned—three thousand two hundred and six dollars and twenty-five cents, and nine hundred and forty-eight dollars and sixty-one cents damages; making together the sum of four thousand one hundred and fifty-four dollars and eighty cents, (besides his costs)—and for this sum judgment was entered. On the trial of this cause in the Court below, the defendant tendered his bill of exceptions, which was signed, sealed, and ordered to be made a part of the record, in the words following:—

"Robert W. Williams, Trustee, vs. Frederick R. Cotten." "In 44 Leon Superior Court, December Term, 1844. Bill of Exceptions."

Be it remembered, that on the trial of this cause, the plaintiff proved the signatures of John S. Taylor, John Taylor, Henry B. Bradford, Noah Thompson, and Frederick R. Cotten, (the defendant,) to the bond; and the hand writing of Hector W. Braden, William B. Nuttall, and William P. Craig, to the endorsement on the bond, and offered the said bond in evidence.

3206 25-100. On or before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, we and each of us promise and oblige ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay to William B. Nuttall, Hector W. Braden and William P. Craig, or their order, the just and full sum of three thousand two hundred and six dollars and twenty-five cents, lawful money of the United States with interest thereon, at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the time the same shall become due until paid, for value received.—Witness our hands and seals, Tallahassee, the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four.

JOHN S. TAYLOR, [SEAL]
JOHN TAYLOR, [SEAL]
H. B. BRADFORD, [SEAL]
NOAH THOMPSON,
F. R. COTTEN.

Endorsed:

WM. B. NUTTALL.
H. W. BRADEN.
WM. P. CRAIG.

Defendant objected to the said bond being read in evidence to the jury: Because there was no seal or scrawl to the name of Henry B. Bradford, Noah Thompson and Frederick R. Cotten, to the bond: and the writing was therefore variant from the instrument declared on, not being the bond or writing obligatory of said persons, or of said Cotten, as declared on.

The Court overruled the objection, and admitted the said instrument in evidence, to which said defendant excepted; and this bill is signed, sealed, and ordered to be filed, and made a part of the record.

Here the plaintiff rested his case.

Defendant had offered to prove by Henry L. Rutgers, that he was an officer of the Union Bank of Florida, in the months of January and February, 1838, when the bond in suit was negotiated to and delivered to the Union Bank, by Braden and Craig, with the endorsements of themselves and Nuttall; that the bond was subsequently passed by the bank to plaintiff; that while the Bank had and owned the same, the names of Noah Thompson and Frederick R. Cotten were added thereto; witness does not know of any consent on the part of John S. Taylor, John Taylor and Henry B. Bradford, or either of them, to the addition of the names of Noah Thompson and Frederick Cotten, to the said bond, or of any knowledge on their part thereof; nor does he know of any objection being made by the said John S. Taylor, John Taylor and Henry B. Bradford. Witness thinks Col. Wm. B. Nuttall died in the spring of 1835. James D. Westcott was then called by defendant to prove that Col. Wm. B. Nuttall died on 26th April, 1836; which being overruled was excepted to. This was all the evidence in the case, and to the admission of which plaintiff objected; and the objection being sustained, defendant excepted thereto.

Defendant's counsel thereupon requested the Court to instruct the jury:

1st. That unless the jury are satisfied, from the evidence, that the addition of the names of Cotten and Thompson to the bond, was by the consent of John S. Taylor, John Taylor, and Henry Bradford, it vitiates the bond, and plaintiff cannot recover thereon in this action.

2d. That unless the jury are satisfied, from the evidence, that such addition was by consent of John S. Taylor, John Taylor and Henry B. Bradford, the plaintiff cannot recover in this case, as the proof is variant from the declaration.

3d. That if the jury shall believe that, Wm. B. Nuttall died in the spring of the year 1836, and that the defendant signed said bond after his death, the said bond is void as to this defendant, and plaintiff cannot recover in this action.

4th. That defendant and Noah Thompson, having signed the bond after the death of Wm. B. Nuttall, there could be no delivery of the bond to him, and consequently the proof is variant from the declaration, and plaintiff cannot recover in this action.

5th. That if the jury shall be satisfied that the name of the defendant was added to the bond after it had been assigned to the Union Bank, that then the plaintiff cannot recover in this action.

6th. That unless the jury shall be satisfied that the name of Thompson was added to the bond by the consent of John S. Taylor, John Taylor and Henry B. Bradford, the bond was vitiated, and rendered void thereby, and the addition of the name of Cotten afterwards would not validate the same.

7th. That there being no seals or scrawls to the names of Henry B. Bradford, Noah Thompson and defendant, the proof is variant from the declaration, and plaintiff cannot recover in this suit by reason thereof.

8th. That upon the whole evidence the jury should find for the defendant.

The Court refused said instructions, and charged the jury, that upon the evidence, they should find for the plaintiff. To which decision and opinion of the Court, refusing, and giving said instructions, and in refusing to admit said testimony, deponent excepted; and this bill of exceptions is accordingly signed, sealed, and made a part of the case.

(Signed) SAML. JAS. DOUGLAS, (SEAL.)

Dec. 17th, 1844.

Whereupon the defendant prayed an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the territory of Florida which was granted. The cause was carried up to that Court, and was transferred therefrom into this Court, pursuant to the provisions contained in the last clause of the 17th article, (Schedule and Ordinance,) of the Constitution of the State, which is as follows: "And all actions at law, of suits in Chancery, or any proceedings pending, or which may be pending in any Court of the Territory of Florida, may be commenced in, or transferred, to such Court of the State as may have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof." And also in pursuance of the provisions of the 14th section of the act of the General Assembly of this State, of July 25th, 1845, entitled, An act to organize the State of Florida, which was passed to carry into effect the above mentioned constitutional provision, so far as regarded cases pending in said Court of Appeals, and is in the following words, viz: "That all cases now pending in said Court of Appeals shall be transferred to said Supreme Court, and tried and decided therein and thereby, except cases cognizable by the Federal Court, which may be organized in this State, which shall be transferred to such Court." And all writs of error or appeals from Judgments, decrees or decisions heretofore given, or rendered by any of the Superior Courts of the Territory, shall be returned to said Supreme Court, and tried, and decided therein, and thereby."

On the first day of the present term of this Court a motion was made by the plaintiff's counsel, to dismiss this cause, upon the following grounds, to wit:

First: Because it has no rightful place in this Court; and this Court has no jurisdiction of the same, no appeal or writ of error having been sued out, or taken to this Court; and this Court has no appellate jurisdiction in this cause.

Second: Because the judgment of Leon Superior Court is final, until reversed by the proper appellate tribunal, constituted by the acts of Congress of the United States.

Third: Because this Court has appellate jurisdiction only over those Inferior Courts, which the Constitution of the State of Florida hath established, and which compose with this Court, the judiciary powers of the State."

This motion, after a full discussion, at the bar, of the questions involved in it, was overruled; and it was intimated that, when the opinion of the court should be pronounced upon the merits of the case, the reasons for the decision upon the motion would be stated. But since that time, Judge BALTZELL has delivered the opinion of the Court, upon a similar motion, upon the same grounds, in the case of Charles D. Stewart, vs. Thomas Preston, junior, and it has consequently became unnecessary to do more now than to refer to that opinion, in which all the members of the Court concurred.

We proceed, therefore, to consider the errors assigned, which are as follows, to wit:

First: That the Court sustained the demurrer to the two special pleas, and the plea of Nil Debit, improperly.

Second: The Court erred in permitting the instrument in writing, offered by the plaintiff, to be read in evidence.

Third: The Court erred in rejecting the evidence of Henry L. Rutgers, as set forth in the bill of exceptions.

Fourth: The Court erred in refusing to give the instructions prayed for by the defendants, as set forth in the bill of exceptions.

Fifth: The Court erred in instructing the jury that, on the evidence, they must find for the plaintiff.

The first error assigned, involves the validity of the two special pleas. In one of these pleas, the appellant alleged that the bond was altered by the addition of his own name; and the other, that it was altered by the addition of the name of Noah Thompson, and also of his own; but he does not allege in either of them, that the alteration complained of, was made without his knowledge, license or consent. He was the last signer of the bond, and so far as the addition of his name produced any alteration therein, it could not, in the nature of things, having been done without his license and consent, unless his signature thereto was obtained by surprise, fraud or duress, neither of which is alleged or pretended. But it is insisted by the counsel for the appellant, that he was not bound to make this allegation in his plea, because it being a negative one, he could not, (if alleged,) be required to prove it; and that he was only required to allege, what it would have been incumbent upon him, (if alleged,) to prove.

But it by no means follows, that because this allegation was of a negative character, it was not essential to the validity of his pleas or that if he had made the allegation, he would have been required to prove it. There are many negative allegations which must be alleged in pleading, which the party pleading them, is not by law required to prove. There is no difference, as to the rules of evidence, between criminal and civil cases; what may be received in one, may be received in the other; and what is rejected in the one, ought to be rejected in the other. 2 Russell on Crimes, 588. The King vs. Watson, by Abbott Justice. 2 Starkie's Reports, 155. And yet, in the case of The King vs. Hanson, where there had been a conviction for selling ale, without an excise license, the information negatived the defendants having a license; but there was no evidence to support this averment; the only evidence to support the conviction being, that the defendant had, in fact, sold ale. The question was, whether the informer was bound to give evidence to negative the existence of a license. In support of the conviction, it was contended that such evidence was unnecessary, and that it lay upon the defendant to prove that he had a license; for it is a rule, both of the civil and common law, that a man is not bound to prove a negative allegation; and the case of the King vs. Turner, was cited, as an express authority upon the point. Abbott, Chief Justice, said: I am of opinion that the conviction is right. It is a general rule that the proof of the affirmative lies upon the party who is to sustain it. In the case of the King vs. Turner, all the learned Judges concurred in that principle. 2 Russell on Crimes, 693. 1 Hawkin's Pl. of the Crown, chap. 19, section 17. The United States vs. Hayward, 2 Gallison's Reports, 499. Upon the same principle, a very late case, the Apothecary's Company vs. Bently, was decided: "That was an action for a penalty on the Statute of 49 55th George the Third, section 194, for practicing as an Apothecary, without having obtained the certificate required by that act. All the counts in the declaration contained the allegation, that the defendant did act and practice as an Apothecary, &c., without having obtained such certificate, as by the said act is directed. No evidence was offered by the plaintiffs to show that the defendant had not obtained the certificate. The plaintiffs having closed their case, the counsel for the defendant submitted that there must be a non-suit. Abbott, Chief Justice, said: "I am of opinion that the affirmative must be proved by the defendant." Ry. & Mood, N. P. C. 159, S. C. 1 Car & P. 538. Spiere's vs. Parker, 1 Term Rep. 144—and Jelfs vs. Ballard, 1 Bossanquet & Puller, 468, are also authorities in point. A plea alleging merely that seals were affixed to a bond, without the consent of the defendant, without also alleging that it was done with the knowledge, or by the authority or direction of the plaintiff, is not sufficient. The United States, plaintiff in error, vs. William Linn, et al, defendants in error. 1 Howard's S. C. Reports, 104—110. This last case is an authority directly in point, for neither of these pleas contain any positive averment that the Union Bank, at the time when it is alleged that Noah Thompson and the defendant put their names to the instrument in question, had any interest in it, or authority over it; nor is there any averment in either of the pleas, that their names were not so put, with the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff; all that is said in those pleas about the Union Bank, is said by way of inducement, rehearsal or argument. Every thing, therefore, in relation to the Union Bank, is left to inference merely; and it is a rule in pleading, that when a plea has on the face of it two intendments, it ought to be construed most strongly against the party who pleads it. To this point, the case last cited is also direct authority.

In the case of Speake and others vs. the United States, 9 Cranch, 37, Mr. Justice Story, who delivered the opinion of the Court, said: "It is clear at the common law, that an alteration or addition in a deed, as by adding a new obligor or an erasure in the deed, as by striking out an old obligee, if done with the consent and concurrence of all the parties to the deed, does not avoid it; and this principle equally applies, whether the alteration or erasure be made in pursuance of an agreement and consent, prior or subsequent to the execution of the deed; and the cases in the books, in which erasures, interlineations and alterations in deeds, have ben held to avoid them. 50 will be found on examination to have been cases in which no such consent had been given." The plea upon which this opinion was pronounced, contained the negative allegation, that after the execution of the bond on which the suit was founded, it was materially altered and changed, &c., (setting out the alteration,) without the license, consent, or authority of the defendant, &c. To which the United States replied, that the bond was so altered and changed, with the assent, and by the concurrence, license, direction and authority of all the defendants. To this replication there was a demurrer, and joinder in demurrer, and upon this issue the cause turned. Now, as the pleas under consideration, do not contain either the allegation that the alteration complained of, was made without the consent of the defendant, or the allegation that it was done with the knowledge, or by the authority, or direction of the plaintiff, we are warranted in the conclusion, that it was done with the consent and concurrence of all the parties, upon the principles above cited, "that a plea which has upon the face of it two intendments, ought to be construed most strongly against the party who pleads it; and if such were the case, surely they contain no matter of defense, and the Court below did not err in sustaining the demurrer to them. To the plea of Nil Debit, (which is confined to the second count of the declaration,) there does not appear to have been any demurrer.

The second error assigned, is that, "the Court erred in permitting the instrument of writing offered by the plaintiff, to be read in evidence."

One ground of exception relied upon in argument, was, that there was no scrawl or seal affixed to the signature of the appellant thereto, consequently it was not his deed, and therefore was variant from the one declared upon. There were five signers to this instrument, to the names of three of whom a scrawl was respectively affixed as a seal—to the other two there was no scrawl or seal affixed opposite to their respective names. But the appellant, by signing the instrument, after those to whose names a scrawl was respectively affixed as a seal, and which, by our statute, is equivalent to a seal—(see the act to amend an act regulating judicial proceedings, approved 23d Nov. 1828, by the 36th section of which it is provided, that "a scrawl, affixed as a seal, shall be as effectual as a seal; Duval's Comp. page 96)—adopting the existing seal. Two persons may make use of one seal in the execution of a bond, and it will be the deed of both. Flood vs. Yander, 1 Blackford's Rep. 102. In Shep- 51 herd's Touchstone, page 56, it is laid down that, "if there be twenty to seal one deed, and they all seal with one seal, yet if they make distinct and separate prints, this is a sufficient sealing, (as to all,) and the deed is good enough.

In the case of Lord Lovelace, Sir W. Jones, 268, it was admitted by the prosecution that, "if one of the officers of the Forest put one seal to the rolls by consent of all the verderers, regarders, and other officers, it was as good as if every on had put his several seal; and if divers men enter into one obligation, and they all consent, and put but one seal to it, it is a good obligation of them all."

It was held, in the case of Ball vs. Demsterville, 4th Term Reps. 313, "that if one partner in a transaction seal a deed with one seal, for himself and partner, with his consent and in his presence, it is a good execution of the deed for both." This is acknowledged to be the rule in the case of Ludlow, et al., vs. Simond, 2d Caine's Cases, 1—42 and 55.

In the case of McKay, et al., vs. Bloodgood, 9 John. Reps. 284, in debt on bond, it was held that, where one partner signs a bond in the name of the firm, and affixes one seal, it will bind the other who saw and approved it before the signing and sealing, but who was not present when done. The principle of the two cases last cited is sustained by Philips on Evidence, page 416.

But it was insisted in argument, on behalf of the appellant, that to make the seal of one obligor the seal of another, it must appear by the instrument itself, that those who sign with that view, recognized the seal of the other party. If it be so, (and it is unnecessary to the decision of this case to inquire into the soundness of this position,) the document before us concludes with these words: "Witness our hands and seals." All who signed it, therefore, recognized it as a sealed instrument. The case of Hatch vs. Crawford, Admr. 2 Porter, 54, is in point. It was an action of assumpsit upon a written agreement, which concluded as follows, viz: Given under our hands and seals." One signed and sealed, and immediately below his name, the other signed, but made no separate seal. Plea, the general issue.

The Court below excluded the instrument from being read as evidence; under the issue in that form of action, on the ground that it was the deed of both. The Supreme Court of the State of Illinois, in the case of Davis vs. Burton and others, 3d Scammon's Rep. 44, which is cited and reaffirmed in the case of Wilcox vs. Ward, et al., 52 3d. Scammon's Reps. 51, said, that in reviewing the authorities upon the doctrines of seals, in questions the most analagous to the one before us, we see a steady and progressive relaxation of the ancient and strict doctrine on this question. We find no ancient decision at common law precisely in point; but without such authority, we are disposed, (says the Court,) to lay down such a rule as will be consonant to reason and justice, and comport with the obvious intention of the parties. We recognize the principles assumed in this case, and feel, (to us the language of that Court,) warranted by common sense, by justice and sound reason, as well as the principles of law, to presume that all the signers of an instrument of writing, indicating upon its face an intention to seal it, adopted any seal or scrawl, which may have been affixed to the name of any one of them. If there is any country where the ancient and strict doctrine upon this question may, with propriety, be relaxed, it is our own, since the Legislative Council of the late Territory of Florida, by the 24th section of the act regulating judicial proceedings, above cited, which is of force in this State, has expressly enacted that: "All promissory notes, and other instruments of writing, not under seal, shall have the same force and effect, as bonds and instruments under seal;" thereby rendering the difference between them rather matter of form than of substance.

The third error assigned is that: "The Court erred in rejecting the testimony of Henry L. Rutgers, as set forth in the bill of exceptions.

The defendant put in a plea of non est factum, upon which issue was joined, and this raises two questions; first, whether the instrument declared upon is, or is not his bond; and second, whether if it is his deed, he is not estopped from saying in this suit, that it is not the bond of all who signed it. What the effect may be as to the rights of the parties who signed the bond before him, and at a different time, (if any of them did thus sign it,) we are not called upon now to enquire or decide; that it is good as to him we entertain no doubt. He had a right to sign it at the time and under the circumstances that he did so, or at least he cannot have any right to set up his own act in this regard, to avoid his own deed. In this opinion we are borne out by the case of The United States vs. Linn et al before cited, which was an action of debt instituted upon the official bond of a Receiver of Public monies. Upon the trial of that cause, after read-53 ing the bond to the jury, the defendant called a witness who testified in substance that he saw the bond after it had been signed by the obligors in the hands of William Linn, (the obligor first named therein,) after it had been returned from the District Judge, with his certificate endorsed of the sufficiency of the sureties. That the District Judge, in a note in writing accompanying the bond, pointed out the omission of the seals to the names of the signers of the instrument, and said Linn, saying he would obviate that difficulty, took a pen, and in the presence of the witnesses, added scrawls by way of seals to each name subscribed as makers of the instrument. All the defendants united in a joint plea of "non est factum," and the Court held that the adding of the scrawl by Linn, to his own name, did not vitiate the instrument as to him; that he had a right to add the seal, or at least he could have no right to set up his own act in this respect to avoid his own deed. It was therefore his deed, and the plea "non est factum," as to him was false, and the Court sustained the demurrer to it, upon the familiar principle, that a joint plea, which is false as to one, is false as to all the parties pleading it.

By the 34th section of the act "regulating judicial proceedings, before referred to, Duvals Com. p. 96; it is (in substance) declared "that the assignment or endorsement of any bond, note, covenant, deed, bill of exchange, or other writing, whereby money is promised, or secured to be paid, shall vest the assignee or endorsee thereof, with the same rights, powers and capacities, as might have been possessed by the assignor or endorser; and the assignee or endorsee, may bring suit in his own name; nor shall it be necessary for the assignee or endorsee of any instrument assignable by law, to set forth in his declaration the consideration upon which such assignment was made, nor prove such consideration, unless the same shall be impeached by the defendant, under oath."

It is not supposed that the object of this provision was to place these several classes of instruments, upon a footing (in all respects) with commercial paper, yet the effect of it is to make them negociable by assignment or endorsement. If this were a new Statute, this Court would be inclined to confine the word assignment in the section last cited to such instruments as at common law did not pass by endorsement, and to extend the word endorsement only to other classes of written instruments; but the provision is a convenient one as generally understood and acted upon. The practice of applying it alike to all these various classes of instruments, has long prevailed in the 54 ordinary transactions of business, and we are not now disposed to disturb it. The present holder of this instrument is an endorsee, and brought this suit as such under that act. "There is not upon the face of the instrument any thing indicating an alteration, or casting a suspicion upon its validity, that should have put the appellee upon enquiry." He took it, for aught that appears, in good faith. The appellant, by putting his name thereto, gave value to the instrument; "non constat," but the appellee took it upon the faith and credit of his name alone. The testimony of Henry L. Rutgers, if it could have been received, would show that this is the very instrument which the appellant intended to execute; and we think that under all these circumstances he is estopped from setting up his own act in regard to this alleged alteration, even to avoid this suit.

The rule, said Lord Denman, in delivering the judgment of the Court in the case of Pickard vs. Sears, 6 Adolphus and Ellis, 475, is, that where one by his words or conduct, wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain State of things, and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things existing at the same time; and this principle is affirmed, also, in the cases of Coles vs. The Bank of England, 10 Adolphus & Ellis, 439. Hearne vs. Rogers, 9 B. & C, 586. Groves vs. Kev, 3 B. & Ad. 144.

No man can avoid his own deed by which an estate has passed, on account of his own fraud in executing it. Doe ex dem Roberts vs. Roberts, 2 Barnwell & Alderson, Rep. 367. He is estopped from so doing. "Contrary to the feeling which appears to have pervaded the Courts with regard to other classes of estoppels, their inclination seems to have been to extend the lost of estoppels in pais, especially in mercantile transactions, where men are obliged to trust much to appearances. Jenys vs. Fowler, Strange Rep. 946. These authorities are directly in point, for notwithstanding the instrument in question is not strictly mercantile paper, yet it is in the nature (to a certain extent) of such paper. The act referred to makes it negociable. In dealing in it, men are obliged to trust much to appearances. It requires amongst those who deal in it, the utmost fairness and good faith, and the principles deducible from the cases last cited are deemed applicable to it, and the question before us.

If we are right in the views which we have taken of these matters, (and we entertain no doubt about them,) neither the third, fourth, 55 or fifth errors are well assigned.

There was another point taken for the appellant, upon the argument of this cause, which deserves a passing notice. It was that the assignment should have been under seal. The remarks heretofore made, respecting the 34th section of our judiciary act, and its bearing upon this class of cases, would seem to be a sufficient answer to that position. But lest it may not be so considered, we refer to the case of Clark vs. Rogers, 2 Greenleaf's Rep. 148; in which Chief Justice Mellen, in delivering the opinion of the Court, remarked, that "for many years, Courts of Justice have been gradually becoming more and more inclined to protect equitable interests. Less form is necessary now than formerly as to the mode of creating such an interest. The object is to ascertain that it is an interest founded in equity and justice, and on good and adequate consideration," and for the correctness of that opinion, he cites Perkins vs. Parker, 1 Mass. Rep. 123. Dix vs. Cobb, 4 Mass. Rep. 508. Brown vs. Maine Bank, 11 Mass. Rep. 153. Quiner vs. Marblehead Insurance Company, 10 Mass. Rep. 482. Mowry vs. Todd, 12 Mass. Rep. 281. Jones vs. Witter, 13 Mass. Rep. 304, and particularly Dunn vs. Snell, 15 Mass. Rep. 481, (which very fully sustain the position assumed,) and in the case of Vose vs. Handy, 2 Greenleaf's Rep. 334, he repeats the remarks; again cites the same authorities, and adds, that the Chief Justice in the case of Jones vs. Witter, (above cited) says, "there are cases in the old books, which show that debts, and even deeds, may be assigned by parol, and we are satisfied, (he says) that there is no sensible ground upon which a writing shall be held necessary to prove an assignment of a contract, which assignment has been executed by delivery, any more than in the assignment of a personal chattel.

In the case of Jones vs. Snell, the Court went still further, and decided that the mere delivery over of an execution, was an assignment of it, and of the judgment. And in the case of Prescott vs. Hall, 17 John Rep. 284; Spencer Chief Justice, delivering the opinion of the Court, and speaking of the validity of assignments, says, "I do not consider the want of a seal essential, the mere delivery of the chose in action would be sufficient, even were it a specialty," and we fully concur in this view of the law.

The assignment of the bond in this case was in writing, and by virtue of the statute referred to, vests in the appellee the legal interest. The consideration is not denied. He was authorized to insti- 56 tute this suit (as he has done,) in his own name. The proofs sustain it. The errors are not well taken.

The Judgment of the Court below is affirmed with costs.

Per totam curiam.

Noah Thompson vs. Robert W. Williams, Trustee, &c.

Where a party signed a bond as a joint and several obligor, after it had been sealed and delivered by other parties, as their joint and several obligation; and also after it had been transferred to a third party, by the endorsement of the obligees, and after one of the obligees had died; held, in a suit against the party so signing, that he, being the last signer, was estopped from availing himself of these facts, to avoid his liability as a joint and several obligor of the bond.

The case of Cotten vs. Williams, Trustee, &c., decided at this Term, cited, and fully confirmed.

This was an appeal from Leon Superior Court, to the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida, which was transferred from that to this Court. A full statement of the pleadings and evidence, except of the causes of action, are contained in the opinion of the Court. The following are copies of two of the bonds declared on; the other two are similar, in all respects material to a proper understanding of the case; except that seals are attached to the names of each party, and that Noah Thompson is the last signer of each of them.

A. E. Maxwell, for Appellant.

Long & Walker, for Appellee.

T. H. Hagner, (on same side,) for Appellee:

Said that, this case stood upon nearly the same footing with the case of F. R. Cotten vs. R. W. Williams—argued at this term. There was a special plea in this case, setting up similar matters, in pretty must the same way—and for like reasons as those before argued, he held the judgment of the Court below to be correct.

Upon the question made in this Court, as to the validity of the 58 assignment of this bond, by endorsement, without seal, he cited, Duval's Comp. p. 96, sec. 33 and 34—and he urged the admitted course of practice in the Territory, under the statute, and uniform decisions of the Superior Courts, as settling the construction. That construction had never been questioned in the appellate tribunal, although more than one case had occurred in his practice, where the point had arisen, and might have been carried up.

He insisted that the leaning of the Courts was to aid assignments —even equitable assignments—and he cited: 15 Mass. R. 485. 2 Greenleaf R. 334. 3 Greenleaf, 349. 16 Johnson, 52. 17 Johnson, 284.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This is an action of debt, instituted by Robert W. Williams, Trustee, &c., against Noah Thompson, in the Superior Court of Leon County, in the Middle District of Florida, upon four several single bills, or writing obligatory. The declaration contains five counts, one upon each of the bills of writings obligatory, and one upon account stated; a copy of each of the said bills, or writings obligatory, is annexed to the declaration. The pleas are, first Nil Debet; and after oyer upon the said bills or writings obligatory, second, "non est factum." Third, a special plea—alleging in substance, that he the said defendant, did not make or sign, seal or deliver the said writings obligatory, in the said declaration, mentioned as to each note respectively, either jointly or severally, or at the days, and times specified; nor did the said Nuttall, Braden & Craig, endorsee, order, deliver or assign the said supposed writings obligatory to plaintiff, on the days and times specified in the declaration, but the said other parties supposed, made the said supposed writings obligatory on the days and times specified; and the said Nuttall, Braden & Craig, transferred the same to the Union Bank of Florida, to wit: on the days and years in the declaration mentioned; and that said William B. Nuttall, afterwards, to-wit: on the twenty-ninth day of April, in the year 1837, in the County of Jefferson, departed this life; and this defendant after the death of Nuttall, to wit: on the 21st day of November, in the year last aforesaid at Leon County, aforesaid, signed, and sealed the said supposed writing obligatory in possession of said Union Bank of Florida, then and there being, and to the said Union Bank of Florida, then and there belonging, by virtue of said endorsement, and so the said defendant says, that said several supposed writing obligatory are not his deeds, and this he is ready 59 to verify, wherefore, &c.

To the first and second pleas the plaintiff joined issue, but demurred specially to the third, "because it amounts to general issue, and is uncertain, informal and insufficient. The defendant put in a joinder to the demurrer. The Court, after argument, sustained the demurrer, and the cause was afterwards submitted to a jury upon the two issues of facts above set forth, who returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, for the sum of fifteen thousand two hundred and fifty-two 30-100 dollars, to be discharged by the payment of ten thousand one hundred and five 92-100 dollars; for which last sum and costs, judgment was entered.

On the trial, the plaintiff offered in evidence the original bonds (or bills,) and proved the hand writing of Nuttall, Braden and Craig, in the endorsement of the original bonds, and the hand writing of John R. Dorsey, John S. Taylor, John Taylor and H. B. Bradford, only.

And defendant objected to the introduction of said papers in testimony, as variant from the copies of bonds filed and declared upon, but the Court overruled the objection and admitted, said papers in evidence to which opinion defendant excepted. The defendant then offered Hector W. Braden, a competent witness of lawful age, one of the endorsers of the bonds or writing obligatory, who proved that he delivered all the writing obligatory offered in evidence to the Union Bank after the death of William B. Nuttall, and that when he so delivered them, neither the signature or seal of Noah Thompson was upon them. Whereupon the defendant's counsel objected to the bonds being received in evidence, on the ground, that the declaration alleged a direct assignment and transfer of a joint and several bond made by defendant, and the other parties respectively to Nuttall, Braden and Craig, and transferred and assigned by those persons then and there, (in Nuttall's life time,) to the plaintiff; and the testimony proved that the bonds introduced were signed and sealed by the other parties without the defendant, and assigned after Nuttall's death to the Union Bank, and then signed by defendant; and there was no evidence of transfer to Robert W. Williams; but the Court overruled the objection and admitted the evidence, to which defendant by counsl excepted.

And the defendant by his counsel then moved the Court to instruct the jury:

First, That the mere endorsement in Nuttall's lifetime, without 59 delivery, gave no title as to Nuttall, and does not sustain the allegations in the declaration of assignment to Williams.

Secondly, That the signature of Thompson, of the bonds in the hands of the bank, could not make it a joint and several bond as declared upon.

Thirdly, That the bonds having been declared upon as joint and several bonds, they must be proved to be joint and several with all parties, before the plaintiff can recover in this action.

Fourthly, That there being no seal to the name of Thompson and some others, on several of the bonds which are declared upon as sealed with their seals, is a fatal variance as to all those bonds.

The Court refused all of said instructions except the third, which was granted, but with an instruction and opinion, that the signature of the bonds in the hands of the bank, related back to the original signing, and made the bond joint, and as well as several. To which several refusals, opinions and instructions (the defendant by his counsel excepted, and prayed that this his bill of exceptions might be signed and sealed by the Court, which was done.

(And signed) S. J. DOUGLAS, Judge. [SEAL.]

The defendant prayed an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the late Territory of Florida; the case was carried up to that Court, and was transferred to this Court under the provisions contained in the last clause of the schedule and ordinance of the Constitution of the State, and in the 14th section of the act of the General Assembly, "to organize the Supreme Court of the State of Florida," approved July 25th, 1845.

A motion was made on the first day of the present term by the counsel for the appellee to dismiss this suit upon the following grounds, viz:

First, Because it has no rightful place in this Court, and this Court has no jurisdiction of the same, no appeal or writ of error having been sued out or taken to this Court, and this Court has no appellate jurisdiction of the cause.

Second, Because the judgment of the Leon Superior Court is final, until reversed by the proper appellate tribunal, constituted by the acts of Congress of the United States.

Third, Because this Court has appellate jurisdiction only over those inferior Courts, which the constitution of the State of Florida has established, and which compose with this Court the judiciary 69 think Joab Horn, when he made this instrument, as is proved from the face of it.

This instrument is not only more like a will than any of the deeds poll, above referred to, for they were in all things like deeds of conveyance, except in the time the gift was to take effect—in possession of the donor—viz: "after the death of the grantor." But this is upon its very face, more like a will than a deed. It is like a deed in nothing except, "he positively deeds," and signs it with a seal at the end of his name; neither of which has much tendency to prove it to be a deed; as wills are often made with a seal, and generally are in the present tense, "I give." 1st William's Executors, 55—95.

The whole face of the instrument, with this exception, shows that it is a will, and was so intended.

But if it is a will, it is revocable—if revocable it has been revoked by a subsequent will.

Walker Anderson, for appellee, submitted the following:

I. First exception—Want of delivery:—Delivery of the property in specie, was not necessary to the consummation of the gift or grant—because:—1. A present delivery was not consistent with the nature of the interest conveyed, which was a remainder after, a life estate. And because: 2. The delivery proved was a sufficient delivery in law.

1. "Delivery must be according to the nature of the thing." 2 Kent's Com. 439.

2. The fact of the delivery to Gartman was for the jury to determine; and in this Court it is to be presumed the delivery to him was complete—(as was the fact.)

"A delivery to a third person, as the servant or bailee of the grantee, will be valid." Soubervye & Wife vs. Arden, et al. 1 J. Ch. R. 240. 9 Mass. R. 307—10. Verplank vs. Sterry, 12 J. R. 536. 15 Wendell, 656.

"Delivery to a third person, though not an agent of grantee, sufficient."—1 Tom. Law. Dicty. 523. 8 B. & C. 671.

"A formal delivery (of a deed) is not necessary, if there be acts evincing an intent to deliver." Goodrich vs. Walker, 1 J. C. 250.

But the exception does not seem so much to negative the original delivery, (that fact having been established by the jury,) as to intimate that the subsequent possession of the deed by the grantor, amounted to a revocation.

70 This position is opposed by numerous authorities, and is adverse to well established general principles. A gift, once consummated by actual or constructive delivery, cannot be recalled, without the consent of the grantee.

"If a deed has been once delivered, so as to take effect, a second delivery can be of no avail." V. vs. Sterny, 12 J. R. 536.

"If a deed be duly delivered in the first instance, the subsequent "custody of it by the grantor will not destroy the effect of the delivery." Soubervye & Wife, vs. Arden, et al. 1 J. C. R. 256.

"Even non-delivery, unless accompanied by other circumstances, "will not avoid a deed."

Ib. 257, quoting 2 Vern. 473, and 1 Atk. 625, in which Lord Hardwick held, that a voluntary deed, formal as to its execution, and without a power of revocation, and kept by the grantor, uncancelled, was not to be defeated by a subsequent will.

He went even further, in the case of Johnson vs. Smith, (257,) in 1 Ves. 314.

"A voluntary settlement, without power of revocation, cannot be revoked"—ib. 258, referring to Villers vs. Beaumont, 1 Vern. 100; and Bole vs. Newton, 1 Vern. 464—"though retained by the grantor in his possession, until his death." Ib. Bunn, et al., vs. Winthrop, et al., 1 J. C. R. 329—30—31—36—37.

The delivery of the deed to Gartman having been shown to be sufficient and irrevocable, it is scarcely necessary to adduce any authority to show, that a gift or grant by deed, is equivalent to the actual delivery of the chattel. This point was conceded on the trial, and no longer admits of any doubt.

I refer the Court, however, to a few authorities on this head.

"As between the parties, a voluntary transfer, by deed, of a chat-"tel interest, is valid, without any consideration appearing." Bunn vs. Winthrop, 1 J. C. R. 329—330—331—336—7.

Delivery, though in general necessary to the validity of a gift, may be supplied by deed or writing. 2 Kent's Com. 438. Flower's case, Noy's Maxim's, 57. Irons vs. Smallpiece, 2 Barn. & Ald. 551.

"Written obligations to give, even where there is no consideration, will be enforced." 2 Bl. C. 446.

In this case, there was a good consideration moving the grantor, which makes the case stronger than where the deed is purely voluntary.

II. We come now to the second exception, which denies that a a remainder may be limited, after a life estate, in personal property. 71

This may have been law once, but it is long since exploded; and no point is better established by authority, than the one opposed by this exception.

Chattels may be limited over by way of remainder, after a life estate. 2 Kent's Com. 352. Smith vs. Clever, 2 Vern. Rep. 59. Hyde vs. Parrot, 1 P. Wms. 1. Tissen vs. Tissen, ibid, 500. Bandall vs. Russell, 3 Mer. R. 190. And such a remainder may be created equaly by grant or devise. Note on 2 Kent, C. 352. Childs vs. Baylie, Cro. J. 459. Powell vs. Brown, S. C. Law Journal, 442

I refer also, as to the general principle, to the following cases:—Moffat vs. Strong, 10 J. R. 12. Westcott vs. Cady, 5 J. C. R. 334. Scott vs. Price, 2 Sergt. & Rawle, 59. Royall vs. Eppes, 2 Munford, 470. Mortimer vs. Moffat, 4 H. & M. 503. Madden vs. Madden, Ex'rs, 2 Leigh, 377.

"The rule that a remainder may be limited, after a life estate in "personal property, is as well settled as any other principle of our "law. The attempt to create such limitation is not opposed by the "policy of the law, or by any of its rules." Smith vs. Bell, 6 Peter's Rep. 78.

Blackstone is conclusive on this point. He says: "By the an-"cient common law, there could be no future property, to take "place in expectancy, created in personal goods and chattels—but "yet in last wills such limitations were permitted, though originally "that indulgence was only shown, when merely the use of the "goods, and not the goods themselves, was given to the first legatee. "But now that distinction is disregarded; and therefore, if a man, "either by will or deed, limits his books or furniture to A, for life, "with remainder over to B, this remainder over is good." 2 Bl. Com. 398.

The case before the Court is precisely such a one. Joab Horn conveys a remainder to Gartman, after a life estate to himself; or it is more closely assimilated to the gift of the use, of a first legatee, with remainder over.

In contradiction of all these authorities, a single case was relied on at bar, from McCord's reports, which I have not before me. I think its tenor was opposed to the creation of an estate in futuro, without an intervening interest. It is obvious, I think, that this case is not one of that kind—a present interest is conveyed by the deed, which attached upon the delivery of the deed, though its enjoyment 72 was postponed to a future time. In the case of Lightfoot's Ex'rs, vs. Colgin & wife, this point is clearly established. At the 77th page, 5 Munford's Reports, Judge Roane, in expressing his concurrence with the Court, speaking of a certain conveyance, which was the subject of controversy, says: "Considered as a grant, it is of no importance that a remainder only is granted, while the life estate is retained. That remainder is a vested interest—in a real advancement, and may be alienated."

Other parts of this case are good authority, on the subject of the retention of the property by the donor, not defeating a gift, to take effect in future.

III. The third exception alleges, that the deed is testamentary in its character.

To this objection I oppose: 1. The evident intention of the donor. And 2. The terms of the instrument itself.

1. Joab Horn did not regard it as a will, for otherwise he would not have delivered it to Gratman, to have had it recorded. He would not have made provision in the instrument for the property remaining in his possession, if he had regarded it as a will, which could have no effect, till after his death. He speaks in the instrument of it, as "this deed"— term too familiar, even to the unlearned, to have been applied by him to a paper designed for a will. And above all, he makes no disposition of the residue of his property, nor mentions his other children, and appoints no executors. In short, there is nothing about the whole instrument to support the exception, but the single word bequeathed, used in connection with the binding phrase, positively deed. This is a word, (bequeath,) not so familiar to the unlearned; and here it evidently conveys no meaning, adverse to the well understood word deed, used more than once.

The whole structure of the instrument—its singleness of character, (being confined to a conveyance of a single piece of property, to a single individual,) with all its incidents, intrinsic and extrinsic, negative the idea that Joab Horn designed it for a will.

But I contend that, whatever mnght be the intentions of Joab Horn, the terms of the instrument are such as to conrol that intention.

"A deed is a writing, sealed and delivered by the parties." 1 Tom. Law Dict. Title Deed.

73 The delivery makes it differ from a will. "A deed may be good without all the formal parts." Ibid, 523.

There was a grantor—a grantee—a thing granted—a good consideration, (though this last was not essential)—and sufficient words, such as deed, and positively deed, and is to become the property of, &c., to convey an interest present, and irrevocable.

Again: a gift may be made without deed, and any words used to signify an intention to give, suffice. The only object of a deed is, to serve as an evidence of the gift; and in some cases, to answer in lieu of a present delivery of the property. No greater formality is necessary in a gift by writing, than in a verbal gift; if the intention is manifest, that is all that is required.

Besides, "an uncertainty shall be taken in favor of the grantee." Jackson on Dem. Butler vs. Gardiner, 8 J. R. 394.

Joab Horn's subsequent declarations in his will, cannot nullify his antecedent gift, if it ever was such.

"Declarations of the intentions, or understanding of a grantor, "different from the intent apparent on the face of a deed, to be effec- "tual, must be made at the time of executing it." Soubervye & wife vs. Arden, 1 J. C. R. 240.

Joab Horn reserving a life estate in the negro, cannot be regarded as in any wise converting the grant into a will.

"A deed of trust, if not revocable by the grantor, is not to be considered a will in disguise, on the grounds that nearly all his personal estate is thereby conveyed, and that he reserves to himself the possession and control of the property during his life." Lightfoot's Ex'rs vs. Colgin & wife, 5 Munford's Rep. 42—69. See judgment of the Court in same case, passim, commencing page 80.

IV. The fourth exception relies upon the statute of limitations, as a bar to this action."

This statute was made to bar stale claims, and punish negligence. Joab Horn died in 1840—who could have sued him for the negro mentioned in this deed, while living? Certainly not David Gartman, or any claiming under him. He had no right to the possession of the negro till the old man's death; and within a year after that occurred, suit was brought.

The cause of action accrued to David Gartman in 1840, and not sooner; and the statute, as to him, began to run only from that time. If he was barred by the statute, then would every remainder man be 74 barred, when the particular estate happened to be of longer duration than five years.

There must be an adverse possession too, to enable a person to bring an action surtrover; and the statute commenced to run only from the time when the adverse possession began. Surely it will not be contended that the possession of Joab Horn, during his life, was adverse.

I do not deem it necessary to trouble the Court with any authority on this obvious point, beyond the familiar one, in Tidd's Practice, at page 17. A right of action cannot be barred till six years after there has been a complete cause of action; as if, I promise to pay a man £100 after he returns from Rome—the statute will not begin to run, till after his return.

(I have not Tidd before me, but this is the substance of the authority.)

V. The last objection made, is to the exclusion of Jeremiah Saville's disposition.

Saville is one of the Executors, and a party defendant on the record. The simple statement of the objection conveys a sufficient answer to it.

The respectability of the counsel making the objection, induce me to refer to an authority or two—otherwise I should consider it almost disrespectful to the Court to argue the point.

"A party to the record, though merely a nominal party, is not "allowed to testify on the trial of the case, though he be willing, if "objected to by the party in interest." Benjamin vs. Vocentry, 19 Wend. 353. Frear vs. Everston, 20 J. R. 142. Chenango Supervisors vs. Birdsall, 4 Wend. 453. Brown vs. Howard, 14 J. R. 122.

Addendum.—"A gift of chattels, to take place after the donor's "death, passes only those which remain in specie at the time of the "gift." 2 Tomlin's Dict. 32, quoting 3 Swan R. 400.

T. H. Hagner, for Appellee:

The appellants bill of exceptions presents objections to the sufficiency of the Plaintiff's title, as well upon his own evidence, as also, when that evidence is met by the proofs offered by the defendants. I shall examine these points separately.

And I. As to plaintiff's title upon his own evidence. The plaintiff offered in evidence the deed or instrument of writing, signed and sealed by Joab Horn, on 29th June, 1829; so declared on its face by the witnesses, in these words: "In witness whereunto I have 75 set my hand and seal, this 29th June, 1829, and in the presents of

Jeremiah Savill,		his
Reuben N. Barrow	}	Joab × Horn, [seal.]
Rich'd. J. Compton,		mark

The witness Compton, made oath before a Justice of the Peace, "that the within deed was fairly assigned and delivered in his presents," and being thus proved, the instrument was recorded on 14th September, 1839, in the life time of the donor.

The point made by the appellants is, that this instrument was not and is not a deed, but a mere contract to give in future, or at best a testamentary disposition.

The Court will be aided in the correct exposition of this instrument, by recurring to the principal rules for the understanding of deeds laid down in Plowden, p. 160— they are:

"First, That they shall be taken most beneficially for the party to whom they were made.

"Second, That a deed shall never be void, where the words may be applied to any intent to make it good on the principle, ut res magis valeat quam pereat."

"Third, That the words shall be construed according to the intent of the parties and not otherwise, and the intent directs gifts more than the words."

The words used here are, 1st, bequeath, admittedly a term implying a disposition by will, but its inaptitude here is repeatedly admitted by the donor himself—calling the act over and over again a deed. 2nd. Covenant, a word as clearly indicating a disposition by deed. 2 Black's Com., 338. Shepard's Touchstone 511—12. Saunders on Uses, 566. 3 Comyn's Digest, Cov. G.

This term too, more entirely comports with the consideration expressed; a covenant must not be in consideration of money, for that would be a bargain and sale. 2 Wilson's Reports 22.

A person may covenant to stand seized to an use in futuro, as from Christmas next; or a deed which may take effect as a covenant, to stand seized, is good, though the use is to arise after the decease of the covenantor. Doe vs. Whittingham, 4 Taunton 20. And were the covenant is to stand seized to a future use, the use, till it may vest, results to the covenantor. Same case.

Resort must be had to the meaning of these terms, if we are to be met by the argument, that the term bequeath, is of testamentary disposition. And let us look again at the third term used in this instru- 76 ment:

3rd. Deed—"positively deed;" "a certain portion of my property;" and again, "the stipulated property in this deed composed." The grantor "deeds the property." Now as is well argued by Mr. Anderson, this word is of more general acceptation than any other used—it is significant in the fullest sense; and that the grantor understood its meaning, is clear from the subsequent recognition of the act by himself—"in this deed composed, "the property in this deed composed."

Now "a deed ex vi termini, means a writing sealed and delivered." Hammond vs. Alexander, 1 Bibb, 333.

It is no manner of objection to the Courts carrying into effect his instrument, or rather to the Court's recognition of its legal bearing and effect, that it is not drawn with accuracy or conformably with precise precedent. See 5 Peters' Sup. Co. Rep. 580.

The intention is to be collected from the paper itself, from the undertaking of the parties; and taking the whole instrument together, if the clear design of the grantor appears to be, to "deed" the property, the effect follows of consequence.

In 1st Masachusetts' Rep. 219, is a case where the Court gave effect to an instrument having no words of grant in the premises, and held sufficient to pass a fee to land, from the words used in other parts of the deed. The Court recognizing the great rule of law to be, to effectuate the intention of the parties at the time; "if it can be done consistently with the rules of law." In that paper the term "granted," occurred—"granted premises," and a right "to convey"—and from these, the Court concluded the intention and carried it into effect. Again, Patterson Justice, in delivering the opinion of the Circuit Court for the Pennsylvania District, in 4 Dallas Reports, 347, speaks to like effect, that to effectuate the intention, is the great rule of interpretation. Examining this paper then with the manifest intention of the parties, let us inquire what was the manifest intention of Joab Horn, when he signed and sealed it? He declares himself "mindful this day to make a distribution of his property," &c.; he does "this day bequeath, covenant, and positively deed" property, he then has "in possession and owner of, clear of any enthrallments."

Now did not the party intend to give a present effect to his present purpose? Does he not declare his ability at that hour to make the distribution, while he is clear of debt? Does he not exhibit a plain 77 purpose to vest a present interest in this specific property? And he couples with the active power of the clause, which positively deeds the property to Gartman, THE PROVISO, that it is to remain in the possession of the donor during life, and then with its increase to be the property of the donee in good faith.

Let us test the question of present interest; and to that end let me ask, would not this conveyance to Gartman, have protected the property against the creditors of Horn, who might have become such, subsequent to the deed? Suppose afterwards that Horn had become involved, all the world having notice of this transfer, would not the estate vested in David Gartman have been protected from such subsequent creditors? There cannot be a doubt, because when Joab Horn was "clear of any enthrallments," he had that day made distribution by deed of gift among his children? When he had no creditors, when he was clear of the world, he had distributed his estate as he had a right to do, and there remained in him, but the use of the property during the brief remnant of his days.

This point has been judicially determined by the Court of Appeals of the State of Maryland in 1826, the case of Bohn vs. Headley, 7th Harris & Johnson, p. 257 to 272.

"A deed of gift of personal property from a father (who was not indebted at the time) to his child, executed, acknowledged and recorded, according to law; conveying the property to the child, WITH A PROVISION, that the donor was to remain in its possession and use during life. Held to be valid both at common law and under the Statute of 13th Eliz. 1.

An examination of that case will show the Court, that all the objections here taken were insisted on, before the Court of Appeals of Maryland. It was contended the gift was void by the Statutes 13 and 27 Eliz., that it was void at common law; that the gift was revocable on its face, and that by the subsequent sale of the negroes to a third person, the grantor did revoke it. Each of these points was met by the Court, and decided in favor of the grantee under the deed. The Court will note further, that the decision is placed not upon the Statute of Maryland, but upon the Statutes of England and the common law. The subsequent purchaser was there the plaintiff below, suing for the negroes; and the grantee held the negroes against the subsequent purchaser from the Grantor.

Another case from the same Court, is yet nearer in analogy to the case at bar; and presents the distinct question, whether a donor can 78 retain to himself the possession and use of the chattels for life, by the same deed of gift which passes the title to the property. In the case of Hope, Administrator of Hope vs. Hutchings, 9th Gill and Johnson 77; the defendants intestate executed and delivered to the plaintiff Thomas Hutchings, a bill of sale dated August 21, 1818, and for, and in consideration of the natural love and affection she bore to the grantee and his wife, (her daughter,) and for the better maintainance, support and preferment of them, made the bill of sale of negroes, and all the household furniture of which she may be possessed at the time of her decease;" Provided, the said Hannah shall not be debarred or prevented, holding, using and enjoying the said property above as aforementioned, and all profits arising therefrom during her natural life."

Upon the construction of the deed the Court by Stephen Judge declared, "that from the terms of "the instrument itself, the legal "title upon its execution immediately passed to the grantee, and that "nothing more than a mere usu-fructuary interest or right of enjoy-"ment, was intended to be reserved by the grantor in relation either "to principal or profits."

So in the case from 1 Murphey's law and equity, rep. 466, in North Carolina, it was decided in 1810; and in Caines & Wife vs. Marley, 2nd Yerger's Tennessee Reports p. 582, the deed of gift reserved the possession, use and labor of said slaves for and during the natural life of the donor, and after his death, the said grantee was to have the actual possession with the absolute title;" see also, 1 Humphrey's R. 171. Johnson vs. Mitchell. And in each of these cases it will be seen that the principle is recognized of "the power of the owner to dispose of the remainder of a chattel reserving to himself a life estate," as considered in the 31st year of George III, to be good law, evinced by the judgment of the Court, in 1 Henry Blackstone. p. 535, in the case of Doe vs. Polgrean. I consider that the Court below struck the right path, when they declared, that David Gartman by the deed took "a present interest in the property," and the case from Blackstone fully confirms it—that was the case of a present gift by deed vested possession in a certain event, and the case turned upon the point.

In Grantham vs. Hawley, Hobart 132, it was held that a grant of "such corn as should be growing on the ground at the end of a term;" was a good grant, and it mattered not that it was not in possession, no! nor in existence at the time of the grant.

It is not my purpose to enter upon the question of delivery of the 79 deed—or the delivery of the property; nor to show the authorities on this point. They are fully and ably presented by Mr. Walker Anderson in his brief. To a few additional cases, I will however call the attention of the Court, Comyn's Digest, p. 272, title a. 2 Dyer's Report, 167, B. 1 Croke 7, Shelton's Case. Shepard's Touchstone 57. And of modern date: 12 Pickering, 145. Banks vs. Markesberry, 3 Litt, 275. Gardner vs. Collin, 3 Mason, 398. Caines & Wife vs. Marley, 2 Yerg 582. Pennington vs. Gittings, 2 Gill & Johns, 216.

II. As to plaintiffs title upon defendants evidence.

Upon the trial the executors offered in evidence, Joab Horn's last will and testament insisting that he had thereby revoked this disposition of his estate.

In order to give an effect to this will as a Revocation, the counsel insist that the paper under which we claim is a testamentary disposition—and how do they prove it? By showing that even less formal papers than this, have been admitted to probate. I deny that this is any proof at all, and an examination of the cases cited, will show that the true principle is this, viz:

☞ "Instruments of Writing when nugatory in the character intended, are often set up as wills by the parties in interest, and are admitted to probate in order to carry into effect, the maker's object which must other wise fail of accomplishment."

In 4th Eng. Eccle. rep. 108, Sir John Nickoll declares this general principles as settled law.

Also see Rigden vs. Vallier, 2 Vesey Senior, 255, deed void for want of livery, set up as a will. See Masterman vs. Baberly, 4 Eng. Eccle. Rep. 108.

The case cited in the notes to 1 Williams on executors, p. 55, note n. Bartholemy vs. Henry, 3 Philimore 318, and found in 1st English Eccle. Rep. 406, is the assertion of the mere general expression that the Court will give effect to dispositions of property to be consummated by death, although the deceased might not be aware that he performed a testamentary act;" and the text of Williams is in precise conformity with the principle coupled with this adjunct—that the Courts never give such effect to a paper on its face in different form, until it has failed to operate in that form. In 1 Jarman on Wills p. 13, note 1. "A paper which purported to be a deed and was executed as such, but which was not to take effect until after the death of the grantor was construed as a will in order to give it effect. 80
Millege vs. Lamar, 1 Dess 617.

So then the Court will thus see, that the question whether this might not be construed as a will, and given effect to as such, cannot well arise here, until the Court have come to the conclusion that it is ineffectual as a deed.

If effectual as a deed, we are out of Court. In another suit it may be contended that a paper may be testamentary in its character, and yet irrevocable by the Testator's last will, as Lord Hardwicke in Peacock vs. Monk, 1 Vesey, Sen. 127, seemed to consider possible. "But sufficient for the day is the evil thereof."

The case from 12 New Hampshire, cited by Judge Carmack counsel for appellants, is full to show the correctness of my position. The grantee failing to uphold the paper as a deed, sought to have it admitted to probate as a Will. The Court say there is no intrinsic difficulty in this; but then the party was met by the revocation of it—by his own consent and relinquishment of all rights under it, by his receipt of proprty under the last will and testament in lieu of this very grant.

In the case at bar, the party in interest does not seek to alter the face, nor to change the name of the paper. The paper is a deed of slaves—we do not seek to set it up as a will.

The appellants seek to set up this paper as a will, only that they may change its character—they would style it a testament, that it may become revocable—they would admit it a will, only to render it nugatory—they seek not to give it effect but to destroy. We rely upon the deed as it is, signed, sealed and delivered by the grantor in his life time. Recorded and declared to all the world as his act and deed, over which he no longer had power and domain—which was and is irrevocable in its very nature.

As authorities are desired by the Court upon the question whether the paper A, is testamentary in its character, I will adduce them, with an argument to show their application.

The counsel for appellants, declared, "this distinctive characteristic of a will to be its reference to the future;" this is not precise nor accurate.

The ambulatory character is its distinctive attribute—that is, the act itself is not fixed till death, nothing attaches "in presenti." Jarman on Wills in his 1st vol. p. 11, well explains the distinction. He says, "It is this ambulatory quality which forms the characteris-

81 tic of wills, for though a disposition by deed may postpone the possession or enjoyment, or EVEN THE VESTING until the death of the disposing party, yet the postponement is in such case produced by the express terms, and does not result from the nature of the instrument."

And the author then gives an example, closely analagous to the case at bar. "Thus, if a man by deed, limits lands to the use of "himself for life, with remainder to the use of A in fee, the effect "upon the usu-fructuary enjoyment is precisely the same as if he "should, by his will, make an immediate devise of such lands to A "in fee—for the former instance, A, immediately on the execution "of the deed, becomes entitled to a remainder in fee, though it is "not to take effect in possession, until the decease of the settler, "while in the latter—(the case of the will)—he would take no inter-"est whatever, until the decease of the testator should have called "the instrument into operation."

Now apply this reasoning to the case here.

Immediately on the execution of the deed, David Gartman becomes entitled to a remainder in fee, though it is not to take effect in possession, until the decease of the grantor—for the postponement is, in this case, produced by the express terms, and not from the nature of the instrument.

Again: "A will as to personal property is considered as having existence only from the death of the testator, not from the time of its execution."

Case of Elcock's Wills, 4 McCord, 39, cited in 1 Williams on Ex. ch. 2nd, note 3.

In Audley's case, in 4 Leon, 166, it was considered conclusive against the construing an instrument as testamentary, that by it an estate was to be taken by the maker, "who could not take by his own will." See 1 Jarman on Wills, p. 13, note e. Thompson vs. Browne, 2 Mylne & Keene, 32. 8 Cond. Eng. Chancery Rep. 262.

Now, it is very true, that papers most inartificially drawn, have been admitted to probate—but for what causes, and on what grounds? If its purpose be testamentary—if it is only to be consummated by death—if it is not to operate during life—if it comprises no beneficial dispositions—if no interest whatever is taken under it, but such as are ulterior to the death of the donor—in short, if death is the event which alone can infuse any life into the instrument, then it is considered as testamentary—then it is a will and testament. Lovelass on Wills, p. 317—8. 1 Jarman on Wills, p. 11. Thorold, vs.
82 Thorold, 1 Phillim 1. Roberts on Wills, p. 59. 1 Williams on Executors, p. 53—55. Shepard's Touchstone, 399.

And it is settled law, that the will could not be valid, unless there is present the "animus testandi." If there were no intention of making an operative will, the paper is no will. Shepard's Touchstone, 404. Nicholls vs. Nicholls, 2 Phil. 180. Taylor vs. D'Egville, 3 Hagg, 206.

☞ He must do some act, declaring the instrument to be his will. Powell on Devises, 54. And it is clear that where the party intends to make, and does not make a deed, he does not design a will.

This paper writing, then while it is perfectly sufficient as a deed, would be entirely inoperative, were it propounded as will—for it never could be admitted to probate.

Carmack. in reply:

I. It is no answer to the argument that this instrument is testamentary, to prove, from an elaborate examination of the books, that it is, in some respects, like a deed. Like a deed, it is under seal: but so occasionally are wills. The terms "positively deeds," are used, which is by no means very common in deeds, and can, therefore, have but little, if any tendency, to prove that it was even designed to be a deed. Indeed this extraordinary expression is, I will venture to assert, as unusual in deeds as it is in wills. But it proves nothing in regard to the legal effect of the instrument, which is the question to be discussed—and but little in regard to the design—especially when it is connected with the word "covenant," which is now used as a term of conveyance, and with the words "bequeath," "distribution of my property," which are very common in wills, and were probably never used in a deed, unless this should be decided to be a deed.

II. The certificate of Probate proves only what the witness and Justice of the Peace thought of this instrument. It had a seal, and they thought it a deed. But their opinions are not authority to prove any thing to the present purpose.

III. It is mistaking the question again, to apply the doctrine, that in construing an instrument of writing, the intention of the parties, if that can be ascertained, must govern; and when it cannot be ascertained, the writings shall be construed more strongly against the party making it. These are rules to ascertain the meaning of the instrument—to ascertain what the parties have said, by the instrument, that they would do, or had done. But what the parties designed the 83 instrument to be; is another and very different question, which it is not at all useful to decide, nor need it be investigated, except as a matter of curiosity. For once the meaning of the instrument is ascertained, the law affixes its character, which the design of the party making it can no more control, than it can control any other stubborn rule of law.

It is not that the party thought he was making a deed, that makes it a deed. In every case, and we have shown them to be numerous, both in this country and in England, where a deed-pole or indenture, has been declared to be a will, the party who made it thought that he was making a deed; and if the rule contended for on the other side, could control the character of the instrument, they would have been deeds.

IV. A disposition of property, "to take effect after death," unless it be a present conveyance to a trustees, to save such limitation, has generally been held revocable, and therefore a will.

The only cases cited, which form exceptions to this rule, are those from Maryland and Tennessee. In one case in Maryland, the administrator was sued, and if the instrument was good, either as a will or a deed, it in either character conveyed title, and the question might not have been deemed material. In the other, the question whether it was a will or deed, was not made, and it probably escaped the attention of the Court. In the first case decided in Tennessee, although the Court relies partly upon the common law, to sustain the instrument as a deed, yet that decision mainly rested upon the authority of one case in North Carolina, decided shortly after the revolutionary war and a dictum of Judge Haywood, that that decision had become a rule of property, in both North Carolina and Tennessee. The decisions, standing alone, against the other American authorities and all the English, can be no authority here.

Numerous cases from North Carolina have been cited, almost in point, showing that this writing is a will, and void as a deed. The case in New Hampshire is in point. The party there did not offer it as a deed—perhaps he was too modest—and it was decided not to be a will, only because it had been revoked. The case in Mississippi is in point also.

V. It is not necessary that this instrument, or any other, should first be decided by the Court not to be a deed, as is contended on the other side, before it could be offered for probate as a will. This did not happen in any of the numerous cases already cited, and n 84 objection appears to have been taken to their probate as wills, on that account.

VI. It may be true, as a general rule, that instruments of this kind have been regarded as wills, because they could not operate as deeds, from a benevolent desire to give effect to them in some form or other; but I am not aware that it has ever before been argued, that such an instrument must, and ought to be a deed, lest, perchance, it might be ineffectual as a will. I cannot, therefore, see the supposed inconsistency of our argument, by which we prove this to be a will, because it happens to be our intention to have it destroyed by the subsequent will. This inconsistency which is contended for, can only be proved, by first showing that this little instrument is a more worthy object of the benevolent attention of the Court than the last will and testament of Joab Horn.

VII. This deed had no present operation, at the time it was made. Its declaration that the property mentioned in it was Joab Horn's, and that it was to remain his, and undivided, until his death, was the mere statement of a truism, which was just as true before it was stated in the deed, as it was afterwards. This cannot be called a present operation of the deed. If it may, every will has the same present operation. "And then," (after the death of Joab,) "to be bona fide the property of David Gartman!"—the only part of the whole instrument which conveys the property to David. It was to remain Joab's property during his life, and to be David's at his death—precisely such an interest as a will would have created—with only this difference, that perhaps no paper, which was a will in form, ever so explicitly described just such an interest as the law allows to be given by will.

VIII. It has not been shown that a delivery of the thing given, is not as necessary when the gift is by deed, as when by parol. A parol gift is as good as a gift by deed, if it can be as effectually proved. The deed may, in cases of a present gift, prove a delivery of the property, by way of estoppel—the donor being estopped, by his deed, from denying that every thing has been done necessary to make a present effectual gift, By this means the deed proves a delivery of the property. But there is nothing on the face of this instrument to estop the donor from denying the delivery; on the contrary, the deed itself proves that there was none, and that there 85 was to be none until the death of the donor. It was then only a promise to give it at a future time, and on that account void.

IX. All the cases read, to prove that a remainder may be created in personal property, are cases of wills or deeds of trust, except the cases from Maryland and Tennessee, if they may be regarded as exceptions. This we never denied. We merely deny that a remainder can be created in personal property, by deed, unless it be a deed of trust, and we have Story & Kent, to sustain us in this denial, besides the reason of the thing. By a conveyance in trust, the trustee becomes presently the legal owner; he can sue for, and recover the property, even from the cestui que trust. The relation of trustee and cestui que trust, is not known in a Court of law; it is only in a Court of Equity where it is recognized, and where contingent and future interests in personal property can be maintained and enforced.

BALTZELL, Justice.

The right of recovery of Gartman, the plaintiff, in the Court below, depends upon the legal effect and construction of an instrument of writing, in these words:

TERRITORY OF FLORIDA, Walton County. } Know all men by these presents, that I, Joab Horn, of the Territory and county aforesaid, being in sound mind and perfect memory, are mindful this day to make a distribution of my property to my different children, to wit: David Gartman; that for the natural love and affection which I bear towards him, and my deceased daughter, Drucilla, and the heirs of her body. In the presence of witnesses, do this day bequeath, covenant, and positively deed, a certain portion of my property, to wit: a negro man, named Will, and wife, Milly, and seven cows and calves; to which species of property, I, the said Joab Horn, have at this time in possession, and owner of, clear of any enthrallment; and is to remain undivided, and in my possession, so long as I live—and after my death, immediately the stipulated property in this deed composed, to be bona fide the property of David Gartman, with its increase, to have and to hold forever and forever.

In witness whereunto I have set my hand and seal, this 29th of June, 1829.

mark.

86 And in the presents of,
JEREMIAH SAVELL,
REUBEN N. BARROW,
RICHARD J. COMPTON.

Appellants, the executors of Horn, contend that this instrument confers no right:

1st. Because there was no delivery of the property, nor a sufficient delivery in law, of the deed.

2d. Because a remainder is created after a life estate, which is not permitted by law, except in cases of trust, and by will.

3d. Because the instrument is testamentary, and was revoked by the will of Joab Horn, made afterwards.

A delivery of the property was not made—indeed, was inconsistent with the terms of the instrument. Then inquiry then arises, does a deed dispense with delivery, and is it sufficient to convey the property, with a transfer of the possession. The law, in this respect, seems to be well settled—it being held, "that in order to transfer property by gift, there must be either a deed, or instrument of gift, or there must be an actual delivery of the thing to be done." 2 Barn. & Ald. 552. Adams vs. Hays, 2 Iredell, R. 366. 2 Kent Com. 438. 2 John, 52. 2 Leigh, 340. 2 Black, 441.

If valid as a deed, a second objection is, that there was no delivery of it. The instructions asked by defendant, shew that the deed was "presented by the plaintiff, to the recording officer, for registration," and was recorded. Consequently, it must have been in plaintiff's possession. This is sufficient evidence of delivery. Gilbert vs. Dunns lessee, 14 Peters, 322.

Nor does the fact of its being produced at the trial, by the defendants, under notice, alter the case. Brown vs. Winthrop, 1 John. Chy. 329—256. Ingraham vs. Porter, 4 McCord, 198. Dawson vs. Dawson, Rice's Eq. R. 257.

The next point is, that a remainder in personal property cannot be created after a life estate, according to law.

"By the ancient common law, personal estate was little regarded, "and thought to be subject to no modifications or limitations what-"ever. A gift or grant of a personal thing, for a day, or even for "an hour, was supposed to be equivalent to a gift, or grant of it "forever." Shep. Touch. 116. "But in succeeding ages, when "commerce and civilization had given additional importance to per-"sonal estate, new rules were introduced, to make it answer better "the exigencies of society; and it was at length placed, with respect 87
"to the limitations of which it was susceptible, more upon an equality "with real estate. In England, the only difference is, that real es-"tate may be entailed, and personal cannot; and in this country, "where estates tail are abolished, the rule is exactly the same with "respect to real and personal estate." This was the case of a gift of slaves, to take effect after the death of grantor and wife, reserving a life estate—presenting the very point at issue in this case. Boyle Ch. Just. in Banks vs. Marksbury, 3 Littell R. 275.

In Smith vs. Bell, although it was the case of a will, yet the remarks of Chief Justice Marshall are pertinent to the present case. "The rule that a remainder may be limited, after a life estate in "personal property, is as well settled as any other principle of our "law. The attempt to create such limitation is not opposed by the "policy of the law, or any of its rules." 6 Peters R. 78.

In North Carolina, the modern rule was first adopted. 1 Haywood, 234. 1 Murphy, 466. Afterwards the old common law rule was declared to be in force, the Judges expressing their regret in the cases decided by them, "that a disposition of property, so just and simple in itself, could not be sustained." Foscue vs. Foscue, 3 Hawks R. 544.

"I think it a hard case," says Judge Hall, "that this species of property cannot be conveyed, in a mode apparently so simple, when the reason upon which the rule was originally founded, is no more; and cannot but regret, that decisions upon the subject had not been more comfortable to the nature of this kind of property, and the convenience of those who possessed it. Graham vs. Graham, 2 Hawks, 322.

In 1823, the Legislature altered the law as thus declared.

In S. Carolina, the Chancellor, in a case affirmed by the Court of Appeals, in 1839, says: "I shall not, after the decisions which have been made in this State, trouble myself by inquiring, whether a personal vested interest, to be enjoyed in future, can be directly conveyed by deed, either as to realty or personalty; that is a settled question." Dawson vs. Dawson, Rice's Eq. R. 261.

In Carnes and wife vs. Marley, the deed was: "I give to H. Jones, to hold to him, and his executors forever; provided, that I resume the possession, use and labor of said slaves, for and during my natural life." The cause was before the Court of Appeals of Tennessee, in 1827, when the Court decided the gift invalid. The opinion, however, was not satisfactory, and a re-argument was 88 granted. The case was again argued in 1830, and held under advisement until August, 1831. The Court then say: "Nothing is better settled than that, an interest in remainder, after an interest for life expires, may be limited in a deed for slaves. 2 Yerger, 584.

But it is needless to multiply cases, when authority is so abundant, and the question has been so ably decided. 2 Kent Com. 352 Johnson vs. Mitchell, 1 Humphrey, 173. 2 Black, 398. 7 Harris & Johnson, 257—272. 1 Henry Black, 535. 1 Murphy, 466.

The case of Thompson vs. Thompson, &c., has been cited as asserting a contrary doctrine. That was the case of an instrument not under seal, so that the point was not before the Court for decision. 2 How. Miss. R. 737.

The case in 12 New Hamp. R. is also relied on by appellants. It was the case of a deed not delivered to grantees, and in which the party claiming the benfit of it, conceded that it could not avail him as a deed. The question before the Court seemed to be rather as to the effect of subsequent arrangements between the parties, in revoking the deed. 12 New Hamp. 372.

We are of opinion then, that a remainder may be created in personal property, after a life estate, by deed.

The third question is, that the instrument is testamentary in its character—a question of some novelty in our courts, and of no little difficulty.

If Mr. Horn intended the instrument of 29th June, 1829, to operate as a deed, and it is not legally impossible that it shall so operate, his intention should prevail. "It is a benign principle, well established," says Chancellor Johnson, in a case confirmed by the Court of Errors and Appeals of South Carolina, "that if a paper, wearing the "form of a deed, cannot operate as a deed, it shall, (if that will not "prevent its provisions,) be allowed as a testament." Dawson vs. Dawson, Rice's Eq. R. 260. 4 Dessausure, 617.

So in Williams on Executors: "It is settled law, that if the paper contains a disposition of property, to be made after death, though meant as a deed of gift or bond, and not intended as a will, yet, if it cannot operate in the latter, it may nevertheless, in the former character." 1 Williams ex'rs, 55. 2 Haggard, 247.

"If the instrument is to be consummated only by death, and not operate during life; especially if it is not upon a stamp—contains no valuable consideration—is not delivered out of the custody of the 89 maker, and comprises no beneficial dispositions, but such as are ulterior to the death of the donor; in short, if death is the event which is to give life and operation to the instrument, the Court will grant probate of it as a will." Lovelass on Wills, 317.

"In respect to personal property, where there is a final intention proved and execution prevented by the act of God, the mere want of execution does not invalidate the instrument. The disposition intended to be made, has the same legal effect in regard to personal property as if the instruments had been actually signed and attested. It is also settled law, and several cases have been decided, that if the paper contains the disposition of the property to be made after death, though it were meant to operate as a settlement or a deed of gift, or a bond, though such paper were not intended to be a will, nor other testamentary instruments, but an instrument of a different shape, yet, if it cannot operate in the latter, it may nevertheless operate in the former character." 2 Haggard, 108—235.

These authorities are quoted without reference to the effect of our statute on the subject of Wills, which it is not necessary here to notice.

The question then is, can this paper be sustained, and operate as a good and valid deed? The rules for the transfer of real estate have long since been established, and their meaning, force and effect declared and well understood. We are not aware that any such exist, or have been prescribed as to personal property. Undoubtedly less form is required to transfer personalty; such property ordinarily is passed by mere delivery. The most that the authorities seem to require is, that there be an actual gift—a design consummated—not the mere intention to give. In the case in 2 Yerger above cited, the words used were "I give," and the deed was held sufficient. In the case of Dawson vs. Dawson, the deed was in these terms, "this day I Richard Dawson, do give to my named children in my will, all my real estate, and all my personal property, and goods and chattels to my named children in my will, and I do acknowledge this day, to be theirn, and no others than those named in my will, and the use therein menshened." This, also, was established as a valid deed, coupled with the will so as to make the instrument take effect in futuro.

In Grangive vs. Arden, the holder of a lottery ticket wrote the name of his daughter on it and put it in his desk, afterwards said "the ticket was hers;" it did not belong to him, he had given it to his daughter, &c.

90 "These declarations, say the Court, recognize a gift as having been made. They afforded reasonable grounds for a jury to infer that all the formality necessary to a valid gift had been complied with." 10 John, 296.

In the case of Johnson vs. Mitchell, the words were, "I agree to throw into the hands of my sons-in-law." The Court say, "that these words however unusual and inartificial, want the force and efficacy of the words, give or transfer, &c., it would be difficult to maintain," &c. I Hump. 173.

"In the construction of deeds the Court will lean towards giving validity to a deed. If it will not have an operation one way, it may operate in some other way." Chase, Justice, 1 Harris & John, 527.

"There is one general principle that runs through the construction of deeds, that they are to be construed most beneficially for the party to whom they are made; and 2ndly, that a deed shall never be void, when the words may be applied to any intent to make it good." 1 Plow. 159.

It is true, that the instrument under consideration has some of the terms peculiar to wills, "being in sound mind and body, are mindful this day to make distribution, do bequeath;" yet the remainder of it has terms and provisions not contained in a will, but peculiar to a deed, showing an evident purpose to convey, a design executed, some thing done, in fact a deed. It does not commence as a will, but in the form of a bill of sale, "know all men by these presents;" it contains a consideration. The words, "do this day covenant," import agreement, bargain and obligation; "positively deed," a certainty of transfer, a determination and purpose evidenced by use of a word in common acceptation, the most solemn and effectual, that is known among men. The reservation of a life estate especially would be absurd in a Will. It is entitled as a "deed of gift to David Gartman" by the person who drew it, and the probate by Compton, one of the witnesses, before Jeremiah Savell, a Justice of the Peace, who is also a witness and a defendant in the case, states, "that the within deed was fairly assigned and delivered in his presents."

It is a striking feature of this case, that the object in construing this instrument a testament, is to effect its destruction, whereas the benign principle of construing, deeds, &c., as wills, was designed for their preservation. If the instrument were defective as a deed, the argument might be more effectual under the authorities to sustain it as a will.

It has been insisted in this Court, that the deed was invalid, for 91 want of a consideration, Gartman being only the son-in-law of Horn. This point was not presented in the Court below, from any thing appearing in the record; and after a verdict we should be inclined to regard the case of plaintiff as made out except as to the objections raised by the bill of exceptions. The position however is not sustained by the authorities. Voluntary agreements in favor of strangers are sustained, and "with respect to chattel interests, an agreement under seal imports a consideration at law." 3 Burrow, 670. 7 T. R. 350. Beard vs. Mitchell, I Vern. 42. 3 P. Wms. 222. Brown vs. Winthrop, 1 John ch. 336. 4 Com. Dig. 266, Fait B. 4 b.

Delivery of this slave to Gartman would have been good by way of gift, and if a deed supplies the place of, and is a substitute for delivery, there would seem to be no objection to the want of a consideration.

One of the errors assigned is that the deposition of Jeremiah Savell one of the defendants and executor of the will of Joab Horn, was offered in evidence, but rejected by the Court. The deposition is not a part of the record, nor does the bill of exceptions state what was designed to be proved by it, or the ground on which it was rejected. Under these circumstances, we cannot say whether the decision was right or wrong. We cannot take it for granted that the objection was because he was executor. It may have been that his testimony was not material, and this is in accordance with the ground invariably acted upon by Appellate Courts, that every fair intendment is to be made in support of the judgment below. The office of a bill of exceptions is to give the facts on which the Courts decided, and it should give all the facts bearing upon the decision, so that the Appellate Court, may know fully and clearly every thing which influenced the decision of the Court. After a statement of these facts it may then be stated, that the Court instructed the jury or decided in such manner upon the facts so stated.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that there is no error in the instruction given in the Court below, and that the judgment be affirmed.

The original deed produced in this Court will be delivered to appellee's attorney, to be filed in the Court below.

THE STATE vs. RICHARD K. CALL. 92

IN a criminal case, a certificate of the Judge who presided at the trial, which neither states nor intimates a doubt upon any legal question, but merely expresses a desire to have the cause heard before the Court of Appeals, is not sufficient, under the statute, to give this Court jurisdiction.

THE defendant was indicted at the Spring Term, 1844, of the late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida for Wakulla county, for unlawfully erecting in the river St. Marks, a navigable watercourse, a certain pier and obstruction, composed of wood and rock, and permitting the same to continue there; whereby the navigation and free passage of the said river, it was alleged, was greatly obstructed and straightened.

At the trial, a bill of exceptions was prepared and tendered by the counsel for defendant, which was signed and sealed by the presiding Judge; he attaching thereto the following certificate:

"The Court being desirous that the same might be heard before the Court of Appeals of this Territory, has signed and sealed this bill of exceptions."

The defendant, by his counsel, at the same term, filed his motion for a new trial.

At the Fall Term, 1845, the Circuit Court, the motion for a new trial being renewed, the then presiding Judge made a full statement of the facts and evidence, and transmitted it to this Court, with the following certificate:

"The motion to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial, was renewed before me during the late Circuit; and concurring in the wish of my predecessor, that this case might be heard in an appellate Court; and "entertaining doubts upon the legal questions" arising in it, I have made this statement, and transmit the same to the Supreme Court, for its consideration and decision.

"AT CHAMBERS, Tallahassee, Dec. 26th, 1845."

Attorney General, for the State.

Long & Walker, for the defendant.

HAWKINS, Justice:

This case comes before the Court on bill of exceptions, signed by Samuel J. Douglas, late Judge of the Superior Court of the Ter-

93 ritory, stating the instructions he had given to the jury on the trial before him and concluding as follows, "to which instructions given by the Court, the defendant's counsel excepted, and the Court being desirous that the same might be heard before the Court of Appeals of this Territory, has signed and sealed this bill of exceptions."

The first question presented by the record for the consideration of the Court is, have they jurisdiction of the case.

The act of the Territorial Legislature passed in 1833, gave the benefit of an appeal or writ of error to the Court of Appeals of the Territory, from all final judgment and sentences of the Courts of the Territory. Acts 1833, page 113.

This law was expressly repealed by an act passed in 1841, declaring, that from and after the passage of this act, no appeal or writ of error, or bill of exceptions to evidence, should be entertained or allowed, or granted to a defendant, or defendants, in criminal prosecutions in any of the Courts of this Territory; but if in the trial of any criminal prosecution, the Judge before whom the same is tried, shall entertain a doubt upon any legal question arising in the case, then and in that case, the said Judge may continue the same, and shall as soon as convenient make a statement in writing of the question of law, and carry up or transmit the same to the Court of Appeals for its consideration and decision. Acts 1841, page 7.

The design of the Legislature is too clearly expressed in the act, to occasion a doubt as to their intention.

The certificate of the Judge neither states nor intimates a doubt, but expresses merely a desire to have the cause heard before the Court of Appeals. If the Legislature designed an appeal in such a case, they have not so declared it.

A question of this kind arose before the Court of Appeals of the State of Mississippi, in which the following view was taken: "It is a general rule, that the Appellate Court can act only on the record from the Inferior Court, which must contain a case sufficiently certain in its character to enable this Court to act upon it. Admitting that the powers of this Court are co-extensive with those possessed by the former Supreme Court, the doubts of the Judge below, if any existed, being all that could give jurisdiction are not properly certified to this Court. It should clearly appear by the record that the Judge entertained doubts as to the rule of decision, and for this reason that he had adjourned the question on which he doubted, to this 94 Court for its decision." Caraway vs. Board, Police, Yazoo County, 1 Howard, 22.

The case ought rightly to have been presented to the Court of Appeals of the Territory at its last session, and the Judge of the Circuit Court finding it in the Court below, with the certificate of the Judge, did rightly in having the papers transmitted to this Court for its action. The Court having no jurisdiction of it, will have it remanded to the Circuit Court of the County, where it was tried.

It is therefore considered by the Court, that this case be dismissed from the docket, and the papers remitted to the Circuit Court for the County of Wakulla, for further proceedings to be had therein, agreeably to law.

THOMAS U. WHITE vs. JOHN G. CAMP.

A PLEA, filed under oath, alleging the failure or want of consideration of a bond, note or other instrument of writing, throws the onus of proving the consideration of the instrument sued on, upon the plaintiff; but the consideration can be inquired into only between such parties as it might have been at Common Law.

In an action by the endorsee against the maker, a plea, under oath, denying the consideration of the instrument sued on, does not throw the onus of proving the consideration on the plaintiff.

When a bill or note is endorsed in blank, the presumption of law is, that it was endorsed on the day of its date, or at least before it was due; and if the defendant alleges that it was endorsed after it was due, the burthen of proof is on him to show it.

The affidavit of a want or failure of consideration, should be drawn in issuable terms, and confined to a single allegation, and should not be in the alternative or double; it should be so constructed as to apprise the plaintiff what facts he would be required to prove on trial.

ERROR to Leon Circuit Court.

The facts are contained in the opinion of the Court, delivered by Justice Hawkins.

J. T. Archer, for plaintiff in error:

1. The Court below erred, in determining upon the 2d plea, affidavit, and notice of special matter, that it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove a consideration from Reese, the payee, to defen- 95 dant, the maker.

First. The 24th section of the act to amend an act regulating Judicial proceedings, approved November 23d, 1829, was intended to add to the force and effect of promissory notes; but the effect of this section has been to impair their force and effect, under the construction that, a denial under oath, of the consideration of a note by the maker thereof, overcomes the evidence of consideration contained in the note itself, and renders it necessary for the holder to produce other evidence of a consideration, before he can recover. Whether this construction be the correct one, is not necessary to be discussed or decided in this case. The effect of it is, to permit the maker of a note, on issues touching the consideration or execution of the same, to become a witness in his own case, while the same privilege is denied to the holder; but it does not allow any defences to be set up, which were not defences before the statute was passed; it affects the proof only.

The plaintiff claims as bona fide holder, under an endorsement in blank, by Reese, the payee; and it is clear and unquestionable, (if the statute affects only the rules of evidence,) that a want of consideration from Reese to Camp, cannot affect the plaintiff's right to recover.

The fraud alleged in the second plea, which prevented a demurrer, is not sustained by proof—the affidavit of defendant to the truth of the plea not being evidence, either at common law or under the statute, to support the allegation of fraud.

Second. The facts detailed in the notice of special matter, and sworn to by the defendant, shew that there was a consideration given him for the note, and disprove the allegations of the 2d plea. The Court should, therefore, having given judgment for the plaintiff, in the issue upon the second plea, affidavit and notice of special matter.

II. The Court erred, in determining upon the third plea, affidavit and notice, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the consideration of the endorsement to plaintiff.

The 34th section of the same act, provides, that it shall not be necessary for the assignee or endorsee of any instrument, assignable by law, to set forth in the declaration, the consideration upon which such assignment or endorsement was made, nor prove such consideration, unless the same shall be impeached by the defendant under oath. This section does not provide for an inquiry into the consideration of an endorsement or assignment of any negotiable or assign- 96 able instrument, where, by the old law, such inquiry would not be permitted. The most that can be claimed for the defendant, under this section, is the right, upon such inquiries into the consideration of the said endorsement as are authorized by the common law, to give in evidence his own affidavit, so as to put the onus probandi upon the plaintiff.

If this section, in like manner as the 24th, cannot be construed to create any new grounds of defence, and at furtherest, can only be considered to amount to an alteration of the rules of evidence, then the consideration from plaintiff to Reese cannot be inquired into by defendant. There is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and defendant; and it is immaterial to defendant whether the plaintiff got the note from Reese, with or without consideration.

The allegation of fraud, (which prevented a demurrer to the 3d plea,) was not proved; and it is perfectly clear that, in the issue upon the 3d plea, judgment should have been given for the plaintiff.

III. On the pleadings and evidence, the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

The affidavit made by the defendant, contains various statements; is drawn in the alternative; is unintelligible, double, uncertain, and not in conformity to the statute. It should not have been received, and is, in its present shape, no evidence. The only legal evidence in the case, is the note and proof of the endorsement by Reese; and this evidence is sufficient to determine all the issues in favor of the plaintiff.

No counsel for defendant.

HAWKINS, Justice:

The action in the Court below is of assumpsit, by Thomas U. White, the plaintiff in error, endorsee, against John G. Camp, maker of the following promissory note:

"127 97-100. SANDUSKY CITY, Sept. 6, 1839.

"Due on demand to William T. Reese, or order, for value received, one hundred and twenty-seven 97-100 dollars.

"JOHN G. CAMP.

(Endorsed)—"W. T. REESE."

The declaration contains a count upon the note, money counts, and account stated.

The defendant, Camp, put in three pleas: 1st, Non assumpsit.

97 2d, That the promissory note sued upon was given and made without any lawful or valuable consideration, and was obtained by the payee, Reese, by fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, covin, and deceit, and that the said note was, and is void, &c. 3d, That the endorsement or assignment of the note was made without any lawful or valuable consideration, and in fraud of the rights and interest of the defendant, to deceive and defraud him in the premises.

Accompanying the plea, there was a notice to plaintiff that, under the general issue pleaded, the defendant would prove that said William T. Reese, one Thomas Neill, Isaac A. Mills, and defendant, owned as tenants in common, a certain tract of land in Sandusky, Erie county, in the State of Ohio, and attempted to make division of said lands; and said note was given for the supposed difference due said Reese in said division; that since then, one Owen Follet, of whom said Reese purchased, has instituted proceedings to get said Reese's share of land, said Reese never having paid him the purchase money; and that the attempted division of said land, on which said note was predicated, is nullified and void, in consequence thereof; and that the same was, therefore, given without any consideration; or if there was any consideration, it has totally failed. That said Reese had since been declared a bankrupt; that the endorsement of the note to plaintiff was fraudulently made, by collusion, with knowledge and notice by plaintiff of the facts as before stated; that Reese was largely indebted to him, the defendant, at the time of the transfer of the note, and before, for defendant's blank endorsements, given to him for specified purposes, which Reese did not comply with, but made use of the same, by getting them discounted, and misapplied the proceeds, not as he engaged appropriating it, to pay for said land to Follet, and so release it, so as to effectuate said division; all of which the defendant alleges plaintiff had notice of, and that defendant would rely on said facts, in bar of the action.

Appended to this notice was an affidavit, in which the defendant denies, on oath, the consideration of said note declared on; and also saith, that if the consideration was legal and valid, the same has totally failed. He further denies, on oath, the consideration of said assignment or endorsement of the note, and that he believed the facts, as set forth in the notice, are true.

The plaintiff replied by similiter to the plea, and take issue on the second and third.

The parties waived a trial by jury, and put themselves upon the 98 judgment o fthe Court. By the bill of exceptions, it is shown, that the plaintiff ordered in evidence in support of his declaration the note sued upon, and satisfactorily proved the signature of the endorser, Reese; and thereupon Camp, the defendant, after exhibiting his affidavit, made under the statute, asked the Court, to determine upon the pleadings, that the plaintiff to recover must prove the consideration for which the note was given by Camp to Reese, under the second plea, and notice of special matter; and under the third plea and notice as aforesaid, must prove the consideration of the assignment or endorsement by Reese to plaintiff; and the Court so determined, and gave judgment accordingly for defendant.

To that opinion the plaintiff excepted; and thereupon a writ of error issued.

The counsel for the plaintiff in error assigns the following errors:

First. The Court erred in determining that, upon the second plea. and affidavit, and notice, it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove the consideration of the note, before he could recover.

Second. The Court erred in determining, that upon third plea, affidavit and notice, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to prove consideration of the endorsement or assignment, from Reese to him.

Third. That upon the pleadings and evidence in the cause, plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

The defendant, in the Court below, has attempted to avail himself of the provisions of the statutes of Florida, as to the proof of the execution and consideration of bonds, bills, notes, et cetera, contained in the twenty-fourth and thirty-fourth sections of the act, in relation to judicial proceedings, passed November 23d, 1829. Duval's Compilation, 95 and 96.

Section 24, after stating that all promissory notes, and other writings, not under seal, shall have the same force and effect as bonds and instruments under seal, says that: It "shall not be necessary "for the plaintiff to prove the execution of any bond, note, or other "instrument of writing, purporting to have been signed by the de- "fendant, nor the consideration for which the same was given, un- "less the same shall be denied by plea, put in and filed as aforesaid, "(i. e. on oath,) and filed before the cause is called upon the ap- "pearance docket."

Section 34th declares: "That the assignee or endorsee may bring "suit in his own name; nor shall it be necessary for the assignee or "endorsee of any instrument, assignable by law, to set forth in the "declaration the consideration upon which such assignment or en- 99 "dorsement was made; nor to prove such consideration, unless the "same shall be impeached, by the defendant, under oath."

The instruments "assignable by law," referred to in this, and the thirty-third section of the same act, are bonds, notes, covenants, deeds, bills of exchange, or other writings, whereby money is promised or secured to be paid; and the assignment of these instruments vests in the assignee or endorsee, the same rights, powers and capacities, as are possessed by the assignor or endorser.

The subjects arising for the consideration of the Court in the cause before us, involve the discussion of the inquiry, whether the statutes cited can be legally applied to the present case; and between what parties to suits in promissory notes, their aid is be invoked in the defence of those actions.

Statutes of the character of those under review, while in some degree they bear the impress of a remedial character, are entitled to a fair construction as to those in whose favor they are enacted, so far as is requisite to carry out the intention of the Legislature, when that intention, by legal rules of construction, can be ascertained.

Ordinarily, remedial statutes seem intended to supply any defects or imperfections in common law, where the remedy is deemed imperfect, or too narrow, to subvert the ends of justice, when they become what are termed enlarging statutes; but those under consideration cannot be embraced in that class, as they do not amplify or add to the remedy, as known at the common law; but being in derogation of it, should be construed strictly, for it is laid down that a statute, which takes away a common law remedy, ought never to have an equitable construction.

The statutes before us certainly affect the remedy hitherto possessed by the plaintiffs, in suits on promissory notes, by throwing the onus probandi upon him, by the defendant's taking the oath, as prescribed by the statutes. They are in direct derogation of the old rules of the common law, as to the defence of actions, and the principles of evidence, as to suits brought upon the above instruments. Chancellor Kent says, that statutes are to be construed "in refe- "rence to the principles of the common law, for it is not to be sup- "posed, that the Legislature intended any innovation of the common "law, further than the case absolutely required." 1 Kent Com. 464. And Lord Tenderden remarks that, "there is always danger "in giving effect to what is called the equity of a statute; it is much "better and safer to rely on, and abide by the plain words, al- 100 "though the Legislature might have provided for other cases, had "their attention been directed towards them." 6 B & C. 475.

From a review of the statutes cited, and being in pari materia, they should be construed together: the effect is clearly this—that upon the oath being taken, in compliance with the requisitions of the statute, and by proper parties, the onus of proof is thrown upon the plaintiff, and he is bound to prove the consideration of the instrument, upon which suit is brought. The 24th section of the act cited is silent, as to the parties between whom the consideration can be gone into; and in accordance with the views herein before expressed, we are of opinion that it can only be applied between such parties as the consideration could have been entered into at common law. It is possible that this section may have been intended to have had a more extended operation—if so, there is a casus omissus, and this cannot be supplied by a Court of law, for that would be the assumption of legislative powers by the Judiciary, and we are bound to take the laws, as the Legislature have enacted them.

The 34th section of the act is sufficiently explicit, and clearly relates to suit brought by the assignee or endorsee of the instruments therein set forth, against the assignor or endorser, and seems to have an eye to the privity existing between parties, at least, to notes and bills of exchange.

To give any other construction to these statutes, would produce results, which the Legislature could never have intended or anticipated—if otherwise, there would be no safety in the receiving or purchasing any of the instruments set out in the statute, particularly bills of exchange and promissory notes. These being assignable by endorsement or delivery, circulating from hand to hand, in accordance with the liberal and comprehensive notions of commercial policy, and entering into every day transactions of life, every consideration demands, that no restraint should be placed upon their free circulation, by the enforcement of a principle of defence, not set forth in the plain words of the act, and in restraint of the remedy at common law.

The question now arises, can the consideration of the note in suit be gone into between White, the endorsee, and Camp, the maker of the note, by the common law.

The total, or partial want, or failure of consideration, of the illegality of consideration, may be insisted upon as a defence or a bar between any of the intermediate or original parties to the contract.

101 It may be insisted upon by the maker against the payee, and by the payee and his endorser, and cannot be inquired into between the endorsee and the maker. 208 Story on Prom. Notes. Braman vs. Hess, 13 John. R. 52.

The holder of a negotiable instrument, taken before due, is prima facia rightful owner of it, and he ned not prove consideration, except circumstances of suspicion appear; and to render it void in the hands of an innocent endorsee, there must be a knowledge of the want, failure, or illegality of consideration. 4 Hill, 442. 6 Wendell, 615.

The defendant in the Court below, though he pleaded illegality, want and failure of consideration, et cetera, adduced no proof that the plaintiff took the instrument sued upon, under suspicious circumstances, or with knowledge of the defects alleged; and the rule now is, that the endorsee, when plaintiff, need not prove a bona fide consideration paid by himself; until some suspicion is cast upon his title. 1 Moody & Robinson, 366.

So far as the evidence in the Court below is concerned, White is clearly a bona fide holder, for a valuable consideration, without notice—and in accordance with the law, as to notes payable on demand, a holder before the note was due.

The presumption of law is, that when a bill or note is endorsed in blank, that it was endorsed on the day of its date, or at least before it was due. If the defendant alleges, that it was endorsed after it was due, the burthen of proof is on him to shew it. 137 Bailey on Bills. Pinkerton vs. Bailey, 8 Wendell R. 600. When a promissory note, payable on demand, is endorsed within a reasonable time after its date, the endorsee has all the rights of an endorsee receiving a negotiable instrument before it comes due. If not endorsed in a reasonable time, it is considered as overdue, and dishonored, and the endorsee will be subject to any defence, which would have been available against his endorser. 135 Bailey on Bills. 4 Mass. 370. What is considered reasonable time, is not precisely settled, but depends upon the circumstances of each particular case; but the presumption is, that it was transferred within a reasonable time, unless the contrary is proved. 137 Bailey on Bills.

The Court, upon a view of the case, is of opinion, that the affidavit of Camp should have been treated as a nullity; that the Court erred in receiving it; and that the cause should have been tried solely upon common law principles. But even if the affidavit should have 102 been received, it is not such a one as the statutes required. It should have been drawn in issuable terms, and confined to a single allegation—not in the alternative or double—but should have been so constructed, rendering it analagous to the old English rule of notice, as to have apprized the party plaintiff, which facts he would be required to prove upon the trial. It first denies the consideration of the note; and if it was valid and legal, it has totally failed, while the facts as set forth in the notice, would seem to make out a case of original consideration of the note.

In conclusion, we think the errors well taken. The judgment in the Court below must be reversed—the cause remanded to the Court below—and venire de novo awarded.

Douglas, Chief Justice:

At common law, promissory notes and bills of exchange were negotiable; they imported a consideration; if endorsed before they fell due, the consideration could not be gone into, except between the original parties, unless there were some suspicious circumstances attending the transaction; and if there was nothing to shew the time when the endorsement was made, it was presumed to have been made before they fell due. If endorsed after they became due, the endorsee took them, subject to all the equities that existed between the original parties thereto.

The first clause of the 34th sec. of our judicial act, Duval's Comp. 96. makes, any bond, note, covenant, deed, bill of exchange, or other writing, whereby money is promised, or secured to be paid, transferable by assignment or endorsement.

It is proper to remark here, that this act was passed in the year 1828, and that the Legislature, at the same session, repealed the act which had before introduced into the Territory of Florida the common law of England. This judicial act, therefore, was the only law in force in Florida, touching these several classes of instruments, until the common law was again introduced in the year 1829. Hence, the reason why notes and bills of exchange are found in this category.

Many of these instruments, although made negotiable by assignment or endorsement, did not, at common law, import a considera tion; and without that law, a doubt might well have been entertained, even in regard to those which did. To remedy this inconvenience, and carry out the views of the Legislature as to all, which it is presumed, was to increase the quantity of negotiable paper, in a new country, where there were few mercantile transactions, and 103 the circulating medium was scarce, the 24th sec. of the same act declared, that all promissory notes, and other instruments of writing, not under seal, should have the same force and effect, as bonds and instruments under seal.

The full effect of this provision upon these instruments, has never, (so far as I am aware,) been judicially determined. It certainly has not been supposed, by the legal profession, to give them such an effect, that an action of covenant could be maintained upon any one of them.

But they import a consideration, and without some further provision, the plaintiff could not, in any case, have been required to prove such consideration, unless it has been impeached by proof on the part of the defendant.

The last clause of the 34th sec. above cited, therefore declared, that the assignee or endorsee of any such instrument, might bring suit in his own name; and that it should not be necessary for the assignee or endorsee of any instrument, assignable by law, to set forth in the declaration, the consideration upon which such assignment or endorsement was made; nor to prove such consideration, unless the same should be impeached by the defendant under oath. And the 2d clause of the 24th section also declared, that it should not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove the execution of any bond, note, or other instrument of writing, purporting to have been signed by the defendant, or the consideration for which the same was given, unless the same shall be denied by plea, put in on oath.

What is the converse of these propositions? Why, that if such plea is put in on oath, in the one case, or the consideration in the other is impeached under oath, the plaintiff must prove the execution and consideration in the one case, and the assignment, or endorsement, and consideration thereof in the other—in all cases where the rule would apply to such instruments, so endorsed, at common law—for notwithstanding the Legislature had repealed that law, it cannot be supposed that they legislated, without any regard to its wise and equitable provisions.

The object of the Legislature was, as before remarked, to increase the quantity of negotiable paper; but these provisions of the statute would in a great measure, have defeated their own object, if such plea or impeachment required this proof from the plaintiff in any case, except between the immediate parties to the instrument, or where the plaintiff has taken it after it had become due, or under such 104 other suspicious circumstances, as should have put him on inquiry.

We are warranted, therefore, I think, in the conclusion, that these provisions of this statute only apply, as between the immediate parties to the transaction, or such others as have taken these instruments after due, or have not acted in good faith, or with due circumspection in cases attended with suspicion; and this, as I understand it, is all that the opinion, delivered yesterday by Judge Hawkins, in this case intended to assert on the subject.

Baltzell Justice, dissenting:

In the decision made in this case I fully concur, but do not agree to those parts of the opinions delivered which declare, "from a re-"view of the statutes cited and being in pari materia, they should be "construed together; the effect is clearly this—that upon the oath be-"ing taken in compliance with the requisites of the statute and by "proper parties the onus of proof is thrown upon plaintiff, and he "is bound to prove the consideration of the instrument upon which "suit is brought." And in the opinion of the Chief Justice "We "are warranted therefore I think in the conclusion, that these provi-"sions of this statute only apply as between the immediate parties "to the transaction, or such others as have taken these instruments "after due, or have not acted in good faith or with due circumspection "in cases attended with suspicion." Whilst the decision of the Court exempts bills of exchange and promissory notes in the hands of an innocent holder from the effect of the provision of the statute cited, this clause declares that all other instruments are subject to it, and that in case of suits brought upon them where an affidavit denying the consideration is filed, the burthen of proof is thrown upon plaintiff to establish it. I greatly regret that an expression of opinion upon this point was deemed necessary, as it did not occur in the case, had not been argued and was not presented by the record. It has been made however, and imposes upon me the duty of expressing my own views upon the subject, though reluctant to declare a dissent from the opinion of a majority of the Court. This is rendered the more necessary from the fact that the construction given, if persevered in, will lead in my opinion to very great embarrassment in practice, if not to serious injury and injustice to parties.

The position is that the plea of no consideration, verified by affidavit, throws the burthen of proof on plaintiff. That the plea of it-

105 self has not this effect is evident, being "a mere statement of defendant's ground of defence." 3 Blacks. Com. 225.

Has the plea with the affidavit this effect? The question may in some degree be answered by inquiring into the purpose and objects for which affidavits are used when attached to pleas and other proceedings.

"Affidavits are usually for certifying the service of process or other matter touching the proceedings in a cause." 1 Jacob's Law Dict. 64.

Also, by adverting to cases of pleas, to which affidavits are required by law.

Dilatory pleas are required to be under oath by statute, so also, pleas, puis darrien continuance. 1 Chitty, 452-3—638.

An oath is required "to prove the truth thereof, or show some probable matter to the Court, to induce them to believe that the fact of such dilatory plea is true." Ibid, 452.

It is no where held or even intimated, that in any of these pleas so supported by affidavit, the burthen of proof of the matter pleaded is thrown on the plaintiff.

To give the plea and affidavit the effect asserted would be to make them more than proof; by throwing the proof on the other side they are in this respect conclusive until rebutted by stronger testimony. Now I cannot find that the voluntary affidavit of a defendant is any where, in any of the books regarded as evidence, much less as conclusive.

"The plaintiff or defendant may take affidavit, yet it will not be "admitted in evidence at the trial but only on motion." 1 Lilly, 44. 1 Jacob's Law Dic. 64.

"It is undoubtedly a sound rule which ought never to be violated, "that no man can be a witness in his own cause. The affidavit of a "party is received on many incidental questions addressed to the Court, "and do not effect the issue to be tried by the jury. The testimony "which establishes the loss of a paper is addressed to the Court, and "does not relate to the contents of the paper. It is a fact which may "be important, as letting in the party to prove the justice of the "cause, but does not itself prove any thing in the cause." Ch. Just. Marshal, in Taylor, vs Riggs, 1 Peters, 597.

"The general rule is that a party to the record in a civil suit can-"not be a witness either for himself or for a co-suitor in the cause." Greenleaf, 378.

106 "But though in criminal cases the exceptions are few indeed, in "which a party interested may not be a witness, in civil cases there "is hardly at common law an instance where the case is so circum-"stanced that he may, and this upon clear reasons operating such ex-"clusion. An universal exclusion, where no line short of this could "have been drawn, preserves infirmity from a snare, and integrity "from suspicion and keeps the current of evidence thus far at least, "clear and uninfected." 1 Gilb. Ev. by Loft. 223—224.

If the defendant is permitted to make evidence in his own cause, let the privilege be mutual, and extended to plaintiff, and let both be examined as witnesses.

Whilst no authority can be found for making the affidavit of the party, evidence for him on a trial before a jury, the law is well settled, that the affidavit of defendant is evidence against him. 2 Starkie's Ev. 21.

It may be regarded as established, I think, that an affidavit attached to a plea is not evidence, and cannot be read to the jury. Its only effect then, according to the authorities, would seem to be that "of certifying or proving the truth thereof to the Court, to induce them to believe the fact of the plea to be true."

I have thus far considered the question on general principles and the authorities bearing upon the point. It is now proper to advert to the statute itself, to ascertain the design of the Legislature in passing the law which is the subject of consideration.

"Three points are to be considered in the construction of all reme-"dial statutes, the old law, the mischief and the remedy; that is how "the common law stood at the making of the act, what the mischief "was for which the Common Law did not provide, and what remedy "the Legislature provided to cure the mischief; and it is the busi-"ness of the judges so to construe the act as to suppress the mischief "and advance the remedy." 1 Blacks. Com. 87. 1 Kent. 464.

First let us see what the common law was previous to the passage of this statute. "Inadequacy of consideration in sealed instruments "could not be impeached or inquired into at Law, for every bond "from the solemnity of the instrument carries internal evidence of a "good consideration." 2 Blacks. 445 and notes.

"Bills of exchange and promissory notes, partake also of this priv-"ilege; hence it was unnecessary to establish that a promissory note "was given for a consideration, and the burthen of proof rested on "the other party to establish the contrary, and to rebut the presump-"tion of validity and value raised by the law for the protection and 107
"support of negotiable paper." 2 Blacks. 446. Story on prom. notes. 197, 207-8, Sec. 181.

Contracts in writing not under seal had not this privilege, and in reference to them, consideration was required to be proved by plaintiff. 2 Black, 446, n. 7 T. R. 350.

The mischief then was, first the difference prevailing between writings with and without seals, which by the advance of civilization had become more in name than reality. Secondly, the frequent contesting of the consideration of written instruments on insufficient grounds. Thirdly, that the consideration of sealed writings could not be inquired into.

The remedy was 1st, to put all written instruments on the same footing, by giving to all the force and effect of bonds and instruments under seal; and secondly, to allow them to be contested, only by affidavit; hence it was declared not necessary for the plaintiff to prove "the consideration for which any bond, note or other instrument of writing was given, unless the same shall be denied by plea put in and filed under oath." Now of this it may be premised that the statute does not say that plaintiff shall prove the consideration, if it is denied by defendant; which would have left no room for construction, being a clear and decided expression of the legislative will; but the expression is "it shall not be necessary unless denied," which is tantamount to an expression merely, that if the defendant do not deny the consideration on oath, it shall not be necessary for plaintiff to prove it, but shall be taken as proved; and if denied by affidavit, it shall be considered as put in issue, to be tried according to the rules of law governing in such cases.

The issue is to be proved by the party raising it; nor is it an answer to say that defendant is not required to prove a negative, and that this plea is of this character. It is not every negative a party is relieved from proving, and I apprehend this issue is of that character. 4 Mass. 349. 4 Pick. 174.

By this construction according to my view, the mischief, in the mind of the Legislature, is fully avoided and the remedy advanced. By it uniformity in these instruments is effected, the verity attached from time immemorial to sealed instruments as the deliberate and solemn act of the parties is preserved, and they at the same time are not relieved from a wholesome and proper enquiry on a proper showing by defendant of the want of consideration. By it a wise and beneficial operation is given to the Statute, and every reasonable de- 108 sign of the Legislature is accomplished. But suppose the other construction to prevail, and the consideration is taken as disproved, so as to throw the burthen upon plaintiff; is it not perceived that the whole force and character of the instrument is at the mercy of one of the parties, and that party by his own solemn act, and every rule of right and propriety, estopped from making such a defence. If this rule is to prevail, there can be no further use for a bond, note or other obligation, hitherto adopted as the means of terminating a difficulty or dispute by some solemn act, having an admitted legal sanction. Is it not seen too that this rule will be highly injurious in case of notes, bills of exchange, bonds and other sealed instruments, which by the consent of almost the whole civilized world, from their very structure import a verity, and are regarded as made on consideration; and with what propriety can it be supposed that the Legislature in an act affirming the force and effect of these instruments, could have designed a provision by implication aimed at their vitality, and calculated more than all others to destroy their efficacy.

If it be true, as asserted by the Court in a rule of construction appealed to by them, "that it is not to be supposed that the Legislature "intended any innovation of the common law, further than the case absolutely required;" then I think we may safely conclude, that the construction asserted is not the correct one.

There would be "an innovation not absolutely required," in my opinion, by allowing the defendant to make evidence for himself, though an exparte affidavit, in violation of all principle, by throwing the proof from the shoulders of defendant on those of plaintiff, of an issue raised and presented by himself, and a further most injurious innovation by destroying the verity of sealed instruments and other writings. Such a rule, in my opinion, would create a greater mischief than that which the statute was designed to remedy. And its consequences are not to be confined to this Statute. Complainants file an affidavit to their bills in chancery, defendants to their plea to an application to foreclose mortgages at law; under the law for the trial of the right of property, plaintiff files his affidavit, and other instances not on our statute books. Are these also, to be embraced by the same construction?

It will not do to say that an answer in Chancery bears an analogy to the present case, since defendant is called on by plaintiff to give his testimony, and thus makes the answer evidence against him. Greenleaf's Ev. 397.

109 I shall conclude my views of this subject by referring to other rules of construction pertinent to it, and which ought to have their bearing in its consideration.

"Thus the real intention when accurately ascertained, will al-"ways prevail over the literal sense of terms, and the reason and in-"tention of the law gives will control the strict letter of the law, "when the latter would lead to palpable injustice, contradiction and "absurdity." "When the words are not explicit, the intention is to "be collected from the context, from the occasion and necessity of "the law, from the mischief felt and the remedy in view; and the in-"tention is to be taken according to what is consonant to reason and "good discretion." Plowden, 205. 1 Kent's Com. 462.

"Where fundamental principles are overthrown, when the gener-"al system of the laws is departed from, the legislative intention must "be expressed with irrestible clearness, to induce a Court of Jus-"tice to suppose a design to effect such objects." 2 Cranch, 358. 1 Cond. R. 421.

It will be no answer to say that a similar provision, and the same words are used as to the denial of the execution of a bond. To this it may be replied that a different rule prevailing as to it, a different construction of the statute is necessary. A plea of non est factum at common law, always put the proof of the signature on plaintiff, whereas the consideration of bonds and notes was never required to be proved by plaintiff, nor allowed to be questioned from the fact, that the party having made a solemn act of such character, was estopped to deny its validity.

"It is by no means a correct rule of interpretation, to construe the "same word in the same sense, wherever it occurs in the same in-"strument. It was very justly observed by Ch. Jus. Marshall in "the Cherokee Nation vs. State of Georgia, that it has been said, "that the same words have not necessarily the same meaning attach-"ed to them, when found in different parts of the same instrument. "Their meaning is controlled by the contract." 1 Story's Com. Const. 440. 5 Peters, 119.

110 MARTHA ANN MANLY, ADMINISTRATRIX, AND HIRAM MANLY, ADMINISTOR IN RIGHT OF HIS WIFE, OF SAMUEL PARKHILL DECEASED, vs. THE UNION BANK OF FLORIDA.

AT common law, a plea puis darrein continuance, waived all former pleas, but a Statute of this State, has altered the rule, and such a consequence does not follow the filing of that plea, here:

A Administratrix of B, was sued in that capacity; pending the suit, she was removed from the Administration on the petition of the plaintiff in the suit. Afterwards A, C and D, were appointed administratrix and administrators de bonis non; The suit still pending, and no steps having been taken to make her a party as administratrix de bonis non, A pleaded in bar, that since the last continuance she had been removed from the administration by competent and proper authority, and that all the assets which came to her hands as administratrix of B, had been taken out of her possession, and that she did not and could not retain sufficient to pay plaintiff's claim; held, that it was well pleaded, and that the fact might have been pleaded either in abatement or in bar.

The fact of A's removal from the administration, constituted a complete bar to the action, and the fact that she was afterwards appointed administratrix de bonis non, does not alter the case; A as administratrix, and A as administratrix de bonis non, being in the eye of the law, separate and distinct characters.

A replication to the plea puis darrein continuance setting out that A had been dismissed from the administration, and that she had, under an order of Court, turned over to a receiver, who took charge of the same all the property which came to her hands as administratrix, and remained unadministered at the time of her removal; but that she had afterwards, and before the filing of the plea, been appointed an administratrix de bonis non, and the property recommitted to her, renders the allegation, in the plea puis darrein continuance of having fully administered, superfluous. Such a replication was a departure from the declaration and therefore defective.

On demurrer, the Court will give judgement for the party who on the whole case appears entitled to it, and against the party who committed the first error.

THIS case came up by Writ of Error to Leon Circuit Court.

This is an action of debt commenced April 10, 1843, against Martha Ann Parkhill Administratrix, &c.; and which was tried and determined, March 1845, in the late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida. The following is the cause of action on which the suit was instituted:

Dolls. 94,182 22-100.

Six months after date I promise to pay to the Union Bank of Florida, at their Banking House in the City of Tallahassee, ninety four thousand one hundred and eighty-two 22-100 dollars, for value received; for securing payment whereof, I do hereby pledge my shares in the Capital Stock of said Bank. Witness my hand and seal.

(Signed) SAMUEL PARKHILL, (SEAL.)

The declaration contains two counts; one on the Bond and the other on account stated—pleas, non est factum and plene administravit. There was a similiter to the first plea, and general replication to the latter.

Afterwards on the 22nd April, 1844, Martha Ann Parkhill administratrix, by her counsel, filed her plea puis darrien continuance, alledged "that since the last continuance to wit, on 22nd March, 1844, she was dismissed from the administration of the estate of said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, by competent authority, to wit: by the Judge of the Superior Court for said county, sitting as an Appeal Court to the County Court of Leon."

To this plea, "puis darrien continuance," there was demurrer, 1st. Because the matters therein contained, should have been pleaded in abatement. 2nd, Because it should have been a plea in bar of the further maintainance of the action, and not in bar of the action. 3rd, Because the plea did not allege that the said Martha had fully administered, and had not in her hands, at the time of her said dismissal, lands and tenements, goods and chattels, &c., sufficient to pay plaintiff its debt and damages; and because it did not appear from said plea that she had delivered over to the administrator or administratrix, appointed in her stead, all, or any part of the goods, chattels, &c., in her hands not administered at the date of her said dismissal. 4th, Because the plea did not set forth the names of the persons to whom letters of administration were granted after her dismissal.

On the 24th February, 1845, plaintiffs in error by leave of the Court, filed an amended plea, puis darrien continuance, as follows:

And the said Martha Ann, sued as administratrix of Samuel Parkhill deceased, for further plea in this behalf, by leave of the Court, first had and obtained by Brockenbrough and Archer, her attorneys, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, &c.; and protesting that at the time of the commencement of this suit, she had no goods, effects, or credits, lands or tenements of the said Samuel Parkhill, 111 deceased, in her hands to be administered, subject to the plaintiff's action, for plea, prays judgment if the said plaintiff, its action aforesaid thereof against her, ought further to have and maintain; because she says that since the commencement of plaintiff's action, to wit, at the county aforesaid, on the 19th day of December, 1843, the Honorable William M. Gibson, at that time Judge of the County Court of said County, and as such having and exercising jurisdiction as a Court of Probate, and being competent thereto, and having jurisdiction in that behalf, at the request and motion, and upon the petition of the said Union Bank of Florida, and against the will of this defendant for cause shown, revoked and annulled, the letters of administration before that time granted to this defendant, from which decision and order, this defendant appealed to the Superior Court of Leon County, exercising and having jurisdiction in that behalf; and the said Superior Court afterwards, and since the last continuance, and before the commencement of this term, to wit, on the 18th day of March, 1844, in the county aforesaid, confirmed the said order of the said William M. Gibson Judge of the County Court, as aforesaid, and then and there revoked, and annulled the said letters of administration before that time, granted to defendant, and had and held by her at the time of the institution of this suit, and this defendant, was then and there divested, and put out of possession of all the estate, rights, credits and effects, or assets of said Samuel deceased, then in her hands, to be administered, and this defendant was not allowed to retain, and did not retain in her hands enough thereof, to satisfy said plaintiff's action, or any part thereof; but the whole of said assets, rights, credits, and effects so remaining in her hands unadministered, were then and there, by order of said Superior Court, taken away from the possession of said defendant, and against the will of said defendant, and committed to the care, custody and control of the Marshal of the said Superior Court, who then and there took possession of the same, and the said letters of administration, so had and held by this defendant at commencement of this action, were revoked and annulled, and said defendant did not and could not retain in her hands, as administratrix, as aforesaid, effects sufficient to pay the plaintiff's claim, or any part thereof; and this she is ready to verify; wherefore she prays judgment if the said plaintiff, its action aforesaid, thereof, against her, ought further to have and maintain, &c.

This plea was sworn to by Mary Ann Manly, late Martha Ann Parkhill and Hiram Manly, her husband.

To this plea defendant in error, on 26th February, 1845, filed its replication, replying the revocation, and annullment of the letters of administration, for want of sufficient securities on the official bond of the said Martha, and her dismissal, in substance, as set forth in the plea; and that upon such dismissal, the Court ordered the property of the estate of the said Samuel Parkhill deceased, to be taken charge of by the Marshal of the Middle District, until the further order of the Court; and that the Court at another day, to wit, on 21st March, 1844, appointed a receiver of the said estate, until an administrator de bonis non should be appointed.

The replication continued, "and the said plaintiff, in fact saith that afterwards, and on the 22nd day of April, 1844, and before the filing of the said plea of the said defendants, Martha Ann and Hiram, in this behalf, the County Court of Leon County, having and exercising jurisdiction as a Court of Ordinary, and being competent thereto, did constitute and appoint the said defendant Martha Ann, upon the petition of the said Hiram and Martha Ann, an administratrix, de bonis non, of the estate of the said Samuel Parkhill deceased, and thereupon administration of the said estate, was duly recommitted in due form of law to the said defendant, Martha Ann, in her own right as such administratrix, before the filing of the said plea of the said defendants in this behalf, as in and by the record and proceedings thereof, remaining in said County Court, fully appears; and the said plaintiff further in fact saith, that all and singular, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, rights, credits and effects, which were of the said Samuel Parkhill deceased, at the time of his death, and which came to the hands of the said Martha Ann, to be administred, and which remained in her hands unadministered, when the same were by order of said Superior Court, taken away from said Martha Ann, as in defendants said plea alleged, have again come to her hands, and to the hands of the said Hiram, in right of the said Martha Ann, administrators as aforesaid, and the same were, before and at the time of the filing of the said defendants plea in this behalf, and now are in their hands to be administered, &c."

On the 28th February, plaintiffs in error filed their rejoinder, which, after protesting, thatt neither at the commencement of this suit, nor since, the said Martha Ann, nor the said Hiram, had or possessed in their hands, to be administered, any goods and chattels, 114 lands, &c., which were of the said Samuel, deceased, at the time of his death subject to this action, rejoins: "That at the time and place in said replication mentioned, and by the authority there mentioned, the letters of administration de bonis non, therein mentioned upon the estate of the said Samuel, were not granted to the said Martha only, or to the said Martha and said Hiram in right of his wife only, but to said Martha in her own right, (by consent of said Hiram,) jointly with one William D. Moseley, now living, who then, and there, and thereby became, was, and still is, jointly with the said Martha, in her own right, and said Hiram in right of his wife, a joint administrator de bonis non of said Samuel Parkhill, deceased; and all and singular, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, rights, credits or effects, left unadministered, which were of the said Samuel, deceased, at the time of his death, which ever came to the hands of these defendants, or either of them, to be administered as administratrix or administrator, de bonis non, as aforesaid, at the times and places, and in the manner stated in said replication, or at any other time or manner howsoever or whatsoever, came to the hands of the said Martha Ann as administratrix de bonis non, and said Hiram as administrator de bonis non in right of his wife, jointly with said William D. Mosely, the co-administrator de bonis non, and were, and are, so far the same remain unadministered, had and held jointly with him, and not otherwise." The rejoinder then enumerates certain liabilities of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, to the Union Bank of Florida, and states, that indentures of mortgage on certain land and negroes, were executed by the said Samuel to the Union Bank, to secure the payment; that these sums of money, being unpaid at the time of the death of the said Samuel, the Union Bank, before the revocation and annullment of the letters of administration granted the said Martha, filed its petition, under the statute, against the said Martha Ann, as administratrix in her own right, and the said Hiram, as administrator in right of his wife, to obtain judgment of foreclosure of the said mortgage; that after the affirmance by the Superior Court of the order of revocation of the original leiters of administration to said Martha Ann, and after the granting of letters of administration de bonis non, to the said Martha Ann and William D. Moseley, "the said Union Bank of Florida, by its counsel, moved for judgment and decree by default, no objections having been filed under the statute and the plea of Hiram Manly and Martha Ann, administrators, filed 3d May, 1844, not being verified by affidavit. But the Court overruled the motion, and the petitioner then filed its 115 demurrer special to said plea; and therefor administrators, Manly and wife, asked leave to file additional pleas, and the Court so allowed and continued the cause. Petitioner then suggested the appointment, by the County Court of Leon county, of William D. Moseley, together with Martha Ann Manly, administrators de bonis non of said estate; and moved the Court that the said William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non of said estate, be made a party to said suit, and the suit continued, as well against the defendants as against the said William D. Moseley; and the same was done accordingly. And such further proceedings were thereupon had in the same Court, that afterwards, to wit: at the Fall Term, 1844, of said Superior Court, to wit: on the 4th day of January, 1845, it was considered by the Court, that said petitioner do recover of said defendants, Martha Ann Manly, in her own right, Hiram Manly, in right of his wife the said Martha Ann, and William D. Moseley, administrators de bonis non of said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, the sum of seventy-one thousand and twenty-three dollars and forty-eight cents, due said petitioner, for principal and interest of its mortgage debt," &c. That judgment was accordingly entered against the said parties, and foreclosure granted; and that said judgment still remains in full force, not annulled, satisfied or discharged. The rejoinder further alleged, that defendants had fully administered, all and singular, the goods and chattels, lands, &c., which were of the said Samuel, deceased, left unadministered, which came to their hands, or the hands of either of them, as administrators de bonis non.

To this rejoinder there was a demurrer, and the following causes of demurrer assigned:

For that the rejoinder does not fortify and support the matter by the said defendants, above pleaded in bar since the last continuance, but alledges new matter contrary to the plea, and was a departure therefrom; that the defendant's said plea, since the last continuance pleaded, set forth the fact of the discharge of said Martha Ann from the administration of said estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, as a substantive bar of itself to the further maintenance of the plaintiff's action in this behalf; and the said rejoinder now sets up the recovery of a judgment and decree rendered against said defendant and another, since such discharge, as and for a bar to the further maintenance of this action; and the said rejoinder doth not sustain the said plea of said defendants by them, since the last continuance above 116 pleaded.

For that the said defendants have, in and by their said rejoinder, attempted to plead matter in abatement, after having pleaded their aforesaid bar, in this, the nonjoinder of one William D. Moseley, with said defendants, as a defendant to this action.

For that the said defendants, in and by their said rejoinder, have attempted to put in issue another and different matter, since the last continuance happened and occurred, to wit: the judgment and decree of foreclosure in said rejoinder, set forth as rendered the fourth day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, which said decree so declared to have been rendered, was so rendered, as shown by said rejoinder, long prior to the filing by said defendants of their said plea, since the last continuance above pleaded, and for that the said defendants cannot thus set up and plead two several and distinct matters, since the last contiuance happened and occurred.

For that the said rejoinder is double and multifarious in this, that it sets up the non-joinder of William D. Moseley as a defendant with the said Martha Ann and Hiram; the recovery and rendition of said judgment and decree, and that the said defendants, Martha Ann and Hiram, have no assets, except the sum of five dollars.

For that the said rejoinder is argumentative; is no answer to the said replication; and is uncertain, informal, and insufficient.

The Court sustained the demurrer, and thereupon judgment was entered against plaintiff in error for one hundred and twenty-two thousand one hundred and sixty-four dollars and eighty-seven cents, ($122,164 87-100,) being amount due on bond, and for costs.

J. T. Archer, for plaintiffs in error:

I. There is error in this, that the issues on the pleas of non est factum, and plene administravit, were not disposed of.

These issues, it will be contended, were disposed of by the introduction of the plea, puis darrein continuance. It cannot be questioned that, at common law, a plea puis darrien continuance, "is a waiver of the first plea, and no advantage can afterwards be taken of it, nor can even the plaintiff afterwards proceed thereon."

This rule is the necessary consequence of another rule of common law, which allows but one plea to the whole declaration, or one plea to each count. The introduction of a plea to the whole action, puis darrein continuance, must, therefore, at common law, operate as a waiver of the former plea to the whole action, or former pleas to

117 each count, for otherwise there would be more than one plea to the whole action.

Besides, a plea puis darrien continuance, admits a right of action at the commencement of the suit, while the former pleas deny a right of action at the commencement of the suit. The admission of the plea puis is contradictory to the allegations of the former pleas. To allow a defendant, therefore, to avail himself of a plea puis darrien continuance, and at the same time of former pleas in bar, would not only permit more than one plea to the whole action, but would allow such pleas to be contradictory, which is forbidden by the common law rules of pleading.

It is true, the statute of Anne makes it lawful for a defendant, with the leave of the Court, to plead as many several matters, as he shall think necessary for his defence. But even under this statute, a defendant has no positive right to plead more than one plea to the whole action, for the Court may, or may not grant the leave, at its discretion. Besides, the permission to plead several matters, does not include contradictory matters. In England, a plea denying, and another admitting the plaintiff's right of action, at the commencement of the suit, could not before, and cannot since, the statute of Anne, be pleaded together. 1 Chitty's Pl. 593. It is therefore easily accounted for, that in the English books, the rule is universally laid down, that a plea puis darrien continuance, is a waiver of former pleas.

But under our statute, every defendant sued in this State, has the positive right, independent of the leave of the Court, to plead as many matters as he deems necessary for his defence; and it is "no objection to any plea, that it is contradictory to any other plea filed by the same party, in the same cause." Duval's Comp. 95.

The reasoning which established and retains the English rule, cannot prevail against our statute; and the rule itself cannot prevail here.

Our statute, under the construction I claim for it, promotes the ends of justice. What hardship is there in requiring a plaintiff to answer all objections which a defendant may set up against his demand? On the other hand, what hardship does not exist in allowing a plaintiff to recover, because he has successfully answered one of several objections, while one or more of the others may contain good and valid grounds of defence, which might be established by the defendant?

118 II. There is error in sustaining the plaintiff's demurrer to the rejoinder.

The judgment should have been given against the party, who committed the first error in the pleadings. The declaration is substantially a good one. The plea puis contains a good defence to the action. Its subject matter, is 1st: The involuntary dismissal of defendant Martha, from the office of administratrix. And 2d: The taking possession by the marshal, under the order of the Court, of all the assets in her hands, up to the time of dismissal.

The involuntary dismissal is of itself a good defence. It separates the administratrix from the estate, as fully as if she were actually dead. Taylor vs. Savage, 17 Peters, 224. Jewett vs. Jewett, 5 Mass. 275. Alsop vs. Mather, 8 Conn. 584.

The taking possession of the assets by the Marshal, is of itself a good defence. The plea, in this regard, has all the properties of a plea of plene administravit. It is an accounting for the assets, the legal possession of which by the administratrix is necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

But if each of the parts of this plea, taken separately, does not constitute a good defence, there can be no doubt that both taken together, make up a complete defence. 1 Williams on Executors, 373, citing Garter vs. Freem. 13.

It was argued and adjudged in the Court below, that the defendants should have retained assets sufficient to satisfy actions pending. This cannot be correct. The administratrix was dismissed for want of a sufficient bond, under the 31st sec. of the act of 1828 concerning wills, letters testamentary, and letters of administration, &c. Duval's Comp. 176. Under this section, the Court is authorized, upon the dismissal of an administrator, to appoint a receiver or other administrator, doubtless for the purpose of taking immediate possession of the assets, and in contemplation of an immediate surrender of the assets by the dismissed administrator. If a dismissed administrator could retain for actions pending, the very object of the statute, to take the estate out of irresponsible hands, would be defeated.

But to retain in a case like this, against the ministerial officer, acting under the express order of the Court, is physically impossible, if the officer performs his duty. To have attempted it in this case, would have been a contempt, and punishable as such. It is altogether unreasonable to hold these defendants responsible in damages to the amount of $122,164 87-100, for having permitted the assets to be 119 taken from them by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

The plea puis is properly pleaded in bar, for if the facts set up in it are true, the plaintiff can never maintain an action against the defendants as administrators on the cause of action in the declaration mentioned. 1 Chitty, 481. Jenks vs. Edwards, 6 Alabama, (new series) 143. Jewitt vs. Jewitt, 5 Mass. 275.

The first error committed is in the replication—it does not maintain, explain or fortify the declaration, but abandons it, and departs from it. The declaration seeks a recovery on the faith of assets in the hands of the defendant Martha, as administratrix under the original grant of administration, while the replication seeks a recovery on the faith of assets received by her as "an" administratrix de bonis non, under a new grant of administration, without joining the co-administrator or co-administrators de bonis non, shown to be in existence by the use of the indefinite article "an." If a judgment could be rendered against the defendants as administrators, on the ground of assets in their hands as administrators de bonis non, jointly with another, then the securities of the first administration would continue liable for the administration of the assets by the administrators de bonis non—"which never could be right." 2 Call, 41-56.

But if the replication be good, the rejoinder is good. The latter answers the replication by setting up a judgment in the same Court, against the administrators de bonis non, in favor of the same plaintiff, upon a petition under the statute to foreclose a mortgage; which judgment, it is alleged, is more than sufficient to cover the assets in the hands of the administrators de bonis non. The substance of the rejoinder, it cannot be questioned, would be a good bar to an action against the administrators de bonis non; what is the replication in effect, but a declaration against one of several administrators de bonis non?

If the rejoinder does not support the plea and is therefore bad, the fault lies with the plaintiff. We have followed the plaintiff and it cannot complain.

The objections raised by the plaintiff to the form of the defendants pleadings, if well founded do not warrant a judgment on the demurrer against the defendants, even for costs. Duval's Comp. 95.

III. On the whole pleadings, judgment should have been given in favor of the defendants.

The replication confesses the matters contained in the plea, and the demurrer admits the matters contained in the rejoinder. The 120 pleadings therefore show that Mrs. Manley had no assets whatever as administratrix, and none liable to this action as "an" administratrix de bonis non. Yet by the judgment of the Court on these pleadings, Mrs. Manley, as administratrix is made to have assets to the amount of $122,164 87-100! How can the plaintiff's judgment be sustained when the plaintiff itself, on the face of the record, gives testimony against its verity?

Long & Walker for defendant.

T. H. Hagner, (on same side,) for defendant:

Contended as to the 1st error assigned, that the plea of non est factum, and plene administravit, were disposed of; that they were waived by the defendants below pleading their plea, puis dar. cont. That the filing of that plea was a waiver of all other issues. He cited: Buller's N. P. 309. 2 Tidd's Prac. 847—849, last edition. 7 Bacon's Abrid. 685, Pleas and Plead. last edit. Croke Eliz. 49. 1 Salkeld, 79. 1 Lord Raymond, 693. Mansel on Dem. lxxxix. Hobart's Rep. 81. 1 Arch. Prac. by Chitty, 300—2. 1 Wheaton's Rep. 215. 13 Peter's S. C. Rep. 136.

10 Wendell R. 679, where the Court say: "The cause of action stands confessed to the same extent, as if no other defence than that in the plea puis dar. cont. had been urged." And this ruling is sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

As to the character of the plea, puis dar. cont. he cited, 1 Chitty Pl. 698: "It is not a departure from, but a waiver of the first plea; and no advantage can afterwards be taken of it, nor can even the plaintiff afterwards proceed thereon. He also cited, 2 Wilson's Rep. 137.

In rebutting the position of the counsel of plaintiffs in error, he argued, that the effect, the legal nature and operation of this plea, was not altered by the statute of Florida allowing to defendants to plead, "as many matters of law or fact, as he, she, or they, may deem ne-"cessary to his, her or their defence;" and that it should be "no "objection to any plea, that it is contradictory to any other plea "filed by the same party in the same cause." This was to be understood, with some reference at least to the rules of law, and the practice of the Courts. Here the defendants had pleaded as many and as contradictory pleas as they saw fit, and the case was at issue. They then apply for and obtain leave to file a plea puis dar. cont

Now, the statutes of Florida have no where altered or changed that plea, nor does the statute cited at all vary its legal effect. The character of the plea is destructive, and whether those pleas which have gone before be few or many, they are alike waived. This results from the nature of the plea. In the case cited from 10 Wendell, several pleas had been filed, and yet the law was declared as we here insist it is. He insisted that the replication was legally sufficient in all respects, and maintained that the judgment on demurrer was correct; for that the rejoinder was bad, and that, going back to the first error, the plea was bad also.

He explained the principles on which resort is had against the assets in the hands of administrators, even after the revocation of their letters; that it was the right of the creditor to follow the decedent's estate. He cited 2 Williams on Executors, 1196. "If adminstrator plead, that before the date of the writ, his letters were revoked, he ought to allege that he has fully administered, or that he delivered over the goods to the new administrator." He may be sued, then, having the property in hand, after his letters are revoked. Again: "If he plead the administration committed to another, plaintiff may reply, that before the second administration, he had wasted the goods." Wentworth on Executors, 472. Packman's case, 6 Coke Rep. 18. 11 Viner's Abridg. 119. Hobart's Rep. 49.

The plea here set up, is the personal discharge of adminstrators. We reply, that though the letters were revoked, yet the estate was recommitted before the filing of their plea, and that they have the assets of the estate in hand applicable to this debt. If we have the right to follow the decedent's estate, we have a right to follow it in this suit, for they have the property in hand, and in the eye of the law, they retain assets to pay. Toller on Executors, 129.

But their plea is fatally defective—they do not make good their exemption—they must allege that they have fully administered—a protestation of full administration is not available. He cited 1 Chitty's Pl. 650—"The allegation protested against is in effect admitted in that suit, (in which made,) so that no evidence need be adduced in support of it."

The plea puis dar. cont. is defective then, by reason of omitting averment of plene administravit—they protest they had no assets—they admit then in this suit that they had. He cited also 1 Tidd's Prac. 687. If, then, the replication be had, the plea itself is bad also, and judgment on demurrer must be for the plaintiff, against him
122 who has committed the first error. That the rejoinder of defendants is a departure from the plea, is very apparent. The plea is in abatement of the writ, for personal disability—the rejoinder is in bar of the action itself. For the rule of law upon departure in pleading, he referred the Court to, 1 Chitty's Plead. 681—697. Coke Litt. 304, a. 2 Saunder's Rep. 84. Lord Raymond, 233. 5 Dowling & Ry. 295. 16 Mass. Rep. 2. 2 New Hamp. 306.

But it is objected that the replication is bad. The plea had set up their personal discharge from the administration. We reply, (that though removed,) you are again administrators, and have the assets in hand, applicable to our debt. Where is the departure? We have the right to follow the decendent's estate—and make it answerable to our debt.

That the judgment on demurrer to plea puis dar. cont. is peremptory and final. 1 Wheaton's Rep. 215. Mansel on Demur. lxxxix

As to the alleged want of privity between administrators and administrators de bonis non, he considered that the question was upon the judgment on demurrer to the plea of the personal discharge of the administrators themselves. They have been sued—they could only discharge themselves by proper proceedings, set forth in proper plea. This they had not done. Yet, he said, if privity were wanting, it did exist. These defendants, adminstrators and administrators de bonis non were the same parties—the new and the old were in the same right. There is a privity of estate in law. Jones, Chancellor, in Dale vs. Rosevelt, 8 Cowan Rep. 339, clearly declares such a privity to exist—so that "where a judgment "is against the previous representative, he coming in place of the "testator, and the recovery being for the debt of the testator, he, "(the administrator de bonis non,) is liable." Chancellor Jones shows, that the statute 17 Charles 2nd, was passed to enable administrator's plaintiffs to execute judgments in favor of prior executors, upon the ground that there was a want of privity. But "in relation to judgments against the executors or administrators, the rule as to privity has always been otherwise." See also Ashurst, J., opinion in 7 Term Reports, 178. He also cited, 2 Saunders, 217. 2 Tidd's Prac. 1113. 6 Term Rep. 1.

Upon the 3d error assigned, he insisted that judgment must be for plaintiff below, if the plea of defendant be reached by demurrer—for the plea is fatally defective. He cited, 2 Tidd's Prac. 847. 3 Saunder's Rep. 217. And he compared this plea, with the requi-123 sites of such a plea there laid down.

HAWKINS, Justice:

The Court, in the case before it, have examined the record with care, and will endeavor so to adjudicate upon it, as that the legal rights of parties, as they appear, may be adjusted in accordance with the rules of law, pointing out those errors which may appear, and sustaining the legal rights of the respective parties, when they are correctly and substantially set out and embodied in the pleadings. The case has been so ably and elaborately argued—the arguments of counsel so elucidated by authorities—that the Court feels itself much relieved from the embarrassments which might otherwise exist, as to the arrival at proper conclusions, and a correct decision of the cause.

To rebut the first error, it is contended by the appellee, that the defendant in the Court below, by putting in a plea of puis darrien continuance, waived and abandoned all former pleas.

There can be no doubt that, by the common law of England, and adhered to in this country, a plea of puis darrein continuance, is always pleaded by way of substitution for the former plea; and though not a departure from, is a waiver of it; and when it is pleaded, the case stands in the same state, as if the plea had been one originally put in. Stephen on Pl. 66. Chitty on Pl. 697. 1 Archbold's Practice, 200.

The only cases by the counsel for the appellant, which seems to have at all a conflicting bearing, are Rayner & Hope, vs. Dyett, 2 Wendell R. 301; and Calver vs. Burney, 14 Wendell R. 162. Nor have the Court, in its researches been able to find authorities at variance with the doctrines just laid down.

The first case was, where the defendant obtained a discharge of his person from imprisonment, under the act to abolish imprisonment for debt in certain cases—and this discharge he pleaded puis darrein continuance, after having pleaded in bar to the action. The plaintiff confessed the plea puis darrein continuance, proceeded and entered a rule of interlocutory judgment. On motion to set aside the rule, Judge Sutherland, while admitting the general rule of waiver, said: "This was not an admission of the plaintiff's right of action, nor did it set up any new matter of defence to the action; it only affected the remedy, not the rights of the plaintiff:" and that the pleas were not waived. In Calver vs. Burney, 14 Wendell, 162, the same 124
Judge sustains the general doctrine, and while affirming the decision of Rayner & Hope vs. Dyett, remarks: "That the rule does not apply, where the matter of the plea affects the plaintiff's remedy only, and not his right of action;" that the above case "sought to modify the remedy, and not to defeat the action."

In the case before us, the plea is intended to go directly to the action itself; it is pleaded in bar, and partakes of a peremptory, and not a dilatory character; and the Court cannot view these two cases in the light of authorities, having a direct bearing upon, and application to the cause at bar.

The appellant's counsel contend, that the statute of Florida destroys the old common law rule, as to the doctrine of waiver of the pleas originally pleaded, by the plea puis darrein continuance, and cites the 26th section of "An act to amend an act regulating judicial proceedings" approved Nov. 23, 1828, which is in these words: "Sec. 26. Be it further enacted, That in all cases the defendant or defendants may plead as many matters of law or fact as he, she or they, may deem necessary to his, her or their defence; and it shall be no objection to any plea, that it is contradictory to any other plea filed by the same party in the same cause. Duval's Com. 95.

If this question rested solely upon the common law doctrine, the Court would have no difficulty in deciding that the first error was not well assigned; but the statute above cited interposes, and overturns, as we think, the entire structure of the common law doctrine, as to the waiver of former pleas, by a plea puis darrein continuance. The statute in its face, by its purview and spirit, seems evidently intended to abolish, to a certain extent, some of the rigid rules and technicalities incident to pleading at common law, to enable the defendant to avail himself of all and every possible defence, however contradictorily pleaded, which, by the old rules of pleading, he was unable to do; and in fine, by the liberality and comprehensiveness of its term, to effect the furtherance of justice.

A statute of this nature, however much in some instances we may deplore an innovation upon the common law, commends itself to the liberal construction of a Court, whose aim should be, at all times, the substantial justice of the case.

We look around us, and see the attempts of different States of the Union to simplify the science of pleading, so as to enable the parties litigant to set forth their respective claims and defences, irrespective of the rigid rules of that science, and to infuse into it a spirit of liberality; and while unquestionably they admire the beauty and force of the fundamental reasons on which the science of pleading is founded, and the ingenuity with which its rules are carried out, yet possibly, they may conceive, that greater simplicity may not be incompatible with the grave deductions of logic.

The doctrine, as contended for by the appellee, took its rise in the early stages of the law, and we find it in the oldest books. It has stood the test of time in all its vigor, and has been carried out in the Courts of England and this country; and but that we think it contravenes the true intent and spirit of our statute, we would feel loath to impugn its authority, or deny its application.

Orignally, at common law, there could regularly be only one plea, on which, if there were issue or demurrer, the cause was to be determined, because there could be only one verdict in a cause; and though the statute of Anne permitted several pleas, still they were to be in unison, sustaining and not contradictory to each other. Multiplicity of pleading was to be avoided, and the use of pleading was, to reduce the matters in pleading to a single point.

In framing them, there is required great care and nicety; and it is said: "It seems dangerous to plead any matter puis darrein continuance, unless you be well advised; because, if the matter be determined against you, it is a confession of the matter at issue, and no nisi prius shall be awarded." 6 Bacon Ab. 479. And should the plea puis be defective, and be quashed, the judgment is at once quod recuperet, and not respondeas ouster.

If the object of the statute was to simplify the rules of pleading and soften down the rigid, (and in this instance) the arbitrary dicta of the common law, where so proper an occasion for the attainment of the object, or the fulfilment of its intention, as in a case where even at common law, more than usual severity is to be observed?

Why should the statute operate unequally by the extension of its liberalizing policy to other cases, and this, in which most required, be exempt from its genial influence, because not described in totidem verbis? Although a doctrine relying for its support upon the hardships, which might arise under it, is at all times dangerous as tending to destroy established precedents, yet construing the statute before us by an appropriate rule of construction, a desire to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy, we can perceive many cases, where great hardships would inevitably arise. Persons at all times 126 may not be "well advised" as to the pleading, and great injustice might be done by depriving a party of his legal defence pleaded in the first instance, because his plea of puis darrein continuance happened to be defective; and why, if that plea is annulled, should not the party be remitted to his original defence? To all this it may be answered that the law is different, and the maxim fiat justica should be followed, and that arguments ab inconvenienti should be avoided. We contend that the statute has altered the law; we point to its spirit, its context, and we must look at the true meaning of words.

The statute says, that "in all cases," the defendant may plead, &c. Is this phrase to be circumscribed by the meaning attached to it, by strict legal parlance, or is its true import to be gathered from the purview of the statute, and the true definition of its terms? The dictionaries tell us, that "case" means or signifies, a contingence, a state of things, and if either of the synonyma was used in the statute, any and all doubt, would be dissipated.

The ample scope and free license to plead any number and contrariety of pleas granted by the Statute, have destroyed the reasons upon which the common law rule rests; and we can perceive no good cause when the reason of a law has ceased to exist, why the law itself should have a being, in direct conflict, as we think, with our statute, against the policy of our laws, and if persisted in, calculated to produce no good results, but rather consequences replete with hardship and extreme injustice; and with the views expressed, we clearly are of opinion, that this rule of the common law, as to pleas puis darrein continuance, should cease to be regarded by the judicial tribunals of the State.

The first error is therefore well assigned.

As to the plea puis darrein continuance, we think it well pleaded. It is contended that this plea should have been in abatement and not in bar. We think that the defendant could have pleaded in either; she could have pleaded in abatement, that she was not administratrix of Samuel Parkhill deceased, but was administratrix de bonis non of said Parkhill, and there can be no doubt, but that she could plead ne unques administratrix. The authorities are full upon this subject.

To an action against an executor, he may plead in bar ne unques executor. That be renounced, and nulla bona devenerunt ad manus; so he may plead in bar, the same bar as his testator could have done, as non assumpsit, or non est factum. 6 Comyn's Digest, 2, D. 7, 8.

So an administrator may plead in bar ne unques administrator. 6 12
Comyn's dig. 2, D. 12. 1 Tidd. p. 644.

To an action against an administrator he may plead in abatement that he is not adminstrator, but executor, ib, 2, D. 12, page 315; thus by analogy establishing the principle before asserted, that Martha Ann Manley might have pleaded in abatement if she thought proper, that she was not administratrix, but administratrix de bonis non, and it is equally clear, that she could plead in bar ne unques administratrix. Pleas in bar are calculated to show either that the plaintiff never had any cause of action, or if he had, that it is discharged by subsequent matter. 1 Tidd, p. 643.

"Whenever the subject matter of the plea or defence is, that the plaintiff cannot maintain any action at any time, whether present or future, in respect of the supposed cause of action, it may and usually must be pleaded in bar." 1 Chitty on pleading, 481. A plea in abatement must not only show the error of the plaintiff, but enable him to correct it by giving him materials for avoiding the same mistake in another suit in regard to the same cause of action, and give the plaintiff a better writ: ib.

The plea in bar in this case we think good, because the Union Bank could not at any time after the defendant's dismissal from the first administratorship, have brought suit against her in the capacity of administratrix simply; that e. o. instanti the letters of administration were taken from her and annulled, she became as to the suit ceviliter mortuus; and all the rights, powers, duties and liabilities, which had previously attached to her in the character of administratrix ceased and no longer existed. In Toler on Executors, 131, it is laid down where letters of administration are revoked, if an action be brought by an administrator, and while it is pending, administration is committed to another, the suit is abated.

In the case of Taylor vs. Savage, 1 Howard U. S. R. 286, there was a decree in favor of Taylor against George M. Savage, the executor of Samuel Savage deceased. On the very day of the decree, George M. Savage was removed from his executorship, and one Benham appointed administrator de bonis non—the Court in that case said: "By his (George W. Savage,) removal from the office of executor, he was as completely separated from the business of the executor, as if he had been dead, and had no right to appear in or be a party in this or any other Court, to a suit, which the law confided to the representative of the deceased." No further proceedings could be therefore had in the decree of the District Court, until Ben- 12 ham the adminstrator de bonis non was made a party.

The defendant in this cause could no doubt have come in voluntarily and made herself a party as administratrix de bonis non to the suit, by due and proper application to the Court, but this she did not do. The case of Hunt vs. Wilkinson, 2 Call. 41, is cited by the appellant. It seems that a Mrs. Hunt had been appointed a general administratrix of Charles Hunt deceased; that an office judgment was obtained against her in that capacity; upon its being set aside, she was permitted to plead, that since the last continuance, the will of the said Charles Hunt had been committed to record, and that administration with the will annexed was committed to her, whereby she became bound to surrender her letters of administration granted to her before the appearance of the Will; that she ought to be sued as adminstratrix with the will annexed of Charles Hunt deceased, and not as administratrix; Judge Carrington remarked: "In this case, at the time of their office judgment, Mrs. Hunt was defendant in her character of general administratrix; but before the end of that term, that character had ceased, all her powers in that capacity were done away and destroyed by the production and proof of the will; so that she was no longer general administratrix, but was then acting in a character correspondent to that of executrix, charged with the execution of the will, instead of the statutory administraton."

The plea was sustained as a good plea, and it was after two arguments, decided that an administratrix with the will annexed must be sued in that character, and if sued as administratrix only, without the addition of the words "with the will annexed," she may plead in abatement.

This case so clearly in point, where the facts bear so close an affinity to those in the present cause, its decisions emanating from so high a source, and supported too by other authorities, entitles it to the most respectful consideration of this Court. In this case a plea in abatement was pleaded and sustained, and the question as to plea in bar did not arise. That question arose for direct adjudication in the case of James Jewett vs. Betsey Jewett, administratrix of Caleb Jewett, 5 Mass. 276. This was an action against Betsey Jewett as administratrix; she pleaded in bar, with a prostestando, (as in this case) that she had no effects, &c., of the intestate in her hands to be administered; that since the commencement of the action, she had been removed from the administration by the Judge of Probate, on the petition of James Jewett, the plaintiff.

It was contended on demurrer to this plea, that the plea would have been in abatement, being in the nature of a plea to the person. C. J. Parsons, said, "in the case at bar, if the matter of the plea be good, it shows that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendant, either in this or any other suit; it is therefore properly pleaded in bar."

It is contended by the appellee that the defendant should have pleaded plene administravit, or that she handed over the assets to the new administrator, and should have retained sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand.

The first objection as to the plea plene administravit cannot now receive consideration, as by the decision of the Court in the former part of this opinion, the plea not being waived, is still in full force and being, and undisposed of.

The law as laid down in 11 Viner Ab. 119, is in these words: "the defendant being sued as administrator, pleaded, that before the day of the writ, his administration was removed and granted to another; per Wild, he ought to have set forth that he had fully administered the goods in his hands, or else that he had delivered them over to the new administrator, for otherwise the debtor might be at a loss, for those goods shall not be assets in the hands of the new administrator till they come into his possession."

It is true, that the defendant did not plead plene administravit, in the plea puis darrein continuance, or in a different plea, but she pleaded, that she was removed from the adminstration; that by the order of the Court she was divested and put out of possession of all the estate, rights, credits and effects of Sam'l Parkhill, deceased, in her hands to be administered; that she was not allowed to retain, and did not retain in her hands sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's action, or any part thereof, but that the whole of them were placed by the order of the Court in the hands of its Marshal.

A plea plene administravit even if not in before, would perhaps have been considered superfluous, inasmuch as all the assets being taken out of her hands, there was nothing left to administer, and the replication admits, that all effects et cetera which were of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, at the time of his death, and which came to the hands of Martha Ann Parkhill to be administered, and which remained in her hands unadministered, when the same were by order of the 130 said Superior Court, taken away from said Martha Anne is in the plea alleged.

It was impossible for the defendant to have retained assets as at common law, for the order of the Court was imperative, and an attempt to retain would have been idle and futile. This argument, coming from a party upon whose petition the order was made, does not appear with very good grace. Nor could she have pleaded, that she handed over the assets to the new administrator, for the plea would have been false; nor can we discern an impropriety in the plea pleaded, drawn as we think with sufficient legal correctness and nicety, setting forth a good and substantial defence by way of bar to the action, based upon facts which are admitted by the party plaintiff.

Could an execution have correctly issued on the judgment obtained against the defendant? It could not have been issud against the estate in the hands of Martha Ann Parkhill, the general administratrix, because there was no such character in existence; nor against Martha Ann Parkhill, as administratrix de bonis non, because the execution should have pursued the judgment strictly, otherwise it would be void; and the judgment here is against the said Martha, as the general administratrix.

It is urgd that a privity existed betwen Martha Manley as general administratrix, and Martha Manly, administratrix de bonis non. That a certain privity at common law exists, it must be admitted—as between administrator and administrator de bonis non, or executor and administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed. There seems to be a distinction as to this privity, in suits by or against adminstrators—in the former none existed, which probably gave rise to the statute of 17 Charles 2, C. 8, which enabled an administrator de bonis non to take out execution on a judgment of an executor or administrator. 8 Cowen 340. It was laid down by C. J. Parsons "that an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed, could not sustain a writ of error to reverse a judgment recovered by the original executor, because there is in law no privity betwen an executor and administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed;" and a judgment recovered by the executor, cannot be executed by the succeeding administrator. Grant vs. Chamberlain, 4 Mass. 612. This was cited by the appellant.

But the same Judge remarks, that the statute of Charles 2d is not in force in his State, and indicates that his decision would have been the reverse, if it had.

Parkhill's Administrators vs. The Union Bank of Florida.

If judgment had been obtained against the defendant, and she 131 had died, no doubt but that scire facias would lie against the administrator de bonis non. 8 Cowen 339, citing Norgate vs. Snap. (W. Jon. 214.)

Admitting the doctrine of privity to the fullest extent, how does it avail in the present case? The suit against Martha Manley, administratrix, abated as completely by her removal, as if she had died; and the suit should have been brought de novo, against her, in her new capacity of administratrix de bonis non. The two characters were incompatible, and could not exist together. If the defendant had wasted the goods, she would have been liable in an action of debt, in case the administration had been granted to another. 472 Wentworth on Exrs.—and besides, would be responsible to the new administrator.

The fact that the property and assets again came to her hands at the time of the plea pleaded, does not vary the result; for though identically the same person, yet legally viewed, Martha Manley, administratrix, and Martha Manley, administratrix de bonis non, are separate and distinct characters—appointed by different grants of administration, giving different securities, and not similar in any respect, save the duties and powers incident to the administration.

The securities of the first administration were certainly discharged, after the dismissal of the defendant, as to all her acts posterior to that event; and the second sureties were not responsible for any of her acts previous to her second appointment. Another consideration is, that in case this suit should be sustained, the securities of the first administration would continue liable for the result of this suit, although the functions of the general administratrix had ceased, and who yet might be involved, if creditors were allowed to proceed upon the first administration. The blending of the two characters would be attended with many perplexities and embarrassments, and in all probability, with great injustice.

We will now confine our attention to the pleadings of the cause "It is a rule in pleading, that one demurrer, the Court will consider the whole record, and give judgment for the party who, on the whole, appears entitled to it." Stephens on Pleading, 144. And if the pleading be bad, judgment shall be had against him, who made the first default. 6 Comyn's Digest, 183. And it matters not, whether the issue be of law or fact, and whether the cause has proceded to issue or not, the Court is always bound to examine the whole record, and adjudge for the plaintiff or defendant, according 132 to the legal right, as it on the whole appears. Stephens 144.

The plea of puis darrein continuance, we have already decided, is good; and next follows the replication. We think this is clearly a departure from the declaration. That sets forth the cause of action, and declares against Martha Ann Parkhill; administratrix of the estate, real and personal, which was of Samuel Parkhill, deceased. The replication sets out the order of the County Court, revoking and annulling the letters of administration to the said Martha Ann; the appeal to Leon Superior Court by the said Martha Ann; the affirmance of the order of dismissal of the County Court by said Superior Court, and the delivery of the property of the estate of said Parkhill into the possession of the Marshal of the said Superior Court; that a receiver was duly appointed for said estate, till an administrator de bonis non was appointed by the County Court of Leon county; and that afterwards, on the twenty-second day of April, 1844, and before the filing of the said plea of the said defendants, Martha Ann and Hiram in this behalf, the County Court of Leon county did constitute and appoint the said Martha Ann, upon the petition of said Hiram and Martha Ann, an adminstratrix de bonis non of the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased.

The declaration is against her, in the capacity of administratrix simply; the replication, by setting forth the dismissal of the defendant as administratrix, and her appointment as administratrix de bonis non, is clearly a departure in pleading. It is inconsistent with the declaration, because the two capacities in which the defendant is charged, are, as has been already shown, inconsistent with each other—being in different rights, and distinct in every particular. It should fortify and maintain the matter in the declaration. It does not, and the allegation in that, and the replication, are in direct conflict. The plaintiff, by his replication, has shewn that he has no action against the defendant, (by admitting her dismissal as administratrix;) and when this is the case, there shall be judgment for the defendant, though the bar be defective, for the Court will judge on the whole record. 6 Comyn's Dig. (E 37,) page 137.

The rejoinder is not good—it is clearly a departure from the plea, and does not support it—it alleges new matter inconsistent with the plea, and is defective. It is intended to answer the replication—they are both bad. It is unnecessary to set forth the reasons or 133 grounds of this opinion—and the Court must go back to the first error or default.

There were several grounds assumed by the counsel on either side, involving the discussion of principles of great interest and importance; but the Court have deemed it proper to notice only those which semed to have a direct bearing upon, and tended to a direct decision of the cause.

The judgment must be reversed, with costs.

HOWSE & HOLLOMAN vs. MILLS JUDSON, et al.

No person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment who is not a party or privy to the record, or who is not injured by the judgment, and therefore to receive advantage by the reversal of it.

Although a judgment is by law a lien upon the land of the defendant, yet he may after the judgment convey good title, if he has at all times afterwards, a sufficient amount of property, subject to and within reach of an execution, to satisfy the judgment.

A party purchasing land after the judgment was rendered, and of which he was bound to take notice, does not stand in such a relation to the judgment as enables him to prosecute a writ of error; even if the land purchased is endangered by the lien which it creates.

THIS case was brought up, by writ of error, sued out by William Forbes, to Gadsden Circuit Court; defendants in error moved to dismiss the case upon the ground that plaintiffs in error have not authorized the institution of the suit, and that the writ of error was prayed for and is now prosecuted without their privity or consent.

The opinion of the Court contains the facts as agreed to by counsel.

T. H. Hagner, for Forbes, who sued out writ of error.

C. H. DuPont, for defendant.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This case comes before us, upon a motion made by the counsel for the defendants in error to dismiss it, upon the ground that the 134 plaintiffs in error have not authorized the institution of the suit; and that the writ of error was prayed for, and is now prosecuted, without their privity or consent.

The motion is based upon the following statement of facts, which has been agreed to by the counsel for the defendants in error, and the counsel of William Forbes, who prosecutes this writ of error, and which is on file with the papers of this cause, viz:

"Judson & Co. obtained in the Gadsden Superior Court a judgment upon certiorari, against Howse & Holloman, which judgment, it is represented, is a lien upon certain real estate, subsequently purchased by one William Forbes, under a junior judgment, against one George W. Smith, the grantee of Howse & Holloman.

"Forbes now sues out this writ of error, as a party injured by the judgment, and who is to be benefitted by a reversal of the same."

The question arising upon this state of facts is, "Can he, Forbes, of his own right, in the name of Howse & Holloman, prosecute this writ of error." We think he cannot. It is a well established principle of law, to which no exception can, (it is believed,) be found, that "no person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment, who was not a party, or privy to the record, or who was not injured by the judgment, and theefore to receive advantage by the reversal of it." 1 Rob. Ab. 747. Dyer 90. There is nothing in this statement of facts, to show that Forbes was injured by this judgment, or even that he is in danger of being so injured. For aught that appears, Howse & Holloman have ample means which may be reached by an execution, to satisfy the judgment, without resort being had to the real estate purchased by Forbes, as set forth in this statement of facts; and it would be the duty of the plaintiff in execution, to exhaust all the other property of the defendants that can be thus reached, before resorting to such as they may have bona fide conveyed away, and which the purchaser shall have taken in good faith, and for which he shall have paid a valuable consideration, after the rendition of the judgment; and were the plaintiffs to attempt to act otherwise, a Court of Equity would restrain them; for although a judgment is by law a lien upon the lands of the defendant, yet he may, after judgment, convey a good title to real estate, if he has at all times afterwards a sufficient amount of property, subject to, and within reach of an execution, to satisfy the judgment; otherwise a judgment for one thousand dollars, (or even a much less sum,) might lock up all the real estate which the defendant might own, although it were worth a million of dollars. But the 135 law is not thus unreasonable. We do not perceive, therefore, how Forbes is prejudiced by this judgment; and a party cannot maintain error, when not prejudiced by the judgment. 5 Reports 38. Tomlin's Law Dicty. Title Error 1. Hume vs. Long's Representatives, 6 Monroe's Reps. 118. Blight vs. McIlvoy, 4 Monroe's Reps. 147. Nor can we see how he would be benefitted by its reversal; and surely he can have no right to interfere, to prevent the plaintiffs below from making their money out of other property of the defendants, which would be the direct effect of this proceeding, and especially of such reversal, if they have such other property out of which the money can be made.

But the more important objection to this proceeding on the part of Forbes is, that he was not a party or privy to this judgment. He acquired his interest after it was rendered, and when he was bound to take notice of it. He is therefore a mere volunteer and does not stand in such relation to the judgment, as enables him to prosecute this writ of error, even if the real estate which he purchased as stated, is endangered by the lien which it creates.

The general rule being, that 'none but parties to the record or privies can maintain a writ of error." By privies are meant heirs, executors, administrators, terre tenants, those having an interest in remainder or reversion, or one who is made a party by the law, as he who comes in as a vouchee. 1 Rol. Ab. 748, 755. 1 Leon, 261, Tomlin's Law Dict. title error 1, page 649. Dale vs. Rosevelt, 8 Cowen's Rep. 333. Vanhorn vs. Frick, 3 Sergt. & Rawle Rep. 278. Fatteral vs. Floyd, 6 Sergt. & Rawle Rep, 315. Barr & Yeaser vs. Stevens, &c., 1 Bibb Rep. 292, 293.

Forbes does not stand in either of the relations above mentioned, nor was he made a party by the law.

The motion is therefore sustained, and the case dismissed.

Per totam Curiam.

JOHN D. EDWARDS vs. UNION BANK OF FLORIDA. 136

AN action of trespass vi et armis will lie against a corporation.

In an action of trespass against a corporation, the trespass being alleged to have been committed in one county, and the action brought in another, and the one in which the corporation has its office and transacts its business, it is too late, after verdict, to object that the action was brought in the wrong county; or that it should have been brought in the county in which the trespass was committed. The defect is secured by Statute 16 and 17, Car. 2. which is in force in this State.

A corporation is included in the 10 Sec. of the "Act regulating judicial proceedings," and must be sued in the county in which the office of such corporation is kept.

APPEAL from Leon Superior Court to late Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida, transferred to this Court.

This was an action of trespass vi et armis, tried February 1845, in the late Superior Court for Leon County, when there was a verdict for appellant. On motion of appellee, judgment was arrested: whereupon, appellant prayed an appeal. The opinion of the Court contains the reasons assigned for arrest of the judgment and the other facts of the case.

A. E. Maxwell, for appellant:

Corporations, in all their privileges and liabilities, are assimilated as nearly as possible, to individuals. C. J. Marshall, in Providence Bank vs. Hillings & Pittman, says: "That the great object of an incorporation is, to bestow the character and properties of individuality, on a collective and changing body of men." He says further, that they are not exempt from any burthens common to individuals, unless expressly exempted by charter. And this remark is more especially true, of all money and other corporations for private benefit and emolument. If they are not exempt from any burthens common to individuals, they cannot claim to be exempt from any legal action, which their own misconduct, by agents and servants, would, if they were individuals, render them liable to. They cannot do any act without responsibility—they can do nothing without incurring the same legal liabilities which an individual would incur for the same act. A different doctrine would but furnish the pretext to persons to become incorporated for some plausible purposes, in order to have the power to commit outrages upon property, which their vindictive propensities might urge them to, and which, as mere individuals, they dare not do, for fear of the law.

The law is well established, that corporations are liable for torts; and the authorities relating to this subject, so far as I have observed, make no distinction as to the character or degree of torts. In Case and Trover, they are clearly liable; and in no case so deciding, has a distinction been drawn, which exempts them from liability in trespass. See Towle vs. Com. Coun. of Alex. 3 Peters 409. Yarborough vs. Bank of England, 16 East, 8. Riddle vs. Proprietors &c. on Merrimack river, 7 Mass. R. 169. Ang. & Ames on Corp. 328. No reason can be assigned why they should be liable in these actions, and not in trespass. The technical objection, which seems to be the only one mentioned in the books, that capias and exigent do not lie against a corporation, applies equally to all these actions: yet it is not now allowed to prevail as to the former.

For authorities to show that trespass will lie, see Ang. & Ames on Corp. 331—34. 1 Chitty's Pl. 87. Dater vs. Troy Turnp. & R. R. Co. 2 Hill's R. 631. 23 Pick. R. 139. 7 Mass. R. 169. And Whiteman's Ex. vs. Wil. & Susq. R. R. Co. 2 Harrington 514. This last is a case where the point was fully considered, and the Court is positive in holding that the action can be well maintained.

The other ground taken below, that trespass does not lie in this case, because the trespasses were committed under legal sanction, by an officer of the law, is not available upon motion in arrest of judgment; for, at that stage of the case, all the facts alleged in the declaration are supposed to be proven as charged. 16 East. 8. 7 Cowen 486. The declaration her alleges that the trespasses were committed by the agents and servants of the bank, and after verdict, that fact is considered as proved.

Upon the point, whether the declaration was defective in regard to the venue, and whether, if so defective it was cured after verdict, by statute of Jeofails, &c., it is contended—That, although by the old law, trespass quare clau. fre., was a local action, and could not be brought out of the county where the cause of action arose, yet there is no reason, but a technical one for this doctrine. This was held to be true by Chief Justice Marshall in the case of Livingston vs. Jefferson, 2 Brock. R. 203; and from the tenor of argument in his opinion, it is clear that he would gladly have taken hold of any statutory regulation, however remotely bearing upon this doctrine, which could, with an color, be construed to abolish the distinction between 138 local and transitory actions, where the redress sought is only in damages, and in this respect imparting to the causes the character of personal actions. In this State there is a statute which, without any distortion, may be considered as abolishing the distinction, See Duv. Comp. 7 sec. 106. In all cases where summons ad respondendum is the proper writ, it seems intended by this statute that the plaintiffs shall be entitled to his option, either to bring suit in county of defendant's residence, or where the cause of action accrued. This includes all cases where damages merely are sought; and such is the action now before the Court. This view seems entitled to greater weight in this case, because the corporation cannot be served with process out of the county of its location, except when its officers are absent, Duv. Comp. 2 sec. 194.

Besides, the want of jurisdiction in such cases as this, is not of that character which would render a judgment against defendant below void. The Court certainly has jurisdiction of the subject matter, and if the defendant submits to its exercise, even if in a wrong county, he must be considered as waiving the privilege (for it amounts to nothing more than a personal privilege.) See 4 Mass. R. 591. This was a transitory action, but it establishes that the privilege may be waived, and will be considered as waived, unless defendant claims it before the cause goes to the jury.

It is true, that objection to jurisdiction may be made at any time where the want of it appears upon the record; but this rule cannot apply to cases where the jurisdiction is perfect, if the party entitled to the objection waives his privilege. Else he might wait till the verdict upon the merits is given against him, and then defeat it at his will. If the jurisdiction be such as cannot be had even by consent, then this rule may be good, but not otherwise.

But, this defect, if it be one, is cured by the statutes Jeofails. If the venue is mislaid it is curable after verdict. It is not of substantial defect. The cause of action must be presumed to be good, or the jury would not have given a verdict for plaintiff. Our statute (Duv. Comp. Sec. 54, p. 100,) seems broad enough to cover the defect. But if this statute does not cure the defect, it is aided by 16 and 17 Car. 2, which is of force here, not being repealed or superceded; for that statute, see 1 Chitty's Pl. 712, and for its construction, see Craft vs. Boite, 1 Saund. R. 246, and note (3) 247: see also, 1 Comyn's Dig. 260.

T. H. Hagner, for Appellee: 139

Contended that there was no error in the decision of the Court below, arresting the judgment. He insisted that it was well established by authority, that trespass quare clausum fregit does not lie against a corporation. That the weight of ancient as well as of modern authority inclines to this view, and that reason and analogy support the same opinion. He contended that the action must be brought against each person who committed the tort, by name, and not against the artificial being—that sound principle as well as sound law established the propriety of such procedure; that security of the rights of the citizens was best maintained by holding the parties committing the trespass individually liable.

He cited in support of these positions. 6 Viner's Abridg. 300. 1 Kyd on Corp. 223-225. 4 Comyn's Dig. 486, Tit. Franchises, F. 8 East. Rep. 230. 1 Tuckers Com. 156. Brown on actions, 159. 160.

He examined and commented upon the authorities cited by counsel for appellant, and called the attention of the Court, to page 328, and 9. Ang. & Ames on Corp. where the general principles he contended for, are declared and sustained by authority. That on page 331, the authors have laid down the text far beyond what the cases cited by them justify. Yet taken at its full value, the text claims but to be an argument to show what might be said to sustain their views. The cases there cited, and to which appellant's counsel has referred, established no such principle. The case of Yarborough vs. Bank of England, 16 East. 8, decided merely that Trover would lie against a Corporation. Gray vs. Portland Bank, 3 Mass. 364, was also a special action on the case. 6 Mass. 333, relied on by Angell & Ames, does not establish the point for which cited. The defendants were not known to be incorporated, nor was any question like this raised. The case of Fowle vs. Common Council of Alex. 3 Peters 399, is full in our favor, for it denies the liability of a corporation, as such, for acts done beyond the scope of their charter. Although admitting they are liable for torts—yet it is clearly indicated that they are liable consequentially—and that very action was in case. And this decision, he contended, placed the matter upon right grounds. No one questions that a corporation is liable for torts. The question is, in what form of action?

The remaining case relied on by Angell & Ames, is Chesnut Hill Turnpike Co. vs. Rutten, 4 Serg. & Rawle 6. This citation is equally unfortunate—the case decided that trespass on the case lies 140 against a corporation aggregate for a tort.

He said that, in addition to these cases, the counsel for appellant had cited others, to which he would call the attention of the Court. Riddle vs. Proprietors of lands, &c., 7 Mass. 169, established that an action of trespass on the case, will lie against a corporation aggregate, for neglect of a corporate duty. The counsel for the corporation having taken the ground in that case, that no action of trespass, even on the case, lay against the corporation, the Court decided, that some actions of trespass might, at common law, lie against corporations; but the decision goes no further than to support the action brought. He insisted, that the citations did not support the text in 1 Chitty's Pl. 87. He examined 23 Pickering, 140, wherein occur these words, used by way of argument:—"So trover, or assumpsit, or trespass, will lie against a corporation, as against a natural person. Foster vs. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. R. 503." That by reference to that case, (it appears) there is no such decision therein made. The Court say: "We think there is no doubt that, on such a de-"posit, an action of trover would lie against the corporation, if they "should refuse to deliver the property on demand; and assumpsit "might also be maintained, it being settled, by the later authorities, "that either action may be maintained against an incorporated com-"pany, as well as against a natural person." The case itself from 23 Pickering, involved simply the point that, by 40 years adverse possession, a corporation could acquire title to land.

He commented on the other cases cited. He said that, 2 Hill 631, was a case where ejectment was brought against a corporation—and that the opinion of the Court there expressed, that trespass qu. cl. freg. will lie, is an obiter dictum—"not called for by the case, and which it was unnecessary to give." Besides, it is declared upon the authority of 18 Wendell 9, where the point was not made. In that case, against the Mohawk R. R. Company, for trespass qu. cl. freg. the company justified under the act of the General Assembly of New York, authorizing them "to enter upon, and take possession, and use all such lands," &c., for the erection of their road.

As to the weight to be attached to this case, from 18 Wendell, he cited Ram on Legal Judgment, 183—4—that the decision was made without argument on the point, and the point itself did not arise. He read 3 Law Magaz. 317, to show the constitution of the Court for the correction of Errors in New York: and he commented 141 on this decision, and the feelings and temper of the Court which decided it, as shown in page 43 of 18 Wendell—all tending, as he insisted, to diminish the value of that decision.

The case cited from the Court of Errors and Appeals of Delaware, 2 Harrington's Rep. 514, he argued, could have little weight. The Court declares itself unable to find a direct decision of the question, and it undertakes to declare the law. To three of the Judges of the Court, a legal exception existed, and two persons were commissioned as Judges ad litem to try the case. It is, in fact, the single adjudication produced in this Court, admittedly (see p. 518) against the settled law declared by the old books—and by a Court thus constituted. Against it also, is the decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio, (Wright's Rep. 603,) Hamilton county vs. Cincinnati Turnpike Co., deciding that, "where a Corporation has caused an illegal act to be done, then the Company's agents are trespassers; or the Company having caused the act, are liable in case for the injury." Such, (he regarded,) as the sound rule of law.

It is urged that Corporations are to be treated as natural persons. So they are, within their chartered powers. 2 Chanch, 167—8. 7 Cranch 299. Beyond their chartered powers, their franchise ceases —the persons composing it cannot screen themselves behind their chartered privileges—the agents are trespassers, individually bound for the trespass itself; while the Company is liable for the consequences of the act they commanded to be done. Thus a double security is provided; and this, he insisted, was the true conservative principle, to secure the citizen from unjust aggression.

Upon the second point, that this action was local, and being local, proper ground of arrest of judgment, he cited. 1 Brock. Rep. 203. 1 Robinson's Prac. 21. 2 Wheaton's Selwyn, (1342.) 1 Bacon's Abrid. 79 A. 4 Term Rep. 503. 3 Harrison's Rep. 3. That the verdict does not cure defect. 2 Humphrey's Rep. 425. Stephens on Plead. 146. And that the objection was good on writ of error, he cited, 2 Scammon's Rep. 275. Grant vs. Tams & Company, 7 Monroe's Rep.

He urged, that no where had our law done away the distinction between local and transitory actions; that trespass qu. cl. fregit was such local action; that the declaration set forth that the trespass was committed in Jefferson county; that the action was there laid; and he insisted that even consent could not give jurisdiction, where the Court has not, by law, cognizance of the subject. 1 J. J. Mar-
142 shal R. 476. He examined the English statute of Jeofails, 16 & 17 C. 2, c. 8, sec. 1—that after verdict, judgment shall not be stayed or reversed, &c. "for wrong venue, so as the cause were tried by a "jury of the proper county, or place where the action is laid."—Crabb's Digest, 651.

He argued, that the action is laid in the declaration in Jefferson county—not under a videlicet—with no fiction of law to sustain it, as within the venue; and he urged, that the case meant in the statute would be this:—if the defendant were sued in Jefferson county, and the action tried there, where it is laid in the declaration to have arisen, and the venue in the margin was, "Leon county, set." this wrong venue would not vitiate—because "the cause was tried by a jury of the proper county where the action is laid."

To admit the converse, is to say, that the mere naming a venue, makes it the right venue—and any county thus becomes the proper county—that, in truth, the case pointed at in the statute could never arise; for there never could be a wrong venue, unless the action was laid in the right county; and to sustain this case, is to overturn all distinctions between local and transitory actions.

He distinguished between the cases of transitory actions, where the justification was local; and between local actions themselves. Craft vs. Boite, 1st Saunders, 247, was of the first sort; and the Court held that, in that action which was transitory, though the issue was local, yet it was rightly tried in the county where the action was laid in the declaration. He relied on the decision in that case, distinguishing it from the case at bar. Here the action being local, there could only be a local issue; and the proper county would be Jefferson county, where the action is laid. That for this reason, the judgment ought to be arrested.

Maxwell, in reply:

It is true, the law is, that a corporation can do no act not authorized by its charter, but the meaning of this law is greatly misapprehended. It does not mean, that a corporation shall not be held responsible for its acts, when it exceeds the power given by the charter, but that a corporation can do no act which it would be legal for an individual to do, unless the charter confers the power to do it. And it is very evident, that the most effectual way of keeping a corporation within the limits of its charter, is to hold it liable to actions at law, whenever it exceeds those limits. A contrary doctrine would give it perfect impunity as a corporate body. Moreover, the law as contended 143 for by the counsel, would deny an action of trover, or other action of tort, for he will not contend that the Bank, by any provision of its charter, is authorized to convert a man's property to its own use, or to do any other tortious act. Yet, these actions will lie, as the counsel himself admits.

The cases before cited, to show that tort will lie against a corporation, must be considered good authority in this case, unless some reason be given for a distinction, which makes a corporation liable for one degree of tort, and not for all. No such distinction can be found in the books.

The authorities relied upon by the counsel of the defendant are all based upon the citation from Viner. They are ancient, and, without exception, opposed by all the modern decisions. The case from Ohio does not hold that this action will not lie; but simply, that an action on the case will lie. This is not denied, but it forms no objection or bar to an action of trespass vi et armis. It is doubtful whether Viner is an authority for the opposite side. The case from which he derived his view, was that of a commonality corporation. Judge Marshall, in the case from 3 Peters, 409, says, he knows of no instance where such a corporation has been held liable, even for a tort; although a money or other private corporation would be held liable. Taking this distinction, Viner himself fails as an authority against this action, and with him fails all the cases based upon his credit, so that no authority remains to oppose, not only the general tendency, but the express holding, of the modern decisions.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This is an action of trespass, instituted by John D. Edwards against the Union Bank of Florida, in the Superior Court of Leon county, in the Middle District of Florida.

The declaration contains two counts. The first charges: "That the said Union Bank of Florida, by its servants, officers and agents, on the sixteenth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, and on divers other days and times between that day, and before the commencement of this suit, with force and arms, &c., broke and entered divers, to wit: four closes of the said plaintiff, situated in Jefferson county, to wit: in the county aforesaid, and then and there broke down," &c.—(setting out the other matters of the trespass in the usual form.)

The second: "And for that also, the said defendant, by its officers servants and agents aforesaid, on the days and years aforesaid, at 144 the county aforesaid, impressed, seized, took, and carried away, divers, to wit: forty-one negro slaves, then and there being the servants, and in the possession of said plaintiff, and unlawfully kept and detained the said slaves, so being the servants of said plaintiff, from and out of the service of said plaintiff, without the license or consent of said plaintiff, and against the will of said plaintiff, for a long space of time, to wit: until the commencement of this suit, whereby, &c. (the usual form in such cases), to the damage of said plaintiff of one hundred thousand dollars," &c.

To this declaration, the defendant put in the plea of not guilty; upon which issue was joined, and that issue was submitted to a jury, who returned a verdict for plaintiff, and assessed his damages upon the first count at two thousand dollars; and upon the second at seventeen thousand dollars; making the whole nineteen thousand dollars.

And thereupon the defendant, by its counsel, moved the Court for "a rule nisi," to arrest the judgment, for the reasons following, to wit:—

First: Because an action of "trespass vi et armis," doth not lie against a corporation.

Second: Because if such an action can be maintained at all, it doth not lie in this case, the entry being warranted by law.

Third: Because the plaintiff has not, by law, a right to a judgment in his favor.

Which rule was granted; and after argument had thereon, was by the consideration and judgment of said Court sustained; and the judgment upon said verdict was accordingly arrested.

Whereupon the said plaintiff, by his attorneys, prayed an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida, which was granted accordingly, and the cause was carried up to the said Court of Appeals, whence it was transferred into this Court, under the provision contained in the last clause of the 17th article, (Schedule and Ordinance,) of the Constitution of the State, which declares that all actions at law, or suits in Chancery, or any other proceeding pending, or which may be pending in any Court of the Territory of Florida, may be commenced in, or transferred to such Court of the State, as may have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof; and of the provision contained in the 14th section of the act of the General Assembly of this State, of the 25th July, 1845, which was passed to carry into effect the above mentioned provision of the Constitution, so far as related to cases pending in the said Court of Appeals:

Upon the first day of the present term of this Court, a motion was made by the counsel for Appellee, to dismiss this case, for the following reasons, viz:—

First: Because it has no rightful place in this Court; and this Court has no jurisdiction of the same, no appeal or writ of error having been sued out, or taken to this Court; and this Court having no appellate jurisdiction of the case.

Second: Because the judgment of the Leon Superior Court is final, until reversed by the proper appellate tribunal, constituted by the acts of Congress of the United States.

Third: Because this Court has appellate jurisdiction only over those inferior Courts, which the Constitution of the State of Florida has established, and which compose, with this Court, the judiciary power of the State.

Which last motion was overruled, for the reasons given in the opinion of the Court, pronounced by Judge Baltzell, on a former day of this term, in the case of Charles D. Stewart vs. Thomas Preston, Jr., upon a similar motion, founded upon the same reasons as the motion to dismiss this case.

After which, the counsel for the appellant filed herein the following assignment of errors, to wit:—

First: The Court erred in sustaining the motion in arrest of judgment.

Second: The Court erred in giving judgment for defendant, and not for plaintiff.

Which errors we now proceed to examine. From this state of the case, we are first called upon to inquire, whether trespass vi et armis lies against a corporation?

It is said, in some of the old books, that trespass does not lie against a corporation, because a capias and exigent does not go against a corporation. But an exigent was never known in practice in Florida, and the capias has long since been virtually banished from it, in all civil cases, by the provision contained in the last clause of the fifth section of the act to amend an act regulating judicial proceedings, approved November 23d, 1828, which declares that no person shall be required to give bail for his or her appearance, to any original writ or summons, emanating from a Court of Law; and the fifty-third section of the same act, Duval's Comp. page 146 99, by which it is declared: "That in no case shall a capias ad satisfaciendum be issued by the Clerk, upon judgment of the Court — nor shall the body of any defendant be subject to arrest or confinement, for the payment of money, except it be for fines imposed by lawful authority;" so that, neither a capias or exigent ever issued in an action against a corporation in this State in any case. "Cessante ratione, cessat et ipsa lex." But it is believed, that the position thus stated, is laid down more broadly than was ever warranted by the principles of the common law. It was held, at an early period in England, that, "a corporation might be defendants in an action of quare impedit, and the hindrance is an act of tort." And the case of Butler vs. the Bishop of Hereford and the University of Cambridge, Barnes C. P. 350, is cited by Lord Ellenborough in the case of Yarbrough vs. the Bank of England, 8 East Rep. 9, to this point: "To which he says, a multitude of other instances may be added, as Rost. 497, 2 Mod. En. 291. Winch. 625—700—721. 2 Lut. 1100, and 3 Lev. 332. The statute of 9 Henry the 4th, chap. 5, recites the practice in assizes of novel "disseisin," and other pleas of land, of naming the mayor, and bailiffs, and commonalty of a franchise, as disseisors, in order to oust them of holding plea thereof; and directs the inquiry before the Judges of assize, whether they be disseisors or tenants, or be named by fraud;"— which most clearly proves, that they may be considered as disseisors. And there are instances of trespasses against corporations, in 44 Ed. 3d. 2 Pl. 5, which was after 22 Ass. Pl. 67, cited in the argument of the case of Yarborough vs. the Bank of England. Trespass, says Lord Ellenborough, was brought against the mayor and commonalty of Hull, and another person; and the objection was made, not that trespass would not lie against the corporation, but as a natural person was joined with them, there must be different processes. A distress against the former, and a capias against the latter. But the objection does not appear to have prevailed—and in 8 Hen. 6, 1—14, trespass was brought against the mayor, bailiffs and commonalty, and one of the commonalty; and the objection was, not that trespass would not lie against the corporation, but that it could not be supported against them, and an individual of their body. And Bro. on Corporations Pl. 24, says, the better opinion was, that the writ was good; and 14th Hen. 8th, 2, says it was so awarded, and that in that case, all the justices agreed. The case of Yarborough vs. the Bank of England, was decided on the principle, that actions of tort, 147 without distinction, would lie against corporations. Lord Ellenborough who delivered the opinion of the Court of King's Bench, cited several cases, (some of which we have already cited,) in which trespass had been maintaind, in very early times, against corporations, under circumstances which preclude the idea or inference that an objection to the form of the action was then considered maintainable. His own opinion was, that trespass had been, and might be maintained; and that the want of authority, under the corporate seal, to do the act complained of, was not material. Both Viner & Comyn, it is true, speak of the law as settled, that trespass lies not against a corporation aggregate. Both assign the same reason, viz: that capias and exigent do not lie: and cite Brown on Corporations. Thealal & Thorpe's Assizes.

In Riddle vs. the proprietors of the locks and canals on the Merrimack River, 7 Mass. Reps. 186—8, although an action for a nonfeasance, Parsons, Chief Justice, entered fully, and very ably, into this question, and shows, upon the authority of Thealal himself, the principal reference of Viner & Comyn, that Thorpe's opinion, which has been so much relied on, had been overruled in England, as to certain trespasses; and takes what we deem the true and correct distinction, between corporations of a public nature, called quasi corporations, such as towns, cities, &c., and proper corporations aggregate, by which is meant money, and business corporations, against which the action may, (and we think sound policy requires should,) be maintained.

In the case of Chestnut Hill, &c., Turnp. Co. vs. Rutter, 4 Serg. & Rawle, Rep. 6, which was an action of trespass on the case for stopping a water course, it was strongly objected, that a corporation could not be guilty of a tort; but Chief Justice Tillman said, that this doctrine was fallacious in principle, and mischievious in its consequences, as it tends to introduce actual wrongs, and ideal remedies; for a turnpike Company might do great injury, by means of laborers having no property to answer damages recovered against them; that it was much more reasonable to say, that where a corporation is authorized by law to make a road, if any injury is done in the course of making that road by the persons employed under its authority, it shall be responsible in the same manner as an individual is responsible for the acts of his servants touching his business, and "there is no solid ground for a distinction between contracts and "torts." Angell & Ames on corporations, 224, 226, is also authority to this point. And Chief Justice Marshall in the case of Towle vs. The Common 148 Council of Alexandria, 3d. Peters' Rep. 409, lays it down as well settled, "that money corporations, or those carrying on business for themselves, are liable for torts;" not of particular discription only, but torts generally committed by their agents. In the case of John Whitemongs Ex. vs. The Wilmington and Susquehanna Rail Road Company, 2 Harrington's Rep. 514, it was held, that "trespass will lie against a corporation," and in the case of Dater vs. Troy Turnpike and Rail Road Co. 2 Hills N. Y. Rep. 632, Cowen, Justice, said, "the old doctrine always admitted to be questionable, (1 Kyd on Corporations 223,) that trespass or ejectment will not lie against a corporation, is exploded by modern authorities," and in the case of the second Precinct, in Rebobath vs. The Cath. Cong. Church and Society in Rebobath, 23 Pickerings Rep. 140, the Court remarked, "it is said that an aggregate corporation cannot commit a disseisin unless the entry be authorized by their deed; and so, if a corporation be disseised, the entry to revest their estate must be by an authority under seal. This, says the Court, was undoubtedly the ancient doctrine as to corporations, but a more liberal doctrine has long since prevailed, and as the law now is, corporations may be bound by implication from corporate acts without a vote or deed, and the cases of the Canal Bridge vs. Gordon, 1 Pickering Rep. 297, and Episcopal Charitable Society vs. Episcopal Church in Dedham, 1 Pickerings Rep. 372, are cited.

So trover or assumpsit, or trespass, will lie against a corporation as against a natural person. Foster vs. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. Rep. 503. So a town or Parish may acquire a title by disseisin, by an exclusive adverse occupation, although the occupation was not authorized by any writing under seal, Milton vs. First Parish in Milton, 10 Pickering's Rep. 452, and it is not a little remarkable, that the case of Bloodgood vs. The Mohawk and Hudson Railroad Company, which was an action of trespass, Quare Clausum Fregit, and is first found in 14 Wendell's Rep. 51, and again in 18 Wendell's Rep. 9, should have passed through all the Courts of the State of New York, without objection as to the form of the action, if (as is contended,) such an action doth not lie against a corporation. Indeed it is strong evidence, that both the bar and the Courts of that great and enlightened State, consider, as did the late venerable Chief Justice Marshall, that it is well settled, "that money corporations, or those carrying on business for themselves, are liable for torts, committed by their ser-

149 vants or agents in the course of their business." And in view of all these high authorities, we feel ourselves constrained so to regard it. If however this point was left in doubt by the general current of authority, our statute, directing the mode of instituting suits against corporations, Duval's Comp. 104, the first section of which provides, "that in all cases actions or suits which may be instituted against any corporation, instead of the process heretofore used to compel the appearance of such corporation, it shall be sufficient to issue 'a summons' to the Marshal or other proper officer, (now the Sheriff,) reciting the cause of action, and summoning the said corporation to appear and answer the same on the proper return day," &c., should be permitted to settle the question.

This brings us to the second reason assigned for arresting the judgment which was, "that if such an action could be maintained at all, it does not lie in this case, the entry being warranted by law." It is a sufficient answer to this position to say, that there appears to be nothing in the record to sustain it, and after a verdict against the defendants upon the only issue in the case, upon the plea of not guilty, it comes too late. The third and last reason assigned was that the plaintiff, had not by law a right to a judgment in his favor. This is very general, as is also the last error assigned, viz: "that the Court erred in giving judgment for the defendant," but it is under this third reason, that the appellee urges the want of jurisdiction in the Superior Court of Leon County to try this case. The cause of action, it is alleged, (if any was committed,) was committed in Jefferson County; that the cause of action is local not transitory, and could not therefore be rightfully instituted or tried in Leon County. It is very curious and instructive, says a late writer upon this subject, (who seems to have examined it extensively and with considerable ability,) to trace the progress of the English law respecting the locality of actions During the earliest ages of our judicial history, juries were selected for the very reasons which would now argue their unfitness, videlicit their personal acquaintance with the parties, and the merits of the cause. And few rules of law were enforced with greater strictness than those which required the venue, visne or vicenum, or in other words the neighborhood whence the jurors were to be summoned, should be also that in which the cause of action had arisen, in order that the jury, who were to determine it, principally from their own private knowledge, and who were liable to be attained, if they delivered a wrong verdict, might be persons likely to be acquainted with the 150 nature of the transaction which they were called upon to try. In order to effect this end, the parties litigant, were required to state in their pleadings, with the utmost certainty, not merely the county, but the very venue, i. e. the very district hundred or ville within that county, where the facts that they allege had taken place, in order that the Sheriff might be directed to summon the Jury from the proper neighborhood, in case issue should be taken on any such allegations. It followed of course, that a new venue was designated, as often as the parties litigant shifted the scene of the transaction from one part of the county to another. This was however soon found to produce great inconvenience, for in mixed transactions, which may happen partly in one place and partly in another, it was extremely difficult to ascertain the right venue, and as the number of these transactions multiplied with increasing civilization, these difficulties about determining the place of trial became numerous and of constant occurrence, and soon induced the Courts to take a distinction between transitory matters, such as contracts which might happen any where, and local ones, such as trespass to the realty, which could only happen in one particular place, and regulations were adopted respecting transitory actions, and from time to time changed, and modified to suit the exigencies of the times, (which it is not necessary for us now to notice.) But where a matter alleged in pleading was of a local description, whether the allegation happened in a declaration or in any subsequent pleading, the venue for the trial of such matter could be no where but at the very place where it was alleged in pleading to have happened, and therefore even in cases the most transitory, if the cause of action was laid in London, and there was a local justification as at Oxford, the cause must have been tried in Oxford, not in London. Ford vs. Brook, Croke Eliz. 261. Bower's case Moor. 410. "And it was probably this strictness of the law with regard to venue, which rendered it necessary to confine the defendant so long to a single plea, since had he pleaded several please on which issues had been taken triable by different venues, there could have been no single trial of the action, and accordingly we find that it was not till after the effect of the statute of 16 and 17 Car. 2, on venues, had become well settled, that the very same year which put an end to the last remnant of the old severity, by abolishing the necessity of summoning hundredors, also endowed the defendant with a right which he ought in justice always to have possessed, of stating every thing in his defence, which can by law be made available to exonerate him;
151 the right corresponding to which, that namely of replying to the defence, every thing which has a direct tendency to rebut it, is even in our more advanced times denied the plaintiff." 1 Smith's leading cases 481, in note. Thus stood the law in England in regard to local actions, and defences at the time of the passage of the act of 16 and 17 Car. 2, Cap. 8, concerning venues, (one of the statutes of Jeofails,) which declared, "that after verdict judgment should not be stayed or reversed, for that there is no right venue, so as the cause were tried by a jury of the proper county, or place where the action is laid." 1 Chitty's Pl. 279-283. Considerable difficulty arose on the construction of this statute, many lawyers contending that the words, "the proper county or place where the action is laid," must be understood to mean the proper county or place, where the issue arises, so that if the issue arose at Dale in Oxfordshire, and the venue was Sale in the same county, here they said was a case within the same statute, there being a right county, but a wrong venue. But it was at length decided in the case of Craft vs. Boite, 1 Saund. 246, that the words, "where the action was laid," mean where it was laid in the declaration, not in any subsequent pleading; and accordingly it has ever since been held, that it is sufficient if the jury be summoned from the venue laid in the declaration. 1 Smith's Leading cases 482 in note. In local actions, the only modes of objecting to the venue are by demurrer. Thrale vs. Cornwall, 1 Wilson 165, or at the trial as a ground of nonsuit. The Mayor, &c., of London vs. Cole et al. 7 Term Rep. 588. Stevenson vs. Lambard, 2 East 580. Brackshaw vs. Hopkins, Cowp. 410. Soutler vs. Heard, 2 Bla. Rep. 1033. In local actions, if the venue be laid in the wrong County, and the objection appear upon the record, it is clear, that the defendant may demur. 1 Saunders 241. The Mayor, &c., of Berwick vs. Ewart, 2 Bla. Rep. 1070. Mellon vs. Barber, 3 Term Rep. 387; and if it do not appear on the record, he may under the general issue avail himself of the objection at the trial, as the ground of nonsuit. 1 Chitty's Pl. 284-285.

It is contended, on behalf of the appellee, that the case meant in the statute of 16 and 17 Car. 2, would be this: If the defendant were sued in this case in Jefferson county, and the action tried there, and the venue laid in the declaration was "Leon county, ss.," and a number of cases were cited by his counsel in support of this position. As this is a very material point in this case, we have bestowed upon it that anxious attention, which the important bearing that it has upon the issue in this case demands. But after the most careful 152 examination of the question, and the authorities presented upon it, we cannot assent to that proposition. To our minds, it seems to be at variance with the current of authorities on the subject. The case of Craft vs. Boite, 1 Saunders 387 to 389, first settled the true and proper construction of the statute of the 16 and 17 Car. 2. In the case of the Mayor, &c., of London vs. Cple, 7 Term Reps. 583—584, Lord Kennyon, Ch. J., delivering the opinion of the Court, and speaking of the statute of 16 and 17 Car. 2, said: "I cannot express myself in better terms than Kelynge, Chief Justice, and Rainesford and Moreton, Justices, did, in one of the cases cited, who said the words of the statute are plain, that the issue was tried by a jury of the proper county where the action was brought, which was within the express words of the statute, and, (as they conceived,) within the intent of the statute." The one of the cases cited, as mentioned by Lord Kenyon, was that of Craft vs. Boite, 1 Saunders, 337, 339, by which the true and correct construction of this statute was first settled. In note 3, at page 339 of this book, it is said: The judgment in this case was at first received with considerable disapprobation; and Lander vs. Elliott, Camb. p. 75, is cited to sustain the remark; the better opinion being, (says the annotator,) that the intent of the statute was, to aid a wrong venue in the same county, where the issue arose, and not a wrong county, according to the distinction made by Saunders. However, (he adds,) the subsequent decisions are conformable hereto; and 2 Lev. 164—165. Adderly vs. Wise, Vent. 263. Jennings vs. Henking, S. C. 2 Lev. 121. 3 Keble, 509. Sir T. Raymond, 292. Horton vs. Nausan, 3 Lev. 394, (Hunt's case, and Briggs vs. Chew, there cited.) 1 Lord Raym. 330. Sir Richard Leving vs. Lady Claverly, S. C. Cooth. 448. 2 Lord Raymond, 1212. Maitland vs. Taylor, and 7 Term Rep. 583. The Mayor of London vs. Cole, are cited as "the subsequent decisions conformable thereto." In Comyn's Digest, 260, it is said: "If a local action be brought and tried in a wrong county, the defect is aided after verdict, by statute 16 and 17 Car. 2, C. 8.

The general issue was pleaded in this case; the cause was tried in the Superior Court, and by a jury of Leon county, where the action was brought. As the land upon which the trespass was committed, is shown by the declaration to be situated in Jefferson county, the defendant might have demurred; had it not been thus shown, it might have availed him on a motion to rule out the testimony, as to 153 the count in "quare clausum fregit." This is in accordance with the principle upon which the case of McKenna vs. Fiske, 17 Peters Rep. 245 to 250, was decided. This was an action of trespass, brought by the plaintiff in error against the defendant, in the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, for the recovery of damages, for a large amount of goods and chattels, rights and credits, and personal property, taken and detained, and destroyed by the defendant. The declaration contained two counts, one for trespass to personal chattels, the other was, for "quare clausum fregit" in the county of Washington. On the trial, the plaintiff offered to prove that the defendant, with a large force of armed men, came to the store house or shantee of the plaintiff, in Alleghany county, in the State of Maryland, entered into the same, and took and carried away the goods and chattels stated in the declaration, &c.; and other evidence was offered to show the value of the goods. The Court refused to permit the evidence to go to the jury. Upon an exception to this ruling, the case was carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States, which, although it held that the evidence offered, as to the local count, was not competent, yet sustained the exception taken by the plaintiff, to the ruling of the Court below, in regard to the evidence excluded, and remanded the cause for further proceedings. And see also, 1 Chitty's Pl. 284.

In the case before us, no objection was made to the reception of the evidence in the Court below, on either count. The jury found for the plaintiff. The defect is cured by the statute of 16 and 17 Car. 2, before cited. The Court, therefore, erred in arresting the judgment upon it.

It was intimated, (but not strongly urged,) by the counsel for the appellant, that our statute of Jeofail, which is found in the act above referred to, regulating judicial proceedings, of 23d November, 1828, is that of 32 Henry 8, chap. 30, sec. 1, and not that of 16 and 17 Car. 2; and a doubt was expressed, whether the last mentioned statute is in force in this State—but the act of November 6th, 1829, entitled, an "act providing for the adoption of the common and statute laws of England," &c., which was passed one year after the judicial act, declared that the common and statute law of England, which are of a general, and not of a local nature, with certain exceptions, (none of which include the statute of 16 and 17 Car. 2,) should be of force in the Territory of Florida. Duv. Com. 357. This act is 154 continued, and made of force in this State, by the 17th article, (Schedule and Ordinance.) of our Constitution.

Hitherto, we have been considering this question, without reference to the act directing the mode of instituting suits against Corporations, before referrd to upon another subject—the second section of which provides:—"That if any summons be issued against any banking, rail road, insurance or incorporated company, service on the president or other head, or in his absence, on the cashier or treasurer; or in the absence of both the president or chief officer, and the cashier or treasurer, then on any director of such company; such president or other chief officer, cashier, treasurer, or director, being, at the time of service, within the county in which he usually resides, shall be deemed sufficient service of the said process." This act was approved February 11th, 1834. See Duval's Comp. 104—105. The object of this latter provision, ("such president, &c., being at the time of such service, within the county in which he usually resides,") is certainly not very clear. But it is difficult to imagine any reason for it, unless it be, that the Legislature contemplated such residence to be in the county where the office of such company should be kept, and intended the trial to take place in that county, thereby bringing such corporations within, (if they were not already so,) the provisions of the 10th section of the judicial act above mentioned, by which it is declared: "That no suit shall be brought to any of the Superior Courts of the Territory, against any persons residing therein, unless the same be instituted in the judicial district and county in which the defendant resides."

By the first section of the "act to incorporate the subscribers to the Union Bank of Florida"—Duval's Comp. 442—it is provided: "That a bank shall be established in the city of Tallahassee, under the title of the 'Union Bank of Florida,'" &c. The Court may take judicial notice that Tallahassee is in Leon county, (where the venue in this case was laid, and where this cause was tried,) that being the place where, by law, the Courts for this county are required to be holden. This suit was instituted in that Court, and it may well be doubted whether, under the peculiar provisions of the statutes referred to, it could properly have been brought in any other. The distinction upon which the question under discussion is based, is purely technical. This was so held by Chief Justice Marshal, in the case of Livingston vs. Jefferson, 2 Brock. Rep. 203, (cited at the bar.) and from the terms in which he expressed himself in delivering his opinion in that case, it appears quite evident that he would 155 gladly have seized upon any statutory regulation, which could, with propriety, have been construed to abolish the distinction between local and transitory actions, especially that class of them in which possession of real estate is not the object of the suit, and where the redress sought is only in damages. In that case the objection was taken by demurrer.

It seems to have been the intention of the Legislature to abolish this distinction, by the statutes cited to this point. Whether that be the effect of these statutes or not, this Court is clearly of opinion, that they confer upon the defendant, in cases like the present, the privilege of having any cause tried in the county where he resides, which the plaintiff may bring against him there; and that, after verdict, it is too late for him to object that it was tried in the wrong county. No objection was taken to the locality of the action in the Court below, and for the causes stated, such objection cannot be taken now.

The judgment of the Court below must be reversed, with costs; and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court of Leon county, for further proceedings, in accordance with this opinion.

Per totam curiam.

WILLIAM D. MOSELY AND THE EXECUTOR OF JESSE H. WILLIS vs. JOHN S. SHEPHERD.

WHERE two separate and distinct rules are taken at the same time against the Marshal, which, after a joint trial, are dismissed by one order or judgment of the Court, the parties to the two rules cannot legally unite in one joint appeal bond; although the order or judgment allowed the parties an appeal upon their filling their appeal bond. In such a case separate appeals should be taken.

APPEAL from the judgment of late Superior Court for Leon County.

The following tabular statement will show the different executions, which came to the hands of the Marshal against the executors of A. M. Gatlin, and the endorsements on each of them: 156

Jesse H. Willis, vs.	2981	16 May '44 10 minutes after 2 o'k.		May 16, 1844, levied on 22 negroes	4,850 50
W. D. Moseley, vs.	2985	16 May '44		May 16, 1844, same levy as endorsed on & attached to 2994 and 2981.	404 01

On 28th April, 1845, Willis, plaintiff in execution No. 2981, took a rule on the Marshal, to show cause why he should not pay over to him the moneys arising from sale of the mules, corn and fodder, sold on 1st Monday in January, under and by virtue of executions in his hand, as the property of the estate of Gatlin. On the same day Moseley, plaintiff in execution, No. 2985, took a similar rule.

Afterwards the following judgment was entered:

"This day came as well the plaintiffs in the above executions, as John S. Shepherd, assignee of the Union Bank of Florida, plaintiff in the several executions returned by the Marshal with his answer, by their respective Attorneys. And the Court having fully heard the evidence, and argument of counsel, doth order and adjudge, 157 that the moneys arising from the sales of the mules, and corn and fodder, sold on the first Monday in January last, by the Marshal, properly belong, and are applicable to the executions in favor of the Union Bank of Florida, against A. M. Gatlin's executors, Nos. 2887, 2982, 2983 and 2994, respectively; and therefore the Court discharges the said rules with costs, &c. From which order and judgment of the Court, the said Jesse H. Willis and W. D. Moseley, prayed an appeal, which is granted them upon their entering bond in the sum of one hundred dollars, conditioned for the payment of all costs and damages, on failure of prosecuting their said appeal with effect; and upon motion of the said Willis and Moseley, seventy days is allowed them, within which to execute their said appeal bond."

Willis & Moseley accordingly filed their joint appeal bond.

Appellee, by his counsel, moved to dismiss the appeal, because among other reasons assigned, it was taken jointly, and not separately.

Hagner & J. & L. Branch, for appellants, insisted:

The judgment of the Court being joint, the appeal was necessarily taken jointly, and a joint appeal bond filed. That, under the judgment, it would have been irregular to have taken the appeal in any other way. If the Court below erred in rendering a joint judgment, instead of a separate judgment on each of the rules, this of itself is sufficient ground for reversing this judgment; but not for a dismissal of the appeal.

A dismissal of the appeal, because taken in accordance with the judgment which appellants are seeking to reverse, among other reasons, because of the error in its being entered jointly, would be to deprive a party of all remedy for an injustice which is admitted; and the very error complained of, would preclude the judgment from being brought to this Court for reversal or correction.

Long & Walker, for Appellee.

BALTZELL, Justice:

Two rules were taken in the Court below, by different counsel, against John G. Camp, as follows:

Jesse H. Willis, vs. Lamb, Ex'r of Gatlin, dec'd. } And now, on this 28th day of April, 1845, on motion of Thompson & Hagner, of counsel for plaintiff, it is ordered, that John G. Camp, Esq., Marshal of the Middle Dis-
158 trict, do show cause on to-morrow morning, why he should not pay over to the plaintiff in this execution, the moneys arising from the sale of the mules, and corn and fodder, sold on the 1st Monday of January last, as the property of the estate of Gatlin, under and by executions in his hands, against the executors of said estate.

The other rule is entitled:

W. D. Moseley, vs. Ex'rs of Gatlin.

And was made by J. & L. O'B. Branch, counsel for plaintiff, and is in other respects a copy of the former.

The Marshal, in return to this writ, says: "He returns into Court the executions, No. 2887, &c., respectively issued at the suit of the Union Bank of Florida, against the executors of Gatlin, together with certain papers, and that he did, on the 16th May, 1844, levy upon said mules, corn and fodder, by virtue of said executions, and made sale thereof, to satisfy the same. That he holds the proceeds for the use and benefit of the assignee of the plaintiff in said suits respectively. All which he submits."

Afterwards, on a day which does not appear, the following order was made:

Jesse H. Willis, vs. L. G. Lamb, Ex'r of Gatlin.

Wm. D. Moseley, vs. The same. } In Re. The rule upon the Marshal, J. G. Camp.

This day came, as well the plaintiff in the above executions, as John S. Shepherd, assignee of the Union Bank of Florida, plaintiff in the several executions returned by the Marshal with his answer, by their respective attorneys; and the Court, having fully heard the evidence and argument of counsel, doth order and adjudge, that the moneys arising from the sales of the mules, and corn, and fodder, sold on the first Monday in January last, by the Marshal, properly belong, and are applicable to the executions in favor of the Union Bank of Florida, against A. M. Gatlin's Executors, respectively, and therefore the Court discharges the said rules, with costs. From which order and judgment of the said Court, the said Jesse H. Willis and W. D. Moseley, prayed an appeal, which is granted them, upon their entering into bond, in the sum of one hundred dollars, conditioned for payment of costs and damages, on failure to prosecute 159 their appeal with effect.

An appeal bond was executed and given, to the effect as follows:

Know all men by these presents, that we, Jesse H. Willis, Wm. D. Moseley, are held and firmly bound unto John S. Shepherd, in the just and full sum of one hundred dollars, &c.

The condition is such that, whereas, on the 8th of May, 1845, in the matter of a rule on John G. Camp, Marshal, issued at the instance of said Jesse H. Willis and W. D. Moseley, the said Court considered, that the moneys arising from certain sales of personal property, belonged to sundry executions, wherein Union Bank of Florida, for the use of John S. Shepherd, assignee, is plaintiff, and the executors of A. M. Gatlin are defendants; and thereupon dismissed said rule, from whilch said Willis and Moseley appealed to the Court of Appeals. If, therefore, the said Willis and Moseley shall pay the costs and damages, &c., then the obligation was to be void.

A motion is made to dismiss this appeal, on the ground that it was irregularly taken.

Without adverting to the fact, that the bond is not made payable to Camp, the party to the suit, and against whom the rule was taken, it is sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, that the interests of these parties are separate, and that they cannot legally unite in a joint appeal bond. The rule is in the nature of a suit; and if these cases had been commenced by writ and declaration, they must have presented separate and distinct interests and rights. The dismissal of them by one order, in no sense makes them joint, or a joint judgment. Properly speaking, and in strictness, there should have been a separate order in each case; but for brevity, as the same order may apply to several cases, their incorporation together has been permitted in practice, where the object of the Court could be equally attained by it. If the decision of the Court had been different, and for plaintiffs below, a separate order would have been requisite and indispensable. If the parties had succeeded, the judgment of the Court would have been, to pay to each the sum to which he might be found entitled, and his costs; and such would be the judgment of this Court, if the parties succeeded here upon their rules. In this latter event there would be two separate judgments in a common law case, and in favor of different parties, having distinct and opposing interests, which cannot, in our opinion, be according to the rules 160 of law.

As the judgment of dismissol stands now in the Court below, we are of opinion that separate executions ought to issue against each of the parties, for the costs in that Court.

The appeal will therefore be dismissed, with costs.

MARTHA ANN MANLEY, AND HIRAM MANLEY, IN RIGHT OF HIS WIFE, AND WILLIAM D. MOSELEY, ADMINISTRATORS DE BONIS NON OF SAMUEL PARKHILL, DECEASED, vs. THE UNION BANK OF FLORIDA.

A PERSON who has been appointed an Administrator de bonis non, after the institution of a suit, cannot be made a party to it by mere suggestion, although a copy of the record of such suggestion, and of his having been so made a party, be served upon him.

The "act to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages by the Courts of Common Law, and for other purposes," is in derogation of the Common Law; and mortgagees, when they resort to it, should be held to a strict compliance with its provisions; but the mortgagor or defendant should be allowed more latitude in making his objections, which will be sufficient for him to set forth substantially and as specifically, as the defence in an answer in Chancery, or in notice of special matter, under the general issue in a suit at law.

Neither the ordinary rules of special pleading, nor the technical rules of practice at law, are applicable to proceedings under this statute.

When a mortgagee has elected to proceed at law, and has obtained a judgment there upon his debt, he cannot proceed under this statute; but he should go into Chancery to obtain a foreclosure of his mortgage.

After judgment at law, a former recovery is a good plea in bar of proceedings under this statute.

After demurrer to a plea, it is too late to object that it was not filed in time.

APPEAL from late Superior Court for Leon county.

The suit was instituted under the statute "to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages by the Courts of Common Law, and for other purposes," on certain indentures of mortgage, executed and delivered

Manley and Moseley, Administrators, vs. Union Bank.

161 by Samuel Parkhill, in his life time, to appellee. The facts and pleadings are embraced in the opinion of the Court.

J. T. Archer, for Appellants:

I. The prayer for judgment and foreclosure and the judgment and decree of the Court thereon, treat the mortgage of 1839, and that of 1840, as if they were both given to secure the same notes and obligations, and upon the same property. The mortgage of 1839 was given on a part of the slaves, contained in the mortgage of 1840, and to secure the Bill of Exchange for $25,000, and nothing else. The petition should have prayed, and the Court should have decreed that the proceeds of the sale of the slaves named in the first mortgage and their increase, be applied, first to the payment of the Bill of Exchange, and the remainder, if any, on the second mortgage. The endorser on this bill, is entitled to the benefit of the security contained in the mortgage of 1839, in preference to the lien created by the mortgage of 1840. If this view be correct, the first error is well assigned.

II. The demurrer to objection filed 3rd May, 1844, remains undisposed of as shown by the record. This is fatal to the judgment and decree. 6 Howard, 389.

III. The Court had no power to make William D. Moseley a party defendant by suggestion of the plaintiff, and without the consent of Moseley. It is believed that the order of the 4th May, to that effect, is entirely unprecedented. The right of every defendant to have notice of proceedings instituted against him before the Courts, has ever been recognized as too sacred to be disturbed by the Legislature, much less to be subjected to the discretion of a Court.

IV. The record shows no legal notice to the defendants, (appellants in this Court,) as administrators de bonis non, against whom the judgment and decree are entered. The notice to Manley and Wife, as adminstrator and administratrix under the first grant of administration, is good against them as such, but is not good against them as administrator and administratrix de bonis non. 2 Call, 41-26. As to the copy of the order of 4th May, 1844, served upon Moseley in November, it is no legal notice of any thing, except the misgivings of the plaintiff, as to the sufficiency of the order itself. It was not ordered by the Court to be served, there is no seal of the Court attached, it commands nothing to be done by him, does not require him to appear, and is altogether irregular and informal. Besides, if it was a writ or notice, as contemplated by the statute, it should have been 162 served at least two months before the first day of the term. Duval's Comp. 40. The record shows the service of the copy to have been made about seven days before the first day of the term. The defendants Hiram & Martha, in the Court below, pleaded throughout as administrator and administratrix under the judgment of adminstrator, and never made an appearance as administrators de bonis non. William D. Moseley did not make any appearance, and judgment by default was entered against him. The record must show a legal notice to all the defendants below, or the judgment and decree are not only erroneous but absolutely void.

V. The 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 16th objections were stricken out, because not sworn to. The act for the foreclosure of mortgages at common law was passed in 1824. By the act of 1828, regulating judicial proceedings, administrators may deny the execution or consideration of any bond, note or other instrument of writing, without verifying the objection by oath.

VI. The administrators de bonis non, were not impleaded in and by the petition. The objections or pleas should not therefore have been entitled, as in a cause where they were defendants, and the striking out the remaining objections or pleas because not thus entitled, was erroneous.

VII. The equity of redemption in the mortgaged slaves, was not in the defendants to the petition, to wit Manly and Wife representatives of Parkhill under the first grant of administration, at the time of filing the 6th objection; but was in the administrations de bonis non. This equity could not be barred, except by petition against the parties "having the equity of redemption." The 6th objection contained a substantial defence, and the general demurrer was erroneously sustained.

VIII. The 10th objection sets up in bar of the judgment prayed for in the petition, that judgments at law had already been rendered against the defendant Martha (dum sola,) as administratrix in favor of the plaintiff on the same notes, &c., secured by said mortgages. Our statute was evidently intended to give to holders of notes, &c., secured by mortgages in one proceeding, the remedy at law on the notes, &c., and the remedy in equity on the mortgage. If petitioner had in the first instance proceeded under this statute, it might have recovered judgment on the bills and notes, and obtained foreclosures of the mortgages in one decree. But the petitioner has already obtained judgments at law on the notes and bills, and by proceeding upon these judgments can reach the property of the intestate not includ- 163 ed in the mortgages which is subject to levy and sale; a judgment under the statute could do no more, and there is no principle upon which two judgments and two executions can be allowed on the same cause of action. All the petitioner lacks to complete its remedy, is foreclosures of the mortgages to subject the mortgaged property to sale. This cannot be decreed in this proceeding without giving a judgment also, for under the statute, the judgment and foreclosure are inseparable; a Court of Equity alone can give the foreclosures separate from a judgment. The petitioner by instituting proceedings at law on the notes and bills, has made its election of the older and better remedy, and must be considered, since these securities have come to the dignity of judgments, to have waived and rejected the remedies prescribed by the statute. If another judgment could be allowed, there is no reason why other foreclosures may not be allowed in equity, and then we should have three distinct classes of proceedings on the same mortgage of personal property.

IX. The judgments at law are rendered for assets "quando acciderint," and petitioner is estopped by the record of its own judgments from extending an enquiry into the assets received by Mrs. Manley as administratrix, antecedent to the date of the judgments.

X. The 12th objection sets up by way of estoppel, the same facts set up in the 10th objection, and the same reasoning which supports the 10th objection, applies to the 12th.

XI. The bank being insolvent, is not entitled to any relief in Equity on the mortgages until the obligations of the bank, endorsed by Parkhill for accommodation of the bank, and now outstanding and dishonored are paid, or Parkhill's estate is indemnified. Ohio Cond. Rep. 225. The statute gives equitable relief, and must allow equitable defences.

XII. The 12th error assigned is abandoned.

XIII. Mrs. Manley was dismissed by the Superior Court, from the office of administratrix, upon the petition of the Bank, and the bank is estopped by the record, from proceeding against her as administratrix. Taylor vs. Savage, 17 Peters 224. Alsop vs. Mather, 8 Conn 584.

XIV. The 14th error assigned is abandoned.

XV. The amended objections 18th and 19th, should not have been stricken out. The only objection urged against them, was that they were pleas in abatement filed with pleas in bar. The statute requires all objections to be filed fifteen days before first term of the Court, next 164 after the service of notice is perfected; and allows the judgment and decree to be pronounced and entered at the first term. Now pleas in abatement in ordinary suits at law, are to be filed at or before the first term, and pleas in bar, at or before the second or trial term. But in this proceeding the first term is the trial term, and this necessarily forces the pleas in bar to be filed as early as the pleas in abatement, and destroys the order necessary to be observed in ordinary suits at law in filing pleas in abatement and pleas in bar.

XVI. The questions arising on the remurrer to the replication to 8th additional objection, are the same as those raised by the demurrer to the rejoinder in the case of Manley and Wife, plaintiffs in error, vs. The Union Bank, pending in this Court, and argued at a former day. The argument there made by the counsel for the plaintiffs in error, on the second error assigned, will apply here.

XVII. The mortgage on lands and slaves required of a purchaser of forfeited stock by the amendment of the charter of the Union Bank, passed in 1839, was doubtless required to keep up or add to the security of the Territory for its bonds issued and sold, to raise the Capital of the Bank. The Territory is entitled to have secured by the stockholders in stock mortgages payable to, and deposited in the bank, a sum of money at least equal to the amount which the Territory by its bonds is obliged to pay. If the bond and mortgage required of the purchaser of forfeited stock, was necessary to keep up the security of the Territory, and the amendment of 1839 is in force, then the first instruction to the jury is correct; but if the bonds and mortgages have all been taken up by the Bank, why may not the shares so purchased be paid for in money, or liabilities of the bank, or why may not the bank purchase the shares and sink them for the benefit of the other stockholders? Suppose the Bank to have taken up or reserved from sale a portion of the bonds of the Territory, more than equal to the stock subscribed for, and secured by Samuel Parkhill, may not the bank if it can find a purchaser, (the Territory being more than amply secured for the remaining outstanding bonds,) convert an amount of stock corresponding with the bonds taken up, or reserved from sale, into cash stock, which shall draw dividends under the 3rd section of the amendment of 1835? Or if the bank cannot find a purchaser, may it not in its corporate character, and as a plaintiff in execution, (the defaulting stockholder not objecting but insisting on the purchase,) bid off the shares for the benefit of the remaining stockholders, or in other words sink the stock in that way? Who could be injured by such a purchase? Not the Territory, for it is amply indemnified, and it is it's interest to have the bonds taken up; not the bank or remaining stockholders, for, by the operation, the shares are diminished, and the holders of the other shares will be entitled to greater dividends; and not the defaulting stockholder, for he gets the market value of his property credited on his obligations to the bank. If this view be correct, the law, as laid down by the Court below in the first and second instructions, is not universally correct.

The 3rd instruction to the jury, that the claim of the administratrix for $142,800, as an offset, cannot be allowed under the proof in the case, is not given in proper terms. The Court should instruct the jury as to the law. The facts, the jury are presumed by the law to be alone competent to decide. But in this instruction the court broadly assumes to determine both the law and the facts. It is mockery to call a jury if they are to be judges of nothing.

XVIII. The judgment and decree are given against the administrators de bonis non, and the suit, if it ever was commenced against them, must have been so commenced as early as May, 1844. Administration was granted to them in April. The costs are included in the judgment, and yet, "if any person shall bring any action against any executor or administrator within" six months from the taking out letters, "the plaintiff, although he may obtain judgment for the amount of his demand, shall not recover any costs in his suit," &c. Duval's Comp. p. 175.

XIX. The petition prays for judgment and foreclosure against Manley and Wife, as administrator and administratrix, under the first grant of administration, and the judgment and foreclosure run against William D. Moseley, Hiram Manley and Wife, adminstrators de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill. The prayer and the relief are irreconcilable.

T. H. Hagner, for Appellee:

Said—He would examine the errors assigned, not in the order in which they were assigned, but with reference to the subject matter to which they related. Their multiplicity was such as to prevent a very extended argument upon them.

On the 1st error alleged—the giving one judgment, and one decree of foreclosure on two mortgages—he said he would refer the Court to the petition, and to the mortgages also, to show that any other course would have been not only improper, but impossible.

166 The second mortgage was cumulative security, for the same debt named in the first, with others, and on same property, together with other—and the whole debts secured by both, were "installed," and payment of the whole deferred. The petitioner had set forth and propounded the execution of both, and the forfeiture, by reason of non payment of instalments. He referred to the statute regulating foreclosure. Of the 2d error assigned, he explained to the Court the loss of the papers in the cause, by defendant's counsel, which had forced the parties to supply the omission, as far as they could. That the plea filed of 3d May, 1844, and demurrer thereto, were lost, and were, by mutual consent, disregarded. But he showed that, if the defendant's loss of these papers was to be visited upon the petitioner, yet that the Court ought not to have regarded the plea of 3d May, 1844; that it was not sworn to, as required by 5th sec. of the act. He cited 2 Chitty's Archbold's Prac. 655, to show that, "if the plea be filed without an affidavit, (where an affidavit is required,) or with an insufficient affidavit to verify it, the plaintiff may treat it as a nullity, and sign judgment. That no judgment of non pros. could be regularly signed for not replying to it, and the plea is such an absolute nullity, that the defect cannot be waived." 1 Dowling, 28 and 693. 1 Strang. 639. 3 M. & S. 154.

That the same rule of law required the Court below, to strike out the 1st, 2d, 3d and 16th additional objections, not being sworn to; and that the 5th error assigned would be thus disposed of. That the 6th error was wrongly assigned: the Court had not stricken out the pleas; the defendants conformed to the order of the Court. That the pleas mentioned in 15th error, assigned as stricken out, were so stricken out, because filed without leave. They were out of time and out of place—pleas in abatement, filed after pleas in bar. That the defendants, after having, on 3d May, set up their discharge in the defection plea, pleaded non est factum, and after that, it was too late to plead matter of personal discharge over again. He cited on this, Stephen on Plead. 430. Yeaton vs. Lynn, 5 Peters Rep. 231.

The same answer would have covered the 7th error assigned, for the plea to which the demurrer was held good, was the non-joinder of a co-defendant. He insisted that the judgment was correct on general principles of law. To 8th, 9th and 10th errors assigned, he argued, that the recovery by the bank of judgments for assets quando, upon the original notes secured by these mortgages, and whose payment was installed, was no bar to this petition—either for decree of

ral principles of law, that a mortgagor has three remedies, all of which he may pursue at the same time:—ejectment—suit on the causes of action—or proceeding on the mortgage. 1 Powell on Mort. 204. 3 Powell on Mort. 966, note. 1 Sch. & Lef. 176.

To 18th error assigned, he argued, that the fact of Sam. Parkhill's being liable as accommodation endorser for the bank, would not prevent its proceeding against him. That if Parkhill had paid any thing, he could off-set it; and if not, he might, in a Court of Equity, compel the application of the debt due by him, to the discharge of his liability, on account of the bank. But to say the bank should not collect it's debts, was to take from it the means of payment of those liabilities.

That 12th error is wrongly assigned. There was an issue on 9th objection, and found for petitioner.

That the Court did not err in sustaining demurrer to defendant's 15th objection, because the plea was uncertain—no answer to the petition—sets up matter both before and since petition filed—and pleads matter of abatement as if matters in bar; and he urged that the 13th error was badly assigned for these reasons.

The 14th error attacks the judgment of the Court, upon what he said, seemed to him to be clear beyond doubt. The defendants set up a statute of limitation of five years, against a debt named in, and secured by the mortgage petitioned to be foreclosed. We demurred —thus admitting the five years had expired, but denying that this could bar a mortgage debt.

He said that, the errors assigned not yet disposed of, would be considered more particularly. That there remained the 3d, 4th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th—all of which he would present to the Court; and in order to do it the more succinctly, he would law down the principles for which he contended, and on which the case turned. Upon the questions presented before the jury, the verdict was for petitioner upon each issue, to wit: upon the 4th, 5th, 7th, 9th and 14th objections filed: and no great question seems to be made upon the law, as laid down by the Court below, in the matter of those issues, although the 17th error had been assigned thereon.

The questions particularly involved, grow out of the revocation of the letters of Manley and wife, subsequent to the commencement of the action, and of their re-appointment, together with the addition of Moseley, as administrator de bonis non. The effect of that revocation and re-appointment, are questions before the Court—but only so 168 far as that revocation, and alleged discharge, are well pleaded by the defendants, and the Court is made to know the facts in legal manner. He said that, the suit did not abate ex necessitate rei, by the dismissal of defendants from the administration. He adverted to the principles on which resort is had against the assets in hands of adminstrators, after revocation of letters—that it was the right of the creditor to follow decedent's estate—that the suit would continue against the administrators, unless they exempt themselves from the estate. This is done by one or two modes; either by showing that they have fully administered the estate at the time of their discharge, and before notice of the suit pending; or that, before suit brought, their letters are revoked, and that they turn over the estate to the new administrators. The plea is in abatement, and must give the party a better writ. Here, however, the new administrators are the same persons; the assets of the estate had, to be sure, left their hands; but they are again in hand, before plea pleaded. Were we to discontinue, we would begin again, against the same defendants, and another. 2 Williams on Ex'rs. 1195. 6 Comyn's Digest, p. 309. Our resort would be against the very property in their hands. There is no such case as this administration to be found in the books. The new grant of letters was irregular:—1st. In being to the same party removed. 2d. In associating with the widow another person. The law never contemplated, that where a party was dismissed for refusal to obey an order of the Court of Probate, that same Court of Probate should re-appoint the party. And 1 Williams on Executors, p. 267, declares, that administration must be committed to the wife alone—not even associating the husband, "because if he should survive her, he would be administrator, contrary to the meaning of the act," (the statute of adminstration.) Again, there is no instance of an executor answerable only pro tanto, as having administered only partially. Kelbey vs. Sueyd, 2 Molloy, 201. 1 Chitty's Equity Index, 531. And upon analogy, where adminstration is fully committed in the first instance, there can be no such exemption from administering the whole estate, as that set up here. The new grant of letters, then, is in truth, but a continuance of the administration which had been suspended—and at the time of plea pleaded, Manley and wife were, in the eye of the law, proper representatives of the estate, required to administer the assets. Independently, therefore, of the 169 party, Moseley, we were then entitled as now, to the judgment and decree against Manley and wife.

Upon the 16th error assigned, he insisted, that the judgment of the Court below was correct, in point of pleading, and also in point of principle. It is not enough for an administrator to be turned out of the administration, for his own default, to exempt him from accountability.

He cited, 2 Harris & Gill, 139. He asked, if the plea had gone on to show the new administration already then committed to defendants, and property in hand to satisfy the debt, would not the suit have remained good? If so, the replication exhibits the same facts.

Of the causes of demurrer to replication to 8th plea, it is alleged that matters of record are not verified by the record. He cited 2 Gill & Johnson, 430, to show that, where a plea contains matters of fact and of record, it must conclude with a verification—which he insisted was this case.

He further contended, that the cause was pending against Manley and wife, as representatives of the estate; and the Court being informed, by suggestion, that another representative had come in to the administration, service was perfected upon by the Marshal. That no scire facias was proper—the suit had not abated—no new process, as in the original institution of a suit, was necessary, for the old suit was pending—the new adjunct was to be notified that the suit was so pending—this was done. The case occurring was a new one, without parallel, and therefore without precedent. Upon the general errors assigned, he argued, that the judgment and decree was substantially correct; and that if error had been made, this Court could give the petitioner that relief which his case warranted—the application of the property mortgaged, to the mortgage debt.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This suit was instituted by the Union Bank of Florida, in the Superior Court of Leon county, in the Middle District of Florida, against Martha Ann Manley, administratrix, and Hiram Manley, administrator in right of his wife, of the lands and tenements, goods and chattels, rights and credits, and effects, which were of Samuel Parkhill, late of Leon county, deceased, by petitioner, under the act of the Legislative Council of the late Territory of Florida, approved Dec. 11th, 1824, entitled, "An act to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages by the Courts of Common Law of this Territory, and for other purposes," for the purpose of foreclosing two mortgages given by the 170 said Samuel Parkhill in his life time, to said Union Bank, the first bearing date the 6th day of November, 1839, on twenty slaves, with the future issue and increase of the female slaves, to secure the payment of a certain bill of exchange for twenty-five thousand dollars, dated August 29, 1839, drawn upon Hamilton & Co., of New York, at ninety days after date, payable to and endorsed by William H. Brodie;— the second bearing date the 19th day of October, 1840, made and executed by the said Samuel Parkhill, to the petitioner, on the same twenty slaves, set forth in the mortgage of 6th November, 1839, and on twenty-two other slaves, together with the future issue and increase of the females, which said last mentioned mortgage was intended to secure the payment of the following debts, viz:—1. A certain bill of exchange, dated 29th August, 1839, payable 90 days after the 4th of November, 1839, drawn on Hamilton & Co., of New York, in favor of William H. Brodie, for twenty-five thousand dollars, credited by endorsements, with the sum of $9,350. Feb. 22d, 1840, and which is, (stated in the notice given to said Martha Ann Manley and Hiram Manley, to be,) the same bill specified in the mortgage of the 6th Nov. 1839. 2. A note of said Samuel, payable to the order of John Parkhill, cashier, dated 28th August, 1839, at 90 days after 24th Oct. 1839, for twenty thousand dollars, credited by endorsements, July 18th, 1840, by the sum of $3923 58-100 dollars. 3. A bill of exchange, dated Feb. 8th, 1837, drawn by William H. Brodie, on Hamilton & Cole, New York, in favor of, and endorsed by said Samuel, for the sum of ten thousand five hundred dollars. 4. A certain note of said Samuel, dated 24th April, 1839, in favor of and endorsed by William P. Craig, for fifteen thousand dollars, payable eight months after its date, credited 21st January, 1840, with the sum of $10,000, and on 1st January, 1840, with the sum of $1099 35-100. 5. A bill of exchange, dated March 22d, 1837, drawn by William P. Craig, in favor of and endorsed by said Samuel, on Maitland, Kennedy & Co., New York, at 4 months date, for the sum of five thousand two hundred dollars. 6. A promissory note of the said Samuel, dated Jan. 4, 1840, payable to and endorsed by R. H. Berry, at ninety days after its date, for fourteen hundred and forty-three 58-100 dollars. 7. A note of the said Samuel, dated Jan. 10, 1840, payable to and endorsed by John Parkhill, at ninety days, for the sum of six thousand dollars. 8. A promissory note of the said Samuel, dated 18th March, 1840, payable sixty days after date, to and endorsed by William P. Craig, for ten thousand dollars. 9. A promissory note of the said Samuel, dated 171
Jan. 19th, 1840, payable 90 days after its date, to the order of, and endorsed by John Parkhill, for five thousand dollars. 10. A promissory note of the said Samuel, dated Feb. 1, 1840, payable ninety days after date, to and endorsed by John Parkhill, for five thousand dollars. 11. And a promissory note of the said Samuel, dated October 19, 1840, payable to the said Union Bank of Florida, or its assigns, on demand, for thirteen thousand two hundred dollars. Which said several sums were, by the terms of the last mentioned mortgage, to be paid in and by the following installments, viz:— Twenty-five thousand dollars on or before the first day of April, in the year 1841, and fifteen thousand dollars annually thereafter, on or before the first day of April, in each succeeding year, until the whole of said debts, with the interest threon, should have been duly paid and discharged. The petition sets forth the death of Samuel Parkhill; the grant of letters of administration, upon the goods and estate, which were of the said Samuel, at the time of his death, to his widow, Martha Ann Parkhill; her intermarriage with the said Hiram Manley; alleges that the first, second and third installments, mentioned and specified in the mortgage last set forth, were due and unpaid; and that the same, with the interest due thereon, amounted to the sum of $64,049 99-100; and prayed judgment for the said debt, and foreclosure of the equity of redemption, in the usual form, and for further relief, &c.

Personal service of notice was given, on the 20th of February, 1844, to Martha Ann Manley, administratrix, and Hiram Manley, administrator as aforesaid, of the intention of the Union Bank of Florida, to institute this suit, agreeable to the provisions of the act above referred to, and that it would, on the fourth Monday in April then next, move the Court for a decree of foreclosure, &c., according to the prayer of the petition. On the 3d day of the ensuing month of May, said Martha Ann and Hiram Manley filed a plea, alleging in substance that, after the commencement of this suit, to wit:—on the 22d day of March, 1844, in the county aforesaid, they were dismissed from the administration of the estate of the said Samuel Parkhill, by competent authority, to wit:—by the Judge of the Superior Court of said county, sitting as an appellate Court, &c. To this plea, there was a special demurrer filed by the counsel for the petitioner, and this plea and demurrer remain undisposed of upon the record. This plea and demurrer, it is alleged by the counsel for the petitioner, was missing at the time of the trial of this cause in 172 the Court below; and as that fact is understood to have been conceded by the counsel for the appellants, and there seems to be some difference of opinion between the counsel for the respective parties, as to the fact whether they were noticed and considered of record, during the argument of this cause in the Court below, and are not deemed material to a decision of the case, we pass them without further notice. On the 4th day of the same month of May, the administrators, Manley and wife, as appears by the record, asked leave to file additional pleas; and the Court so allowed, and continued the cause.

The petitioners then suggested the appointment, by the Court of Leon county, of William D. Moseley, together with the defendant, Martha Ann Manly, administrator de bonis non of said estate; and moved the Court that the said William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non, be made a party to the said suit, and the suit continue, as well against the defendants, as against the said William D. Moseley, and the same was done accordingly. On the 18th day of July, 1844, the said defendants, Martha Ann Manley and Hiram Manley, sued as administratrix and administrator of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, filed certain additional and amended pleas, (nineteen in number,) to the said petition.

On the day of November, 1844, the copy of the order of the 4th May, 1844, with the Marshal's return thereon, was filed; which copy and return is in these words: "In Leon Superior Court." "The Union Bank of Florida vs. administrators of Sam'l Parkhill." "On Petition of Foreclosure of Mortgage."

The petitioner, by his counsel, moved for judgment and decree, by default, no objections having been filed under the statute, the plea of Hiram Manley and Martha Ann Parkhill, administrators, filed on the 3d day of May, 1844, not being verified by affidavit. But the Court overruled the motion; and the petitioner then filed his demurrer, (special,) to said plea. The administrators, Manley and wife, then asked leave to file additional pleas; and the Court so allowed and continued the case. The petitioner then suggested the appointment, by the County Court of Leon county, of William D. Moseley, together with the defendant, Martha Ann Manley, administrator de bonis non of said estate; and moved the Court that the said William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non, be made a party to the said suit; and the suit continue, as well against the defendants, as 173 against the said William D. Moseley; and the same is done accordingly.

"A true copy. N. P. Bemis, D. C. "Served a copy of this copy of record, on Wm. D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, Nov. 4th, 1844. "J. G. Camp, Marshal, by Deputy Wm. R. Taylor."

On the 4th day of November, 1844, the petitioner, by his counsel, gave notice that he would move the Court to strike out sundry pleas, eighteen in number, heretofore filed by Martha Ann Manley, late Parkhill, and Hiram Manley, sued as administratrix and administrator of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, filed in July last, for the reasons following:

1. Because said pleas are not properly entitled, in this—that they are entitled in a cause of Martha Ann Manley, (late Parkhill,) and Hiram Manley, sued as administratrix and administrator of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, at the suit of the Union Bank of Florida, upon petition for foreclosure of mortgage, and for judgment, &c. Whereas, the said pleas upon the said petition of the Union Bank of Florida, ought to have been entitled, in the cause upon said petition, wherein the Union Bank of Florida is petitioner, against Martha Ann Manley and William D. Moseley, administrators de bonis non, of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, as the same is now pending in Leon Superior Court.

2. And as to the said pleas, firstly, secondly, thirdly, and sixteenthly: Because the same are not sworn to, as directed by the statute in such case made and provided.

And on Monday, Dec. 30th, 1844, the Court having considered the motion theretofore made in this case, to strike out sundry pleas filed by Martha Ann Manley, (late Parkhill,) and Hiram Manley, on the 18th day of July (then) last: Ordered, that the said plea be stricken out, unless the said Manley and wife should rightly entitle said pleas, numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17 and 18, in the case pending against the administrators de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, deceased.

And it was further ordered, that the pleas No. 1, 2, 3 and 16, be absolutely stricken out, because the same are not sworn to; and thereupon the defendants, by their counsel, amended the title to their said several pleas, to read as follows, viz: "The Union Bank of Florida vs. Martha A. Manley, in her own right, and Hiram Manley, in right of his wife, Martha Ann, together with William D. Moseley, impleaded administrators de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, deceased."

174 On the 31st day of December, 1844, the petitioner, by it's attorneys, filed general demurrers to the sixth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth pleas, as above pleaded; and special demurrers to the ninth, fifteenth and seventeenth of said pleas; to which the defendants joined; and the Court, after argument, sustained said demurrers, and rendered judgment for costs thereon, against the said defendants; and on motion of the petitioner, ordered that the eighteenth and nineteenth pleas should be stricken out; and the same was done accordingly. Whereupon the said defendants, Martha Ann and Hiram, asked leave of the Court to amend their ninth plea; which was granted, and the same was amended accordingly. And thereupon the petitioner, by it's counsel, filed its replications to the several pleas of the said Martha Ann and Hiram, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9 and 14, above pleaded; and issue was joined to all the said replications except the one filed to the said 8th plea, to which last replication the counsel for the defendant filed their demurrer; to which the petitioner, by it's counsel, joined, and after argument had thereon, the court overruled said last mentioned demurrer. The issues joined upon the 4, 5, 7, 9 and 14th pleas, were submitted to a jury, at the Fall Term of the Leon Superior Court—who returned a verdict upon all the issues joined, to wit:—upon the issues joined upon the 4, 5, 7, 9 and 14th pleas; but without stating any amount or sum in their verdict.

And thereupon the following decree and judgment of foreclosure, was entered in said cause, viz:—"Middle District of Florida. "In Leon Superior Court, at Fall Term, 1844. "The Union Bank of Florida, petitioner, vs. Martha Ann Manley, (late Parkhill,) in her own right, and Hiram Manley, in right of his wife Martha Ann, and William D. Moseley, administrators de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, defendants."

"And now at this day came, as well the petitioner, by it's attorneys, as the said defendants, Martha Ann and Hiram, by their attorneys; and thereupon came a jury, to wit:—(naming the jurors)—who, being elected, tried and sworn, the truth to speak upon the issues joined, upon their oaths do say, that they do find for the petitioner upon all the issues joined, to wit:—upon the issues joined upon the fourth, fifth, seventh, ninth and fourteenth pleas respectively. And the defendant, William D. Moseley, not having shewn any objection or cause whatever, against the foreclosure of the equity of redemption of, in and to the said mortgaged property, in said deed mentioned, but being in default—and the said petitioner having exhibited to the Court here, the several original promissory notes, and bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt, to secure which the mortgages, in said petitioner's petition, set forth and filed with the same, were executed; and affidavit having also been made, and read to the Court here, of John G. Gamble, President of the said Union Bank of Florida, the petitioner for the foreclosure of the said mortgages, of the amount of principal and interest claimed, as due at the time of making such affidavit; and which said promissory notes, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt, it appears to the Court here, were given by the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in his life time; and to secure the payment whereof, the said deeds of mortgage, exhibited to the Court, and filed with such petition, were made, executed and delivered, by said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in his life time, to the said petitioner. It is therefore, this fourth day of January, 1845, no cause havig been shewn to the contrary, considered by the Court, that the said petitioner do recover of the said defendants, Martha Ann Manley, in her own right, Hiram Manley, in right of his wife, the said Martha Ann, and William D. Moseley, administrators de bonis non of said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, the sum of seventy-one thousand and twenty-three dollars and forty-eight cents, due to the said petitioner, for principal and interest of its mortgage debt aforesaid, up to the rendition of this decree, together with its costs and charges of these proceedings by the said petitioner, in this behalf expended, to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court, to be made and levied of the slaves in said mortgage specified and named, and of the increase of the female slaves, since the execution of the said mortgage; and if the same shall be insufficient to satisfy the petitioner's debt, and the costs and charges aforesaid, then the remainder of said debt to be made and levied of the goods and chattles, lands, slaves and tenements generally, of the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in the hands of the said defendants, administrators de bonis non aforesaid, to be administered. And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the said defendants, administrators de bonis non aforesaid, and all persons claiming, or to claim, by, through or under the said Samuel Parkhill, deecased, be and the same are hereby forever foreclosed and barred of and from all right and equity of redemption, in and to the said mortgaged property, to wit.—the slaves—(here naming them)—and the increase of the female slaves above named, and every part of said mortgaged property in said mortgages named, specified and described. And it is further ordered, that this judgment be entered up and filed; and that the petitioners have execu- 176
tion therein, according to law." 175

On the trial of this cause, the following bill of exceptions was filed, which was signed, sealed, and made a part of the record, and which is in these words:

Middle District of Florida, Leon Superior Court, Fall Term, December 30th, 1844. The Union Bank of Florida vs. Hiram Manley administrator in right of his Wife of Sam'l Parkhill, deceased, Martha Ann Manley, administratrix of Sam'l Parkhill, deceased, "memorandum." That the counsel for the petitioner on a former day, moved the Court to strike out the plea filed by the defendants, and appearing upon the records, upon the following grounds, to wit:

1st. Because said pleas are not properly entitled in this, that they are entitled in a cause of Martha Ann Manley, (late Parkhill,) and Hiram Manley, sued as administrator and administratrix of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, at the suit of the Union Bank of Florida, upon petition for foreclosure of mortgage and for judgment, &c. Whereas the said pleas upon said petition of the Union Bank of Florida, ought to have been entitled in the cause upon said petition, wherein the Union Bank of Florida, is petitioner against Martha Ann Manley and William D. Moseley, administrators de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill deceased, as the same is now pending in Leon Superior Court.

2nd. And as to the said pleas, firstly, secondly, thirdly, and sixteenthly above pleaded. Because the same are not sworn to as directed by the Statute in such case made and provided. And the same was argued by counsel, but the Court not being fully advised of its decision in this cause, took time to considered thereof, and now in this day the Court being fully advised, ordered the said pleas to be stricken out, to which opinion and decision the defendants by their counsel excepted and prayed, that this their bill of exceptions should be signed and sealed by the Court; which was done."

There was another bill of exceptions filed in the cause, but it does not embrace any of the points which the Court has found it necessary to decide upon this appeal, and will therefore be no farther noticed. The defendants to wit, Martha Ann Manley and Hiram Manley, her husband, and William D. Moseley, administratrix and administrators de bonis non, prayed an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the (late) Territory of Florida, which was granted. The case was carried up, and was transferred to this Court, pursuant to the provisions contained in the last clause of the 4th section of the 7th article, schedule and ordinance of the constitution of this State, and the 14th section of the act to organize this Supreme Court. A motion was made on the first day of the Term to dismiss it, upon the same ground as that on which the motion was made to dismiss the case of Charles D. Stewart vs. Thomas Preston, Junior, in which Judge Baltzell, on a former day of this term, delivered the opinion of the Court, and was for the same reasons as given in that case dismissed. Whereupon the appellants by their counsel filed herein the following assignment of errors to wit:

1st. There is error in the petition in praying for, and in the final judgment and decree in giving one judgment, and one foreclosure on two alleged mortgages.

2nd. There is error in giving the judgment and decree in this case, before the demurrer to first objection filed, 3rd May, 1844, was disposed of.

3rd. There is error in the order of the Court of 4th May, 1844, making William D. Moseley a party by suggestion.

4th. There is no legal notice of such suit given to the administrators de bonis non, and there is no appearance by the administrators de bonis non.

5th. The Court erred in striking out the 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 16th additional objections.

6th. The Court erred in ordering the other additional objections to be stricken out because not properly entitled.

7th. The Court erred in sustaining general demurrer to 6th additional objection.

8th. The Court erred in sustaining general demurrer to 10th additional objection.

9th. The Court erred in sustaining general demurrer to 11th additional objection.

10th. The Court erred in sustaining general demurrer to 12th additional objection.

11th. The Court erred in sustaining general demurrer to 13th additional objection.

12th. The Court erred in sustaining special demurrer to 9th additional objection.

13th. The Court erred in sustaining special demurrer to 15th additional objection.

178 14th. The Court erred in sustaining special demurrer to 17th additional objection.

15th. The Court erred in striking out the amended pleas.

16th. The Court erred in overruling demurrer to replication to 8th additional objection.

17th. The Court erred in the first, second and third instructions to the Jury.

18th. The Court erred in giving judgments for costs against appellants.

19th. The judgment and decree are at variance with the prayer of the petition.

20th. Upon the record and pleadings, the judgment and decree should not have been given in favor of the petitioner.

Passing for the present, the first error assigned, and (for the reasons before stated,) the second also, we come to the third, which is that there is error in the order of the Court of 4th May, 1844, making W. D. Moseley, a party by suggestion. This suit was commenced on the 16th day of February, 1844. W. D. Moseley was not appointed administrator "de bonis non," until the 22nd day of the succeeding month of April; until that time it does not appear, that he had any connection with the estate of said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, and if this suit was then pending, or was pending on the 4th day of May following, when the suggestion mentioned was made, we are not aware of any principle of the common law, and certainly we have no statute, by which he could have been made a party to it, by a mere suggestion. It is insisted on behalf of the petitioner, that he, together with the said Martha Ann Manley, administratrix "de bonis non," came into Court, exhibited letters of administration to them "de bonis non," upon said estate, and demanded the assets belonging thereto, which it seems were in the hands of a receiver, appointed by the Court to take charge of them, and that the fact of his being such administrator was therefore judicially known to the Court, and it could for that reason properly grant the order to make him a party defendant by suggestion. No authorities were cited to this point, and it is presumed that none exist. The statement of a single case we think must demonstrate the unsoundness of this proposition. Suppose A, against whom twenty suits are pending, dies; B obtains administration upon the goods and estate left by him at his death, and sued C, for a debt due to his intestate in his life time, makes profert of his letters of administration, and adduces them on the trial of his cause, which he must do to show his authority to sue. Here the 179
Court may, nay must take judicial notice, that B is administrator of the goods and estate which were of A, at the time of his death. But could any Court, under such circumstances, make B a party defendant to each of the twenty suits so pending against A, as aforesaid, by a mere suggestion? We think that no lawyer upon mature reflection will answer this question in the affirmative. Yet upon the principle assumed, a Court might do it, and enter up judgment against him in each case for thousands of dollars. But is is said that he had notice of the order and was therefore a party, and it appears by the record that on the 4th day of November, 1844, a copy of a certified copy of the record of that order, was served on Wm. D. Moseley, administrator, "de bonis non," of Samuel Parkhill deceased, by the Marshal. But, if Wm. D. Moseley could have been made a party at all to this proceeding, was that such a notice as the case required? There was no order of the Court requiring such a copy to be served upon him. The copy was not a writ or process known to the law. It required nothing of, and commanded nothing to be done by him. It was not verified by the seal of the Court, and was not calculated to enlighten Mr. Moseley much, as to the nature of the proceeding. Upon the whole, we are compelled to say that it was no legal notice to him, and there is no pretence that he voluntarily made himself a party; on the contrary, the judgment and decree against him went by default. The third error assigned, is therefore well taken, as are also the fourth, nineteenth and twentieth, so far as they regard Wm. D. Moseley, who is no party to this suit.

The Court does not deem it necessary to enter upon an investigation of all the errors above set forth, but to examine a few of the most prominent ones, which are deemed to be decisive of the case; in doing which we pass to the 8th and 9th errors assigned, which are, that "the Court erred in sustaining a general demurrer to each of the 10th and 11th, additional objections." The 10th objection, and also the 11th is in substance and effect a plea of former judgment, recovered upon the same identical causes of action set up in this case. The plea commences, "and said defendants for further plea in this behalf by leave of the Court," &c.; averring and protesting, that since the institution of this suit, their letters of administration were revoked and annulled by competent authority, and that all of the estate of Samuel Parkhill deceased, in their hands unadministered, was taken away by like authority, to wit:—The order of Leon Superior Court, and at the instance of petitioner, showing objections and cause by 180 way of plea in conformity to the statute in such case made and provided, against a judgment and foreclosure of the equity of redemption in the said mortgaged property, in plaintiff's petition mentioned under the statute in conformity with complainant's petition, and answering said petition, and showing equity against the same, by Brockenbrough & Archer, their attorneys, come and defend the wrong and injury, when, &c., and say that said petitioner ought not to have the judgment and foreclosure by its petition sought, because they say, &c., (setting out fully and distinctly the several matters, which are set up as causes of action in this case from one to eleven inclusive,) and they say that said plaintiff heretofore to wit, in the adjourned Fall Term of 1842, continued and held into the year 1843, in the Superior Court of Leon County, held at Tallahassee, in the County of Leon, before Samuel J. Douglas, Judge, impleaded the defendant Martha Ann, then a feme sole, and widow, in certain pleas of trespass on the case, upon promises to the damage of said petitioner of divers amounts and sums of money in the said several cases specified, for the non payment and non performance of divers promises to pay the very same identical promissory notes, and the several sums of money and interest therein specified, in this plea herein before mentioned, and set forth in petitioner's petition, and mortgage aforesaid, and such proceedings were thereupon had in that Court upon the said pleas, that afterwards to wit, on the 24th day of February, 1843, at the County aforesaid, the said petitioner, then plaintiff, by the consideration and judgment of the said Court recovered, &c., (setting out the recovery in due form distinctly upon each, and every one of the several causes of action mentioned,) and there aver that the said Martha Ann Parkhill, in the said several pleas mentioned, is the same Martha Ann Manley and none other, she having since said judgments were obtained as aforesaid against her, intermarried with Hiram Manley, as in said petition alleged; and these defendants further aver, that the several causes of action on which the said judgments were obtained in the said pleas, are the same and all of the same and none other than the several notes, bills and liabilities in plaintiff's petition, and supposed mortgages mentioned as by the records and proceedings thereof, still remaining in the said Superior Court of Leon County at Tallahassee in Leon County aforesaid, more fully and at large appears, which said judgments still remain in full force and effect, not in the least reversed, satisfied or made void, and this the said defen-

Manley and Moseley, Administrators, vs. Union Bank.

181 dants are ready to verify by the said records. Wherefore they pray judgment if the said petitioner ought to have and maintain its aforesaid action thereof against them.

The eleventh objection is very similar in its leading features to the tenth, except in the concluding part; after the usual averments of identity of the defendant and of the causes of action, &c., it proceeds as follows to wit: "And the said petitioner, The Union Bank of Florida, plaintiff in the several actions wherein the judgments were recovered against the defendant Martha Ann, as administratrix as aforesaid (dum sola,) in each of the said several actions in the last plea mentioned, admitted of record, in and by the said several judgments, that the said defendant Martha Ann, had no assets of the said Samuel deecased, in her hands unadministered, sufficient whereby to satisfy the said damages of the said Union Bank, so in each of said actions recovered as aforesaid, or any part of them or either of them, and then and there at the time and place of the rendition of the said judgments the said Union Bank, petitioner, being then plaintiff, took judgment in each of said several actions against the said defendant Martha Ann, then a feme sole, to take effect as to assets "Quando acciderint." and this, they the said defendants are ready to verify by the said several records of judgments remaining in said Leon Superior Court in this and last pleas before mentioned. Wherefore they pray judgment if the said petitioner ought to be admitted or received, to file his said petition, wherein he prays judgment generally of the said mortgage debt aforesaid; without saying that any assets or effects, wherewith and whereby to satisfy said judgments, have come to the hands of these defendants or either of them, since the rendition of the said several judgments, quando, &c., above pleaded." A general demurrer was put in by the petitioner to each of these pleas or objections, which after argument were sustained by the Court. Was there error in this? If either of those pleas contained a good and substantial defence to this suit, the Court erred in sustaining the demurrer thereto. Did they or either of them contain such defence?

It may not be improper here to remark, that a misapprehension, (to some extent,) seems to have prevailed in relation to the proceedings under this statute, for the foreclosure of the equity of redemption in mortgage, viz: that the defendant in stating his objections, should be required to comply with the strictest rules of technical special pleading, while the petitioner may be indulged in a more 182 latitudinous course of proceeding. But the converse of this proposition would be a more reasonable rule.

A statute which gives a new remedy by summary proceedings, or other deviations from our ancient constitutions, ought not to receive a liberal construction. Poal vs. Neal, 2d Sid. page 63. Dwarris on statutes 77. This is such a statute—all of its provisions are for the benefit of mortgagees. Nothing is conceded to him who holds the equity of redemption. In other cases at law the mere entry of an attorney's name to the suit, entitled the defendant to a continuance at the first term, and he may plead most of his defences without oath, and has seventy days after the close of the appearance term, within which to file his pleas. But when the mortgagee proceeds under this statute to foreclose the equity of redemption, the defendant must file his objections fifteen days before the first day of the term next following the expiration of the notice. They are required by this act to be sworn to, and the case must be tried at the first term if the plaintiff shall require it, unless good cause be shown by the opposite party for a continuance, and even the important right of a trial by jury is by a literal construction of the act, also left to the option of the petitioner. This statute is in derogation of the common law, an innovation upon old and well established principles, and mortgagees when they resort to it, may well be held to a strict compliance with its provisions; but the defendant in making his objections, should not be required to conform to all "the nice sharp quillets" of special pleading. If he sets them out substantially, so that the petitioner can readily see and understand the grounds of his objection, or in other words if he sets them out as specifically as he would be obliged to do, the matter of his defence in an answer in Chancery, or in a notice of special matter under the general issue in a suit at law, verified by oath agreeable to the requirement of the statute relating to the subject, it is sufficient.

Having premised thus much, we proceed to consider the effect of these pleas upon this cause, and for the purpose of this inquiry, the facts alleged in them are to be taken as true. The petitioner, then, has already obtained judgments at law upon these several causes of action. Are they entitled to another judgment at law? The object of the statute is two-fold. First: A foreclosure of the equity of redemption:—and second, a judgment for the debt secured by the mortgage. The 8th section of the act declares, that "the judgment of the Court in the foreclosure of a mortgage, shall, in all cases, be entered up and filed, and that execution shall issue thereon, as in 183 other cases." Duval's Comp. 41—42. It was urged, in support of this proceeding, that a mortgagee has, at common law, three remedies, all of which he may pursue at the same time, viz:—that he may bring suit at law, upon the bond or note secured by the mortgage; institute an action of ejectment, to put himself in possession of the rents and profits of the estate, and file a bill in Chancery, to foreclose the mortgage. All this is very true. But in the action of ejectment, the mortgagee would accomplish nothing more than to put himself in possession of the rents and profits. And in Equity he would obtain nothing but his foreclosure. In the case of Dunkley against Van Buren and others, 3 John Chy. Reps. 330—331—the Chancellor held, that "the party on a bill to foreclose a mortgage is confined in his remedy to the pledge. Such a suit is not intended to act in Personam. It seems to be generally admitted in the books, that the mortgagee may proceed at law on his covenant, at the same time that he is prosecuting on his mortgage in Chancery; and that, after foreclosure here, may sue at law on his bond for the deficiency. Lord Redesdale, in 1 Schoale & Lefroy, 166. 13 Vez. 205. Aylet vs. Hill, Dicken 551. 2 Bro. Ch. R. 125. Perry vs. Barker, 13 Vez. 198. Dashwood vs. Blythway, 1 Eq. Cases Abr. 317.

The natural, and certainly the most convenient and beneficial course for the mortgagor, (says Mr. Justice Story, in his 2 Comm. on Eq. 293,) would seem to be, to follow out the civil law rules on this subject; that is to say, primarily and ordinarily to direct a sale of the mortgaged property, giving the debtor any surplus, after discharging the mortgage debt. And secondarily: to apply the remedy of foreclosure only to special cases, where the former remedy would not apply, or might be inadequate or injurious to the interests of the parties. This course has, accordingly, been adopted in many of the American Courts of Equity, and is also the prevailing practice in Ireland. And this is done without any distinction, whether there be a power to sell given in the mortgage or not. 4 Kent's Comm Lect. 58, p. 181—182—2d. edition. Brickerhoff vs. Thallheiner, 2 John Chy. Rep. 486. Mills vs. Dennis, 3 John. Chy. Reps. 369—370. Perry vs. Barker, 13 Vez. 205. 3 Powell on Mort. 963. McDonough vs. Shewbridge, 2 Ball & Beatt. 555.

In England a practice widely different has prevailed. A bill for a foreclosure is deemed, in common cases, the exclusive and appropriate remedy; and the Courts of Equity there refuse, except in special cases, to decree a compulsory sale, against the will of the mort- 184 gagor. These Courts, however, have departed from this general rule in certain cases; as, where the estate is deficient to pay the incumbrance; or where the mortgagor is dead, and there is a deficiency of personal assets; or the mortgage is of a dry reversion; or where the mortgagor dies, and the estate descends to an infant. 2 Story's Eq. 294.

Our statute is cumulative. It provides a fourth remedy, and was intended to save the mortgagee the necessity of both a suit at law, and a suit in Chancery, to obtain his mortgage debt. But when the mortgagee has elected to proceed at law, and has obtained a judgement there upon his debt, he cannot then proceed under this statute, and obtain another judgment at law. The law abhors a multiplicity of actions, and where one remedy has been resorted to with success, it usually restrains resort to another, to accomplish the same purpose. Lessee of Allen vs. O'Parish, 1 Ohio Cond. Rep. 536. Here the effort is to obtain a second judgment at law for the same debt, and that too, without alledging that assets have come to the hands of the defendants, since the rendition of the first judgment, notwithstanding that judgment was taken "quando acciderint," by which the plaintiff admitted that the defendant had fully administered to that time. 2 Saunders, 219, note, (2,) Parker vs. Dee. 3 Swanst. 532: Note to Drewery vs. Thacker. And accordingly, the terms of such judgment are, that the plaintiff do recover his debt, to be levied of the goods of the testator, which shall thereafter come to the hands of the executor, (or administrator, as the case may be.) 2 Saunders, 210, note, (2.) And in debt, on scire facias on this judgment, proof of the executor, (or administrator,) receiving assets, is always confined at the trial, to a period subsequent to the judgment. Taylor vs. Hallman, Buller's N. P. 169. 2 Saunders, 219—a—note, (2.) 2 Williams on Executors, 1221.

When a judgment is obtained, the original cause of action is merged in it; and if the plaintiff proceeds afterwards, he should proceed on his judgment. The appellee in this case, having obtained a judgment at law, before the commencement of this suit, upon all the causes of action set forth in this petition, should, when it proceeded to foreclose these mortgages, have proceeded in Chancery upon that judgment, and not again at law, upon these original causes of action. That course would have obviated all the difficulty resulting from this judgment, "quando acciderint." But it will be perceived that, if this suit could be sustained, the defendants must either be permitted to avail themselves of that judgment by plea, (as was attempted in this case,) or they would again be driven to their plea of plene administravit; and if the latter course were adopted, the jury must necessarily have extended their inquiry back to the date of the letters of administration; and their verdict in relation to assets, would, of course, have covered the whole period which had elapsed betwen that date, and the rendition of the judgment, and the trial of the cause in the Court below, which may have worked irreparable injury and injustice, not only to defendants but to their sureties. Pleading the judgment therefore, (or setting it up as an objection,) seems to have been their only safe and proper course. But it is contended by the counsel of the appellee, that these pleas are bad, because they are pleaded in bar, and not in abatement. But a former recovery is a good plea in bar. 1 Chitty's Pl. 475, old ed.; 7 Amer. from 6 Lond. ed. 513: and authorities there cited in note, (c.)

The objection, therefore, if it were a valid one in such a case as this, could only extend to the matter of foreclosure; and furnishes another reason, and a very cogent one, why this mixed proceeding, (for we cannot separate them,) should not be permitted, after a judgment at law, upon the same causes of action. But we do not consider the ordinary rules of special pleading, or the technical rules of practice in ordinary cases at law, applicable to a proceeding under our statute of foreclosure. The proceeding is an anomalous one, for which neither the Courts of Common Law, or Equity, furnish a precedent; and so the appellee has treated it; for its petition neither contains the essential requisites of a declaration at law, or of a bill in Chancery. It contains something of both; but not enough of either, to stand the test of scrutiny, by the rules of pleading which prevail in either of those tribunals; and were we to apply that strictness to it, which is demanded in relation to the pleas or objections, the appellee must fail on that ground alone, if on no other. But we are not inclined to apply a greater degree of strictness to either, than is necessary to subserve the principles of justice and equity. Indeed, a more liberal spirit than prevailed in times gone by, in regard to special pleading, one more consonant to the spirit of the age, seems every where to be gaining ground; and we feel warranted in departing from those strict technical and rigid rules, which were formerly applied to this science, whenever such departure may facilitate the attainment of 186 justice, without endangering any of its principles; and our Legislature has left us an open door for so doing.

But the eleventh objection is rather in the nature of a plea in abatement than in bar. It is, however, again insisted, that if this is in abatement, it was filed too late, having been put in after a plea in bar. But if the first plea filed in the case, is to be considered as out of the record, for the causes above mentioned, then this plea was amongst the first that were filed in the case; and if the first plea is to be considered as part of the record, for the purpose of this objection, then it must be so for all other purposes. To that plea the petitioner demurred, and the issue of law thereby made, remains undisposed of. This is the second error assigned, and we passed over it for the reasons before stated. Indeed, it may have been difficult to have gotten over it in any other way, unless, as contended by the counsel for the appellee, that not being sworn to, it is no objection under the statute, is such an absolute nullity, that the defect cannot be waived, and the Court may disregard it.

Without stopping to inquire whether these propositions are correct or not, or to examine the authorities, (a number of which were cited to sustain them,) let them for the present purpose, be so considered; and then this first plea is, (as we have before been disposed to regard it,) out of the record, and does not stand in the way of the plea under consideration. But if the first plea filed had been sworn to, and the issue upon it disposed of, still another difficulty lies in the way of the objection we are now considering. The petitioner, instead of taking the ordinary step to rid itself of the tenth and eleventh pleas, demurred to them. It is too late, therefore, to object that they were not filed in time. By the demurrers, the facts alleged in the pleas are admitted to be true, and issues of law were made for the Court to determine. Upon these issues the Court, after argument had thereon, gave judgment for the petitioner. In doing this we think it error. These pleas, (and especially the last,) were a sufficient objection to this proceeding:

The 16th error assigned, viz: "The Court erred in overruling the demurrer to the replication to the eighth additional objection," presents some very important questions; but as most, (if not all of them,) have been considered, and decided in another case, akin to this, at the present term, we forbear any remark upon the subject here.

The first error assigned, so far as it relates to the judgment or decree, is well taken. The decree should have directed a sale of the 187 negro slaves mentioned in the first mortgage, together with the issue and increase of the female slaves, the proceds thereof to be applied upon the payment of the debt thereby secured; and the residue or surplus, (if any,) to be applied to the second mortgage. But this error, as well as several other minor ones, which we have not deemed it necessary to discuss, might be very easily corrected, were it not for those of more importance, which we have maturely considered, and find insurmountable.

The judgment must be reversed, with costs, and the case remanded to the Circuit Court of Leon county, with directions to dismiss the petition.

Per totam curiam.

JOHN MILLER AND BRYAN CROOM, vs. FREDERICK HOC, SURVIVOR.

Where the record shows that a judgment by default, for want of a plea was entered, when in fact a plea has been filed and appeared upon the record, the Court will conclude that the plea was overlooked, and that judgment was entered through inadvertence.

When two distinct cases between the same parties, are by consent, submitted at the same time to the same jury, the jury should return a separate verdict in each case.

And in such a case the jury should assess the damages, not pro rata, but according to the evidence in each case, independent of the other.

Upon failure to rejoin to the replication to a plea of non damnificatus, there is no issue which can be submitted to a jury, and the defect is not cured by a verdict.

A jury, after having rendered their verdict on Saturday and been discharged, cannot be recalled on the ensuing Wednesday for the purpose of putting their verdict in form, and apportioning the damages in each of the two cases which had been by consent submitted to them.

Appeal from late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida for Leon county.

Debt on an Attachment Bond.—Plea, non damnificatus and nil debit, filed on the 13th December, 1841.—On the 15th February, 1842, a Judgment, by default, for want of a plea, was entered against appellants. Afterwards, however, on the —— day of —— 1842, appellees filed their replication to plea nom. dam. and demurred to second plea. No rejoinder to the replication was filed.

There being another case between the parties, in all respects
190 similar to this, on the 1st March, 1845, the two cases, by consent of parties, were submitted together to a jury, who returned a verdict in the following words:—"We, the jury, find for the plaintiff, and assess the damages at fifteen hundred dollars, which includes both cases."

On the 5th of March, 1845, on motion of appellees, the jury who had been empanelled in the case, was recalled into Court for the purpose of apportioning the damages returned by them in their verdict, between the two cases—Whereupon, appellants filed the following Bill of Exceptions:

"1st. The defendants' counsel asked the Court to instruct the jury that in each case, assessing damages in these cases, they cannot find for more than plaintiffs have actually proved was incurred in consequence of improperly suing out of the attachment; and that the jury cannot consider in their verdict, any damages plaintiffs may have sustained by reason of defendant, J. Miller, taking away his negroes, in violation of his contract with the plaintiffs.

"2d. That in the absence of any evidence, except levy of the marshal, they are not bound to presume that the property attached was taken from the possession of plaintiffs or sold; and that the same on the dissolving of the attachment, goes back to them, the jury should only find damages merely for the deterioration of the value of said property, the loss of the benefit thereof the meantime and the damages consequent thereon and their expenses.

"3d. That jury should not assess the damages in each case pro rata, according to amount, but upon the evidence as to each case independent of all considerations.

"These instructions were refused, because the jury were only called together to render in form, their verdict found at a former day.

S. J. DOUGLAS, Judge."

The jury therefore assessed the damages in this case at $1295, and judgment entered accordingly.

On the 7th March, 1845, appellants filed the following Bill of Exceptions, which is inserted at large, because of the discrepancy between some of the facts as set forth therein and in other parts of the record:

"Be it remembered, that these two cases were tried together by consent; and the jury, on the 1st March, 1845, in the absence of defendants' counsel, absent on leave, rendered a verdict for $1500 191 damages in both cases, without stating in which case, or separating the damages in the two cases.—'We, the jury, find for the plaintiffs, and assess the damages at fifteen hundred dollars, which includes both cases.'"

Defendants' counsel moved for a new trial—the verdict was recorded, and the jury discharged, and the Court adjourned to March 4, 1845.

March 4: Plaintiffs' counsel, on the opening of the Court, moved the Court, to recall the jury, to amend the verdict, by apportioning the damages in each case separately; but the motion was refused by the Court, on account of the absence of defendants' counsel March 5, 1845, defendants' counsel filed their reasons for a new trial, as follows:

LEON SUPERIOR COURT.

JOHN MILLER, et al defend'ts. } ats. }
The HOCS, plaintiffs.

Defendants move for a new trial on the following grounds:

1. Because in the writ and declaration, the damages claimed are but $1,000, whereas the verdict is for $1295 damages.

2. Because the declaration and assignment of breaches, upon which said verdict is rendered, was and is defective, irregular and insufficient.

3. Because the verdict is irregular and illegal, inasmuch as the jury in this case, and which tried it and No. 358, between the same parties, by consent, at the same time, on the 1st of March, 1845, rendered a verdict in open court for $1500 damages in both cases, without assessing damages in each case separately, and were on said 1st of March, 1845, discharged by the court in said cause, and the said verdict duly recorded, and after a motion for a new trial, &c. and reasons filed, the jury were against consent of the defendants, collected and called together again by the 5th of March, 1845, on motion of plaintiffs, and by order of the Court, and instructed to separate their verdict and find the damages in each case, when they found $205 in this case and $1295 in the other, which proceeding was irregular and illegal, and said verdict void.

4. Because the said damages were and are unreasonable and excessive.

5. Because the defendant was surprised on the trial, as his counsel in the original cases of attachment, and who brought the same, 19
Mr. Baltzell, was absent, and his defence was conducted by other counsel who were not as well acquainted with the facts of his case as Mr. Baltzell.

6. Because said defendant hath newly discovered evidence, to wit, that the plaintiff, after the levy of the Attachment in the original case, retained possession of the property levied on, and used the same, and with the burned brick, built a house or a part thereof, and used or sold the others.

7. Because the verdict is otherwise against law and evidence.

THOMAS BALTZELL,
Defendants' Attorney.

Plaintiffs' counsel moved the Court, that the jury might be collected and recalled, and instructed by the Court to amend their verdict by apportioning the damages separately in each case. Defendants' counsel objected thereto, and the Court overruled the objection, and the jury were recalled and so directed, and thereupon retired, divided the damages, and apportioned the damages in one case at $1295 and in the other at $205. The defendant excepted to the said decision and proceedings in both cases, and this Bill of Exceptions is therefore signed and sealed, and ordered to be made a part of the record in both cases.

S. J. DOUGLAS, Judge [SEAL.]

Appellants assigned the following for errors:

1. The Court below erred in rendering judgment against defendants, as for want of a plea, on the 15th February, 1842, when, as the record shows, there was on file two pleas, one of non damnificatus, and the other of nil debit.

2. The Court erred in permitting plaintiff to reply to defendants' plea of non damnificatus and to demur to his plea of nil debit, at the Fall Term, 1842, while the aforesaid judgment which the court had rendered against defendants, at the same term, remained in full force, and unreversed or set aside.

3. The Court erred in having the jury sworn, when there was no issue to try—the defendants not having rejoined to the plaintiffs' replication to his plea of non damnificatus.

4. The Court erred in rendering final judgment against defendants while plaintiffs' demurrer to defendants' plea of nil debit remained open and undisposed of.

193 5. The court erred in rendering judgment upon the verdict of the jury—it appearing from the record that they were sworn to try but one issue, and it not appearing whether that issue was in this case, or in the other submitted to them at the same time.

6. The court erred in rendering final judgment in this case at a time when there was a motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment still open and undisposed of.

7. The Court erred in recalling the persons who had composed the jury after they had rendered their verdict and been discharged —— days, against the consent of defendants, and then requiring them to change the verdict they had rendered while acting as a jury.

8. The Court erred in refusing the instructions to the jury prayed for by defendants.

9. The Court erred in rendering judgment for a greater amount of damages than that claimed in the writ and declaration, to wit: the sum of $1295, when the writ and declaration claim only one thousand.

Long & Walker, for Appellants.

L. A. Thompson and T. H. Hagner, for Appellee.

HAWKINS, Justice:

The record in this case certainly presents a series of anomalies, and the questions for the consideration of the Court are embraced in the enquiries, how far consent of parties can remedy error; what defects in pleading are cured by verdict, and whether the verdict and judgment of the Court below have been rendered in compliance with the well settled rules of law. Although a Court of error will go far to sustain a judgment of a Court which tried the cause, when upon a view of the whole case it comes to the conclusion that substantial justice has been done between the parties; yet still, there are certain fundamental rules governing legal proceedings, which cannot be departed from, without producing great confusion and evil results. There can be no doubt but that the Court below erred, as alleged in the assignment of errors, in pronouncing a judgment by default, whilst the record shows that pleas were in and filed by the defendant.

The record states that no plea was filed by defendant, upon which the judgment by default was entered. As a general rule, the record is to be taken as true, and nothing is to be averred against the allega-194 tions contained in it, but we must examine the whole record; and it would be carrying the above axioms to an absurd extent, if after its inspection, we should say, the judgment by default was correctly tendered, because the record said there were no pleas filed, when in fact two pleas stand in bold relief, and undisposed of. It would seem far more consonant with reason to conclude, that they were overlooked, and the judgment pronounced through inadvertance, then to take for granted, even a record averment so utterly at variance with the strongest evidence of our perceptions.

There is nothing in the record to show, that a motion was made by the defendant in the Court below, to set aside the judgment by default thus irregularly granted, as might have been done; nor does it appear that the plaintiffs availed themselves of any legal rights growing out of it; so that it is to be inferred from the further proceeding of the cause, that this judgment was waived by both parties, perhaps considered as struck out and a nullity—by the defendants, by not moving as above—by the plaintiffs, by pleading in disregard of it. Without moving to have the judgment set aside, the latter reply to the plea of non damnificatus filed by defendants and demur to that of nil debit. The defendants do not rejoin to the replication, nor join in the demurrer; but "by consent of parties it is agreed that the two cases shall be submitted to the same jury." The cases referred to are the one at bar and another between the same parties, as shown by the record

The consent alluded to, seems not to have extended further than that the same jury were to bring in separate verdicts in each case, and not as contended for by counsel, that the cases should be consolidated, and one verdict be rendered for the two cases.

The Court can only be guided by the record as to the version to be given to this submission, and as there is nothing contained in it that conveys the idea of consolidation, we must take the words as we find them. If the consent went to the extent contended by the counsel for appellee, a different decision as to the verdict first rendered, might be arrived at, as consents may take away error; and guided by this rule, the court is constrained to overlook the irregularity of the judgment by default.

With the views of the submission, as above expressed, the Court is of opinion, that separate and independent verdicts should have been rendered in each case. Here the Court might rest and remand the case to the Court below for corection of its proceedings, 195 but it may not be inappropriate to discuss some other points raised in the cause.

It is contended by the appellee that the record shows that there were issues before the jury and issues joined; but we can discern nothing showing such to be the fact, further than that after the submission of the case, certain persons were elected, tried and sworn to speak the truth upon the issues joined.

The pleadings certainly exhibit no issue either of fact or of law. "As the object of all pleading or judicial allegation (says Mr. Stephens,) is to ascertain the subject for decision, &c. the main object of that system of pleading established in the Common Law of England, is to ascertain it by the production of an issue."

The counsel for appellee insists that by the statute of jeofails of our State, the error, if any existed, is cured by the verdict; but that does not apply where there has been no issue or non-joinder. An immaterial issue is not aided at Common Law, or by statute. (Buller's Ni. Pr. 321—2d Saunders, 319. In such cases Courts will grant a repleader)—and Green J. in the case of Truss vs. Old, 6 Ran. 560, remarks, "that the statute of jeofails gives the effect of curing errors, only where a verdict is given without exception."

Although the record states the jury were sworn to try the issues joined, that cannot remove the irregularity of the verdict, or prove that issues really existed.

In Sydner against Burke and wife, 4 Ran. 161, we see that the act of jeofails will not sustain a verdict and judgment in a case in which the record states that the jury were sworn to try the issue joined, but does not show that any plea was filed by defendant, upon which issue could have been joined.

The case of Stevens vs. Thornton's adm'rs. 1 Wash. R. 156, is in point. In that case there was an entry upon the record after the replication, that "issue was thereupon joined between the parties." the entry was deemed not sufficient, because in fact, there appeared no issue.

With these views, and there having been no issue properly made, up for submission to the jury, we think the error well assigned by appellant.

It appears that there were motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, and these remained, so far as appears by the record, 196 undisposed of. A presumption may arise, that these motions were refused, but it will not be necessary to advert further to the assignment of errors in relation to them, inasmuch as the first verdict has been declared irregular. And so in relation to the second verdict, for there appears to have been two verdicts in one cause, the Court feels no hesitation in declaring that it should be set aside. It seems that after the rendition of the first verdict, on Saturday, and their discharge, the jury were recalled by the Court on the ensuing Wednesday, for the purpose of apportioning the damages by them returned in their verdict. After their discharge, the Court below erred in again assembling them to put their verdict in form, as this should have been done before their discharge, and a venire de novo should have been the proper order.—After a jury have returned their verdict, have been discharged and separated, they cannot be recalled to alter or amend it. Sergeant against the State, 11 Ohio R. 472.

The cases cited by appellee do not refer to cases where the jury had been discharged. The strongest one, that of Winslow against Draper, 8 Pick. 170, was this. The jury had retired to consult on their verdict on Saturday afternoon, and had permission from the Court to separate as soon as they had made up their verdict. On the following Monday morning, they rendered in an imperfect verdict, which the Court made them correct, as they found a substantial verdict on the merits, and it was then put in proper form.

It would be superfluous to dilate upon the instructions as prayed for by the defendants, in the Court below, though it is very clear that the Court should have instructed the jury, that they were not to assess the damages in each case pro rata, according to amount, but as to the evidence in each case independent of the other.

As contended for by the appellee, the Court is not to be understood as dissenting from the doctrine, that a Court will not examine the propriety of amendments of the Court below, when these amendments are within the power of the Court, giving it either by Common Law or statute, amendments generally being matter of discretion for the Court. In this case, the error seems to have been the not making suitable amendments. But the Court of errors should certainly have all the proceedings of the subordinate Court before it, so that from a view of the pleadings, the process, continuances, 197 the finding of a jury upon a proper issue and the judgment—(for without them a Court would be groping in the dark and find great difficulty)—they might come to a decision.

With these views, we think the judgment of the Court below must be reversed; which is accordingly ordered, and that this cause be remanded to Leon Circuit Court for further proceedings to be had therein, in accordance with the views contained in this opinion.

JOHN MILLER AND BRYAN CROOM, Appellants, vs. FREDERICK HOC, Survivor, &c.

HAWKINS, Justice:

This case must be governed by the decision of the Court in the preceding case, as the same points are involved in it; the pleadings seem substantially the same, and the record shows the same errors committed in this case as in the one just decided.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the judgment be reversed, and that this cause be remanded to the Court below for further proceedings, in accordance with the views contained in the opinion in the other case between the same parties.

ELI HORN AND JEREMIAH SAVELL, EXECUTORS OF JOAB HORN, vs. DAVID GARTMAN.

A petition for a re-hearing must be filed during the Term at which the case was decided.

This cause was argued and decided at the last Term of this Court, but was again brought before the Court at its present Term by a petition for a rehearing, filed on the 18th Feb. 1846, after the adjournment of the Court, but within fifteen days after the decision of the case was pronounced.

198 MACRAE, Justice:

This is a petition for a rehearing of this cause, which has been filed since the last term of this Court, and the question arises whether this application can be entertained in view of the 24th Rule of this Court, which provides that "re-hearings must be applied for by petition in writing within fifteen days after the judgment or decree," and that "the Court will consider the petition without argument," &c. This rule is analagous to that which regulates motions for new trials which requires that every such motion shall be made within the Term at which the cause has been tried, in which such motion is proposed to be made. In the opinion of this Court, the 24th Rule clearly contemplates the filing of a petition for a re-hearing before the expiration of the term at which the decision of the case is had. This is the general rule in all cases of motions to be made before a Court in reference to a case depending before it.—After the term, as a general rule, the Court cannot exercise power or control over a cause which has been determined, further than to perfect and carry out its judgment by orders correcting errors apparent in the proceedings, or similar errors.

It is therefore considered and ordered that this case be stricken from the docket.

THEOPHILUS BEATTY vs. THOMAS ROSS.

After entering his appearance and a judgment by default for want of a plea has been entered against him, it is too late for an alien defendant to avail himself of the privilege, allowed by act of Congress, of removing his cause from a State Court to the Courts of the United States.

The Judges of the Superior Courts of the late Territory of Florida, under the clause of the Constitution of the State "continuing all officers until superceded under the Constitution," took possession, after our admission as a State, of the records and papers, and exercised jurisdiction over suits pending and instituted in those Courts as State Judges. The State Judges elected afterwards under the Constitution, succeeded them and became possessed of the records and suits, and being so possessed, it was not only competent for them, but it was their duty to adjudicate them.

In all cases of concurrent jurisdiction, the Court which first has possession of the subject must decide it. 199

There being no provision in the act of Congress for the transfer of cases from the Superior Courts of the Territory to the Courts of the United States, no such transfer could be made.

The Superior Courts of the late Territory were not United States Courts as defined in the constitution of the United States; and the District Courts of the United States were not their successor.

That clause of the act of the Legislature which provides that causes pending in the Superior Court of the Territory, shall be transferred to the Circuit Courts of the proper county, except cases cognizable by the Federal Courts which may be organized in this State, which cases shall be transferred to such courts, is ambigious, and the design of the Legislature was probably directed to cases of exclusive jurisdiction in the United States Courts.

Appeal from Jefferson Superior Court, at its Fall Term, 1845, his Honor Judge Douglas presiding, who was thereby disqualified from sitting in the case in this Court.

This was an action of assumpsit commenced in the late Superior court for the Territory of Florida, for Jefferson county. The declaration was filed on the 4th February, 1845, and on the 30th of following October, plaintiff filed in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit court, for Jefferson county, to which court the case had been transferred after Florida became a State, an affidavit of default for want of a plea.

At the Fall Term of the Circuit Court in November, 1845, appellant filed his petition to remove the case to the Circuit Court of the United States, on the ground, that he was an alien, and that it had been improperly transferred to, and placed on the docket of this Court. The Court refused to grant the petition, and judgment by default was entered against him.

To this decision of the Court, appellant excepted and filed his Bill of Exceptions as follows:

Be it remembered, that on the first calling of the docket in this Court, November 3, 1845, defendant, by his attorney, moved the Court to remand and remove said cause to the Circuit Court of the United States for Florida, on the ground that the defendant was an alien, and that the cause had been improprly transferred to, and placed on the docket of this Court, and asked leave until next day to file his petition, which motion to file his petition was allowed.—And thereupon, November 4th, 1845, said defendant filed his said petition in the words following, to wit:

STATE OF FLORIDA, } 200
MIDDLE CIRCUIT. Jefferson Circuit Court, }
November Term, 1845.

Theophilus Beatty, def't. }
ats. } In assumpsit, on promise by note, &c.
Thomas Ross, pl'ff. }

And now the 3d day of November, 1845, on the first calling of said case on the docket of said Court, comes the said Theophilus, defendant, and says he shows to said Court, that said Court should not proceed to render judgment in said case, or further entertain or hold cognizance or jurisdiction thereof, but should order and direct said case to be removed to the Circuit Court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, because he the said defendant, says said suit was commenced on the 4th of February, 1845, by summons issued out of the Clerk's office of the Superior Court of the Middle District of the Territory of Florida, in and for said county of Jefferson, returnable to and before said Superior court, on the third Monday in April, 1845; that said plaintiff filed his declaration in said cause in said Superior court of the 4th of February, 1845, and said defendant caused his appearance to be entered in said cause at the same April, 1845; the said plaintiff filed his declaration in said cause in such Territory, had jurisdiction as a Circuit Court of the United States) and thereupon said cause was continued. And the defendant says, that when said writ was issued as aforesaid, and ever since this defendant was and has been, and now is an alien, born out of the United States of America, to wit, in Ireland, and a subject of the crown of Great Britain and Ireland, and that he hath never been naturalized, or admitted, or become a citizen of the United States of America, and that matters in dispute in said case, exceed in value, five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs. And this defendant further avers, said Thomas Ross, plaintiff, was and is a citizen of the United States, and a citizen of the State of Florida, residing therein.

And this defendant avers, that the affidavit made in said cause by plaintiff's attorney, on the first day of the present term of this Court, and the docketing said cause in this court, doth not entitle said plaintiff to judgment in said cause by default, for want of a plea in this court, because, that defendant says no order of said Superior court of said Territory, has ever been legally made or entered in said cause, remanding or transferring said cause into this court, so as to give this Court cognizance or jurisdiction thereof, and the defendant 201 was not and is not bound to plead in said cause in this court, and is not in default on account thereof, and this the said defendant is ready to verify: Wherefore this defendant petitions and prays for the order of this court to remand and remove said cause to the said Circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof.

T. BEATTY.

Sworn to and subscribed, Nov. 5th, 1845. C. G. FIFE, Cl'k.

And defendant also filed a newspaper, called the "Florida Star," a newspaper published at Tallahassee, Florida, 2d September, 1845, containing a notice published by order of the Hon. Samuel J. Douglas, Judge of the Superior court of the Middle district of Florida, admitted by the parties to have been published, which printed order is in the following words, viz:

"CHAMBERS, Middle District, Florida.

"Whereas it is made known to me, that a Judge has been elected for the Middle District of Florida,—It is therefore ordered, that the Clerks of the Superior Courts of said District, deliver over to those properly authorized to receive them, all papers appertaining to suits now pending in courts in which the State tribunals have exclusive jurisdiction; also, all such (at the option of the plaintiff) as they may have concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal Courts, and retain in their Office all papers in those suits in which the Federal Courts have exclusive jurisdiction.

"SAMUEL JAMES DOUGLAS,
"Judge U. S. District, Middle Florida.

"A true copy from the minutes,
"Tallahassee, Sept'r. 2d, 1845.
"R. T. BIRCHETT, C'lk,
"By John B. Keen, D. C.

And thereupon said petition and motion were heard and argued, and said defendant offered in open court to give sufficient security for his entering in such Circuit Court on the first day of its session, copies of the process against him, and the other requirements of the law in such case made and provided. And said defendant also offered to show that said Judge of said Superior court, though duly commissioned by the President of the United States and acting as Judge of the Superior court of the Territory at the time of the admission of the Territory as a State, had never taken the oath prescribed by the 11th section of the 6th article of the constitution of 202 the State of Florida, which was admitted by the plaintiff's counsel. It was admitted by the defendant's counsel, that defendant had previously to the institution of said suit, made application to be admitted a citizen of the United States, but that the time had not elapsed since said application to allow his admission under the act of Congress. After argument, the court refused the prayer of the petition, and defendant not filing any plea, judgment by default is ordered and rendered; and said defendant praying this Bill of Exceptions to said decision, the same is signed, sealed and ordered to be filed as a part of the record in said case.

November 5th, 1845.

THOMAS DOUGLAS, Judge &c. &c. [SEAL.]

Appellant assigned the following errors:

1. The Court erred in overruling the objections touching jurisdiction, and in refusing the prayer of the petition to remove the cause into the Circuit Court of the United States.

2. The Court erred in giving judgment for the plaintiff below.

Carmack and A. E. Maxwell, for appellant.

1st. The Court had no authority to exercise jurisdiction in this case. No case from the docket of the Territorial Court, which was an United States Court, could get into a State Court without some enactment authorizing the transfer. Either Congress, or the State constitution, or the State Legislature, or whichever of them had power, must have directed such transfer. Congress did not provide for it, nor did the constitution pretend to do so. The State Legislature did pass a law on the subject, but that law did not authorise the appearance of cases of this sort in the State Court. The 5th and 8th sections of the "act to organize the Circuit Courts" of the State, are as follows, viz:—"§ 8th. That all cases in equity and at common law, and civil and criminal, and all motions and proceedings pending in the several Superior courts of the Territory, or County Courts of the Territory, shall be transferred to the proper Circuit Courts to be held for the county, except all cases cognizable by the Federal Courts, which may be organized in this State," &c.

§ 5. Same in substance as above, down to word "except."—[See Acts, 1st Session, 1845, p. 9.]

From this it will be seen that cases "cognizable in the Federal Courts," are not to be transferred. This case, Beatty being an alien, is so cognizable. As this is the only pretence of authority for its 203 transfer, and, as this expressly excepts from transfer cases like this, how is its appearance in the State Court to be accounted for or justified? There must be some power shown competent to take the case from the old Superior Court into the Circuit courts of the State.—Cases cannot go from one Court to another without law. Where is that law in this case?—[See 4, Howard, 589, Hunt vs. Palao.]

The decision in Stewart vs. Preston, decided at the last term, is not in conflict with the position here contended for. It merely holds that the State was competent to make the transfer. Without denying that, we contend that the State has not made the transfer, nor in anywise authorised it.

2d. But even if the case was properly transferred, and the Court had jurisdiction, it erred in refusing its removal to the Federal court. When it was brought, there was no Court to which it could be removed. The Territorial Court was an United States Court.—When Florida became a State, and the Territorial Court was superseded by the State Court, the case put on a new phase. The cause being transferred to the State Court, was, for the first time in a position which would entitle defendant, being an alien, to the privilege he claims under the 12th section of the judiciary act of 1789.

It is true this case was not "commenced in a State Court;" but this surely can form no objection to the removal. When it was begun it was a United States court. There was then no ground or reason for removal. But when it got into the State Court, the reason of the law of the 12th section came into play, and it is to the reason of the law we must look in all cases. Here so soon as that reason applied, the petition for removal was made, and then it was that his right "commenced." To follow the strict letter of the law in this case, would be to contradict its spirit and reason—it would not be simply carrying out the letter, whether the reason sanctioned it or was silent; but it would be doing this in violation of that reason. The Court will not sanction a construction involving such disregard of the plainest as well as most important principles of construction.

L. A. Thompson, (with whom was T. H. Hagner,) for appellee

This is an appeal from the judgment of the Hon. Thomas Douglas, sitting in the Middle Circuit, at Monticello, in Jefferson county, on the application by appellant for a removal of the cause from the 204 Circuit Court of the State, to the District Court of the United States, under the provisions of the 12th section of the act of Congress of September 24, 1789.

This section provides "that if a suit be commenced in any State Court against an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought against a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the aforesaid sum or value of five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, to be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, and the defendant shall at the time of entering his appearance in such State Court, file a petition for the removal of the cause for trial into the next Circuit Court to be held in the District," &c. &c. "it shall be the duty of the State Court to accept the security and proceed no further in the said cause," &c. 1 Story's Laws, p. 57, 58.

To entitle the defendant to the benefit of this section, the following must concur:— —

1. The suit must have been commenced in a State Court.

2. It must be brought against an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought against a citizen of another State.

3. The matter in dispute must be of the value of $500, exclusive of costs; and

4. The application for removal must be made at the time of entering his appearance in the State Court.

This suit was commenced by sums. ad resp. issued from the Clerk's office of the Superior Court of the Middle District of the Territory of Florida, for Jefferson county, on the 4th of February, 1845, returnable to the next ensuing term of said Superior Court, to be held on the 3d Monday of April then next; which was duly executed by the service of a copy on the defendant below on the 8th February, 1845.

On the 3d March ensuing, the Territory of Florida was, by act of Congress admitted as one of the States of the Union.

On the 3d Monday of April the Court was held, and although the record does not, and from the practice of the Courts cannot, state the fact of the entering of an appearance by Beatty, yet it may be inferred from the fact that no judgment by default was entered at the appearance term, to which the Plaintiffs would have been entitled, if there was no appearance of the defendant at that time.—

205 The petition of defendant for removal, states that the entry of appearance at April term, 1845. See § 22, Judiciary act of Florida—Duval's Comp. p. 95.

On the 30th October, 1845, in acordance with the rule of practice then in force, R. Harrison, Esq. one of the attorneys of plaintiff below, makes search in the Clerk's office for a plea, and finding none, and makes the usual affidavit, claiming judgment for want of a plea.

At November, 1845, being the second term of said Court, and while in default according to the rules of practice, because of the omission to plead, the defendant below files his petition setting forth his alienage, &c. and prays removal of the case to the District court of the United States for the District of Florida.

The first position we assume is—

1. That the present is an omitted case in the laws of Congress.—The provisions of the 12th section of the act of 1789, is for cases commenced in State Courts:—This suit was commenced in a Territorial Court.

The word "State," in the judicial act is to be construed by reference to that term as used in the Constitution; and means not merely a distinct political society, according to the definition of writers on general law, but a member of the American confederacy. Hepburn vs. Elizey, 2 Cranch, 445. Corp. N. O. vs. Winter, 1 Wheaton, 91.

2. But it shall be contended that before the return day of the summons, the Courts of the late Territorial organization became State Courts, by force of the 17th article of the Constitution of the State, and the act of 1789 then applied; then we shall contend, that the application for removal should have been made at April term, 1845, and came too late at the November term succeeding, and when the defendant was in default for want of a plea.

The words of the act of 1789, "at the time of entering his appearance," must be construed to mean the time when, by the rules of practice of the Court, the defendant ought to make his appearance.

In Gibson vs. Johnson, in the third Judicial Circuit of the U. S. before Judge Washington, where, after passing two terms in the State Court, the petition to remove was granted nunc pro tunc by the 206 State Court, the Circuit Court determined that the agreement of the State Court to consider the petition as filed of a preceding term, when the appearance was entered nunc pro tunc, could not give the Circuit Court jurisdiction, when it was apparent that in point of fact, it was not filed until a subsequent term. The motion to docket the cause was overruled. Peter's C. C. R. 44.

3. If the Court should not sustain our first position, the second point, that the application for removal came too late, is equally applicable.

Baltzell, Justice:

The defendant in the Court below applied for permission to take his case to the Circuit Court of the United States, having presented a petition and affidavit stating, that he was then, and at the time of issuing the writ, an alien, and that the matter in dispute exceeds in value five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs. There had been prior to this, a judgment by default for want of a plea required to be filed. days before the second term, and the defendant at the first term had entered his appearance to the action. Under such circumstances, it is quite clear that he was not entitled to his motion under the act of Congress of 1789, allowing to aliens the privilege of removing cases instituted against them in the State Courts to the Courts of the United States.

The main reliance of defendant here, is placed upon the assumption, that the suit was instituted in the Superior Court of the late Territory, which was established by Congress, and at the change of government it belonged to the District court of the United States as its rightful successor. If this be true, it should not have been on the docket of the State Court, and defendant was entitled to his motion. The first question for our consideration is, has the Court of the United States organized for this State, the right to the papers of the late Superior Courts, and to try suits commenced and pending before him.

We have felt that the subject should be approached with a due sense of its importance to the individual whose rights are at stake as well as a proper regard to the rights of a co-ordinate branch of the government, not forgetting what is due to our own position as officers of a State of the Union.

This Court and the Circuit Courts of the State, have alike, without hesitancy, ordered the transfer of all cases where the courts of 207 the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. But the difficulty lies with cases where it is concurrent, where each court has the right to try and adjudicate the matter in controversy. The Judges of the Superior courts of the Territory under that clause of the State constitution continuing "all officers until superceded under the constitution," took possesion of the records and papers after our admission, and exercised jurisdiction over suits pending and instituted in those courts. This they did as State Judges for several months after our admission, and in the very case under consideration. They administered the local laws of the State, deciding suits betwen citizen and citizen, and trying indictments for assaults and offences of like character. The State Judges succeeded them in the different counties, and thus became posessed of the records and suits. Being so possessed, it was in the opinion of the Court, not only competent for them to adjudicate the cases presented for trial, but it was their bounden duty to do so. It was clearly not a matter of option with the judge to transfer the case to another tribunal, but it was the right of the party to have his case tried, and the court could not properly refuse it.

A reference to the well established rules of law in cases of concurrent jurisdiction, will show, we think, that we are not mistaken in these views. "In all cases of concurrent jurisdiction, the court which first has possession of the subject must decide it." Smith vs. McIvor, 9 Wh. 532. But there is another fact not to be overlooked in the consideration of this question; the District Court of the United States has only been organized during the present month, so that the State Courts, if inclined to transfer, must have waited nearly two years before the removal, whilst the party would have been subjected to unusual delay without a satisfactory excuse for it. And now, that a court is organized, we do not perceive that the difficulty is either lessened or removed. There is no provision in the act of Congress for the transfer of cases to it from the Superior Courts, and without such provision the jurisdiction does not attach. The courts of the United States take by express grant, and "can exercise jurisdiction in those cases only, where it is conferred upon them by act of Congress." 1 Wash. C. C. R. 231. 1 Brockenbrough, 203.

Situated then as these cases now are, the courts of the State alone have the exclusive right to try and decide them, and there is no 208 other having a right even concurrent with them. If the defendant had been driven to his plea, as was his only course after his motion was overruled, what could he have asserted, how defended himself against the rule well established, that "in a plea to the jurisdiction, the defendant must show that another court has exclusive jurisdiction over a cause of action?" Archbold Pl. and Ev. 280. 6 East, 583.

Whilst free from doubt as to these views, we are not content to rest our decision upon the prior organization of the State Courts, or the fact of possession merely, satisfied that the right of the State Courts is equal, and by no means subordinate to that of the Federal Courts. We attribute no importance to the fact that Congress established the Superior Courts. This did not make them United States Courts. Such an idea was long since rejected by the Supreme court of the United States, who decided that they were "not constitutional courts in which the judicial power conferred by the constitution on the general government can be deposited—they are incapable of receiving it. The jurisdiction with which they are invested is not a part of that judicial power which is defined in the 3d article of the constitution, but is conferred by Congress in the execution of those general powers which that body possess over the Territories of the United States. In legislating for them, Congress exercises the combined powers of the general and of a State government."—Am. Insurance vs. Canter. 1 Peters, 546.

It will not, we apprehend, be seriously contended, that action by the General Government as a State, or whilst in the exercise of State powers, can rightly form the basis of a claim against the State, or that the General Government derived higher or larger jurisdiction or powers from such possession. According to the theory of all our institutions, governments are but trustees for the people, and we hold this to be the true position which the General Government occupied during the existence of the Territory, trustees for the people until they became competent to take the blessings of self government upon themselves. On our admission into the Union the trust expired, and each party was remitted to the position which, according to the structure of the State and Federal governments, each should respectively occupy, neither superior, nor having greater claims, 209 except over particular subjects where exclusive right or jurisdiction may prevail—both equal in cases of concurrent jurisdiction.

This declaration of the Supreme Court as to the character of the Superior Courts, is fatal to the succession which is claimed for the District Court of the United States. Independently of this, it is not perceived how a court of limited jurisdiction as this latter is, "taking only by grant," having cognizance, not of cases generally, but only a few specially circumstanced, amounting to a small portion of the cases which an unlimited jurisdiction would embrace, and in reference to whose action the fair presumption is not as with regard to a court of general jurisdiction that "a cause is within its jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears, and which renders it necessary to set forth upon the record, the facts and circumstances which give jurisdiction." 1 Cond. Rep. 205, it is not perceived how such a court can be the successor of a court, not only of general jurisdiction, but of powers beyond those possessed by any other court in the Union, either State or Federal, indeed combining the power of both courts. If "succession in a body politic be as defined, an inheritance in a body private, the District Court would seem to be rather the devisee than the heir of the inheritance. This latter appellation and that of successor would seem to belong rather to the State Courts, being courts of general jurisdiction, and going to the different counties as the Superior courts did, dispensing justice as they did, and succeeding to most, if not all of their cases—"a successor being defined to be he that followeth or cometh in another's place." 6 Jacob Law Dict. 134.

It is further insisted that the act of the State Legislature makes provision, that "causes pending in the Superior Courts shall be transferred to the Circuit Courts of the proper county, except cases cognizable by the Federal Courts, which may be organized in this State, which cases shall be transferred to said courts; and all writs issued by said Superior Courts shall be returned to said Circuit courts, to be tried and decided therein and thereby." The statute is rather ambiguous—the design of the Legislature was probably directed to cases of exclusive jurisdiction, without noticing the distinction between them and such as are concurrent. The jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, by the constitution of the State, embraces "all matters, civil and criminal, within the State, not other-210 wise excepted in the constitution;" and it may well be doubted whether the Legislature can impair or deprive them of it. We are, however, clearly of opinion that the fourth clause of the schedule and ordinance of the same instrument, is so full and explicit as to leave little or no room for legislation on the subject. That declares that "all actions at law, or suits in chancery, or any proceeding pending, or which may be pending in any court of the Territory of Florida, may be commenced or transferred to such court of the State as may have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof."—Page 24, State constitution.

We are not insensible of the fact that different sentiments have been announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Palao vs. Hunt, decided at its last tem, 1846. Whilst we would defer, with great pleasure, on all proper occasions to the great learning and general accuracy of that exalted tribunal, we are constrained for the reasons stated above, to express our dissent to their opinion in this case, not including the decision on the point presented, the accuracy of which we pretend not to question. This contrariety has made it necessary to extend our own views further than has been our desire or the case itself would warant. The importance of a correct understanding of the true relations between the two governments, so connected as it is with the harmony which ought to prevail between them, and especially the judicial departments, has also induced a more extended discussion of the subject.

The Chief Justice decided this case in the court below, and his decision being sustained by the unanimous opinion of the court, the judgment of the court below is confirmed.

THEOPHILUS BEATTY vs. GRANT SCURRY.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court. The facts of this case are similar to those of Beatty vs. Ross, decided at this Term.

BALTZELL, Justice:

The same questions arise and are presented in this cause as have been decided to-day in the case from the same court, between Beatty and Ross, and for reasons there stated, the judgment is affirmed.

BRYAN CROOM vs. JOSEPH SWANN, ADMINISTRATOR OF JOHN SHAW. 211

An agent cannot maintain an action against his principal to recover the amount paid by him on a judgment obtained against him for a false warranty of a horse, withou showing that he was authorized by his principal to warrant the soundness of the horse so sold.

The record of a judgment, obtained by the purchaser of a horse in an action for false warranty against the agent who sold, is not, in action by the agent against the principal to recover the amount paid on such judgment, evidence of authority from the principal to the agent to warrant. Evidence of such authority and of a warranty made in accordance therewith should be aliunde such record.

Receipt by the principal of the proceeds of the sale of a horse sold by an agent, is not evidence of authority to the agent to warrant; nor is it a ratification of warranty, unless there be evidence to show that at the time of receiving the proceeds, he knew that a warranty had been given by the agent.

Where an agent to sell a horse makes a false warranty, the principal is liable to the purchaser and not to the agent, unless he can show that a deception had been practiced on him by his principal, and that in pursuance of orders or instructions, he bona fide made the false representations, and is compelled to pay damages to the purchaser on account thereof.

Appeal from the late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida, for Leon county.

His Honor, Judge Baltzell, having been counsel for appellant, in the Court below, did not sit in this case.

John Oliver, in his life-time, as agent of appellant, sold to one John Shaw a horse. Shaw afterwards sued appellee as administrator of Oliver, in an action for a false warranty, and recovered a judgment against him. It was to recover from appellant, the owner of the horse sold, the amount paid by him, as administrator of Oliver, on this judgment, that this action was brought. Appellee filed his declaration in assumpsit, at the Spring Term, 1842.

Plea, non-assumpsit.

At the trial in the court below, appellee offered in evidence the depositions of witnesses showing that Oliver was in the employ of Croom at the time he sold the horse to Shaw, and that he was authorised by appellant to sell; that appellant had reecived from Oliver the proceeds of the sale; that appellant had said that he expected that appellee would have to refund to Shaw, but that he was the 212 proper person to lose it, if any one did; and that Shaw sold the horse to one John Penny, and Penny to one Jesse Byrd. Appellee also gave in evidence the letters of administration to him; Also, the record of the judgment in the suit of John Shaw against him, as administrator of John Oliver, obtained in Gadsden county, and of the execution thereon, with the receipt of Shaw for the full amount from appellee endorsed.

Appellant moved the Court to overrule said record as being incompetent and inadmissible evidence in this case, and as being inter alios; which motion the Court overruled.

Appellant offered no evidence, but asked the Court to instruct the jury that said record was not sufficient evidence of alleged warranty by Oliver, or evidence of any authority by Croom to Oliver to make said warranty:

Also, that the record of the recovery aforesaid, without parol evidence of said warranty and of such authority to warrant was not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

Also, that there was not evidence for the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff.

The Court refused the said motions, and instructed the jury:—

1st. That said record was not inter alios, and was legal and competent evidence in this suit.

2d. That said record, together with the parol evidence of the receipt by defendant, from Oliver, of the purchase money, and the letters of administration, are sufficient to enable the plaintiff to recover, and that it was not necessary, to entitle the plaintiff to recover, to prove by evidence aliunde the said record that defendant authorised Oliver to warrant the horse to Shaw, or that Oliver did warrant him.

Defendant excepted to the decision and instructions of the Court, and tendered his Bill of Exceptions.

The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

Long & Walker, for Appellant:

The judgment in this case ought to be reversed, because the record in the case of Shaw vs. Swann, was improperly admitted in evidence before the jury—Croom against whom it was offered, being a stranger to the same. Phil. Ev. 222, 232—3 Johns. Rep. 8.

213 4 Day Rep. 431—2 Hen. & Mum. 139—14 John. Rep. 79, 81—18 John. Rep. 352.

There is no proof that Croom authorised Oliver to warrant the horse sold to Shaw by the latter, and a principal can only be bound by such acts of his agent as are authorized. Newland on Con. 178. Nor is there any proof that Croom authorized his agent, Oliver, to misrepresent the soundness of the horse, or to commit any other fraud. On the contrary, the declaration against Oliver is exclusively upon the breach of warranty. Indeed, it is obvious that Oliver cannot be permitted to aver that he committed a fraud by the instructions of his principal, for which he has been punished by the person upon whom he committed it, and that therefore he must recover from his principal the amount of the recovery had against himself; because in law no man can plead his agency in excuse for an act of terpitude or criminality. An agent is not bound to obey the unlawful instructions of his principal. Paley on Agen. 89—Camp. 395.

If Croom did not warrant the soundness of the horse, (or authorise his agent to do so,) and was not acquainted with the alleged unsoundness previous to the day of sale—(and there is no evidence of either of these facts in the record)—he cannot be liable to any one. 2 Kent's Com. 479. Co. Lit. 102, (a). 2 Bl. Com. 452. 2 East Rep. 314. 1 John Rep. 274. 4 Randall's Rep. 5. 2 Dallas Rep. 91. 10 Mass. Rep. 197. 1 Peter's Rep. 317. 1 Murph. Rep. 138. 2 Murph. Rep.. 245. 4 Hayw. Ten. Rep. 227. 2 Cain's Rep. 49. 1 Wend. Rep. 185. 20 John. Rep. 186.

But, if for the sake of argument, it be admitted, that Oliver did warrant the soundness of the horse, and the horse was unsound, still when it is seen from the proof, that Oliver, stated to the purchaser (Shaw,) that he was only acting as the agent of Croom in making the sale and warranty, it cannot be denied that these facts were sufficient to exempt the agent, Oliver, from responsibility. In such a case, Croom, the principal, was only liable. 1 Chitty's Pl. 24. 2 Pr. Wms. 278. 1 East, 507. 2 Kent's Com. 629, 630. Story's Agency 260.

Now the question arises, is it competent for Shaw to put this liability upon Croom without permitting him to contest it? If Shaw may sue Oliver, when he is not liable, and obtain a judgment for 214 breach of warranty, and then Oliver may offer the record of that judgment as conclusive evidence that Croom authorized him to warrant, and was therefore liable over to him, it would be tantamount to rendering a judgment against a man without making him a party to the suit. The dilemma seems to arise under this view of the subject, viz: If Oliver had authority to warrant, from Croom, then he was not liable, and the record offered in evidence proves a falsehood, and should not be exhibited against Croom. If, on the contrary, Oliver had no authority from Croom to warrant, (and his liability depended upon this fact,) then it is at once absurd and unjust to say that he can extract from Croom the consequences of his own wilful and unauthorised act.

Finally, but supposing the horse to have been falsely warranted by Oliver, with or without authority from Croom, did Shaw pursue such a course as to entitle him to sue and recover for the same? We think the proof answers this question in the negative. In such a case the purchaser, so soon as he ascertains the unsoundness of the property, ought to return the same to the vendor, and propose to rescind the contract, or he will be presumed to acquiesce in the quality of the goods. 2 Kent's Com. 480. 1 Campl. N. P. Rep. 190.

If therefore, on any of these grounds the recovery by Shaw was erroneous, against Oliver, what better reason can be offered why the record of that wrongful recovery shall not be used in evidence to sustain the present suit? Can one gross error constitute any very conclusive reason for committing another? Surely not.

Carmack & Baker, for Appellee:

HAWKINS, Justice:

This was an action of assumpsit brought to recover the amount of a judgment recovered against Swann by John Shaw, in an action of false warranty on a horse sold by John Oliver, in his life time to Shaw, said horse having been sold by Oliver as the agent of Croom, the appellant.

It would appear by the record that Croom authrized Oliver to sell the horse, but there is no testimony to show that he authorised Oliver to warrant him as to soundness. The price of the horse was one hundred and fifty dollars, and Robert L. Harrison, one of the witnesses, testifies that he heard Croom say, that he had received full compensation from Oliver, for the proceeds of sale of the horse, 215 though he does not recollect that Croom stated the amount.

Shaw, it would seem by the testimony, was aware that Oliver sold the horse only as agent of Croom—that Shaw kept the horse for a time, and then sold him to Penny, who sold him to another person.

Shaw subsequently instituted suit against Swann, the administrator of Oliver, the present plaintiff, declaring in assumpsit on a warranty of the soundness of the horse, and obtained a judgment and a verdict for $152 10 damages, and his costs. The suit from which the present appeal is taken, was brought to recover said damages and costs, and on the trial in Leon Superior court, the record of the judgment &c. of the original suit of Shaw vs. Swann, adm'r. was offered in evidence by the plaintiff, the appellee—objected to by Croom, and the objection overruled by the court. The defendant (Croom) in the court below, offered no evidence, but moved the Court to instruct the jury that said record was not sufficient or legal evidence of any authority by Croom to Oliver to make the warranty; that the record of the recovery aforesaid, without parol evidence of said warranty, and of such authority to warrant was not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

That there was no evidence for the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff. The court below instructed the jury that the record was not inter alios, and was legal and competent evidence in the suit.

2d. That the record, together with the parol evidence of the receipt of the purchase money, and the letters of administration, were sufficient to enable plaintiff to recover, and that it was not necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover, to prove by evidence aliunde the said record, that the defendant authorised Oliver to warrant the horse to Shaw, or that Oliver did warrant him.

To these instructions, the defendant excepted, and a bill of exceptions framed thereupon. Verdict for the plaintiff Swann, and judgment, from which appeal was taken to this Court.

The propriety of the decision of the court below, rests mainly on the question whether the record of the judgment recovered by Shaw against Swann, the appellee, was properly admitted in evidence against Croom, the appellant.

As contended for by the appellee, the record indubitably proves the amount which the administrator of Oliver had paid to Shaw; but this is not enough to justify a judgment against Croom. If Croom 216 had been a party or privy to the record or suit pending between Shaw and Swann, then it would have been available to the extent of the facts contained in it; but there was no privity. The suit was brought by Shaw against Swann, who declined to shield himself by the agency of his intestate, as he could and should have done, had Oliver acted in compliance with the orders or instructions of Croom.

Oliver in this case seems to have acted as the special agent of Croom, and not as a general agent. He had, as would appear by the evidence, a power to sell, but there is nothing to show that he had authority to warrant.

Mr. Chitty says, "the general rule is, that a person who has contracted in the capacity of an agent, and that fact is known at the time to the person with whom he contracts, such agent is not liable to an action for the non-performance of the contract, even for a deceitful warranty." 1 Chitty on Pl. 38, 7 Am. Ed.

And where a person undertakes to do an act as the agent of another, if he does not possess authority from the principal therefor, or if he exceeds the authority delegated to him, he will be responsible therefor to the person with whom he is dealing, for or on account of his principal. Story on Agency, 264.

It is contended for by the appellee, that though there may be no evidence, that Croom authorized Oliver to warant the horse as to soundness, yet that Croom's acceptance of the proceeds of the sale of the horse, and his remark "that he was the proper person to lose it;" that is, the price of the horse, amounted to an adoption of the act of his agent, even if he exceeded his authority, and acted without or against the orders of Croom.

There is no doubt, that an express ratification is not necessary to charge the principal, and a subsequent assent may be inferred from circumstances, which the law considers equal to express ratification. Livermore on Agency, 44. 2 Mass. 186. So where a principal enjoys the fruits and benefits of the act of his agent, he shall not be allowed to say afterwards the act was illegal. 3 Mis. 496. Bell vs. Cunningham, 3 Peters' 81.

But there is no evidence to show that Croom was aware, that his agent had made any warranty as to the soundness of the horse when he accepted the proceeds of the sale, and in the absence of this testimony, his receipt of the money only extends to a ratification of the sale of the horse, whilst the remark before set forth would seem only to convey the idea of an admission of moral obligation in ignorance of his legal rights, and upon which no action could rest, unless there had been a previous legal liability.

But admitting the argument of the counsel for appellee, that Croom had rendered himself liable by the assumption or ratification of the act of his agent, to whom is he responsible? Clearly to Shaw, and not to his agent, unless that agent could show, that a deception had been practiced upon him by his principal; and that in pursuance of orders or instructions, he bona fide makes false representations as to the goods of his principal, and is compelled to pay damages to a purchaser on account thereof. Story on Agency, 339. In such a case Croom would have been directly amenable to Swann, but no such case is shown.

If Shaw had acquired a right of action against Croom, the latter had the privilege of asserting and maintaining his legal rights in an action against himself, but not through his agent; and he is not to be reached in this indirect, circuitous and sinuous manner. "No one in general," say, Mr. Starkie, "can be bound by a verdict or judgment, unless he be a party to the suit, or be in privity with the party, or possess the power of making himself a party." He has no power of cross examining witnesses, of adducing evidence in furtherance of his rights, &c. 1 Starkie on Ev. 191.

No one can be affected, still less concluded by any sentence, decree or judgment in any suit or legal proceeding, to which he was not actually or in consideration of law, a privy. Ib. 181, 1300; and besides, he loses the benefit of appeal.

The reason of these rules are founded in justice and morality; for besides these, reflection must at once suggest the extreme danger at all times of fraud and collusion between the agent and purchaser.—Every consideration of propriety, public policy and sheer justice, forbid the idea, that Croom is to be estopped by the record introduced in the court below, and denied the privilege of making defence of his legal rights.

If otherwise, the grossest injustice might arise. For instance, the record in this case shows that the horse was resold by Shaw. Where are the proceeds of this sale? If an action had been main-

218 tained successfully against Croom by Shaw for damages, the former would have been entitled to an allowance or discount for such proceeds, as the verdict would have been for the difference between a sound and an unsound horse.

With these views, we are of opinion that the record in the case of Shaw vs. Swann was inadmissible as evidence further than as already stated, that there should have been evidence aliunde the record to show that Oliver was authorized by Croom to warrant the horse, and that he did warrant him in accordance with such instructions. If he, Oliver, warranted the horse bona fide, and fraud had been practiced upon him by Croom, he could look to Croom for redress. That Shaw having purchased of Oliver with a full knowledge of his agency, he should have proceeded against Croom directly, and not against Oliver's administrator.

We think the court below erred in not giving the instruction prayed for by defendant in the court below, and also, erred in giving the instructions it did on the trial of the case.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the judgment of the Court below be reversed, and that a venire de novo be awarded.

Per Curiam.

JAMES T. ARCHER, ASSIGNEE IN BANKRUPTCY OF WILLIAM H. 219
FRANCIS, A BANKRUPT, vs. THO'S BROWN, WILLIAM H. BROCKENBROUGH, IN RIGHT OF HIS WIFE ELLEN A. BROCKENBROUGH, ADMINISTRATORS, &C. OF SAMUEL H. DUVAL, DECEASED.

Nil debet as well as not guilty, may be pleaded to an action suggesting a devastavit against an Executor.

By the 8th section of the act of Congress to establish a uniform system of Bankruptcy throughout the United States, the assignee in Bankruptcy cannot maintain an action, unless it be brought within two years after the declaration and decree of Bankruptcy.

Under the Statute of the State, a party is entitled, after his demurrer has been overruled, to withdraw it and reply to the pleading. If he fails to do this, judgment final will be entered against him.

Error to Leon Circuit Court.

This was an action of debt, tried in Leon Circuit court, at its Fall Term, 1845—Hon. Thomas Douglas presiding.

The declaration set forth that William H. Francis, since a bankrupt, on the 17th February, 1842, recovered a judgment against Thomas Brown and Ellen A. Duval, since intermarried with William H. Brockenbrough, Administrator and Administratrix of Samuel H. Duval, for the sum of $350 38-100, to be levied of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of said Samuel H. Duval, in the hands of the said Thomas Brown and Ellen A. Duval, administrator and administratrix, to be administered;—that an execution on 22d March, 1842, issued on the said judgment, and was returned on 22d July, 1842, "no property found;"—that William H. Francis had been on the 7th May, 1842, declared a bankrupt, under the act of Congress, approved 19th August, 1841, entitled "an act to establish an uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," and that plaintiff had been appointed his assignee:—and that after the rendition of the aforesaid judgment, Ellen A. Duval had intermarried with the defendant, William H. Brockenbrough. The declaration averred that at the time the said judgment was rendered, divers goods and chattels, which were of the said Samuel H. Duval at the time of his death, to the value of $350 38-100, had come to the hands of the said Thomas Brown and Ellen A. Duval, administrator and administratrix of the said Samuel, to be administered, and 220 suggested a devastavit.

Defendants pleaded —1. Nil debet:—2. Nul teil record:—3. That by the 8th section of the act of Congress, approved 19th August, 1841, entitled "an act to establish an uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," it is declared and enacted in substance, that no suit, at law or in equity shall in any case be maintainable by or against such assignee, (meaning any assignee lawfully appointed under the act) or by or against any person claiming an adverse interest, touching the property and rights of property aforesaid in any court whatsoever, unless the same shall be brought within two years after the declaration or decree of bankruptcy; or after the cause of suit shall first have accrued; and averred that suit was brought on 15th April, 1845, which was more than two years after the declaration and decree of bankruptcy of the said Francis; and more than two years after the cause of suit first accrued. 4. That suit was not brought within two years after the decree and declaration of bankruptcy of Francis, nor within two years after the cause of suit first accrued. 5. That the decree and declaration of bankruptcy was not made, nor did the cause of suit in the declaration mentioned, first accrue to plaintiff within two years next before his suit was brought.

To 1st, 3d, 4th and 5th pleas plaintiff demurred, and took issue on the 2d.

The Court sustained the demurrer to the 3d plea, and after inspecting the record, found for plaintiff on issue joined on 2d plea; but overruled the demurrers to the 1, 4 and 5 pleas, and gave judgment for defendant.

L. A. Thompson and T. H. Hagner, for plaintiff in error:

On the 15th April, 1845, James T. Archer, Assignee in Bankruptcy of Wm. H. Francis, brought an action of debt against the administrators of Samuel H. Duval, upon a judgment rendered in favor of William H. Francis before his bankruptcy, to wit on 17th February, 1842, against the same administrators, of Samuel H. Duval for $350 38-100, to be levied of assetts in hand. The declaration recites the judgment and execution, and return nulla bona;—that on 7th May, 1842, said Francis was declared a bankrupt, and Archer, Assignee of Francis vs. Duval's Administrators.

221 on same day plaintiff was appointed his assignee. The declaration then suggests desastavit in the usual form.

The defendant pleaded sundry pleas. It is only necessary to call the attention of the Court to the 1st, 4th, and 5th pleas.

The defendant pleaded—1st, nil debet, to which was demurrer. The Court overruled the demurrer, and gave judgment final thereon. This we hold was error. Judgment should have been respondeat ouster.

Defendants' 4th plea is of limitations, grounded upon the 8th section of the Bankrupt Law—the plea is "that plaintiff's suit was not brought within two years after the cause of suit first accrued."

Defendant's 5th plea is also of limitations—"that the declaration and decree of bankruptcy in the declaration mentioned, was not made, nor did the cause of suit in the declaration mentioned first accrue to said plaintiff at any time within two years next before this suit was brought against the said defendants in this behalf."

To each of these pleas the plaintiff filed a general demurrer.—There was joinder, and the Court, (Thomas Douglas, Judge,) gave judgment, "that the said pleas of the said defendants, by them firstly, fourthly and fifthly, above pleaded, are sufficient in law to bar the said plaintiff from having or maintaining his aforesaid action against them the said defendants," &c. &c.—"And therefore, it is considered by the Court, that the said plaintiff take nothing by his said suit, but that he in mercy," &c.

The plaintiff in error insisted that these pleas, and the matters therein set up, are no bar to his action.

The question is one of construction of the 8th section of the bankrupt law of the United States.

The 8th section enacts—"And no suit at law or in equity shall, in any case, be maintainable by or against such assignee, or by or against any person claiming an adverse interest touching the property and rights of property aforesaid, in any court whatsoever, unless the same shall be brought within two years after the declaration and decree of bankruptcy, or after the cause of suit shall first have accrued.

They insisted that this bar does not apply. Here is not a case of adverse interest touching any property or right of property of the bankrupt. The bankrupt held this judgment. The right to it was 222 never in contest. The defendants, against whom it was rendered, surely have no adverse interest in the property, in his judgment.—The bar designed by the statute to apply to a case of conflicting claims to property or rights of property, has been made to apply to a case where the right of property is clear and undisputed.

They referred the Court to the Bankrupt Act in the Acts of 1841, published by authority, and particularly to pages 14th, 15th, sec. 8.

The counsel for the plaintiff in error have been able to find no adjudication on the limitation clause of this Bankrupt Act, and can therefore turn the Court to no authority.

A. E. Maxwell, for Defendants in error:

He relied upon the 8th section of the Bankrupt act, to show that the 4th and 5th pleas are good, and that the demurrers to them were rightly overruled. The assignee derives his power to sue from the 3d section, and he can sue in no other case than is therein embraced; and by comparison of that section with the 8th, it will be found that the cases barred after two years, are co-extensive with the cases where the assignee has power to sue—consequently, all cases which he can bring into court are subject to the bar given by the 8th section, if two years have passed before suit.

The argument that this is not a case of adverse interest touching the property or rights of property of the bankrupt, proves too much. If not, the plaintiff has no right to be in this Court; for the 3d section does not authorize him to sue, except in such cases, and he cannot go beyond the authority there conferred on him. But giving the statute a proper construction, this is a case within its meaning. The interest of the plaintiff in the judgment is adverse to that of the defendant, and it is, also, a case "touching""—in other words, relating to or concerning—the judgment, which was the "property" of the bankrupt; not, to be sure, a case where the right to the judgment is involved, but one touching or relating to the property, viz: the judgment.

But independent of this, the bar extends to "any case" by or against the assignee, which is certainly broad enough to cover this case, whatever be its character.

Baltzell, Justice:

To an action instituted by the plaintiff as assignee of Francis, on a judgment recovered against defendants, suggesting a devastavit, 223 they plead—1st, That they were not indebted.—2dly, No such record.—3dly, Reciting the bankrupt law of the United States as to the time of maintaining suits, &c. that the suit was not brought within two years after the decree of bankruptcy, and more than two years after the cause of action accrued.—4th, That the suit was not brought within two years after the decree of bankruptcy, nor within two years after the cause of action accrued.—5th, That the declaration and decree of bankruptcy was not made, nor did the cause of suit accrue to plaintiff at any time within two years before his suit was brought. Plaintiff demurred to the 1st, 3d, 4th and 5th pleas, and took issue upon the second.

The court below adjudged the 1st, 4th, and 5th pleas to be sufficient, and overruled the 3d plea, declaring it to be insufficient. The issue on nul tiel record was tried, and found for plaintiff; but the other issues being with the defendants, the Court gave judgment in their favor. Plaintiff has assigned for error, the overruling the demurrer to the first, fourth, and fifth pleas, and giving judgment for defendants.

We are of opinion that the Court decided correctly as to the first plea. Nil debet as well as not guilty may be pleaded to an action suggesting a devastavit against executors. Williams on Executors. 1225. Coppin vs. Carter, 1 T. R. 402.

The sufficiency of the other pleas depends upon the proper construction of the 8th section of the act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. This section provides, "that the Circuit court in and for the District where the decree of bankruptcy is prayed, shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts of all suits at law and equity, which may be brought by any assignee of the bankrupt, against any person or persons claiming an adverse interest, or by such person against such assignee, touching any property or rights of property of said bankrupt, transferrable to, or vested in such assignee, and no suit at law or in equity shall in any case be maintainable by or against such assignee, or by or against any person claiming an adverse interest touching the property and rights of property aforesaid, in any court whatsoever, unless the same shall be brought within two years after the declaration and decree of bankruptcy, or after the cause of suit shall 224 first have accrued."

It is contended by plaintiff that this cause does not apply to or embrace the case of defendants, because there is not in question an adverse interest touching any property or right of property of the bankrupt. The act declares that "no suit at law by such assignee shall in any case be maintainable in any court whatsoever, unless brought within two years." If this be the correct reading of the text, the act is very explicit, and leaves no room for construction. It is true that the previous part of the section had provided for a concurrent jurisdiction of the Circuit with the District court "in all suits at law and in equity which may be brought by any assignee of the bankrupt against any person claiming an adverse interest, or by such person against such assignee touching any property or rights of property of said bankrupt, transferrable to or vested in such assignee." Confining the jurisdiction to the cases thus designated, yet is this designation both of Courts and persons, not only not continued, but expressly excluded by the use of the terms in the clause of limitation, "no suit in any cause in any court whatever." So also, whilst the preceding part of the act specifies suits brought by an assignee against persons claiming an adverse interest, this latter uses the terms "by such assignees," without any qualification.

We are the better satisfied with this view of the subject in consideration of the very peculiar character of this law, the object of which was to secure a prompt and efficient administration and settlement of the estate of all bankrupts, within a limited period. Thus by the 10th section, it is made the duty of the court "to order and direct a collection of the assets, and a reduction of the same to money, and a distribution thereof at as early periods as practicable,"—dividends are required to be made "as often as once in six months from the time of the decree declaring bankruptcy;" and "all the proceedings in bankruptcy in each case shall, if practicable, be finally adjusted, settled and brought to a close by the Court within two years after the decree declaring the bankruptcy."

It will cease to be regarded as singular that the law requires the assignee to commence suits within two years, when by the same law it is made his duty to adjust, settle, and finally bring to a close, all the proceedings in the case within the same period. Concurring with the 225 Court in overruling the demurrer to these pleas, it remains to enquire whether the court erred in giving judgment absolutely for defendants. By the Common Law, judgment followed the decision on a demurrer as matter of course, it being considered as a confession by matter of record of the facts pleaded. The law in force in this State, provides that "no demurrer shall be considered as an admission of the facts set forth in the pleadings demurred to, so as to bar the person demurring from any substantial claim or defence which he might have urged if said demurrer had not been filed." Duval 95. If application had been made to the court below to withdraw the demurrer, and for permission to reply to the pleas, we do not hesitate to say that the Court should have granted it; but this was not done; on the contrary, plaintiff has abided by his demurrer, by taking his writ of error. How then can this Court decide that the party has been barred from a substantial claim or defence he might have urged? How determine that there is a substantial claim or defence when none has been preferred?

It is at his option on overruling his demurrer, to withdraw it, or allow it to stand. If he does not withdraw it, it concludes his case. He is here entitled to the decision of this Court on the correctness of the judgment overruling his demurrer, and could also have claimed our decision on a like judgment in overruling his motion to be permitted to reply to the pleas after the decision on his demurrer. The jurisdiction of the Court is appellate merely, to re-examine and to rejudge—to correct erroneous decisions already made—it is not a jurisdiction to determine in the first instance cases or questions which have not been submitted to the decision of the Judge below.

Being of opinion that there is no error in the judgment of the Circuit Court, it is ordered that the same be affirmed.

226 T. LANE BETTON, TRUSTEE OF SARAH ANN BETTON, CLAIMANT vs. JESSE H. WILLIS AND WILLIAM P. MOSELEY, PLAINTIFFS IN EXECUTION.

When a claim to property has been interposed under the 9th and 10th sections of "an act concerning executions," approved 17th February, 1833, it is the duty of the officer to return the affidavit and bond of claimant, and the execution levied, to the next term of the Court whence the execution issued. But it is not necessary that the execution appear as a part of the pleadings in the cause; and if the record shows that it was used in evidence at the trial of its right of property, it will be presumed to have been returned by the officer according to law.

In the trial of the right of property on a claim interposed, the statute does not require a formal issue: The jury are sworn "to try the right of property," and not "to try the issue joined."

This case, being a claim interposed under the statute to property levied on under executions in favor of Willis and Moseley, was tried in the Superior Court for the late territory of Florida, at its Spring Term, 1845. A jury being sworn to try the right of property levied upon by plaintiffs in execution, returned the following verdict:—"We, the jury, find the property claimed to be the property of Alfred M. Gatlin, deceased, in the hands of Luke G. Lamb, executor, to be administered, and liable and subject to these executions," and judgment was entered accordingly.

An appeal was taken and a Bill of Exceptions filed, which among other things, set forth the executions in favor of Willis and Moseley as having been introduced in evidence by claimant.

The facts are contained, at large, in the opinion of the Court.

A. E. Marwell, and Carmack, for claimant.

Thompson & Hagner, for Willis.

J. & L. Branch, for Moseley.

DOUGLAS, C. Justice.

This case was brought up by an appeal from the Circuit Court of Leon county.

It was commenced in the late Superior Court for that county, and is a collateral proceeding arising out of the cases of William P. Moseley and Jesse H. Willis, plaintiffs in execution, against the executors of the last will and testament of A. M. Gatlin, deceased, and 227 was instituted under the ninth and tenth sections of "an act concerning executions," approved Feb. 17th, 1833. Duval's Compilation, page 10. The ninth section provides—"That when any marshal, sheriff, or other officer shall levy on goods and chattels claimed by any other person than the defendant, such person may make oath that said property belongs to him; and it shall be the duty of the officer to postpone any further proceedings under said levy until the right of property shall have been tried: Provided, the person claiming such goods and chattels, shall give bond with surety, to be approved by the marshal, sheriff, or other officer levying the execution, payable to the plaintiff, in a penal sum of double the amount of the sum for which execution issued, conditioned to deliver said goods and chattels, upon demand of said officer, if the same shall be adjudged to be the property of the defendant in execution, and to pay the plaintiff all damages which the jury 'on the trial of the right of property,' may find in his favor, if it should appear to the pury that such claim was interposed for the purpose of delay."

Section 10, provides, that when an execution has been levied, and a claim to the property interposed as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the officer to return said execution to the next term of the Court whence it issued; together with such affidavit and bond; at which term a jury shall be sworn to try the right of property, "and also, to give the plaintiff such damages, not exceeding twenty per cent, as may appear reasonable and right, in case of its appearing to the Jury that such claim was interposed for delay, and the court shall give judgment for the amount of damages so found."

The 9th section above recited was amended by "an act to amend the law in reference to executions and attachments," approved 15th March, 1843, which provides, "that claim bonds, and replevin bonds, whether under execution or attachment, shall be for double the value of the property claimed, and not in doube the amount of the execution or attachment." See acts of 1843, pages 41 and 42. In all other respects it remains as originally enacted.

It appears by the record sent up, that on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1844, the said William P. Moseley recovered a judgment in the said Superior court against the said Executors, &c. of Alfred M. Gatlin, deceased, and that on the fourth day of the succeeding month 228 of May, Jesse H. Willis recovered in the same court another judgment against the same Executors, and that on the 15th day of the same month, an execution was issued on each of the same judgments, which on the next day were placed in the hands of the marshal of the Middle District of Florida, and that he on the 16th day of the same month, levied said executions upon certain negro slaves, which were claimed by T. Lane Betton, the present appellant, as Trustee of Sarah Ann Betton, "under a deed of trust and in virtue of a marriage settlement between the said Sarah Ann and Turbutt R. Betton." That the said T. Lane Betton gave bond to the marshal (as required by said 10th section) in which bond the names of the slaves levied upon are stated, and to which the appellant, T. Lane Betton, made oath in the following words, to wit: "Leon, ss. T. Lane Betton, trustee of Sarah Ann Betton, being duly sworn, says, the within specified slaves and property, belong to him as trustee of said Sarah, being assigned to her as her dower, and being in litigation, and that the same is not subject to levy and sale under said execution within mentioned."

This execution, affidavit, and bond were returned by the marshal, according to the requirements of the 10th section of the act first above mentioned, and afterwards, to wit, at a Supreme Court for the county of Leon, continued and held at the court house in the city of Tallahassee, on Friday the ninth day of May, A. D. 1845, "a jury was sworn to try the right of property," levied upon by said plaintiffs in execution, who upon their oath returned the following verdict, viz: "We, the jury, find the property claimed to be the property of Alfred M. Gatlin, deceased, in the hands of Luke Lamb, executor, to be administered, and liable and subject to these executions." Upon which verdict, judgment was entered as follows, to wit:—"Therefore it is considered by the Court, that the plaintiffs in execution may proceed to execute the levys made as aforesaid, on the property aforesaid, ascertained by the jury to be liable and subject to these executions, and that they recover against the said claimants their costs by them about their defence expended, and the said claimant in mercy, &c."

The only error relied upon by the appellant is, that there is no issue in the case. And it is contended by them:—

229 1st, That without a formal issue joined, there was nothing for the jury to try, and that it was error to submit the matter to a jury without such an issue.

2. That it does not appear by the record that the said executions were returned by the marshal as required by the 10th section of the act first above cited.

3d. That if the Court should be of the opinion that no formal issue was necessary, that at least the bond and executions ought to have been returned according to the provision of the statute, and to have appeared as pleadings in the cause—and

4th. That this is a statutory proceeding in derogation of the Common Law, and that a party proceeding under it should be held to a strict compliance with its provisions.

On the other hand it is insisted that there was a full compliance by the appellees with all the requirements of the statute. No authorities were cited on either side—no analagous proceedings referred to.

The court fully recognizes the doctrine that where a summary remedy is given by statute, those who wish to avail themselves of it, must be confined strictly to its provisions, and shall take nothing by intendment. Logwood vs. Huntsville, 1 Minor's Alabama Reps. 23. Childress vs. McGehee, Ibid. 131. Crawford vs. State, Ibid. 143. Yancy vs. Hawkins, Ibid. 171. Young vs. Martin, 2 Yeates, 312; and that statutes in derogation of the common law are to be strictly construed. Commonwealth vs. Knobb, 9 Pick. 496. Lock vs. Miller, 3 Stew. & Port. 13. Melody vs. Reab, 4 Mass. 471-73.—In giving a construction to a statute, the court must consider its policy and give it such an interpretation as may appear best calculated to advance its object by effectuating the design of the legislature. Allen vs. Parrish, 3d Hammond, 198. The object here undoubtedly was a summary "trial of the right of property," levied on without a resort to the technical rules of special pleading.

What does the statute require? We answer that it requires the claimant to make oath that the property levied on belongs to him, and to give bond with security, &c. It also makes it the duty of the officer to return said execution to the next term of the court whence it issued, together with such affidavit and bond, and that a jury shall be sworn to try the right of property, and to give the plaintiff dam-230 ages, &c.; and that the court shall give judgment for the amount of damages so found. These are all the requirements of the statute on the subject, and we are of opinion that these requirements were all substially (at least) complied with. The return of the executions, affidavit and bond were necessary to give the court jurisdiction in this case. McKnight vs. Smith, 5th Arkansas Reps. 410. The statute requires the officer to return them; but it is the interest as well as the duty of the claimant, to see that he does so. The return of these executions was essential to enable the Court to ascertain whether bond had been given according to law. It is not pretended that the bond and affidavit were not duly returned; but it is insisted that there is nothing to show that the executions were thus returned. It appears, however, by the bill of exceptions in the record, that they were present and introduced as evidence on the trial of the right of property, by the claimant himself. The presumption therefore, is, that they were returned by the marshal according to law. The statute having made it his duty to return them, and being found in their proper place, it is to be presumed that they were properly returned, upon the principle that "all things are presumed to be legitimately done till the contrary is proved." Coke Lit. 232. And this presumption is rendered a moral and legal certainty by the fact, that the parties, by their attorneys, appeared at the said trial in the court below, and that no objection was there taken to the return of the marshal, or to the jurisdiction of the Court for want of such return. The court below having jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties before it, this Court will presume that all things necessary to give it jurisdiction had been done—nothing to the contrary appearing by the record. 5 Arkansas Reps. 411, 412. Thus far then, all that the statute requires to be done was done. We deem it unnecessary that the executions should appear as pleadings in the record. It is sufficient that they appear to have been duly returned. But if they should not thus appear, as the counsel for the claimant insists, whose duty was it to see that they did appear? The claimant was the actor in the court below. The onus probandi rested on him. He too, is the complainant in this Court, and it was incumbent on him to bring up a complete record. By the 7th rule of the practice, he was not entitled to be heard until a complete record was filed with the Clerk of this Court.

The only remaining question, and the more important one arises 231 upon the error assigned—"That there was no issue." But this we think is met by the peculiar provision of the statute, which declares that "a jury shall be sworn to try the right of property," not to try the issue. Had the legislature intended that the strict rules of special pleading should be applied to this class of cases, the language would naturally have been "a jury shall be sworn to try the issue," and the manner of making up that issue (it is reasonable to suppose) would have been prescribed, as it was in case of garnishees. The oath required to be administered to the jury is inapplicable to a formal traverse, and shows that the Legislature did not intend to prescribe one. The 7th section of the act of 15th Feb. 1834, to amend the (above cited) act concerning executions, contains the provision in relation to garnishees just alluded to. It declares that "whenever any person garnisheed, as is provided for by the seventeenth section of the act to which this is an amendment, shall deny or fail to answer in accordance with the provisions of the said section, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff in execution to traverse the said denial or answer, and the issue so made up shall forthwith be submitted to a jury for their decision." Duval's Comp. p. 13. This repeals no portion of the former act, but adds to it, and is to be considered as a part of it, and both must be construed together. Pearce vs. Atwood, 13th Mass. Reps. 324, 344.

The legislature having had the subject of issue before it, in relation to one summary collateral proceeding, provided for by this statute, and having made no provision for such an issue in the case of a claim to property levied on by execution, is evidence that it did not consider a formal issue necessary in such a case, and we do not think such an issue is required in the case before us. This is not a solitary instance of the swearing of a jury without such an issue upon the record. It is done in all cases brought up by appeal from Justices of the Peace to the Circuit courts in which the trial is de novo. And in all cases of judgment by default for want of a plea in the Circuit Courts, where the sum claimed is not certain, and cannot be rendered certain by calculation, a jury is sworn to enquire of the damages. And upon a writ of ad quod damnum, a jury is sworn to assess the damages. In the two classes of cases last mentioned, there is of course no issue.

Upon the whole, we think there is no error in the judgment of 232 the Court below, and it is therefore affirmed with costs.

T. LANE BETTON, TRUSTEE OF SARAH ANN BETTON, CLAIMANT, vs. UNION BANK OF FLORIDA, PLAINTIFF IN EXECUTION.

This case is similar to that of T. Lane Betton, Trustee, &s. vs. Willis and Moseley.

A. E. Maxwell and Carmack, for Claimant.

Long & Walker, for Plaintiff in Execution.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This cause was also brought up from Leon Circuit Court by appeal, and is in all respects similar in principle to the preceding case, and must be governed by the principles laid down in the opinion of the Court delivered in that case.

Indeed it was understood to have been agreed by the respective counsel in these cases, that the one should abide the fate of the other.

The judgment of the court below is therefore affirmed with costs.

Per Curiam.

233 ABNER M. SESSIONS, WHO SUES FOR THE USE OF HAMILTON W. SHARP vs. JOHN STEVENS.

A judgment against a garnishee prima facie is a bar to a subsequent recovery on the same note in the hands of any one. The law in such case constitutes the execution creditor an assignee of the note from the time of the service of the notice of garnishment, and entitles him to judgment as if the note had been regularly assigned to him by act of the party.

By the judgment against the garnishee, the note in legal contemplation, becomes extinguished, loses its identity and character, and ceases to be the subject of future action.

If however the Plaintiff be a bona fide holder of the note before service of the notice of garnishment, it would be otherwise, and he would be entitled to recover on the note, notwithstanding the judgment against the garnishee.

It is irregular to sue out a writ of garnishment prior to a return of "no property found" on the execution, and the court will, in such case, upon application, set aside the writ or excuse the party from answering. If however, the Defendant in execution neglects to make such application, he will be presumed to have waived the irregularity, and neither he nor his assignee will be permitted to disturb the judgment afterwards in another suit, by presenting the question in a collateral manner.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court—His Hon. Judge Thomas Douglas, presiding.

This was an action of assumpsit, brought by plaintiff as endorsee of a promissory note, of which the following is a copy:

$106 46. By the 1st day of September next, I promise to pay Adam Wyrick one hundred and six dollars for value received.—July 30th, 1842.

(Signed) JOHN STEVENS.

[ENDORSED]

1843, Feb.—Received by Wm. West of the within $5—A. Wyrick.

For value received, I endorse and assign the within note to A. M. R. Sessions, for benefit of H. W. Sharp—1843. Adam Wyrick.

The declaration contained special and the money counts.—Pleas 1, non assumpsit. 2d That "before and at the time of the transfer of said note in the first and second counts of the said plaintiff's declaration mentioned, to wit, 21st February, 1843, and before defendant had any notice of said alleged transfer of said note, and before and 234 at the time of the commencement of this suit, the said defendant was duly served with a certain process of garnishment issued from the Superior court of Jefferson county, in a suit and upon a judgment in, and execution thereon, issued out of said Superior court, in which James Branon was plaintiff and the said Adam Wyrick defendant, to answer concerning his indebtedness to said Adam Wyrick according to law, and upon such answer made at November Term, 1844, of said court, judgment was accorded against the said defendant for the amount then due on the said note in said plaintiff's declaration mentioned, to wit, the sum of $71, and $3 94 costs on same, paid James Branon towards satisfying his said judgment; and in consequence of said judgment said defendant was and is bound, liable and made obliged to pay said note to the said James Branon, as creditor of said Adam Wyrick, being the sum of $71. The whole balance due on the said note by the said defendant and said costs, which judgment is yet unannulled," &c.

To 2d plea, plaintiff replied "that in the garnishment case referred to by defendant in this said plea, the above stated plaintiff was not a party to the record in any way whatever, and ought not to be affected by said garnishment process and the judgment thereon.—Said plaintiff also saith that if at the commencement of this action, said debt was held and bound by said garnishment process, said plaintiff says that said defendant had not then answered to said garnishment case; that there was at said time no judgment in said garnishment case against said defendant, and that said defendant was also held and bound by this the said action. Plaintiff saith further, that no such judgment as mentioned in said defendant's plea was obtained in favor of James Branon at said November Term, 1844," &c.

On the trial the endorsements on the note by Adam Wyrick, were proved.

The defendant gave in evidence a certain execution in favor of James Branon against Adam Wyrick, issued out of the Superior court for Jefferson county, on 4th May, 1841, on which was endorsed:—May 22, 1841, levied on 1 wagon and six mules, &c. June 5, 1841, levied on 4 mules, 1 gray horse, &c.—and that a claim bond had been interposed by Ann Christopher; also, a writ of garnishment, sued out by James Branon, the plaintiff in the execution against Adam Wyrick, on 21st February, 1843, and directed to de- 235 fendant, and which was duly served on him the same day it was issued, with the return of the defendant as garnishee that he owed Adam Wyrick a balance of $71; also, the judgment of the court in favor of James Branon, the plaintiff in execution, against him for this amount. Plaintiff objected to the admission of the execution, writ of garnishment and judgment of the court thereon, because it appeared by the execution that property had been levied on, and that return of "no property found" had not been made on the execution before the garnishment issued, and because the said process was illegal; also, because the said judgment was not a proper subject of set-off, nor binding on plaintiff, he not being a party thereto.

The Court overruled the objections, and plaintiff accepted.

Defendant then offered one Watson, who testified "that Adam Wyrick called on witness some time in February, 1843, and asked to loan him money, and agreed to pledge to him, as security, the note now sued on as he believes; Wyrick said it was a note of Stevens, though he did not show the note; afterwards, in March, 1843, after the garnishment, witness was present at Ellenwood's house, where John Stevens then was, and Wyrick asked payment of Stevens on this note; Stevens said he had been garnisheed; Wyrick asked Stevens to give him another note, as he wanted to transfer it; Stevens declined, saying he had been garnisheed: Witness saw the note; Wyrick had it and showed it to him and Stevens; then told Stevens that if he paid the money on the garnishment process, he, Stevens, would have to pay it again."

The plaintiff asked the Court to instruct the jury.

1. That if Stevens confessed to the judgment creditor upon a garnishment illegally issued, and which he was not bound to answer, because irregular and illegal, then that the judgment confessed cannot be set up against the note.

2. That if the note was taken after due, the equities then existing, when so taken, only can apply.

3. That Stevens having confessed the debt due to Wyrick when he had notice of Sessions's claim, has no right to set up against plaintiff the judgment rendered on his admission of debt.

Which instructions the Court refused, and instructed the jury:— 236

1. That Sessions was bound to take notice of the garnishee process, taking the note after due.

2. That defendant is liable to plaintiff unless bound by the garnishee notice; that he was bound by the garnishee notice; that Stevens was concluded from paying this note after service of the garnishee notice. In this case it was clearly proved that Sessions took the note long after it became due, and that before he took it, the defendant had been garnisheed by one James Branon; that Sessions, the plaintiff, was not entitled to recover; that Stevens was not bound to go to the expense of defending the garnishee notice; that all was regular, and that his acknowledging that Sessions pretended to claim the note, made no difference, he having taken the note after it was dishonored.

To which instructions the plaintiff excepted, and took an appeal. The jury rendered a verdict for defendant.

Randall & Hogner, for Appellant:

The Appellant is the assignee of a promissory note of Appellee, whom he sued in the court below. The defence set up was that the defendant had been "duly garnished" by a creditor of the original payee, before he had notice of any transfer, and that upon his answer made concerning his indebtedness, judgment was accorded against him, and in consequence of said judgment, defendant "is bound and liable and made obliged to pay," &c. The answer of defendant to the alleged garnishment notice abundantly shows that he had notice of plaintiff's claim as assignee of the note; but defendant affected to treat the claim as a mere "pretence," and confessed that he owed the money to the original payee.

This garnishment notice, and this judgment, are set up as a bar to the recovery of plaintiff as assignee upon said note.

They would examine the whole defence, in the order of the objections made to it.

The garnishee writ, answer and judgment were offered in evidence, and objected to by plaintiff, but overruled by the court. Objected to by plaintiff.

1st. Because the garnishment notice was ILLEGAL, NULL AND VOID. It was issued without authority of law, before return made 237 of "no property found" on the execution. See Duval, p. 11, sec. 17.

The garnishee was bound to see that the proceedings was regular. 1 Howard's Rep. 49.

It was issued on an execution, long before dead and inoperative. The execution was issued in May, 1841, returnable to November Term, 1841. This garnishment pleaded to have been issued "upon said judgment and execution," was issued in February, 1843, nearly two years after the execution had run out.

Next it was issued after a levy under the execution, made in due course of law, in May 1841, after claim bond filed.

Now this levy was a satisfaction of the debt, and the bond took the place of the levy—and the statute expressly orders the marshal "to return the execution to the court." Sec. 10, p. 10 of Duval. And also, makes it his duty—Sec. 9, p. 10 of Duval—"to postpone any further proceeding under said levy until the claim is tried."

The return of "no property found," is essential to base any proceeding for satisfaction of the debt out of assets and effects in the hands of third parties, because without such return, and where there is a levy, the debt is satisfied. "Pro hac vice."

2d. Because said judgment is not a proper subject of set-off.—Nothing less than satisfaction is a bar, even when all is regular, in a case like this.

They cited Wise vs. Hilton, 4 Greenleaf, 435—"A trustee judgment is no protection to the trustee against the claims of the person whose effects or credits were in his hands, unless it has been satisfied."—Also, 1 Washington Circuit Court Reps. 425.

The Court admitted the evidence, and refused to instruct the jury as asked for by plaintiff—"That if Stevens confessed to the judgment creditor upon a garnishment illegally issued, and which he was not bound to answer, because illegal and irregular, then that the judgment cannot be set up against the note." They insisted the Court erred herein.

The Court will notice next, the 3d instruction asked for by plaintiff and refused—"That Stevens having confessed the debt due Wyrick, while he had notice of Sessions's claim, has no right to set up the judgment on his admission of debt against the plaintiff."

Now it is a principle of the law touching the trustee process, that "upon the answer so made the Court is to give judgment," and no
238 evidence can be admitted to charge or discharge the trustee, except what he discloses in his answers. Haws vs. Longton, 8 Pick'g. 67, and many other cases.

Now, here Stevens declared that he owes the money to Wyrick, though he had notice of Sessions's claim. He calls that claim "a pretence," and yet afterwards introduces witnesses to show that he had not notice of it. Now his answer is the best evidence.

As a stakeholder he was bound to make the parties in interest INTERPLEAD. Oldham vs. Ledbetter, 1 Howard's Mississippi Rep. 47. If the case required it, further time would have been given him for the purpose of bringing all the parties before the Court. He had a right to require the adverse title to be legally settled; but he chooses on the contrary, to deny to Sessions all legal claim, and confess the judgment.

They would turn the attention of the Court now to the 1st instruction given by the Judge:—

"That Sessions (the plaintiff) was bound to take notice of the garnishee process, taking the note after due."

On what principle of law this is grounded, they were at a loss to conceive. Taking the note after due, he was liable only to the equities at the time. So far from Sessions being bound to take notice of the garnishment, he held the note; this transferred the title to the debt to him, and as the holder of the note he had a recourse against the maker. Now if the creditor knew of any alledged assignment, he should summon the assignee and compel a discovery. Dix vs. Cobbs, 4 Mass. 508. Sessions held the paper—an assigned security for money—and there were no equities between him and Stevens, except such as were between Stevens and Wyrick.

The 2d instruction is we think, correct, at least, according to our interpretation:—"He is bound to Sessions unless bound by the garnishee notice."—Now it is clear he is not bound by the garnishee notice. It was clearly illegal, null and void, and he had only to say so to have defeated it.

Here defendant confessed a debt as due, which was not due, to Adam Wyrick. He confessed it in favor of a man as a creditor of dam Wyrick, whose debt, at the time was in view of the law satisfied. He confessed it then to one not a creditor, not entitled to receive it. He conferred it upon a void process, which he takes not the trouble to examine; nor yet claiming to be a stakeholder, does 239 he give any opportunity to the plaintiff here to interplead. He has not, however, paid the money, and this of itself, defeats the attempted bar to the plaintiff's recovery, while it will enable defendant to set himself right.

Judgment on a trustee process against the defendant as garnishee of the plaintiff, is no defence in a suit for the debt, if the plaintiff in the original trustee process has by his neglect to comply with the local law, put his judgment in a state of suspension, so that an execution can no longer issue upon it, and it cannot be revived by a scire facias. Flower vs. Parker, 3 Mason, 247.

Here at all events, that judgment may be reversed, and declared to be null. The broad principle in any event, is that "a trustee judgment is no protection to the trustee against the claims of the person whose effects or credits were in his hands, unless it has been satisfied." Wise vs. Hetton, 4 Greenleaf, 435. So that even as against Adam Wyrick, the judgment would be no bar to this recovery.

BALTZELL, Justice:

This is a suit instituted by Sessions against Stevens, in the Court below, on a note for $106, payable the 1st of September, 1842, to Adam Wyrick, and by him assigned to plaintiff. The defence principally relied upon was, that "defendant was served with a process of garnishment issued from the Superior Court of Jefferson county, upon a judgment and execution issued out of said court, in which James Branon was plaintiff, and said Wyrick was defendant, to answer concerning his indebtedness to said Wyrick, according to law, and upon such answer at November Term, 1844, of said court, judgment was rendered against said defendant for the amount due on the note, to wit, the sum of $71, and $3 94 costs, which record he brings into court, &c." To this there was a replication "that no such judgment as mentioned in said defendant's plea, was obtained in favor of James Branon at said November Term, 1844."

The Court below directed the jury that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and the propriety of this instruction is now presented to the consideration of this Court by the assignment of errors. The instruction would seem to follow as a consequence from the state of the pleadings, and the successful maintenance by defendant of his plea of judgment recovered. A judgment against a garnishee, pri- 240 ma facie, is a bar to a subsequent recovery of the same note in the hands of any one. The law in such cases constitutes the execution creditor an assignee of the note from the time of the service of the notice of garnishment, and entitles him to judgment as if the note had been regularly assigned to him by act of the party, otherwise there would be the strange and extraordinary anomaly of a tribunal of justice committing an act of injustice, by compelling a party to pay twice on the same engagement.

Such a judgment is the action of a court of competent and general jurisdiction, and is entitled to all the attributes of an adjudication upon the subject matter. By it, the note in legal contemplation, becomes extinguished, loses its identity and character, and ceases to be the subject of future action. "It is evidence not only of the judgment, but of the right which it has decided." 3 Peters' Cr. Ct. Reps. 74. "A judgment in its nature concludes the subject in which it is rendered, and pronounces the law of the case. It puts an end to all enquiries into the fact, by deciding it." 3 Peters' Reps. 204, 205.

If the plaintiff, instead of taking issue on the plea as to the existence of the judgment, had replied, that he was a bona fide holder of the note before service of the notice of garnishment, a different case might have been presented. 3 Pick. 67. But this was not done, and it is questionable whether such evidence was admissible on the trial. Yet the evidence shows the note to have been assigned after service of the notice. The assignment of the note bears date the year it became due. Omitting the day and the month, a suspicious circumstance, and the proof on the part of the defendant, was that Wyrick, the original holder in March, 1843, (the notice being served in February preceding,) asked payment of Stevens of the note. Stevens said he had been garnisheed. Wyrick asked for another note. Wyrick had it, and showed it to Stevens." The plaintiff did not prove when or how he obtained the note. Under this state of facts, we concur in the opinion of the Circuit Court as to the propriety of the instruction given.

It was objected that the notice of garnishment was illegal, there not being a return of "no property" on the execution, which is made a pre-requisite by the statute to the issuing of notice of gar-

241 nishment. That there was an irregularity in this respect, does not admit of doubt, and if the application had been made to the court rendering the judgment to set aside the notice, or objection had been made to the answer of the garnishee, the court would probably have quashed it, or excluded him from answer. In case of overruling his objections, the party might have appealed, or had his writ of error. But this is his privilege, and he may waive it. By declining this course, he is presumed to have assented to it, nor is he or his assignee permitted to disturb the judgment afterward in another suit, presenting the question in a collateral manner. These principles will be found to be asserted in repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Thus "a court which is competent by its constitution to decide on its own jurisdiction, and to exercise it to a final judgment, without setting forth in its proceedings the facts and evidence on which it is rendered, whose record is absolute verity not to be impunged by averment or proof to the contrary, is of the description of courts whose judgments are conclusive if not removed to an appellate court. There can be no judicial inspection behind the judgment, save by appellate power." Voorhees vs. Bank U. S. 10 Peters' Rep. 479. Grignon's Lessees vs. Astor, 2 How. 343. Considering this view of the subject conclusive, we have not deemed it necessary to notice the other points in the case; being fully satisfied that the judgment should be affirmed—which is decreed accordingly.

242 THE TERRITORY OF FLORIDA, FOR USE OF WILKINS C. SMITH, SURVIVING PARTNER OF HOLLOMAN & SMITH, vs. WILLIAM H. REDDING, ELIAS E. BLACKBURN, NEEDHAM BRYANT AND LITTLE BERRY PARKER.

On the death of a partner, the moneys, goods, and merchandise of the firm belong to the surviving partner, and a Sheriff as administrator ex officio of the deceased partner, has no right to collect, discharge or meddle with the partnership property in any way, except to obtain the deceased partner's share after the settlement of the debts.

A suit cannot be maintained by a surviving partner against a Sheriff, as administrator ex officio of the deceased partner, and his securities, on his official Bond, for the moneys, goods, and merchandise belonging to the firm, collected and received by him as such administrator.

The securities of a Sheriff who is administrator ex officio, are only liable on his administration bond after the judgment of a court fixing the liability against him as administrator.

Error to Jefferson Circuit Court. This case was decided at the Spring Term, 1846—His Honor Judge Macrae presiding.

Debt on the official bond of William H. Redding as Sheriff of Jefferson county, instituted against defendants in the late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida.—Plea non damnificatus.

Replication assigned as a breach of the bond, "that while the said William H. Redding was Sheriff of the county of Jefferson and administrator ex officio of James M. K. Holloman as aforesaid, he the said William H. Redding, received as such administrator as aforesaid, divers large sums of money, and divers large quantities of goods and merchandise, which he the said Redding should have paid over and delivered to said Wilkins C. Smith as surviving partner of the said James M. K. Holloman, to wit, the sum of one thousand dollars, which the said Redding, though often requested so to do, wholly refused and neglected to pay and deliver the same, whereby the said Wilkins C. Smith, hath been greatly damnified, &c."

To this replication defendants demurred, "because they the said defendants say, that if the said William H. Redding did take charge and receive divers large sums of money, and divers large quantities of goods and merchandise, while he the said William H. Redding was administrator ex officio of the estate of James M. K. Holloman, 243 and which goods, money and merchandise, he the said William H. Redding should have paid over and delivered to the said Wilkins C. Smith as surviving partner of the said James M. K. Holloman; that the statute did not require him the said William H. Redding to receive said sums of money and quantities of goods, as administrator ex officio on the estate of James M. K. Holloman; and the said defendants say that they are not liable to an action of debt upon the said William H. Redding's Sheriff's Bond for any use, waste, or detention of money, goods, or merchandise belonging to Wilkins C. Smith, surviving partner of James M. K. Holloman, deceased. And the said Elias E. Blackburn, Needham Bryan, and L. B. Parker further say that the last aforesaid defendants are not liable to an action at law for any reception, or management of the money, goods and merchandise of the said plaintiff by the said William H. Redding, administrator as aforesaid."

The Court sustained the demurrer, and judgment was entered for defendants.

A. E. Maxwell, for Plaintiff in error.

Long & Walker, for Defendants.

BALTZELL, Justice:

It is an established rule of pleading that "if the plaintiff by his replication show that he has no cause of action, there shall be judgment, though the bar be defective, for the Court will form their judgment from the whole record." Arch. Pl. & Ev. 240.

The replication of plaintiff to a plea by defendant of non damnificatus to debt on bond for Sheriff, sued as administrator by virtue of his office, assigns for breach, that while the said Redding was Sheriff and administrator ex officio of James K. Holloman deceased, he the said Redding received as such administrator as aforesaid, divers large sums of money and divers large quantities of goods and merchandize which he should have paid over and delivered to said Wilkins C. Smith as surviving partner of said Holloman."

To this there was a demurrer, and we are of opinion it was rightfully sustained by the Court below. The design of the replication, as we conceive, is to show that as administrator of the deceased partner, the Sheriff had received this money and these goods and chattels. If so, the replication shows no cause of action in plaintiff.

On the death of a partner, the money, goods, and merchandize of 244 the firm belong to the surviving partner, who is sole owner, and alone at law entitled to sue and be sued for them. Gow on Part. 143. The Sheriff as administrator obviously could not release or discharge an account against the partnership, nor had he the right to interfere with the affairs of the firm in any way, except to obtain the intestate's share of the partnership property from the surviving partner after the settlement of the debts. He had no better right to meddle with these assets or effects than other property of the plaintiff; and plaintiff has no better right to sue him on his official bond than if the administrator had disturbed him in the possession of any property of his own. But there is another view of this subject entirely conclusive, without resting on this point.

Admitting that the Sheriff as administrator, was liable for this money and these assets, his securities on the administration bond are only liable after judgment of a court fixing the liability against him as administrator. 9 Mass. 114. 3 John. 437. 1 Wash. Rep. 31. 4 McCord 113.

For these reasons the judgment is affirmed with costs.

245 CORNELIUS TAYLOR vs. JOHN BAKER.

That clause of the pre-emption laws of the United States which declares "all assignments and transfers of the rights hereby secured prior to the issuing of the patent, shall be null and void," does not make void a contract for the sale and transfer of the rights which a settler expected thereafter to acquire, but refers only to a sale and transfer of the rights already secured.

A sale by a settler on the public lands of the improvements made by him forms a good and sufficient consideration for any contract or price the purchaser may agree to pay for the possession of such improvements.

The relinquishment, by a settler on the public lands, of the bounty of land which he expects to receive from the General Government and the surrender of his improvements, and of the possession, to the vendee, is a good and valid consideration to support a contract for the sale and transfer of such expected bounty of land and the improvements thereon; and such sale and transfer is not prohibited by the act of Congress granting pre-emption rights.

It is not enough in this Court to show that a plea was on file in the Court below; the party complaining must go farther, and show that that Court either refused to act upon the pleading, or decided it wrongfully.

Appeal from the late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida, sitting for the counties of St. John and Musquito.—His honor Judge Douglas, having been counsel for the appellant in the court below, retired from the bench at the hearing in this Court.

Assumpsit on an instrument of writing, of which the following is a copy:

I promise to pay to John Baker, on or before the first day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-three, the sum of three hundred dollars, provided he complies with an agreement made with me for his portion of land, which he is to receive from government as an actual settler, as also for his year's services.

(Signed) C. TAYLOR.

May 30, 1842.

The declaration contained six counts. 1st, On a promissory note; 2d and 3d on an agreement that Baker should proceed to Lake Monroe and take possession of a certain piece of land, and cultivate the same, and surrender his pre-emption right and improvements to appellant; 4th, for work and labor; 5th quantum meruit; 6th, for goods, wares, merchandize, and the money counts.

246 Pleas—1st, non assumpsit. 2d, That note was without a valuable consideration. 3d, That the consideration had failed. 4th, Set-off. 5th, That defendant never made such an agreement as that set out in 2d and 3d counts of the declaration; and if he did, that plaintiff had not complied.

Plaintiff took issue on the fourth plea, and demurred to the 5th.—This demurrer does not appear to have been in any way disposed of.

At the trial, plaintiff read in evidence the note or instrument of writing on which the suit had been brought, and which is set forth above. He called Andrew Floyd, who testified that Taylor was engaged in buying up the claims of settlers to their lands; and on cross examination—that he, the witness, staid there till about the middle of July, and that Baker continued in defendant's service until he left. John Simpson was also sworn, who testified that he was at Fort Mellon, where defendant lived, in December, 1841; that plaintiff was there; that in the Spring of 1842, defendant told him that he had an agreement with Baker; that he knew that Baker staid there and worked for defendant over a year; that he knew the land on which Baker settled or established himself, and that he had not lived on it since he left defendant; that they were not settlers under the armed occupation law; that the year previous Baker's services would have been worth $30 per month, but that year wages were low. Henry A. Crane testified that the plaintiff turned over his land to defendant, and that defendant took possession of it and improved it; that the land was an island, known as Baker's island, on which Baker settled; that he knew that plaintiff worked for defendant during the summer of 1842, and that he continued on until some time in May, 1843; that on the first conversation he had with Taylor about this matter, Taylor told him that he had made a bargain with Baker for his land, and had him at work for him. He further stated that Baker's services were worth $300 per annum.

Defendant gave in evidence the agreement with Baker, referred to in the instrument sued on, of which the following is a copy:

"TERRITORY OF FLORIDA, }
County of Musquito. }

"Know all men by these presents, that I, John Baker of the county and Territory aforesaid, for and in consideration of the sum of three hundred dollars, lawful money of the United States of America, to me in hand paid by C. Taylor, likewise of the county and 247
Territory aforesaid, at and before the sealing and delivery hereof, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and I the said John Baker therewith fully satisfied, contented and paid, have remised, released and forever quit-claimed, and by these presents do remise, release and forever quit-claim unto the said C. Taylor, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, all that certain lot or parcel of land to me due by the United States Government under an act giving and granting unto actual settlers within the country claimed and possessed by the Indians, a bounty of one hundred and sixty acres of land: which said bounty of one hundred and sixty acres of land for the consideration above mentioned, and by these presents relinquish and convey to the said C. Taylor, with all my right, title and interest, claim and demand unto or in anywise appertaining, together with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and the remainder and remainders, reversion and reversions, rights, profits and issues thereof.

"It is further understood, that I the said John Baker, shall serve out the time required of settlers by law which entitles them to either donation or pre-emption, as the same may be.

"To have and to hold the aforesaid bargained premises to him the said C. Taylor, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns; and the said John Baker for myself, and my executors, administrators and assigns, all and singular the above described property unto the said C. Taylor, his heirs and assigns as aforesaid, do relinquish and convey by these presents. In witness whereof, I have hereto set my hand and affixed my seal, this 30th day of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two.

(Signed) JOHN BAKER.

Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of—
ANDREW FLOYD,
JOHN W. SWINNY."

"It is further understood, and by these presents agreed, that I, John Baker shall and will work for the said C. Taylor, for the term of one year, and the said C. Taylor is to pay me three hundred dollars for his year's services and his share of the land as aforesaid, which sum is considered as full payment for the whole."

Defendant introduced several witnesses whose testimony it is un- 248 necessary to insert.

The proofs being closed, defendant asked the Court to instruct the jury, "that the instrument of writing or any of the matters and things therein contained afforded the plaintiff no ground or evidence upon which he could recover in this case against defendant anything for the land in the said instrument of writing mentioned:" Which instruction the court refused to give; but charged the jury, that if they were satisfied, from the evidence, that the plaintiff had worked for the defendant a year, and had surrendered the land on which he had settled to defendant, who had taken possession of the same, then the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the note and interest from the time the note fell due, deducting, however, any sums which the defendant had paid to the plaintiff in clothes or tobacco, or such sum for the clothes and tobacco furnished as they might deem reasonable from the testimony, and that they should find a verdict accordingly."

To which charge and refusal to instruct the jury, as prayed by defendant, defendant excepted.

The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for $338 88, and defendant repealed.

Appellant assigned the following for errors:

1. Because the Court erred in refusing the instructions prayed by counsel for appellant.

2. Because the Court erred in giving the instructions which it did.

3. Because it erred in not instructing the jury upon the issues submitted and the evidence contained in the Bill of Exceptions, to find for plaintiff in the court below only so much as his work and labor were worth.

4. Because the Court erred in not instructing the jury, that the deed, from Baker to Taylor, was void, under the laws of the United States; and that the promise of Taylor was, consequently, without consideration; and that no action could be maintained against him, on such promise or agreement.

5. Because it erred in regarding the agreement or promise of Taylor, as a promissory note; and in not requiring plaintiff, in the Court below, to prove a valuable consideration therefor; as, (ex. gr.)

249 that the lands, in the deed of bargain and sale, had been legally and properly secured to Taylor, in compliance with the provisions of the deed, referred to in the instrument sued on.

J. & L. Branch, for Appellant, contended:

I. That no issue was submitted to the jury, in which the value of the land was involved, or under which it could be recovered for. The 2 and 3 counts of the dec. (which alone refer to the land) having been demurred to, the jury could not return a verdict for the value of the land.

II. That the instrument of writing sued on, is not a promissory note which imports a consideration, but only a promise, the consideration of which should have been proved by plaintiff, as set forth in the deed to Taylor, before he could recover. As to what constitutes a promissory note, see Bayley on Bills, page 1 and 14: A contract consists both of a promise and consideration. The instrument sued on, is evidence only of the promise.

III. If, however, the six counts were all in issue and properly submitted to the jury, the plaintiff, under the evidence, was not entitled to recover for the land, because the 2 and 3 counts set forth an agreement entirely different from that contained in the written deed or agreement. The allegata and probata must correspond: nor could plaintiff, the consideration being in writing, prove any other than that set forth in the agreement. 1. Greenlf. on Ev. 103—Emery vs. Chase—5. Greenlf. R. 232—Schermerhon vs. Vandurheyden—1. Johns. R. 139.

IV. The variance between the agreement set forth, and that contained in the written instrument, purporting to be a deed, introduced in evidence, is too palpable to be overlooked. On the accuracy required in settling forth the agreement, see Chitty on Pleading, 325—333-4. 1 Selwyn, N. P. 108.

V. If, however, the agreement had been correctly set forth in the declaration, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

1st. Because he did not prove that he had fully complied with the agreement referred to in the instrument of writing sued on. This being a condition precedent on his part, and the burden of proof resting on him, he was not entitled to recover until he had shown, by proof, performance. Bank of Columbia vs. Hagner, 1 Peters, 465 467.

250 2d. Because the consideration, pretended to be conveyed, never existed; no such laws as an act giving and granting unto actual settlers within the country claimed and possessed by the Indians, a bounty of 160 acres of land, having been passed; and because the promise of Taylor is nudum pactum, the deed of bargain and sale being void under the laws of the United States.

It is evident the agreement and promise were made in contemplation of the armed occupation law, passed in the following August. This law makes all such transfers void. See Act of Congress providing "for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of East Florida, approved 4th August, 1842." If, however, it be contended that it refers to the pre-emption laws, then those laws also make such transfers and sales void. See Act of Congress, passed 4th September, 1841, relative to pre-emptions

The deed being thus illegal, or contrary to the policy of the law, the promise of Taylor is not obligatory. See Selwyn N. P. 58—59.

VI. No such law, or act of Congress, as that referred to in the deed of bargain and sale, having passed, Baker attempted to sell what he had not, and could never have. He undertook to do what was not in his power to perform. There was, consequently, no consideration for the promise of Taylor.

A vendor, or person promising a benefit, is bound to know that he has title, or that he has the power to confer the benefit up to the extent to which the benefit professes to go; and that, not only in fact, but in law. 1 Selwyn N. P. 53—59. 1 Leigh's N. P. 40. Nerot vs. Wallace, 3 T. R. 5—8. Allen vs. Hammond, 11 Peters, 76. McDermed vs. McCastlan, Hardin R. 18.

VII. And lastly. Had Taylor given his promissory note, which would import a consideration, and place on Taylor the onus of proving the consideration to be illegal or to have failed, under the circumstances and proofs of the case no action could be maintained thereon against him. Bayley on Bills, 538-9. Hayne, et al. vs. Maltby, 3 T. R. 248. Fowler vs. Shearer, 7 Mass. R. 22. Tillotson vs. Grapes, N. Hamp. R. 445,—and, particularly, the case of Bliss vs. Negus, 8th Mass. R. 46.

Appellant might take the farther ground, that the contract being entire, and a part of the consideration being against the law and having failed, the plaintiff, Baker, is entitled to recover nothing for his 251 services, or work and labor. 15 Pick R. 159.

L. A. Thompson & G. T. Ward, for Appellee.

J. & L. Branch, in reply, remarked:

That the act of the Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, approved September 16th, 1822, cited by Counsel for Appellee, referred exclusively to the improvements on the public lands, and not to the sale of an expected interest in the land. The deed from Taylor to Baker, purports to be a deed for land.

They insisted further that, if the Court should be of opinion that the above act of 1822, was applicable to the present case, it could not be relied upon to maintain this action, inasmuch as it had been repealed by act of the Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, approved March 4th, 1842. See Acts of 1842, page 14.

BALTZELL, Justice:

This is a suit on an agreement by Taylor to pay Baker $300, "provided he complies with an agreement made with me for his portion of land, which he is to receive from Government as an actual settler."

The defence was, a failure of consideration, established, it is alleged, by a deed, the provisions of which are claimed to be in violation of an act of Congress. This deed (being the agreement referred to in the note sued on,) is first asserted to be in violation of the act of Congress, approved 4th August, 1842, "providing for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of East Florida"; but it was not in existence at the date of the deed, and can scarcely be construed to operate on a contract made prior to its passage.

The terms of the deed very clearly refer to an act in force at its date, and as the law granting pre-emption rights, approved 4th September, 1841, is the only one, to which we have been referred, as then in existence, its provisions must be regarded as having been in contemplation of the parties. The tenth section of that law provides, that "all assignments and transfers of the right hereby secured, prior to the issuing of the patent, shall be null and void;" and the question is presented, Whether the deed above alluded to, is in violation of this provision? The law declares, "assignments of rights secured to be void." Now, such a right was only to be secured by a compliance with the 10th and 12th sections, declaring, that "the person 252 who has made, since the 1st of June, 1840, or shall make, a settlement on the public lands, &c., and inhabit and improve the same, and who has, or shall, erect a dwelling, such person shall be entitled to enter any number of acres, not exceeding 160, upon paying to the United States the minimum price of such land"—and, "prior to such entry, proof of the settlement and improvement, thereby required, shall be made to the satisfaction of the Register and Receiver, agreeably to such rules as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be entitled to receive fifty cents from each applicant for his services; and all assignments and transfers of the right hereby secured, prior to the issuing of the patent, shall be null and void."

The fair construction of the act would seem to be, that the assignment of the certificate of the Receiver, made after payment of the purchase money and proof of pre-emption, would be void; this would be the assignment of a right secured under, or by virtue of the act, and such the law invalidates.

But this is not teh case under consideration. Here, there was no right secured; no money paid to the Government, and no proof of pre-emption. The subject was a bounty, not a right—a thing in expectancy, which the party agrees not to prosecute, but relinquishes and abandons, leaving it to his vendee to obtain it, if he chooses, for himself. An assignment of a pre-emption certificate, or a right secured under the pre-emption law, is usually very concise and simple, as, indeed, are generally most acts of assignment. Thus, "for value received, I assign and transfer the within to A. B." "The words required in assignments are, grant, assign, and set over."—1 Jacob's Law. Dic. 140. 1 Inst. 301.

The deed, under consideration, has not the words "assign, nor grant, nor set over":: its terms are "remised, released, and quit claimed, that parcel of land due me, under an act giving a bounty, which bounty I relinquish and convey," &c. The terms of the deed are approriate to the transfer of a claim and improvement on the public lands, held under expectancy of a pre-emption, a relinquishment of the right, and a transfer of the possession and occupancy.

This view is confirmed by the 13th section, which provides, "that before any person claiming the benefit of this act, shall be allowed 253 to enter such lands, he shall make oath before the Receiver or Register, that he hath not settled upon and improved the land to sell the same on speculation, but, in good faith, to appropriate it to his own exclusive use or benefit, and that he has not directly, or indirectly, made any agreement or contract with any person or persons whatsoever, by which the title he might acquire from the Government should enure, in whole or in part, to any person except himself." It would have been in the height of folly to have made a transfer or assignment in the hope of obtaining a pre-emption in defiance of this provision; nor can we intend that there was such design, whilst the instrument is capable of a different construction. It must be sustained, if possible: "ut res magis valeat quam pereat," "The construction shall be favorable; and, therefore, if words are susceptible of two senses, one agreeable to, and another against law, the former shall prevail. The Courts will, if possible, so construe an instrument that it may have some operation, rather than invalidate it on the ground of illegality." 2 Black. Com. 279—380. Coke Litt. 42. Chitty on Cont. 20. Cowper, 714.

This view is also confirmed by the fact, that there is no evidence in the record showing that there was any application for a right of pre-emption by either of the parties, or that Taylor expected or relied, in any way, upon obtaining a pre-emption through the cultivation and improvement of Baker. Whilst coming to this conclusion, we are free to declare, that if there had been proof of anything approaching to turpitude in the transaction, it would have produced a different result.

By the law of the Territorial Legislature, as early as 1822, the sale of improvements on the public lands was allowed and rendered valid, nor was there ever a disapproval by Congress, of this action of the Territorial Government. Duval Comp. 45.

Whilst we admit that there is a difference of opinion in some of the States of the Union, as to the validity of such sales, we desire to express our hearty concurrence in the sentiments expressed by the Supreme Court of Missouri, in the case of Clark vs. Shultz. The objection there, was, that the contract was not in writing,—an objection not prevailing here,—and the Court say, "We feel the more inclined to follow the New York decisions, and to leave the settlers free to dispose of their improvements, as of their horses and cattle.
254 In truth, the very offer to sell the improvement, and give up accommodation and comfort, which the squatter has obtained for himself by his labor on the public lands, excludes altogether the idea that he intends, by the sale, to pass away any title or interest in the soil.—These improvements are often of much value to the new settler, and the person making the improvement in building the cabin and clearing the field, is regarded by the Government as entitled to remuneration therefor, rather than as a trespasser, &c. It forms then, a good and sufficient consideration for any contract or price the purchaser may agree to pay for the possession of such improvements." 4 Missouri, 235. 9 Missouri, 866. 5 John. 272.

"A man may renounce his possession, and such abandonment in favor of another, is a sufficient consideration to support the contract growing out of such renunciation or abandonment." 9 Missouri, 866.

We are of opinion, then, that the relinquishment by Baker, of the expected bounty of the Government, the abandonment and surrender of his improvements, and the possession taken by Taylor, of themselves formed a good and valid consideration for the agreement, and were not prohibited by the act of Congress alluded to.

Another ground assumed, is, that plaintiff did not prove that he had fully complied with the agreement. This must allude to the provision, that "Baker shall serve out the time required of settlers by law, which entitles them to either donation or pre-emption": but this provision would seem to be superseded by another engagement attached to the deed, and which is incorporated in the agreement sued on, that Baker was to work for the term of one year, and Taylor was to pay him $300 for his year's service and his share of the land, which is considered full payment for the whole."

The first provision, left the time of service indefinite; the latter, made it certain, and was more favorable to Taylor, as by the pre-emption law, only a few weeks service was required to entitle a party to its benefits. But, supposing the first provision in force, we are not prepared to say that there is no evidence to prove a performance; on the contrary, we see little room to doubt the sufficiency of the proof in this respect.

Again, it is maintained, that there was a plea to the second and third counts, which was demurred to; and, as the demurrer was not disposed of, these counts, reefrring alone to the land, must be regarded as not in issue. The plea alluded to is, in effect, the general is- 255 sue, which had already been filed, and gave to defendant no new advantage which he had not secured by that plea. It seems not to have been relied upon by the parties, and was properly treated as a nullity. And here we take occasion to say, that it is not enough in this Court, to shew that a plea was on file in the Court below: the party complaining, must go further, and shew that that Court either refused to act upon the pleading, or decided it wrongfully; otherwise, this Court would lose its appropriate office of an appellate tribunal, by deciding, originally, questions never raised in the Court below, and which, if presented, would probably have been correctly decided there.

The view we have taken of this case, is so strongly fortified by the other testimony in the record, as to leave us entirely satified with the justice and equity of the verdict and the decision of the Court.

The services of Baker for the year, are estimated by one witness at $300, and by one of the defendant's witnesses at $200 and his clothes, and $300, is the entire consideration for the improvement and services, both.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion, that the judgment be affirmed with costs.

HAWKINS, Justice, dissenting:

With due deference to the opinion pronounced in this case, I feel constrained to differ with the majority of the Court as to its conclusions of law, and also as to what constitutes the subject matter and consideration of the agreement, upon which the suit was instituted. It would appear by the evidence in the cause, that on the thirtieth day of May, 1842, Baker executed to Taylor, in substance, the following instrument:

Know all men, that I, John Baker, for and in consideration of the sum of three hundred dollars, to me in hand paid by C. Taylor, have remised, released, and quit claimed, and by these presents do remise, release, and quit claim to said Taylor, his heirs, &c., all that certain lot or parcel of land, to me due by the United States' Government, under an act giving and granting to actual settlers within the country claimed and possessed by the Indians, a bounty of one hundred and sixty acres of land, which said bounty of one hundred and sixty acres of land, for the consideration above mentioned. and by these presents and interest, claim and demand unto or in anywise appertaining, together with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and the remainder and remainders, reversion and reversions, rights, profits and issues thereof. It is further understood, that I, the said John Baker shall serve out the time required of settlers by law, which entitles them to either donation or pre-emption as the case may be. To have and to hold the aforesaid bargained premises to him the said C. Taylor, &c.

(Signed,) JOHN BAKER.

"It is further understood, and by these presents agreed, that I, John Baker shall and will work for the said C. Taylor, for the term of one year, and the said Taylor is to pay me three hundred dollars for his year's services and his share of the land aforesaid, which sum is considered as full payment for the whole."

Simultaneously with this instrument, the following agreement was entered into by Taylor:

"I promise to pay to John Baker, on or betore the first day of January, 1843, the sum of three hundred dollars, provided he complies with an agreement made with me for his portion of land which he is to receive from Government as an actual settler, as also for his year's services. May 30, 1842. "C. TAYLOR."

The first of these instruments is inartificially drawn, and somewhat vague in its terms; and where this is the case, it is always difficult to arrive at the true meaning of parties. In construing agreements, for the purpose of ascertaining their intention, we may look at concomitant matters and circumstances, if, by a view of the instrument, they may seem to have had a relation to, or connexion with the subject matter of the contract. Upon an inspection of the paper alluded to, I incline to the opinion, that it was an agreement for land that Baker might have become entitled to, under what is ordinarily termed the armed occupation bill; and I have come to this conclusion, not only owing to the intention fairly to be inferred, as I think, from the face of the instrument, but also that, at the time this agreement was entered into, the bill referred to was before Congress. Its passage was, the subject of notoriety and discussion, a theme of general concern to the people of the (then) Territory, and one of peculiar interest to 257 those who wished to avail themselves of the provisions of the bill, whenever it should become a law. I think, therefore, that this anticipated law was in contemplation of the parties to this instrument, as it does not seem to have direct reference to the pre-emption law. I think the praseology of the instrument sustains me in the view I have taken, and that it was not a right of pre-emption that Baker intended selling to Taylor. The words of the agreement are, "all that certain lot or parcel of land, to me due by the United States Government, under an act giving and granting to actual settlers within the country claimed and possessed by the Indians." Now, there was no such act in existence at the time of the contract; and, in the pre-emption law, it appears that settlements are to be made on those public lands to which the Indian title had been, at the time of such settlemen, extinguished. It is true, the words of the agreement would seem to apply to an existing act, and Baker speaks of the land due him by the Government, under an act giving and granting to actual settlers, &c.; but, at the same time, he uses the words "do remise, release, and quit claim," and yet he clearly had no pre-emption or other right at the time, but he conveys only that which he shall afterwards acquire. I consider that all these words, though in presenti, are, as to their effect, prospective, and apply as strongly to the anticipated act of Congress, as to the terms of the contract.

Besides, Baker agrees "to serve out the time required of settlers by law, which entitles him to either donation or pre-emption, as the case may be." No time is required by the pre-emption law to enable settlers to make their entries, and I think that the words "donation or pre-emption, as the case may be," convey the idea that there was something contingent or alternative, that there was an uncertainty as to the form or manner in which the bounty of the Government was to be bestowed. If the language of the agreement was intended to apply to the pre-emption act, would it not have been explicit and definite, and alluded to it in clear anl precise terms? The passages I have particularly adverted to, in conjunction with the whole tenor of the transaction, impress me with the conviction, that the contract was made with a view to the passage of the armed occupation bill.

The views I have thus expressed, I confess I have taken with some diffidence, owing to the difficulty I have before alluded to, in ascer 258 taining the true and real intentions of parties, where the instrument is vague and uncertain in its terms, and I feel this diffidence increased when my opinions are not in unison with those of my brethren on the Bench.

If I am correct in the view I have taken of the subject, the contract between Baker and Taylor, even if legal at the time, became illegal by virtue of the "act to provide for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of Florida," for by the fourth section of that act, it is declared, "That all sales, gifts, devises, agreements, &c., to sell transfers or liens, whatsoever, private or judicial, of the lands or any portion thereof acquired by this act, made at any time before patents shall have issued for the same, shall be utterly void and without effect, to every intent and purpose, whether in law or equity." Even if the contract had not been illegal at the time, as I have before remarked, and became so afterwards by act of law, still it cannot be enforced. 10 East. 530. 3 M. and S. 267.

If, on the other hand, I am wrong in the view I have taken of the contract, and it does not relate to the pre-emption law, still, I think, the action should not have been sustained, if being void for want of a good and legal consideration. A portion of it being founded on an illegal consideration, and the contract being an entirety, the whole of it becomes illegal.

There was clearly not the least shadow of title to the land conveyed, or agreed to be conveyed to Taylor, and the bare and naked improvements made by Baker, were all which were pretended to be conveyed. There are authorities which certainly go the length to say, that the sale of improvements on public lands, is a good consideration for a promise, but I agree with the opposite decisions, thinking they are founded on the true notions of law and public policy.

In Merrill vs. Le Grand, 1 Howard Mis. R. 150, it was decided, that a promissory note given in consideration of the purchase of an improvement upon vacant government land, is for an illegal consideration, and cannot be recovered.

Persons settled upon the lands of the United States, without a right of pre-emption, are made trespassers, and an agreement to transfer their posession would be an agreement for the continuance of a trespass, and would be illegal and void.

So in Carr vs. Allison, 5 Blackford, 63, a bond was given in 1833, 259 in payment of a certain sum, in consideration of an improvement previously made on United States' land, and of the obligee's promise not to enter the land on which the improvement was made. The pre-emption law of the United States, in force in February, 1833, did not authorize the transfer of a pre-emption right before a patent had issued for the land. It was held, that the improvement, was not a valid consideration for the bond, and that the promise not to enter the land was void as against public policy. See also, 4 Yerger, 1, 3.

These sales, or transfers, are clearly against the policy of the statute, which seems to have had for its object the protection of bona fide settlers from the grasp or imposition of capitalists or speculators.—Among the requisites as prescribed by the pre-emption law of 1841, is that party, before claiming the benefit of the act by entering the land, shall swear that he has not entered upon and improved the land to sell the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use or benefit. Any attempt to contravene the policy of a public statute, should not meet with the aid of law to give it success, or enforce a contract which may be the result of such intended contravention. The statute of 1841, declares, "that all assignments and transfers of the right hereby secured," (that is, after the requisites of law have been complied with) "prior to the issuing of the patent, shall be null and void." If these transfers, even after the right is secured, are void, I should suppose also, that transfers and signments and transfers of the right hereby secured," (that is, after pre-emption rights are mere bounties to settlers, to encourage the settlement of the public domain. They would seem to be privileges confined to the person, and incapable of assignment, so as to form a legal consideration for their sale or transfer.

The various States may certainly legislate as to the remedies in their own tribunals, and regulate the disposal of the property of their own citizens; but Congress, by the Constitution, has the sole power of disposal of the public lands, and of making all needful rules and regulations thereto. See 13 Pet. U. S. R. 498.

I cannot perceive, therefore, how a State enactment can regulate the sale of portions of the public domain, or legislate, in regard to rights growing out of it. And, in point of morals, I can see no difference whether the Government, or an individual, is owner of the land 260 upon which improvements are made, and attempted to be sold.

I deem it my duty, upon this occasion, further to remark, that I cannot assent to the proposition so broadly laid down, that "the Court would lose its appropriate office of an appellate tribunal by deciding, originally, questions never raised in the Court below, and which, if presented, would perhaps have been correctly decided there." The case is before us upon the errors apparent upon the record; but I do not propose to discuss this question in reference to its bearing upon the case at bar, but to manifest my dissent to it as a general proposition, which, as it is laid down, may reach all future cases, and preclude this Court from looking into any error not presented in the Court below, although that error might shew that the cause of action had entirely failed. Such an error, if presented in the Court below, is it to be presumed would have been corrected there; but if, because in the hurry of a trial at nisi prius, it has escaped the attention of both the Counsel and the Court, are we precluded from deciding it here? In the case of Powell vs. Waters, 8 Cowen, 701, Spencer, Senator, said, that, "If the foundation of the action had manifestly failed, we cannot, without shocking all common sense of justice, allow a recovery to stand." And it is worthy of our serious consideration, how far we can constitutionally disregard a manifest and palpable error on face of the record which is presented to us, whether that defect has been pointed out in the Court below, or insisted upon in this Court, or not. As was remarked by the Judge, who gave the opinion of the Court, in 14 John. R. 501—517: "The object of Counsel is to aid the Court in its investigations, and it would be strange if the Court were bound to shut their eyes upon every point not suggested by them—it would make the rights of parties depend more upon the vigilance and ability of Counsel, than on the law of the land." Judges must decide according to the law; and if it is not presented to them by Counsel, or their attention is not called to the true points of a case, still, if they themselves discover those points, or ascertain the law, they are bound by their obligations to pronounce it. In the case of Baird & Co. vs. Mattox, I Call, 257, the Court said: "If the defendant is sued as heir, or devisee, and pleads that he has no assets by descent, on which plaintiff takes issue, and verdict be found for the defendant, a repleader will be awarded (by the Appellate Court, though not prayed in the Court below,) because the issue has only 261 tried the rights as to descent, and not as to the demise"; and, in Speaks vs. Shepherd, 6 Harr. and John. 84—86—87, it was held, that upon a writ of error, the Court are not only authorized, but bound to examine the whole record, and if there be error, it is their duty to reverse the judgment below, although the Court were right in the opinion they gave on the particular point upon which their opinion is prayed, and 7 Bacon Abr. 448, it cited to sustain this position.

There can be no doubt (said Mr. Justice Woodbury, in delivering the opinion of the Court in the case of Garland vs. Davis, 4 Howard S. C. R. 143,) that exceptions to the opinions given by Courts below, must be all taken at the time the opinions are pronounced. But it is equally clear, that when the whole record is before the Court above, any exception appearing upon it can be taken by Counsel, which could have been taken in the Court below, and the case of Roach vs. Hulings, 16 Peters, 319, is cited, which sustains the first proposition.

So, it is the duty of the Court to give judgment on the whole record, and not merely on the points started by Counsel. Slacum vs. Pomeroy, 6 Cranch, 221. 16 Peters, 319, Garland vs. Davis, 4 Howard S. C. R. 143. In the case of the United States vs. Burnham, 1 Mason C. C. Reports, 62, the Court alone took notice of the defect, which was the sole ground of its opinion; and Judge Story, who pronounced the opinion of the Court, said, "The Court must pronounce upon the whole record": and in the case of Patterson vs. The United States, 2 Wheat. 221, Justice Washington says: "The Court considers it unnecessary to decide the questions argued at the bar, as the verdict is so defective, that no judgment can be rendered upon it," and upon that account the proceedings below were reversed. Harrison et al vs. Nixon, 9 Peters, 483—535, is also in point, and see Stephens on this doctrine.

In the case of Slacum vs. Pomeroy, 6 Cranch, 222, before cited, Chief Justice Marshall said: "It is not too late to allege as error in this Court, a fault in the declaration, which ought to have prevented the rendition of the judgment in the Court below."

I have thought proper to be thus prolix, lest I might, by my silence on the subject now, be precluded in a future case from noticing a vital error in the record, merely because it was not presented in the Court below, and which, from the views I entertain of my constitutional duty, I should not feel at liberty to disregard.

262 GEORGE W. PHILLIPS, Claimant, vs. WHITEHURST J. HAWKINS, Plaintiff in Execution.

On failure of a mortgagor to comply with the condition of the mortgage, the title in personal property becomes absolute in the mortgagee, and he may reduce it to possession; and his interest may be levied upon and sold under an execution.

The condition of the mortgage being forfeited, an execution against the mortgagee of a slave, will have the preference over a bill of sale by the mortgagee, made subsequent to the coming of the execution to the hands of the Sheriff, although such bill of sale be accompanied by possession and an assignment to the purchaser, by the mortgagor, of his equity of redemption.

Appeal from Gadsden Circuit Court, on trial at Spring Term, 1846, of a claim interposed by George W. Philips, to a negro woman, Dolly, levied on under an execution in favor of Whiteburst J. Philips vs. Stokeley Sadbury and Uz Wood, his Honor Judge Macrae, presiding.

Phillips claimed under a bill of sale from Wood, the mortgagee, and an assignment to him by Sadbury, the mortgagor, of his equity of redemption. Upon the trial, claimant gave in evidence an indenture of mortgage from Stokeley Sadbury to Uz Wood, on this, and other negroes and property made to secure Wood from loss, by reason of his endorsements, therein specified, for Sadbury, and which was executed and recorded, on 4th May, 1842—also, a bill of sale by Wood, the mortgagee, to claimant, recorded on the 2d July, 1845, but which has no date, and of which the following is a copy:

STATE OF FLORIDA, }
County of Gadsden. }

Whereas Stokeley Sadbury, by deed of mortgage executed and bearing date on the fourth day of May, A. D. 1843, did among other things, and for the purposes therein mentioned, conveyed unto me, Uz Wood, a certain negro woman named Dolly, and described in the said mortgage as thirty-five years of age—and whereas it is the desire of the parties to the said deed of mortgage, that the purposes for which the same was given should be effected with as little delay and expense as practicable, which can be best accomplished by dispensing with a suit to foreclose the said mortgage (and having the property or such portion thereof as may be desired) disposed of at pri- 263
vate sale; which desire has been fully manifested on the part of the said Stokeley Sadbury, by his written assent thereto had, bearing even date with this instrument of writing:—Now, know all men by these presents, that I, Uz Wood, of the county and State aforesaid, in consideration of the premises and of the sum of five hundred dollars of lawful money of the United States, to me in hand paid by George W. Phillips of the same county and State, at and before the sealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof I do hereby acknowledge, have granted, bargained and sold, and by these presents, as mortgagee as aforesaid, do hereby grant, bargain, sell, assign, release and convey unto the said George W. Phillips, his executors, administrators and assigns, all the right, title and interest which I ever acquired by virtue of the terms of the deed of mortgage aforesaid, in and to the said negro slave Dolly and her child Mary, about nine months of age:

To have and to hold the said negro slave Dolly, and her child Mary, unto the said George W. Phillips, freed from the claim or claims of any person or persons claiming or to claim by, through, or under me, as mortgagee as aforesaid.

Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of—

WM. RUSSELL.

Also, an assignment by Sadbury, the mortgagor, to claimant, of his equity or redemption, executed the 30th June, 1845, and recorded 2d July, 1845, of which the following is a copy.

STATE OF FLORIDA, }
County of Gadsden. } ss.

Whereas, I, Stokeley Sadbury, of the county and State aforesaid, by deed of mortgage executed and bearing date on the fourth day of May, A. D., 1842, did mortgage unto Uz Wood, for the purposes therein mentioned, to wit, for the purpose of indemnifying him, the said Uz Wood, against any loss as an endorser or surety for me, amongst other things, a certain negro woman slave named Dolly, and described in the said deed of mortgage; and whereas the said Uz Wood has been compelled, by process of law, to expend and advance, as surety or endorser as aforesaid, certain sums of money, amounting to more than the value of the said negro woman; and it being the desire of the said Uz Wood to reimburse the monies so expended as aforesaid, at the least possible delay and expense; and I 264 being also desirous of avoiding the expense of a suit to foreclose the said mortgage, and willing that a sale thereof should be effected by private arrangement, which sale is contemplated to be made to George W. Phillips, of the county and State aforesaid:

Now, know all men by these presents, that I, Stokeley Sadbury, in consideration of the premises, do hereby fully accord my assent to the aforesaid contemplated sale, so far as may be necessary to bar me, or any person or persons claiming or to claim by, through, or under me, of any right or title to any equity of redemption, in or to the aforesaid negro slave or her increase; and I do further renounce, release, and forever quit claim unto the said George W. Phillips, all right, title, or interest, of whatever kind, whether at law or in equity, which I have heretofore had, now have, or may hereafter have, in and to the said negro slave and her increase, so mortgaged as aforesaid.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal, this 30th day of June, A. D., 1845.

STOKELEY SADBURY. [L. S.]

Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of us—

C. H. DUPONT, Justice of the Peace.
WM. RUSSELL.

STATE OF FLORIDA. }
Gadsden County. }

The foregoing release, duly recorded in book D, page 349, this 2d day of July, A. D., 1845.

William Russell, the witness to the bill of sale from Wood to Phillips, testified, that he saw the delivery of the slave to Phillips and the consideration, which was three hundred dollars in cash, and a credit of two hundred dollars on a note held by Phillips against Wood. Claimant also gave in evidence, several executions against Wood, to satisfy which his property had been sold; and one of which, for $616, it was admitted, was on account of a security debt for Sadbury. It was also admitted, that all the slaves mentioned in the mortgage to Wood, except the one in controversy, and one or two others, were held by Sadbury only for the life time of his wife, who died some time previous to the sale to Phillips, and that they had reverted to the estate of William D. Harrison.

Defendant gave in evidence the writ of fi. fa. vs. Sadbury and Wood, under which the levy had been made, and the following endorsement thereon:

"Came to hand, 13th May, 1845.

J. G. CAMP, Marshal.

By JAMES HINES, D. M."

"By virtue of the annexed fi. fa. I have this day levied on a negro slave by name of Dolly and her child named Mary.

August 4th, 1845. JOHN G. CAMP, Marshal.

By JAMES HINES, D. M."

Claimant asked the Court to instruct the Jury:

"First"—That the respective interests of Sadbury & Wood, in the property, as mortgagor, and mortgagee, is not such a joint interest as will subject the property to a joint execution at law, as against a bona fide purchaser, for a valuable consideration.

"Secondly"—That if the Jury believe the sale and purchase of the slave to have been made bona fide, and for a valuable consideration, that then, according to the evidence in the cause, the said slave cannot be made subject to an execution at law, as against the claimant": which instructions the Court refused to give,—but in lieu thereof, instructed the Jury as follows, to wit:

"That notwithstanding any mortgage of the slave mentioned from Sadbury to Wood, or other transactions between them, no other right or interests intervening at the time the execution in question came to the Sheriff's hand, the said slave was liable to said execution, the same being against said Sadbury & Wood; and no after disposition or sale of said slave by said Sadbury & Wood, or either of them, could in any wise divest or impair the lien, or effective operation of said execution upon said property."

To which refusal and instructions, claimant excepted.

The Jury returned the following verdict:—"We, the Jury, find the property claimed herein, to be subject to the said plaintiff's execution."

L. A. Thompson & C. H. Dupont, for Claimant:

Upon the facts of this case, they assumed the following propositions, to wit:

I. The interest of Sadbury, being only an equitable interest, viz.: an interest in the "equity of redemption," was not subject to be sold.
266 under a fi. fa. emanating from a common Law Court, and could be reached only through the process of a Court of Equity. 3 Atkin's, 739. 8 East. 467. 1 Arch. Prac. 293.

II. Wood, as mortgagee, held only a trust estate in the property, and this was such an equitable interest as could not be taken under the process of a Court of Law, for his personal debts.

If, in opposition to this position, it be contended, that the mortgagee is in possession of the legal title, the reply is:

First—That although this may be technically true, yet the interest conveyed to the mortgagee is a qualified and limited interest, which cannot be taken by any process of law, for his private and individual debts. 1 Mad. Ch. Pr. 455. 2 Story Eq. 289. Fonb. Eq. b. 11. chap. VII, sec. 1, note A.

Secondly—Vide 3 Durn. & East, 646, as applicable to executions. The doctrine, that the "legal title" is in the mortgagee, is to be received in a purely technical sense, and if it ever were intended to make the terms "title and estate" synonymous, that doctrine is now exploded; for a deed of mortgage is now viewed as a mere "security," and it is now necessary to resort to Chancery, as the only tribunal in which the mortgagee can make his estate available. 2 Story Eq. 326 to 330. Fonb. Eq. b. 2, chap. 1, sec. 2. 4 Kent, 157.

Thirdly—The term "legal title" does not mark the quantity or quality of the interest possessed by the mortgagee, and is to be distinguished from the term "estate"—the term, "title", is only the evidence of a "right"—the term, "estate", is the right itself. The latter is tangible, and alone subject to levy and sale: the former is intangible, a mere evidence or muniment of estate.

The legitimate deductions to be drawn from the foregoing argument, are as follows, viz:

1. If the interest of Sadbury, as mortgagor, (being a mere "equity of redemption,") was so purely an equitable estate, as not to be reached by a common law process, or writ of execution issued against him singly, and the estate of Wood, as mortgagee, was in the nature of, and so essentially a trust, as to relieve it from responsibility for his personal or individual debts; then, the mere circumstances of the writ of fi. fa. being "joint" against mortgagor and mortgagee, can impart to it no additional virtue or superior energy, so as to make it as a joint writ, avail against the interest of both defendants, when, as 267 against the separate estate of either, it was wholly inoperative.

2. The first proposition being admitted, viz: that "an equity of redemption is not subject to an execution at law," if the levy, under this joint writ of fi. fa., be sustained, it inevitably leads to this absurdity, that, the mere form, or character of the writ, charges the respective interests of the mortgagor and mortgagee, both as to quantity and quality, and converts a purely equitable, into a strictly legal estate.

III. The trust, created by the deed of mortgage, although primarily intended for the indemnity of the mortgagee, inured to the benefit of all the creditors named in the deed, and could be enforced in a Court of Equity, against the mortgage.

If his levy, by one of the creditors, (made by virtue of a common law process,) be sustained, then, it gives to that one creditor the power to appropriate exclusively to his individual demand, an equitable fund, which a Court of Chancery would distribute to the creditors named in the deed, according to the dignity and magnitude of their several demands.

IV. Thus far the argument has proceeded upon the ground, that the property was in that position that it could not be reached by a common law process, and was subject alone to the decree of a Court of Chancery. We now proceed to show, that (if the property was not subject to the fi. fa.) claimant obtained a full and complete title under the bill of sale from Wood, and deed of release from Sadbury

1st. The mortgagee, acting as a "trustee", has a right, with the assent of the mortgagor, to sell and convey the mortgaged property.

2d. As to the appropriation of the purchase money, the rule is, that "when the trust is of a complicated character, or the debts to which the fund is to be applied are numerous, the purchaser of a trust estate is not bound to see to the application of the money." 2 Story Eq. 477-8-9. Fonb. b. 2, chap. VI, sec. 2, and cases cited 12 Wheaton, 489.

V. The remedy of the appellee, (as plaintiff in execution) is by Bill in Equity against Wood & Sadbury, to compel an appropriation of the property to the payment of the debts mentioned in the deed of mortgage.

VI. When the claimant was in possession at the time of the levy, 268 it became requisite for the plaintiffs in execution to show a "legal lien" paramount to the title of possession.

Douglas & Hogue, for Plaintiff in execution:

The positions taken by them were:

1st. That the execution, in this case, has relation back to the time of the delivery of the writ to the Sheriff. Bingham on Executions, page 80, XIII vol. Law Lib. This property belonged to the defendants in execution jointly, and was, therefore, like all other chattel interests, subject to the execution.

2d. If the property, so situated, was not subject to execution, then we contend, that the mortgage from Sadbury to Wood, his co-defendant, while the suit was pending, is void against the plaintiff in execution: because, its necessary effect, if allowed to stand good, is, to hinder, delay and defraud creditors. The principle settled in the cases of Edwards vs. Harben, Ryall vs. Rowles, and many others in England, followed up the case of Hamilton vs. Russel, in the Supreme Court of the United States, and by many cases in the State Courts of this county, was this: that, in the case of an absolute sale or mortgage of goods, unless the possession accompanies the transaction, it is fradulent, per se. The reason of these decisions was, that the necessary effect of such transactions is to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, and it was contrary to the policy of the law to sustain such sales or mortgages. The same principle applies to a case of this sort, it being a mortgage from one defendant to another, no matter whether possession is delivered or not. The effect of sustaining such an act is, to hinder, delay and defraud; and thus it comes within the principle settled in the cases referred to, which principle is applicable to all cases of constructive fraud. See Kent, II vol. pages 515 to 531.

3d. If this will not hold, then, they contend: That, at the very time when Sadbury released his equity of redemption, the necessary legal operation and effect of his release was, to convey his equity to Wood; thus saving the necessity of a foreclosure, and thus enabling him to sell to Phillips. At that very point of time then, the property in the hands of Wood became subject to the execution; and this, though it is called an assignment of the equity. The instrument shews on its face that it was a release, and was intended to enable Wood to sell. That 269 being the case, it must operate between parties between whom there exists some privity of estate. See 1 Tucker, page 252—Releases.

4. The mortgage was forfeited at the time when the execution was placed in the officer's hands and levied; and thus the legal estate was in one of the defendants.

BALTZELL, Justice:

This was an appeal from a trial of the right of property in a negro woman Dolly, had, under the laws of the State permitting a party, whose property is levied upon under execution or attachment, to have a trial of the right, on presenting an affidavit and giving bond as required by the statute.

Sadbury, the original owner of the property, on the 4th May, 1842, mortgaged it to Uz Wood, "to pay all of certain notes on which Wood was security, together with interest, &c., so that Wood shall in no way be interrupted or injured in consequence of his having become security therefor, or shall, by any other lawful means, keep and save harmless said Wood, from the payment of said notes or any part thereof, and all costs, damages and charges, as security," &c.

About the 2d of July, 1845, (for the bill of sale has no date,) Wood, "for the consideration of $500, sold and conveyed to Phillips the negro in question, as mortgagee."

Sadbury, by bill of sale dated 30th June, 1845, reciting the mortgage, and "that Wood had been compelled by process of law to expend and advance, as surety or endorser, certain sums of money to more than the value of the said negro woman: to reimburse Wood, and to save the expense of a suit to foreclose, and willing that a sale should be effected by private arrangement, he gives his assent to the sale to Phillips, and renounces and releases all right, title and interest to the said negro slave."

On the trial it was admitted that the $616 29 paid on a case of Wm. Williams, one of the debts enumerated in the mortgage, was paid on a security debt of Sadbury.

The plaintiff in execution, contesting the claim of Phillips, relies on an execution from the Superior Court of Gadsden county, against Wood & Sadbury, for the sum of $795 04, with interest, &c., levied upon this negro woman and her child, the 4th of August, 1845.

The question is, Who has the better title? It is too well established both by the English and American authorities, to admit of ques-
270 tion, that, "on failure by a mortgagor to comply with the condition of the mortgage, the title in personal property becomes absolute in the mortgagee, and he may reduce it to possession." 4 Kent, 138-9. Pow. on Mort. 3. 2 Vesey Jr. 378. 10 John. 471. Brown vs. Bement, 8 John. 96. 5 John. 258. 2 Pickering, 610. 7 Cowen, 290. So, "his interest may be levied on and sold under execution."

The case of Ferguson vs. Lee, is precisely in point. "C. Lee had a mortgage upon personal property, which became absolute on the 1st of December, 1828. The property, therefore, became his on that day, as the mortgage was then forfeited. Subsequent to that day, the deputy Sheriff levied on the property, as the property of C. Lee—the levy was good and held the property." 9 Wendell, 258.

In the case under consideration, claimant asserts a forfeiture of the mortgage, by producing the deed of Sadbury, which admits, "that Wood had been compelled, by process of law, to expend and advance as endorser, sums of money to more than the value of the woman." The title in the negro woman was then absolute and complete in Wood at the date of the bill of sale, and was subject to the execution of Phillips, it being operative and in force at that time.

We do not conceive it necessary to go into a more minute consideration of the case, either as to the instructions given, or those refused, satisfied that the right is with the plaintiff, and that the verdict was properly rendered. We see no objection to the instruction given by the Court below. The judgment is, therefore, affirmed with costs.

CHANCEY WARD AND CHARLES P. MAY, PARTNERS, &c., TRADING 271
AS WARD & MAY, FOR THE USE OF JOSEPH F. CROSBY, vs. JABEZ B. BULL AND RICHARD A. SHINE.

This Court can only reverse a judgment for error of law.

The correct rule, in cases tried by the Court sitting as a Jury, would seem to be, that where facts alone are submitted, and the Court has only to weigh the evidence and teremine accordingly, no Writ of Error lies; and where mixed questions of law and facts are presented to the Court for decision, no writ of Error lies, unless the Court is called upon to decide a question of law, or such question of law necessarily arises out of the facts, and is distinctly presented to the Court upon them, so that the decision of the point of law will decide the merits of the cause, and the decision of the Court is wrong.

To support an action for use and occupation, a demise must be shown, or some evidence given to establish the relation between the parties of landlord and tenant.

A lessee, who covenants to pay rent and repair, with express exception of casualties by fire, is liable upon the covenant for rent, though the premises be burned down, and not re-built for the lessor after notice; and a Court of Equity will not restrain the lessor from suing for the rent.

Where the lessor re-builds before the expiration of the term, and leases to a third party, the lessee, who had paid his rent in advance, but had abandoned the lease after the destruction of the property, is entitled to recover back the rent so paid by him from the time of the second lease, and at the rate which the landlord had received from him.

ERROR, to Leon Circuit Court.

By consent of parties, a Jury was waived, and this case, at the Spring term of Leon Circuit Court, 1846, submitted to be tried by the Court—His Honor, Judge Macrae, presiding.

The facts will be found in the opinion of the Court.

S. Towle, for Plaintiffs in Error, contended:

I. That a writ of error would lie in this case; for although a Jury was waived at the trial below, and no questions of law appear to have been expressly raised, yet the amount of the judgment below, itself, shews what legal construction was put by the Court upon the facts, which facts are spread upon the record. If that legal construction was erroneous, this Court may correct it; that being a matter of law.

II. The Court below erred in not giving judgment for a larger amount. It decreed that the rent paid by the lessees in advance, should be refunded from the date at which the lessors re-let the prem- 272 ises to the new tenant; and not from the beginning of the current year, from the date of the fire, or from the date of the landlord's re-entry for the purpose of re-building. In this there was error, whatever view is taken of the facts. Shep. Touch. 90. 21 Pick. R. 28.

1. If the lease conveyed, as we believe it did, the land as well as the store, (meaning store-house) then, the right of possession of the lot and of all erections thereon, vested in the lessees to the end of their term, only to be divested by surrender or eviction. Baker vs. Holtzapfell, 4 Taunt. 45. Same case, 18 Ves. 116. 16 Mass. 449. There was no surrender or eviction in this case. Chit. on Contr. 263. Baker vs. Holtzapfell, ubi supra. 2 Vern. 112. The lessees became, in fact, the landlords, and entitled to demand from the original lessors the rents received by them from the new tenant, from the 5th December, 1843, to wit, $132 70, or the same amount as rent, under the count for use and occupation—the tort being waived.—Bell vs. Sibbs, 8 T R. 327. Birch vs. Wright, 1 T. R. 378. 3 M. & Sel. 191. 1 Taunt. 44. 8 Bing. 43.

But admit there was a surrender: it took effect, not from the date of the new lease to the third party, but from the date of the fire, or, at latest, from the date of the lessors re-entry; and the lessees were entitled to a return of their rent from the commencemnt of the then current quarter, to wit, 1st May, which was the beginning of the year. Chit. on Contr. 261—263—569. Carr. J. in Briggs vs. Hall. 4 Leigh R. 484.

Admit there was an eviction: it took place on the 15th July, when the lessors re-entered to re-build, which they had no right to do. 4 Taunt. 45. And the result would be the same as if a surrender were made: the rent should be refunded to the lessees from the bginning of the year.

2. It may be contended, that the lease did not convey the land, but only the store, viz.: "The new brick store, on 100 foot street next," &c., and when that was destroyed the lease was ended. Admit this for the sake of argument. The store erected after the fire, complies in all respects with the description of that actually leased. It was "the new brick store, on 100 foot street," &c. &c. It was to all intents the same store as that first leased; and the lessors are estopped by their deed, from contending otherwise. The lessees then, 273 are entitled to the new store and its rent, and may recover in this action.

3. It may possibly be contended, by the defendants in error, that "store" means only the building—the mere bricks and mortar—a mere room—the destruction of which puts an end to the lease. If but a mere room, a personal chattel, the lease is a sort of bailment—a locato rei. The bailor is bound to keep the thing bailed in good repair; (Story on Bail, 377) and failing to do so, to refund the rent from the date of the fire; or restore the thing, when repaired—Story on B. 376—or its rents, &c.

In an equitable point of view, the defendants in error have no claim for favor from the Court. By the original lease to the plaintiffs in error, they sold for an adequate price, the right to use and possess the store and land till the 1st May, 1844. There is no justice in allowing them to retake possesion of those premises, violate their first contract, and then make a profit by their own wrong. The fact of their re-building, when not compelled to do so, entitles them to no favor. They built for the sake of the rent to accrue thereafter, as long as the building should stand. They should not be allowed to trench upon rents which they had already once sold, to wit, those prior to 1st May, 1844. On the other hand, the appellants having, as lessees, taken all risks; having, in any event, lost by the fire the use of the premises for a considerable time, have justice as well as law to support their claims.

L. A. Thompson, for Defendants.

Douglas, Justice:

This is an action of assumpsit, and was brought up from the Circuit Court of Leon county by Writ of Error. The declaration contains two counts:

First—Money lent and advanced, money paid, laid out and expended, and money had and received.

Second—For use and occupation. Plea, non assumpsit.

A Jury, to assess the damages, was waived by the parties to the suit by their respective attorneys and the facts were submitted to the Court for its decision, pursuant to the provision contained in the first section of the act of November 21st, 1829, "To amend an act regulating judicial proceedings." Duval's Compilation, page 105. The plaintiffs having introduced their testimony rested.

274 Whereupon the deefndants, by their counsel, demurred to the evidence of the plaintiffs; and the plaintiffs, by their counsel, having put in their joinder to the demurrer, "all the matters of law and of fact were submitted to the Court for its decision." The demurrer brought upon the record the following proof:

1st. A lease, by one William Wyatt, to the plaintiffs in error, which is as follows, viz.:

"This Indenture, made this the 10th day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and forty, between William Wyatt of Leon county, Territory of Florida, of the one part, and Ward & May, merchants, in the county and Territory aforesaid, of the other part, witnesseth:—That the party of the first part, has rented and leased to the parties of the second part, the new brick store, south of F. Towle's building, on one hundred foot street, at four hundred dollars for the first year, and four hundred and fifty dollars for the three succeeding years, with the refusal of the same, after the expiration of that time, at a fair rent: the party, of the second, to have possession by the first of May next, when the rent is to commence. The parties of the second part are to pay the parties of the first part, his heirs and assigns, the aforesaid rent in quarterly installments. The party of the first part, is to counter and shelve with drawers the said store, as per plan annexed. It is further understood, that whatever other improvements the parties of the second part may make in the said store, shall be at the expense of the second party; but with the understanding and agreement, that the party of the first part shall, on the removal of the parties of the second part, pay the cost of all such improvements, or allow them to be removed by the second parties." The only additional proof which the record discloses, is that, "on 1st May, 1843, plaintiffs paid $450, in Union Bank bills, worth 33 1-3 cents in the dollar in good funds, in advance for rent up to 1st May, 1844: on the 25th May, 1843, the store was destroyed by fire: on the 15th of July, 1843, the defendants commenced the erection of a new building on the lot and site where the store stood, which being completed, was on the 5th of December, 1843, re-leased by defendants to a third person, at the rate of $325 per annum, in good funds, and the rent received by them to 1st May, 1844, and afterwards; the plaintiffs being out of the country after the fire. The defendants offered the plaintiffs to pay them, or refund them rent from the 5th December, 1843, at the same rate which they had received, say, $450 per annum, in Union 275 Bank funds, of the value of 33 1-3 cents per dollar."

The Court having duly considered all the matters of law and fact referred to, proceeded to render judgment as follows, to wit:

"It appears to the Court, that the matters shewn in evidence by the plaintiffs, are sufficient in law to maintain the issue joined herein; and it being by consent of parties referred to the Court to assess the damages which the plaintiffs had sustained, by reason of the matter shewn in evidence as aforesaid; it is therefore considered by the Court, that the plaintiffs do recover from the said defendants the sum of sixty dollars and forty-two cents, the damages which the said plaintiffs have sustained by reason of the matter shewn in evidence as aforesaid, and their costs by them about their suit in this behalf expended, and the said defendants in mercy," &c.

Whereupon the said defendants, by their attorney, filed their Bill of Exceptions, &c.

The plaintiffs in error took no exceptions; but being dissatisfied with the amount of their judgment, have brought it up to this Court for revision. No errors are in form assigned. The counsel for the plaintiffs in error, however, insist that the Court erred in not giving judgment for a larger amount; and this, they contend, is entirely a question of law, and ask the Court to give such judgment as the Court below ought to have given. That a party may bring a writ of error to reverse his own judgment for error, if injustice has been done him in the Court below, is well settled. Ingalls vs. Lord, 1 Cowen, 503. But this Court can only reverse a judgment for error in law, Cranch, 126. Teal vs. Russell, 2 Scammon, 32. Johnson vs. Jebb, 3 Burr, 1772. Tidd's Pr. 1134. Bissel vs. Marshal, 6 John. 100. Nor is there doubt that the Court may proceed to give such judgment as the Court below ought to have given, if the case is properly before us for that purpose. Duval's Comp. 109, sec. 5. 2 Bac. Abr. 503. But this Court can only reverse a judgment for error in law, not for error in fact. Upon a writ of error, containing error in fact and error in law, the Court ordered the error in fact to be stricken out, and reversed the judgment for error in law. Lewis vs. Lawson, 1 Root, 162. In the case of Neilson vs. McCabe, 9 Missouri Reps. 48, and Von Pheel vs. The City of St. Louis, ibid, 49, the Supreme Court of Missouri held, that the decision of the Circuit Court, sitting as a Jury, will not be set aside, unless the record shows, that the Cir- 276 cuit Court was called upon to decide some question of law, and its decision was wrong. Those cases were followed by that of Young vs. Kelly, in the same Court, where the same principle was maintained, and the Court said: "In a case like this, where the Court discharges the duty of a Jury, as well as its own peculiar duty, it seems more particularly necessary that the appellant should call on the Court to decide the law arising on the facts detailed in evidence. No such decision being made, this Court, feels no disposition to disturb the verdict of the Court sitting as a Jury." In the case of Reynolds vs. Rogers, 5th Hammond, 169, the Court held, that where matter of fact was submitted to the decision of the Court, neither party could sustain a writ of error, and the cases of Dovenor vs. Swafford, 1 Scammon, 166, Gilmore vs. Ballard, ibid, 252, and Stringer vs. John & Wm. Smith, ibid, 295, are all in point. An appeal, or writ of error, (the Court said, in the cases of Gilmore vs. Ballard, and Dovenor vs. Swafford,) if recognized in such cases, would be equivalent to a new mode of obtaining a new trial. It undoubtedly would be so, and we are not disposed to countenance this mode of practice. In the case last cited, the Court remarked: "It is of importance that innovations on the rules of proceedings should not be sanctioned, and that those which are found, after long use and practice, to be best adapted to the decision of causes, should be adhered to." A proposition founded in good sense and reason, and to which we most fully assent. The correct rule in the cases tried by the Court sitting as a Jury, would seem to be, that where facts alone are submitted, and the Court has only to weigh the evidence and determine accordingly, no writ of error lies; and where mixed questions of law and fact are presented to the Court for its decision, no writ of error lies, unless the Court is called upon to decide questions of law, or such question of law necessarily arises out of the facts, and is distinctly presented to the Court upon them, so that the decision of the point of law will decide the merits of the cause, and the decision of the Court is wrong. In this case, the facts were distinctly presented to the Court by the demurrer to the evidence, and several questions of law were incidentally involved in determining the rights of the parties upon them, as connected with the facts of the case; but no particular question involving the whole, or to any great extent the merits of the cause, was 277 prominently and distinctly presented to the Court by counsel, nor did any such necessarily arise out of the evidence, so as to make a decision upon it the subject of a writ of error. The remedy of the plaintiff, if the verdict was too low, was a motion for a new trial in the Court below, upon which all these incidental questions might have been heard. And here we might with propriety stop; but this case has been pressed upon the Court by the counsel for the plaintiffs, with a zeal and earnestness which evinces his confidence in the justice of his client's claim to a reversal of this judgment, and is deserving of further notice from us: and we, therefore, proceed to give our views briefly upon the merits.

The only question of law expressly raised, and distinctly presented to the Court in this case, was decided in favor of the plaintiffs in error, and a writ of error will not lie in favor of the party applying.—Sterrett vs. Creed, 2 Hamm. 343. Tribue vs. McKiterick, 4 Bibb, 180. Hammond vs. Buttell, 1 Call, 567. Hughes vs. Stickney, 13 Wend. 280. Henry vs. Smoot, Minor, 18. Carry vs. The State, 4 Port. 186. Indeed, the plaintiffs in error do not complain of that decision, but only that the amount found by the Court to be due to the plaintiffs, and for which judgment was rendered in the Court below, is too small. In order to determine the correctness of this proposition, and ascertain the rights of the plaintiffs in error to this suit, we must look to the nature of the action, and the circumstances of the case as disclosed by the evidence.

The declaration, as before stated, contains two counts, one, for money had and received, and the other, for use and occupation. We will reverse the order, and enquire, first, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover on the last count. This count is founded on the statute of 11 Geo. 2., chap. 19, sec. 14, by which it is enacted, that "it shall be unlawful for a landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the lands and tenements, or hereditaments, held or occupied by the defendant in an action on the case, for use and occupation of what was so held and enjoyed; and if in evidence, on the trial of such action, any parole demise, or any agreement (not being by deed,) where a certain rent is reserved, shall appear, the plaintiff in such action shall not, therefore, be nonsuited, but may make use thereof, as an evidence of the quantum of damages to be recovered." Chitty on Contracts, 105—106. 1 Chitty's Pl. 338.

278 Assumpsit for the use of land by permission and assent of the plaintiff, or an express promise to pay a certain sum, or, in general, to pay to the plaintiff's satisfaction for such use, lies, at common law, indeepndent of the statute. Eppes vs. Call, et ux. 4 Hen. & Munf. 161. And it has also been held to lie on an implied promise: Sutton vs. Mandeville, 1 Munf. 407. Gunn vs. Scovie, 4 Day, 299.—Logan vs. Lewis, 1 J. J. March, 3. But, to support an action for use and occupation, a demise must be shewn, or some evidence given to establish the relation between the parties of landlord and tenant. Stoddert vs. Newman, 7 Harr. & John. 251. Boston vs. Binney, 11 Pick. 1. Pott vs. Lester, 1 Yeates, 576. Follan vs. Baisman, 3 Miss. 405. Featherstonehaugh vs. Bradshaw, 1 Wend. 134.—Smith vs. Stewart, 6 John. 46. Story on Contracts, p. 398, sec. 656. There is nothing in the evidence in this case, which shews a contract, either express or implied, on the part of the defendants in error to pay rent for the premises in question, to the plaintiffs in error. They only offered to return the amount of the rent which they had received for the time that intervened between the 5th of December, 1843, and the first day of May, 1844. The plaintiffs in error cannot, therefore, recover on that count, but must fall back upon their count for money had and received, to recover back the rent which they had advanced. There is no evidence either of money lent or advanced, or money paid, laid out, or expended. The charge for money had and received, is therefore the only one on which the plaintiffs in error can rest their case. This kind of equitable action, to recover back money which ought not in justice to be kept, it is said, is verey beneficial, and therefore much encouraged. Chitty on Contracts, 182. It lies only for money, which "ex aequo et bono", the defendant ought to refund. 3 Tucker's Blackstone, 163. 1 Chitty's Pl. 341. Chitty on Contracts, 182. By bringing this action the tort is waived. 2 Smith's leading cases, page top 131, side 89.—What then, are the plaintiffs in error entitled to recover on this count? A lessee who covenants to pay rent and repair, with express exception of casualties by fire, is liable upon the covenant for rent, though the premises are burned down and not rebuilt by the lessor after notice. Story on Contracts, page 376, sec. 605. Towle vs. Bate, 6 Mass. 63. Izon vs. Garton, 5 Bing. New Cases, 501. Balfour vs. Weston, 1 Term R. 311. And a Court of Equity will not restrain him from suing for the rent. Leeds vs. Cheetham, 1 Sim 145. 279 Haltzapffel vs. Baker, 18 Ves. Jr. 117. Balfour vs. Weston. 1 T. R. 312. At the trial of the last case, Buller, Justice, read the following note of the case of Pindar against Ainsley and Rutter, at the sittings at Westminster, after Michaelmas Term, 1767. That was an action of ejectment, by the tenant against the landlord, to recover the possession of some houses which had been burned down during the term, and rebuilt by the landlord. In the lease there was an express covenant, on the part of the tenant, to pay rent; but he had paid none subsequent to the time of the fire. Lord Mansfield, before whom the cause was tried, said, the consequence of the house being burned down is, that the landlord is not obliged to rebuild, but the tenant is obliged to pay rent during the whole term. The premises consisted of houses only, and the fire has made them quite useless. In March, 1763, the premises were worth nothing; but the landlord, if he had insisted on the rigor of the law, might have obliged the plaintiff to pay the rent for nothing, during the remainder of the term. Then the plaintiff would have been glad to have delivered up the premises; therefore he left it to the jury to consider, whether it was not to be presumed that the tenant had abandoned the lease at the time of the fire, and, accordingly, the defendant had a verdict. So, in the case before us: the store being burned down, the defendants in error were not bound to rebuild; but the plaintiffs in error were bound, by their express covenant, for the rent during the whole term; and although they had paid it in advance, had no claim to recover it back. On the 25th of May, the house was burned down. The premises, for aught that appears, consisted of the store only. From that time to the 5th of December, they were worth nothing. The landlords (the defendants in error,) might have laid by during the remainder of the term; in which case the plaintiffs in error would have lost their money entirely. They would have had no claim to recover any part of it. The idea, that the defendants in error were bailors, and bound to keep the bricks and mortar (the rubbish left by the burning of the store,) in repair, as argued by the counsel for the plaintiff in error, seems to the Court a fallacy. On the contrary, if the defendants in error were bailors, the plaintiffs in error were bailees, and bound to take such care of the property as a prudent man would take of his own affairs. Story on Bailments, 8—16. 1 Smith's leading cases, 100. 2 Jones on Bailments, 6—110—119. Tompkins vs. Saltworth, 280 144 Sarg. & Rawle, 775. It does not appear, however, that they took any care of it, or paid any regard to it after the fire. They were out of the country, and do not appear to have left any agent to attend to it. The bricks and mortar, so frequently spoken of at the hearing, were not the property of the lessees, nor could they have used them without the consent of the lessors. Upon the whole circumstances of this case, we think there was quite as strong grounds for the Judge who tried this cause in the Court below, to presume that the defendants in error entered to rebuild the store by the assent of the plaintiffs in error, that they might have the benefit of the return of their rent they had paid from the time the new store should be completed, (as it was the only way in which they could get anything,) as there was in the case of Pindar against Ainesly & Rutter, for Lord Mansfield to leave it to the jury to consider, whether the tenant had not abandoned the lease. It was insisted, however, on behalf of the plaintiffs in error, that they were entitled to all the rent of the new store for the time intervening between the 5th day of December, 1843, and the first day of May, 1844; but there is no proof as to the relative value of the old store and the new one. The latter may, for aught that appears, have been worth ten times as much as the former. This is an equitable action. We must look at the finding of the Court as though it had been the finding of a Jury, and presume that he took into consideration all the equitable circumstances which he might properly have left to a Jury to consider, had that mode of trial been adopted. There was no eviction in this case, for that can only be by title paramount. Bac. Abr. title Rent, 1. Saunders R. 204, n. 2. Ibidem, 322, n. a. 4 Kent's Comm. 462. 2 Jac. L. Dict. 444. There was no expulsion from the store, for it was gone. There was no actual expulsion from the ground on which it stood, for the lessees had left, not only the premises, by the country. There is no trespass—no tort, for that is waived by the bringing of this action. On the 5th of December, 1843, the new store was leased, and from that time the plaintiffs in error were entitled, upon the principles we have assumed, to a return of the rent they had paid, at the rate at which the defendants in error had received it. Until that time the premises, so far as rent was concerned, were valueless. The loss must fall either upon the lessors, or lessees; and there is no more 281 equity that the land should bear it, than the tenant. When the tenant (as in this case,) has expressly covenanted to pay rent, and when the landlord must bear the loss of the property destroyed, the calamity is mutual. 3 Kent's Comm. 467. The Court found what, under all the circumstances, apear to us to have been just and equitable; and if eror would lie in such a case as this, we should not be disposed to disturb the verdict.

The judgment of the Court below is affirmed with costs.

Per Curiam.

ORLOFF M. DORMAN, vs. ROBERT BIGELOW, EXECUTOR OF FRANCIS RICHARD.

A. made a promissory note to pay B. a sum of money on a day certain, and C. endorsed thereon, "I agree to stand security for the payment of the within amount." Held, in an action against C., that his undertaking, by the said endorsement, was not within the statute of frauds of this State, and that the action was maintainable against him.

A promise to pay the debt of another, made in writing and signed by the party to be bound, but without expressing the consideration on which the promise is founded, is sufficient, and is not within the statute of frauds of this State.

A surety cannot avoid his liability on the ground, that the payee did not use due diligence against the principal, without showing that he had given the payee notice to proceed against the principal, which he had disregarded.

In the absence of a Bill of Exceptions, showing the testimony exhibited in the Court below, the presumption is, that there was full and adequate evidence before the Jury, to warrant and support the verdict, under the declaration to which it was responsive.

A note filed in a cause, but not connected with the declaration by a Bill of Exceptions showing that it had been given in evidence in the Court below, can not be deemed a part of the record submitted for the inspection of this Court; nor can it be brought before this Court by an assignment of errors.

A Bill of exceptions is necessary, when the alleged error cannot otherwise appear on the record.

APPEAL from the Superior Court of the late Territory of Florida, sitting for the counties of St. John's and Musquito.

282 Judge Douglas did not sit at the hearing of this case.

Assumpsit on the following endorsement on a promissory note by Dorman, the defendant: "I agree to stand security for the payment of the within amount." For the other facts, see the opinion of the Court.

G. T. Ward, for Appellant.

J. & L. Branch, for Appellee:

This was an action on a note made by A. W. Walker, payable to Robert Bigelow, Ex'r., and guaranteed by appellant.

The appellant relies on the 10th section of our Statute of Frauds, (Duval's Comp. 206) and pretends that, under that section, his promise was void, because the consideration was not expressed in writing. The English cases, even if they are to be considered, as having settled the law in England, are not applicable here, where we have a statute essentially different from the English Statute of Frauds. 29 Sar. 2, C. 3. Roberts on Frauds, 467. They, respectively, read thus:—

ENGLISH STATUTE.	STATUTE OF FLORIDA.
"Unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, shall be in writing."	"Unless the agreement, or promise, upon which such action shall be brought, shall be in writing."

The statutes are verbatim et literatim the same, except that the words, "or promise," are inserted in ours. No one can doubt, on reading the two statutes and the English cases, that our statute was drawn by a lawyer, and that the word, promise, was introduced for the express purpose of meeting the difficulty which had arisen in the English Courts, and to obviate the rigid and inconvenient rule which the Court of King's Bench had felt itself constrained to adopt in Wain vs. Warlters—5 East. 10—because of the failure to insert in the English statute, the words, "or promise." No case was ever more reluctantly sanctioned by the Courts even in England. Lord Eldon never approved it—Minet, ex parte, 14 Vesey, jr. 190. In this country, C. J. Parsons disapproved it—5 Mass. 360—and C. J. Parker, after an elaborate examination, expressly refused to abide by it. 17 Mass. 122. The rigor and inconvenience of the rule were so universally complained of, that several of the United States, Florida of the number, have introduced the words, "or promise," into their Statute of Frauds, which exactly accomplishes what was intended by 29 Car. 2, C. 3.

The reasoning of the English cases is, that their statute having 289 been drawn by C. J. Hale, (it is now known, however that he did not draw it,) the words of it ought to have their technical signification given to them; and as the technical word agreement embraces the "consideration for the promise, as well as the promise itself, "it must follow, that the consideration for the promise, as well as the promise itself, should be in writing. In Wain vs. Warlters, Lawrence, Judge, said: "If the question had arisen merely in the first part of this clause," that is, where the word promise is used, "I concur that it would only have been necessary that the promise should have been in writing." Le Blanc, Judge, said: "It would have been better if the Legislature had used the words, 'unless the promise or agreement, upon which the action is brought, shall be in writing,'—but not having done so, I think we must adhere to the strict interpretation of the word agreement; which means, the consideration for which, as well as the promise by which a party binds himself." So reasoned all the Judges, not only in that, but in all subsequent cases.

As by the express terms of our statute, if the promise is in writing, it is sufficient: the reasoning can have no force here. Violett vs. Patten—5 Cranch, 151—was a construction by the Supreme Court of the U. S., of the Virginia statute, which is an exact copy of ours. The Court said, it was sufficient if the promise was in writing, and that the consideration need not be.

This is not a promise to answer for the debt of another. It is an original independent undertaking, concurrent and joint with that of the maker, and does not come under the Statute of Frauds. Hunt, Adm'r. vs. Adams, 5 Mass. 360. Snively vs. Johnston, 1 Watts and Serg. 309. Story on Prom. Notes, 58, and notes.

MACRAE, Justice:

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered by the late Superior Court of St. John's County, in an action of assumpsit brought by Robert Bigelow, Executor of Francis Richard, deceased, against Orloff M. Dorman, to recover from the latter, as endorsee, surety, and promisor, the amount of a promissory note alleged to have been executed by one Augustus W. Walker, to the plaintiff, for the hire of a slave, with the following endorsement, alleged to have been made by the defendant:

"I agree to stand security for the payment of the within amount. 290
O. M. DORMAN."

The declaration contains five several counts. The first, charges defendant as endorser of a promissory note: the second, proceeds upon his promise and undertaking in writing, to pay the plaintiff the sum of $205, the amount of said note, when due, in consideration that plaintiff would hire a slave to one Augustus W. Walker, for one year: the third, charges the defendant upon his undertaking in writing, upon a like consideration, to stand security for the payment of said sum for said hire, when due: the fourth, is founded upon a like undertaking, in consideration that plaintiff had hired said slave as aforesaid: and the fifth sets out, that defendant in consideration that plaintiff had hired said slave to said Walker, for said sum for one year, upon condition that said Walker should give his promissory note with good security, for the payment thereof, made his endorsement in writing on the note so given by said Walker, whereby defendant promised to stand as security for the payment of said sum of money, being the consideration of the hire aforesaid. To this declaration the defendant pleaded the general issue; upon which plea issue was joined, and thereupon verdict and judgment were rendered for the plaintiff.

No bill of exceptions has been returned, or appears to have been taken and filed in this case, whilst the errors assigned by the counsel for the appellant, appear to be exclusively based upon the note or instrument filed with the declaration, in the view taken by him of the legal character and effect of the endorsement thereon. Nor has an assignment of error been regularly made and presented. Those, however, which have, by consent and with the leave of this Court, been informally presented in argument, are of the limited scope just mentioned, and they appear to resolve themselves into two leading objections to the judgment below, to which alone we deem it proper to direct the attention of this Court; and in doing this, we do not, as will be shown in the sequel, consider the determination of these points to be indispensable in making up our opinion and judgment upon the record before us.

The first, and main ground of error relied on is, that under the tenth section of the Statute of Frauds of the State of Florida—Duval's Comp. 206—the appellant is not liable on account of the endorsement in question, for want of a consideration expressed upon the face 291 or it, whereon to predicate his alleged undertaking or agreement. In support of this ground, his counsel here assumes the position, that the tenth section referred to, demands the same interpretation as the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds of England—29 Ch. II c. 3—on the same subject; and for a proper construction of these sections in view of their application to this case, cites the leading English and New York cases of Wain vs. Warlters, 5 East. 10, and Sears vs. Brinck, 3 Johns. 210.

The tenth section of the Statute of Frauds of this State before mentioned, provides, "that no action shall be brought whereby to charge any Executor, &c., upon any special premises," &c., "or whereby to charge the defendant, upon any special promise, to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, or to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage," &c. "or upon any contract for the sale of lands," &c., "or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year,' &c., "unless the agreement or promise upon which such action shall be brought, or some note or memorandum thereof, shall be in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some other person by him thereunto lawfully authorized." The corresponding section of the English statute referred to, provides, "that no action shall be brought whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, &c., of another person, &c., unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing," &c. The Statutes of Frauds, of most of the States, including New York, conform expressly to that of England. Those of Virginia and Tennessee correspond with the statute of Florida, to the extent above recited.

Supposing the case of Wain vs. Warlters at all applicable in the decision of the case at bar, an important preliminary question arises, Whether the decision in that case, is applicable to this, in view of the terms of the 10th section of our statute?—or, in other words, Whether the latter makes it essential to the validity of a written promise to pay the debt of another, that it should express on its face the consideration on which it is based? In the case of Colgin vs. Henly—6 Leigh's Va. R. 85—it was the unanimous opinion of the Court, that under the Statute of Frauds of Virginia, the consideration need not be expressed in written promise, but that it stood as at 292 common law in that regard. This opinion is fully supported by that of the Supreme Court of the United States, pronounced by Ch. J. Marshal, in the case of Violett vs. Patton. 5 Cranch, 142—151.

That the tenth section of our Statute of Frauds, in common with that of Virginia, differs in a material point from the 4th section of that of England, is sufficiently clear, not only from the reasoning used in the American cases just cited, but from that employed by several of the learned Judges in the case of Wain vs. Warlters. Upon this difference, indeed, the latter case seems mainly to have turned; for, in its decision, Lawrence, J., says: "If the question had arisen on the first part of the clause, I conceive that it would only have been necessary that the promise should have been stated in writing; "but, he adds, "the statute going on further to say, that no person shall be charged, &c., unless the agreement, &c., be in writing, shews that the word agreement was meant to be used in a sense different from promise, and something besides the mere promise was required to be stated." Le Blanc, J., says: "I should have been as well satisfied, however, if recurring to the words used in the first part of the clause, they had used the same words again in the latter part, and said, unless the promise or agreement, &c., be in writing. But not having so done, I think we must adhere to the strict interpretation of the word agreement, which means the consideration for which, as well as the promise by which the party binds himself." And it may be fairly inferred, from the language of another of the Judges in that case, that he was of the same opinion. Now, it would appear, that what these Judges desired, or supposed that Parliament might have done, is, what our Legislature has accomplished intentionally. Our statute, certainly, does not mean to give validity to any promise because in writing, which would not have been valid at common law; and, therefore, would not support one, without sufficient legal consideration, which must be averred, and may be proved at the trial by paro evidence, as heretofore required at the common law. As to the mischief which it was supposed the statute meant to prevent, it is perhaps sufficient, in view of the ordinary routine of business transactions, that the promise to pay the debt of another should be in writing. It might be safely assumed that, in a very large majority of such cases, the written promise would be found to be sustained by a sufficient legal consideration, which it may be perhaps more proper to leave to parol proof at the trial, than to limit it by a rule, the strict- 293
ness of which may lead to more fraud in pleading, than it would prevent in testimony. But were our statute an exact transcript from the English, or alike subject to the rule of construction laid down in Wain vs. Warlters, it appears that the decision in that case has not met with such universal favor, either in England or the United States, as to make it conclusive authority with this Court, as a precedent. Indeed, it seems to have been received in England with considerable surprise and disfavor, as a new construction given to a statute which had been in operation upwards of a century, in support of which no former case was cited, either by counsel or the Judges, at the time it was decided. Lord Eldon has, in the Chancery Court, positively denied its correctness, and in one instance overruled it. In one case he says: "There is a variety of authorities directly contradicting the case in King's Bench, which is a most important case in its consequences; for the undertaking of one man for the debt of another, does not require a consideration moving between them." And again, in another case he says: "The first objection, viz., that which Wain vs. Warlters was cited to support, is of great importance. Until that case was decided some time ago, I had always taken the law to be clear, that if a man agreed in writing to pay the debt of another, it was not necessary that the consideration should appear upon the face of the writing." Ex parte Minet, 14 Vesey, 189—and exparte Gardom, 15 Vesey, 289.

It is true that the case of Saunders vs. Wakefield, 4 Barn. & Ald. 595, would seem to extend, whilst it recognizes the grounds taken in the case of Wain vs. Warlters; but the case of Jenkins vs. Reynolds, 7 Eng. C. L. R. 328, goes back to the grounds taken in the case of Wain vs. Warlters, referring to the technical import of the word agreement. The case of Egerton vs. Matthews, 6 East. 307, would appear too, to conflict with the leading case of Wain vs. Warlters, although the decision turned upon the 17th sec. of the English Statute of Frauds, in application to that case in which it was determined that a memorandum of a bargain for the sale of goods, signed by the party to be charged, would take the case out of the statute, although the consideration of the bargain was not expressed in the memorandum. A bargain is a contract or agreement between two parties, the one to sell, and the other to buy; and the consideration of a bargain would appear to be as indispensably a part of it, as it is of any 294 other contract or agreement; and there would seem to be as much risk of perjury in proving the consideration of a bargain as of any other agreement, by parole evidence.

In New York, the decision in Wain vs. Warlters, is not only adopted in the case of Sears vs. Brinck, but generally; referring in later decisions to the express terms of the revised statutes, which require that the consideration of an agreement to pay the debt of another, must be expressed. Leonard vs. Vredenburg, 8 John. 29. Smith vs. Ives, 15 Wend. 182. Packer vs. Wilson, 15 Wend. 343. Rogers vs. Kneeland, 10 Wend. 218. But in the case of Leonard vs. Vredenburg, Ch. J. Kent observed, that, "He had not been altogether satisfied with the decisions therein referred to," and adds further, "the present motion can be decided without disturbing them."

In Massachusetts, whose Statute of Frauds is the same as that of England, the case of Wain vs. Warlters has been entirely overruled, not only in the case of Hunt vs. Adams, 5 Mass. 360, cited by the counsel for the appellee, but in other cases, particularly that of Parckard vs. Richardson—17 Mass. 122——in which last case, Ch. J. Parker, in pronouncing the opinion of the Court, examines and controverts the English decision in question, with great ability and learning. In that opinion, he says: "Until 1804, when Wain vs. Warlters was decided, there was no case in support of the doctrine of that case, and that decision excited much surprise, both in England and in this country. Our statute is copied from the English, and has been in operation more than a century, and it never, until lately, has been doubted, that if one man, for a sufficient consideration, deliberately signed his name to a promise to pay the debt of another, it is a sufficient compliance with the statute, without any recital in writing, of the consideration upon which the promise is founded. Although, some consideration must exist to give validity to such a promise, it is generally of a nature not to be disputed, and if disputed, has been proved by parole testimony. The consideration is seldom for the benefit of the party making it; forbearance to sue, and the like, being most frequently the consideration of such undertakings; and these being altogether for the benefit of the original debtor. This being the case, it would not enter into the imagination of the parties to such a contract, that, unless the motives and considerations which led to it were down in writing, the agreement was void."

295 In the case of Sage vs. Wilcox—6 Conn. R. 81—Ch. J. Hosner, in delivering the opinion of the Court, comes also the conclusion, after an able and elaborate review of the English and American cases on the subject, that the consideration of an agreement to answer for the debt of another, is not required by the Statute of Frauds of that State, to be in writing.

Thus, it appears that whatever view be taken of the Statute of Frauds of this State, it is clear that under the 10th section thereof, a promise to pay the debt of another, made in writing and signed by the party to be bound, is a sufficient compliance therewith, without any recital in the writing of the consideration upon which the promise is founded, it being competent for the plaintiff, having averred the consideration in such cases, to prove the same by parol testimony on the trial, as at the common law.

But the binding effect of the endorsement in question, does not depend upon the views just taken. On the contrary, it is manifest that the terms of this endorsement, in connection with those of the note or instrument declared on, take it out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds, giving it the most rigid construction that has been placed upon those of England or New York. It is clear, that in this case, the appellant is bound in virtue of this endorsement, the note in question furnishing a sufficient consideration to sustain the promise or agreement so endorsed, and this, whether the endorser be regarded as a joint and several maker of the note absolutely, or as a guarantor, undertaking for the payment thereof. The note and the endorsement being taken as one instrument, the nature of the consideration and promise are therefore sufficiently expressed in writing. Story on Prom. Notes, s. 58. Hunt vs. Adams, 5 Mass. 358—360. Bailey vs. Freeman, 11 John. 221. Rogers vs. Kneeland, 10 Wend. 218. Adams vs. Bear, 12 Mass. 137. Monroe vs. Durham, 3 Hill, 584. Baker vs. Briggs, 8 Pick. 122. Chaffer vs. Jones, 19 Pick. 260. Luqueer vs. Prosser, 1 Hill, 256. Douglas vs. Howland, 24. Wend. 35.

The next ground of error presented is, that there is no averment and proof of due diligence on the part of the appellee, in pursuing his debt against the principal in the promissory note. As to this objection, we deem it sufficient to remark, that notice to the payee is necessary in order to release the surety, and that nothing appears on the record to that effect, or otherwise sustaining the view thus taken.

296 But, as we have intimated, this case presents itself upon the record in an aspect which might well dispense with the determination of the points set up by the plaintiff in error. There being no bill of exceptions, there is nothing to connect the note, upon which the alleged errors are grounded, with the declaration, so as to shew that the former presented the only testimony exhibited before the jury in support of the latter, or that the note was presented in evidence at all. It is merely recited in the declaration as a promissory note. The note, or a copy of it, is required to be filed with, and appended to the declaration by statute, perhaps for the purpose of enabling the defendant the better to make his defence to the action; and it was in the option of the plaintiff to offer it in evidence or not, as he might deem it expedient; and unless it had been so presented, no notice could have been taken of it, as evidence on the trial below. It is therefore not deemed to be a part of the record submitted for the inspection of this Court, though it might have been made so by a bill of exceptions duly made up in the Court below, as we have hinted. Nor can it be properly brought before us through the medium of an assignment of errors, however formally made. This is too obvious to require discussion.

This case is brought here by writ of error. This letter, or an appeal in the nature of it, is a proceeding in virtue of which a Superior Court examines a record, upon which a judgment was given in another Court inferior to it; and on such examination, to affirm or reverse the same. 6 Wheat. 264. 6 Cond. R. 90. Peters' Digest, 131, s. 19. And when the alleged error cannot otherwise appear upon the record, a bill of exceptions is necessary to that end. 7 Wheat. 530. 5 Cond. R. 334. Peters' D. 132, s. 21.

In 7 Mass. 448, it is laid down, that a note filed in a cause, as evidence in support of the plaintiff's action, or to prove his damages upon default, is not part of the record, and the Court cannot take notice of it upon a writ of error, on the ground that illegal evidence was admitted in support of the action, or in assessment of damages. In further support and illustration of this doctrine, we may also refer to 8 Mass. 383, and 15 Peters, 129. In the latter case the Court held, that the note filed in the cause was not part of the record; that, therefore, that Court could not judicially know when the interest, in regard to which a question of error arose in the case, had commenced running. And it was further remarked, that this ground of error 297 should, for the reason mentioned, have been brought before the Court below, by bill of exceptions setting out the note.

In the case before us, for aught that appears to the contrary, other proof besides the note in question, may have been presented on the trial below, and such as may have influenced or determined the verdict and judgment: and there is nothing to show, that such proof, if so presented, was inadmissible, or otherwise exceptionable in law. In the absence, therefore, of a bill of exceptions, showing the testimony exhibited, the presumption is, that there was full and adequate evidence before the jury, to warrant and support the verdict, under the declaration to which it is responsive.

In this view then, the only ground of error of which the appellant can avail himself upon the record and the pleadings, &c., thereby presented, would be, that the declaration of the plaintiff is wholly insufficient to maintain this action. As to this, it is sufficient to remark, that the second, third and fourth counts in the declaration, do not necessarily rest upon the evidence presented by the note filed. They are sufficient in themselves, if sustained by proof, to entitle the plaintiff to recovery, and there is nothing to show that they were not so sustained before the jury. But it has not been attempted to argue, much less formally to set up a ground of error, that the declaration is insufficient in any respect to support the verdict and judgment. Nor was any such exception taken to it in the Court below, by demurrer or otherwise.

Upon the whole therefore, we are unhesitatingly of the opinion, that there was no error in the judgment of the Court below in the case. It must, consequently, be affirmed with costs.

STATE vs. CHARLES, A SLAVE. 298

By the Constitution of the State, the jurisdiction of this Court being appellate only, so much of the act of the Legislature of the Territory of Florida, approved 6th February, 1841, entitled "An Act regulating Appeals and Writs of Error in criminal cases," as enables a Judge, having a doubt upon a legal question arising in the case at the trial below, to continue the case, and make a statement in writing of the question of law, and transmit the same to the Court of Appeals for its consideration and decision, and directs the Judges of the Court of Appeals, without delay to decide the same, is inoperative; and this Court has no jurisdiction of cases brought up under said act.

THIS case was brought up from the County of Hamilton, under the act of the Territory of Florida, approved 6th February, 1841, entitled "An Act regulating Appeals and Writs of Error in criminal cases,"—the presiding Judge, his Honor Judge Hawkins, having continued the case and granted a certificate of a doubt upon a legal question which arose at the trial in the Court below, and transmitted the same to this Court for its decision.

A motion was made to dismiss the case, on the ground that this Court being appellate only, had no jurisdiction of such case.

Attorney General, for State.

Carmack & Baker, for Defendant.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

The prisoner in this case, was indicted at the last October Term of the Circuit Court, holden in and for Hamilton county, under the 39th section of the act 21st November, 1828, entitled "An Act relating to crimes and misdemeanors committed by slaves, free negroes and mulattoes," Duval's Comp. 224, for an assault with an intent to commit a rape on one Zilpha Pennington. The section of the act referred to, declares: "That if any negro or mulatto shall assault any white woman or child, with intent to commit a rape, such negro or mulatto shall be cropped, branded, or suffer death, at the discretion of the Court." Zilpha Pennington was a white woman, but the indictment did not so charge. A question was raised in the Court below, upon the validity of the indictment on that ground; and the Judge who held the Court at that Term, entertaining a doubt upon that point, made a statement in writing of the question of law, and 299 brought the same to this Court, pursuant to the provisions of the act of 6th February, 1841, entitled, An Act regulating Appeals and Writs of Error in criminal cases, by the first section of which it is enacted, that from and after the passage of this act, no appeal or writ of error, or bill of exceptions to evidence, shall be entertained, allowed or granted to a defendant or defendants in criminal prosecutions, in any of the Courts of this Territory; but if, in the trial of any criminal prosecution, the Judge before whom the same is tried, shall entertain a doubt upon any legal question arising in the case, then, and in that case, the said Judge, after verdict rendered, may continue the same, and shall as soon as convenient, make a statement in writing of the question or law, and carry up, or transmit the same to the Court of Appeals, for its consideration and decision.

Upon this state of the case, a question arises, Whether this Court has any jurisdiction of the matter? The Constitution of this State, Article 5, section 2, declares, that the Supreme Court, except in cases otherwise directed in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only. This is not one of the excepted cases. Is it a case in which this Court is called upon to exercise appellate power? Here is no final order, judgment, or decree of the Court below, from which an appeal could be taken, or writ of error prosecuted; and the statute expressly provides, that there shall be no such order, judgment, decree, appeal, or writ of error, but when the Judge of the Court, who may be trying such a cause, shall entertain a doubt upon any legal question, authorises him, after verdict and before judgment, to continue the case and send up a statement of the point of law, that it may be decided in the Court above. If the Court were to consider and decide it, the question not having been before decided, the action of the Court would be an exercise, rather of original jurisdiction, than of appellate power. Whatever power the late Court of Appeals, in reference to which the act was passed, may have possessed in such cases, this Court, upon mature consideration, is of opinion that it has no jurisdiction of a case thus brought up.

This is a case of highly penal character; and that circumstance, together with the fact, that the law recognizes no other method for bringing up a criminal case, caused the Court to hesitate and weigh the matter well, before it declined to take jurisdiction of it. But, it will be preceived, that, if the Court has jurisdiction of a matter thus 300 brought up, it would be competent for the General Assembly to provide by law, that, if in the trial of any civil case, the Judge who tries the same, shall entertain a doubt upon any point of law arising in it, either upon the pleadings, reception, or rejection of testimony, instruction given, or asked and refused to be given to a jury, or any other legal question, such judge, after verdict and before judgment, may continue the same, make a statement of the point of law on which the doubt arose, and certify it to this Court for its consideration and decision thereon; thus, making this tribunal a Court for the trial of all original questions of law arising in the Circuit Courts. No one, it is believed, would seriously contend that this Court could take cognizance of such questions so presented. The question of jurisdiction, as was remarked by Judge Baltzell, in pronouncing the opinion of the Court in the case of Stewart and Preston, at the last Term, on the motion to dismiss, is always a delicate one; and the most prudent and safe course for a Court of dernier resort, where any doubt about the power exists, is deemed to be, to decline to act. The exercise of doubtful powers, by a Court of the last resort, is always extremely dangerous, and tends to excite alarm and distrust. If this, therefore, were a doubtful question, that fact would fully justify us in dismissing the proceeding; but, after having bestowed upon it the most deliberate consideration, we do not deem it such.

Let the case, therefore, be dismissed; and the papers transmitted to the Clerk of the Court below.

Per Curiam.

RICHARD C. SPANN vs. GEORGE F. BALTZELL. 301

The endorsement of a note is not a collateral undertaking of the debt of another, within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds; but is a new contract between the endorser and endorsee. The contract of each endorser being thus an independent one, he stands on the same footing as any other contractor, and possesses the same rights and powers as to any alteration, revision, or waiver of his contract of endorsement, by and with the consent of the endorsee.

As a general rule, a verbal agreement between the parties to a written contract, made before, or at the time of the execution of such contract, is inadmissible to vary its terms or affect its construction; but, after the contract is reduced to writing, it is competent to the parties, at any time before the breach of it, by a new contract, not in writing, either altogether to waive, dissolve, or annul the former agreement, or in any manner to add to, subtract from, or vary or qualify the terms of it.

In cases of a substituted agreement, the plaintiff can always declare on the written contract; and, unless defendant can prove performance according to the terms of the contract, or according to the agreement for a substituted performance, the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment.

But these cases of substituted oral agreements being considered in the light of new contracts, it is requisite that they be made upon some new and valuable consideration.

An agreement between an endorser and an endorsee of a note, by which the endorser promised to pay the note at maturity, punctually and without fail, out of his own funds, and the endorsee, in consideration thereof, agreed to receive payment in the bank notes or bills of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, which were depreciated, is a substituted agreement, founded on a good and valuable consideration, and is binding on the parties.

A plea of a tender and refusal of the bank notes of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, on the day the note became due, must be pleaded with a profert in curia of the bank notes.

The Statute of Frauds does not apply to such new and substituted agreement, inasmuch as the endorser had for his object a benefit which he did not before enjoy, accruing immediately to himself, and by which he could pay the note with a less sum than was originally to be paid by him, in case of default by the maker.

Entries made in the usual mode of business, and duly authenticated by the oath of the party who made them, are admissible in evidence, though the party making them can remember and testify nothing as to the facts contained in the entries. The paper must be an original one, made at the time the facts contained in it are alleged to have taken place, and confirmed by the oath of the witness, that he believes it contains a true statement of the facts.

The original Protest of the demand and non-payment of a promissory note is 302 admissible in evidence, and evidence of its contents, when the Notary who made it testifies that it was drawn up at the time of the demand of payment, and that he believes the facts stated therein to be true, and to have occurred; else he would not have certified to their occurrence as Notary; but that he recollects none of the facts independent of the Protest.

Where a Notary testified that he sent notice of non-payment to the defendant, as stated in the certificate endorsed upon the protest of the note, which certificate stated that due notice of the protest was given the endorser, by depositing the notice in the P. O. at Apalachicola, addressed to R. C. S. Franklin, Alabama, the reputed place of his abode; held to be sufficient proof of notice.

No particular form of notice of dishonor of a note being necessary, it seems the notice would be good, if it be sufficient to put the party on enquiry, and prepare him to pay the note, or defend himself; and even if there be some uncertainty in the description of the bill or note, if it does not tend to mislead the party, it will be good.

When a note was made payable at the Agency of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company Bank, Apalachicola, which had been removed from Apalachicola some weeks previous to the day of the alleged presentment of the note, such removal rendered the demand at the Agency impossible and when, demand having been made at the place of payment of the note, it was found that the Agency had been removed from Apalachicola, a sufficient demand was made to fix the endorsers.

When facts or circumstances exist, which amount to an excuse, or do away the necessity of a demand, the declaration may be in the usual form, and proof of the facts which dispense with a formal demand, will, in law, be deemed proof of a demand.

ERROR from Franklin Circuit Court.

This case was tried at the February Term, 1845, of the Superior Court for Franklin county, of the late Territory of Florida.

The facts of the case are fully reported in the opinion of the Court.

W. G. M. Davis, for Plaintiff in Error.

Long & Walker, for Defendant:

Baltzell recovered a judgment, in the Franklin Superior Court, against Spann, as the endorser of a promissory note, to reverse which judgment this writ of error is prosecuted in this Court.

The first error assigned is:

1. That plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's special pleas, ought not to have been sustained.

In order to determine this question, the pleas must be examined. They all plead the same matter in different forms, which is in sub-303 stance, that before the note fell due the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to abrogate his contract of contingent liability to pay the note. If demand was duly made of the maker, and he should fail to pay, due notice should be given of such demand and refusal to the endorser, the defendant; and that in lieu of this contingent liability, the defendant would pay the debt himself, on the day it should fall due, in bank bills. This is the only part of the pleas which is so pleaded as to be admitted by the demurrer. It is true that the plea further alleges, that on the day the note fell due, the defendant, Spann, tendered and offered to pay the said note in bank bills, as he had agreed to do, and that the same was refused to be received. But this fact is not admitted by the demurrer, which is special; because the bank notes alleged to have been tendered, do not accompany the plea in Court. This is assigned as a special cause of demurrer, and is fatal to the plea. (6 Duncan's Ab. 464-5.) Stephen on Pleading, 162. Chitty on Pleading.

This is also a mere plea of accord without satisfaction, and therefore bad. Smith's Leading Cases, 253-4. 6 Wend. 390. 19 Wend. 516. 23 Wend. 342.

It is clear, therefore, that this demurrer was properly sustained, upon each of these independent grounds. But there is a third equally clear, which only needs to be named to be perceived, viz.: the promise of Spann to pay this note, before he was absolutely liable on it, was a mere promise to pay the debt of another, and not being in writing was void, and therefore was no consideration in law, for the alleged promise of Baltzell to receive bank notes, in payment of the note, from the endorser.

Before I proceed to examine the other two questions involved in the assignment of errors, by the sufficiency of the demand of the maker and the proof of the notice to the endorser, I will attempt to show that Spann, by his agreement alleged in his plea, waived his right to require, demand and notice, as a condition precedent to his absolute liability to pay. The Court will see that the allegation of tender, being unaccompanied by the notes said to have been tendered, is not admitted by the demurrer, and is, therefore, not to be regarded as true, as the above recited authorities prove. The plea, then, simply amounts to the mutual admission, that, prior to the maturity of the note, Spann, the endorser, agreed to pay it himself, on the day it 304 should fall due, in the manner agreed upon by the parties, and that he failed to do so. Now, this fact is deemed sufficient to show, that it was the express agreement of both parties, that Baltzell should look to the endorser, Spann, and not to the maker, on the day the note should fall due. The agreement can have no other sensible meaning; for it would be absurd for Baltzell to expect payment on the day the note should fall due, from both maker and endorser. Therefore, the promise to receive from the endorser, was tantamount to a promise not to demand or receive from the maker. Spann cannot, in good sense, be presumed to have expected Baltzell to make demand of payment from the maker, in the face of this agreement to pay it himself in bank notes, on the very day when such demand must have been made upon the maker, in order to fix the liability of the endorser, agreement, which is believed to be this: If Spann, the endorser, will is the irresistible conclusion from his conduct. It does not lie in his mouth to allege, that he was only attempting to put Baltzell off his guard, and induce him to omit demand and notice. He shall not take such an advantage of his own fraud and deception. The parties are presumed to have been aware of the legal character of the agreement, which is believed to be this: If Spann, the endorser, will punctually pay the note out of his own means, when it falls due, he may do so in bank notes worth less than coin. For this concession on the part of Baltzell, Spann agrees to consider his liability no longer contingent, but absolute, and, consequently, to dispense with the necessity of demand of the maker, and notice of that fact to himself, according to law. The contract being void in law, so that Baltzell could not have sued upon it, of course could not amount to a consideration for setting aside the legal pre-existing contract. But Spann had a right to waive demand and notice, and he seems to have done so in the most express manner. Bayley on Bills, 301-2. Boyd vs. Cleveland, 4 Pick. Rep. 525. Leffingwell vs. White, 1 Johns. Cas. 99. (Merton vs. Lewis, 2 Con. Rep. 478.) Taunton Bank vs. Richardson, 5 Pick. 436. Leonard vs. Gray, 10 Wend. R. 504.

The case at bar is a promise to pay by the endorser, in consideration of being permitted to pay in depreciated bank notes. The case in 2 Con. Rep. 497, was a promise by the endorser the day before the note fell due, in consideration of time given him. The case in 4 Pick. 525, was a promise without any consideration at all. The endorser informed the holder, that he would be in New York, where 305 the note was payable when it fell due, and would take it up. This case is similar to the one at bar in this, that the holder, notwithstanding this promise, attempted to make the demand and give the notice, and the Court held that such attempt, though abortive, did not affect the question. In the case in 1 Johns. Cas. 99, the endorser was negotiating with the holder of the note for terms of payment, by giving a new note, and the agreement had not been completed when the note fell due, and no demand and notice was made or given. The case in 5th Pick. 436, was this: the endorsers procured the discount of the note at a bank, and promised to attend to the renewals, and also directed the bank to send notice to their care to the maker. In the case in 10 Wend. 504, the endorser, before the note fell due, informed the holder, that he would see him paid, and directed him to give himself no uneasiness about it. This promise also, was wholly without consideration. In all these cases, demand and notice was held to be waived by the endorser. To enumerate more authorities to this point would seem to amount to little else than an "affectation of adroitness in case hunting."

2. But if the Court shall, on any account, choose to enquire into the questions raised, or attempted to be raised by the second and third assignment of errors, it is believed that the case is still clearly with the defendant in error. It is contended, that the demand was not made at the proper time of day; that it was made during the business hours of the bank, as proven by the notary, is said not to be sufficient, because it is said that Robbins proves that the usages of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, at which the note was made payable, was, not to consider notes due until four o'clock. To this objection we make three answers, either of which is deemed sufficient. The first is, that the demand being made within the business hours was sufficient, as shown by the numerous authorities heretofore cited in this cause. The three cases cited on the other side, to sustain this objection, deserve but little consideration.— The two cases from Mas. Reps. are mere dicta; the question not at all arising in either case. In one, the holder of a note, payable at a bank, sued out an attachment against the goods and chattles of the maker, a little after twelve o'clock, and the Court decided that the action was prematurely brought. In the other, the bank was the holder, and made demand and gave notice before the beginning of 306
the business hours, contrary to the uniform custom. This, the Court held to be unfair and insufficient. The case from Mississippi relies upon those from Massachusetts, above named, and declares them decisive of the question. This is sufficient to prove, that the decision was carelessly made, and unsupported by authority. This, surely, ought not to be regarded as sufficient to overturn the long and well settled doctrine on this subject.

But there are still two other answers to this objection. The first is, that it is not sufficiently proven that it was the custom of this bank not to demand payment of notes until four o'clock. Robbins, the former Cashier, does indeed say so in his testimony; but Ellis, the Notary, says, the custom was different, namely: to make demand between noon and dark. Admitting each of these witnesses to be equally credible, for the sake of argument, it amounts to no proof of any particular usage or custom on the subject; consequently, the demand being made at the place named in the note, any time during the day on which it fell due, was sufficient.

There is still another answer to this objection, flowing from the proof of the cause. Robbins swears, that the bank had ceased to exist long before the note fell due. The custom or usage of that bank, therefore, whatever it was, ceased to exist also. If it be said, that, by the contract the parties agreed to make the demand according to the custom of the bank, that agreement, to be sensible, must be presumed to have been coupled with the proviso, that the custom and the bank should continue to exist until the maturity of the note. There has been no authority shown, and perhaps cannot be, declaring that the law of the land shall be superceded by an extinct, or abolished usage or custom.

3. The third, and last question raised by the assignment of errors is, as to the sufficiency of the proof of notice to the endorser, of the demand made upon the maker. The proof is said to be defective.

Upon an examination of the record, it will appear that this question is not properly before the Court. It is attempted to base this objection upon the sixth and last instruction asked by plaintiff in error of the Court below and refused, viz.: "that, upon the evidence in the case, the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict," &c. It does not appear that this objection was made in the Court below; and that is 307 a sufficient reason to exclude it here, according to the rule of practice in this respect. This is nothing more than an irregular and informal attempt to demur to the evidence, and therefore ought not to be sanctioned or encouraged by this Court. If the opinion of the Court upon the sufficiency of evidence to prove a given fact, be desired, it can only be directly elicited by demurring to the evidence, and dispensing with a jury. But where the jury is retained, they are to judge of the effect and sufficiency of the evidence, and not the Court. Why have juries at all, if they are merely to record the opinions of the Court upon matters of fact? The instruction was improper, and ought to have been refused.

But whether this question of fact were decided by the Court or Jury, the decision will not be disturbed by this Court, unless there appears to have been a great preponderance of evidence against such finding. Instead of this, it is contended that no fact could have been better proven. In the first place, the certificate of the Notary, proven to be genuine, offered and admitted in evidence without objection, proves notice generally and particularly. It is now too late to object to the competency of this evidence. This is the broad and obvious distinction between this case and that of Morrison and Whitaker, decided by this Court at its last Term, so much relied upon on the other side.

HAWKINS, Justice:

Error from Franklin Superior Court. Action was brought in the Court below, by Baltzell against Spann, under an attachment for $1400, and the declaration was in assumpsit, on the following promissory note against Spann, as endorser:—

APALACHICOLA, Dec'r. 3d, 1840.

By the 22d of May, 1842, I promise to pay to the order of L. M. Stone, at the Agency of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company Bank, Apalachicola, fourteen hundred dollars, for value received. JAMES H. CAMPBELL.

Endorsed—L. M. STONE,
JOSIAH S. PATTERSON,
S. SCARBOROUGH,
RICH'D C. SPANN.

Baltzell sued as the immediate endorsee of Spann. The declaration avers, that at the time the note became due and payable, accord-
308 ing to its tenor and effect, it was duly presented for payment at the Agency of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company at Apalachicola, but that payment was refused; of all which the defendant had due notice.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded, first, that the plaintiff ought not to maintain his action to recover any more, or any other kind of money, or a verdict for damages against him, than the sum of fourteen hundred dollars in bank notes, or bills of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, because that after the making of the note sued on, and before the commencement of this action, to wit, on the 3d day of March, 1842, Baltzell, in consideration that Spann promised to pay the note sued on at maturity, punctually and without fail, out of his own funds, promised and agreed to and with said Spann, to receive payment of the said note in the bills or notes of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company. The plea further avers, that on the day the note became payable, Spann offered and tendered to pay Baltzell the sum of fourteen hundred dollars, in the said Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company bills, but that Baltzell refused to receive the same; that he had always been ready, and still was ready to pay in such bills.

The second plea is substantially the same as the first, as well as the third, each setting forth a fender, with uncore prist and tout temps prist.

Besides these pleas the general issue is pleaded.

To the special pleas there was a special demurrer on the following grounds: that the plea was not one of tender, but of accord, but of accord without satisfaction; that it aims to discharge a note by payment of bills of a bank known to be insolvent, and worth only sixty cents in the dollar at the time of tender; that the proffer of payment, if good as tender, was good without the agreement set forth, and if good as a tender, the bills should have been filed in Court; that the tender should have been made in money, brought into Court and filed with his plea; that the agreement, as stated by defendant, was wholly without consideration moving from defendant to plaintiff. The demurrers to the special pleas were sustained by the Court, and the pleas overruled and the case sent to the jury on the general issue and joinder, and verdict found for plaintiff.

By an inspection of the bill of exceptions in the case, it appears that, after the note sued on was read in evidence, M. P. Ellis was 309 called by the plaintiff, who testified that he presented said note in the manner and at the time stated in the following protest:

TERRITORY OF FLORIDA, Franklin County.

By this public instrument of protest be it known, that on the 25th day of May, 1842, at the request of Geo. F. Baltzell, the holder of the original note, of which a true copy is hereon endorsed, I, Marshal P. Ellis, a Notary Public, residing in the city of Apalachicola, qualified according to law, went to the office of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, and presenting said note demanded payment thereof from the Cashier, who refused to pay the sum—that no funds were deposited for that purpose. Whereupon I, the said Notary, at the request aforesaid, do hereby solemnly and publicly protest the said note, as well against the drawer or maker thereof, as against the endorsers, and all persons who are, or may be concerned therein, for all exchange, re-changes, damages, costs, charges, and interest suffered, or to be suffered for the non-payment of said note. This solemnly done and protested.

Given under my hand and seal at Apalachicola, the day and year first above written.

M. P. ELLIS, Notary Public.

I certify that on the 25th of May, 1842, due notice of the foregoing protest was given to the maker and endorsers of said note, by depositing the notice in the Post Office at Apalachicola, addressed as follows: L. M. Stone, St. Joseph—Josiah S. Patterson, Fort Gaines—S. Scarboroufh, Fort Gaines—R. C. Spann, Franklin, Alaba.,—such being the reputed places of their respective residences.

M. P. ELLIS, Notary Public.

(Endorsed)—COPY.

APALA., Dec'r 3d, 1840.

By the 22d day of May, 1842, I promise to pay to the order of L. M. Stone, at the Agency of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company Bank, at Apalachicola, fourteen hundred dollars, for value received. JAMES H. CAMPBELL.

Endorsed—L. M. STONE,
JOSIAH S. PATTERSON,
S. SCARBOROUGH,
RICH'D C. SPANN.

The contents of which protest he testified to as being true,—and 310 said witness further said, that he sent notice of non-payment of said note to said defendant and his co-endorsers, as stated in the certificate attached to said protest. Cross examined. Witness said he had no recollection of any of the facts stated in said protest, independent of the same. He swears to the presentment for payment, notice to endorsers, refusal to pay, &c., because he presumes the acts stated must have occurred, else he would not have certified to their occurrence as a Notary. He recollects no facts beyond the protest. Did not recollect at what hour he made the presentment and demand stated to have been made. It was his custom to present notes at the bank, when they were payable at a bank, between noon and sundown—seldom presented any such before noon—has no recollection of having presented said note more than once. His usual habit, in case of a refusal to pay a note, the payment of which he demanded at the bank, was, to leave the bank immediately on such refusal.—Had the said note in his possession from the time it was handed him to make demand of payment in the beginning of the day, until he protested it; which he usually did about dark. The notice which he gave to the endorsers, was in the form required by law. Sent the notices by mail, deposited in the Post Office on same day that demand and refusal took place, as stated in said protest.

For the defence, Nathaniel C. Robbins was sworn, who testified as follows, to wit: He was Agent, or assistant Cashier of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, at Apalachicola, at which agency said note was payable by the terms thereof; was such agent up to the time at which said bank removed said agency from the city of Apalachicola. The bank did remove said agency, and his said office of agent ceased on the first of May, 1842. After said agency so ceased to exist, witness still continued to occupy the same office room which he occupied whilst said agency existed, up to the 1st June, 1842. He was in his said office off and on through the day; presumes the office was locked when he was out; kept no particular office hours; did not consider his said room an office; generally closed it in the evening at sun-set; has no knowledge of the said note; (before set out)—has no recollection of having had it in his hands on the 25th day of May, or on any other day. When the said agency was in operation and existence, the doors were generally opened af-

311 ter breakfast, and continued so until sundown, and sometimes until 9 or 10 o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of business. Notes not paid on or before 4 o'clock, were considered over due and were protested. 4 o'clock was the hour at which notes payable at said agency, was considered due. Such was the usage of said bank agency. Would not have refused the money on a note after 4 o'clock, under ordinary circumstances, if the maker had called and offered to pay it. Does not recollect that any such occurrence ever took place; but supposes it has frequently so happened. Was in Apalachicola and in said office, off and on, until the last of May. Was assistant Cashier, or Agent of the bank at this place.

The defendant asked the Court to instruct the Jury as follows:

1st. That if they find from the evidence that notes payable at the Agency of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, at Apalachicola, were, by the usage and custom established by said agency of said bank, required to be paid on or before 4 o'clock of the last day of grace, or within any fixed hour, they must be satisfied that the note sued on was presented at said agency, on or before 4 o'clock of the 25th day of May, 1842, (that being the last day of grace allowed by law on said note,) or within the hours so proven to be fixed by said custom, within which notes were required to be paid as aforesaid.

2d. That Campbell, the maker of the said note, had the whole of the banking hours of said bank agency within which notes were by said custom to be paid, to pay said note sued on; and the plaintiff must show that he had the said note at its said place of payment in said note specified, during the whole of said hours on said last day of grace, in the hands of himself or some other person for him, ready to receive payment of, and to deliver up the same.

3d. That the demand made by Ellis, the Notary, was not in law a sufficient compliance with the rule of law governing notes payable at a particular place, and was not such a legal demand of payment of the note sued on as to entitle the plaintiff to recover in this action against the defendant.

4th. That the facts adduced in evidence on the trial of this cause, do not establish such a legal demand of payment of the note sued on, as to entitle the plaintiff to recover of said defendant in this suit.

5th. That the presentment and demand of payment of said note sued on by the plaintiff, or any one for him, made before the hour at 12 which, by the usage and custom of said agency of said bank as proven, notes payable thereat were considered due and payable, and after which said notes were considered protestable, is not in law a proper demand to charge the defendant in this suit as the endorser of said note sued on, and to entitle the said plaintiff to recover in this suit.

6th. That upon the evidence the said plaintiff is not entitled to recover of said defendant in this suit.

To give which instructions the Court refused, and for which refusal the defendant excepted.

The Court then charged the Jury:

1st. The Jury must be satisfied from the evidence, that the note sued on was presented by the said plaintiff or his agent, at said agency of said bank, on the day it fell due, at some time during the banking hours of the bank.

2d. If the Notary attended with the note at any hour at which the officers of the Bank were present for the purpose of receiving and paying money, and within the usual hours of doing business, and presented said note and demanded payment thereof, it is sufficient demand to entitle the plaintiff to recover.

3d. When other person than the bank is the holder of the note, it is usual for the maker of the note to deposit the money in the bank to pay a note payable at such bank, and a demand of payment of such note so held, made at any hour within the business hours of such bank, is a sufficient demand.

4th. If a bank, at which a note is so payable, and which note is so holden by another person than such bank, has quit doing business, and a demand is made at the former place of business of said bank of the former Cashier thereof, and who has ceased to be such Cashier, such demand is sufficient in law to entitle the holder of such note to recover of the endorser thereof, and to render the endorser liable thereon.

To which instructions the defendant excepted:

The errors assigned by plaintiff in error, are:

1st. That the Court below erred in giving judgment, sustaining the demurrer of Baltzell to the plea of Spann.

2d. That the Court erred in refusing to instruct the Jury in the manner asked for by the counsel for the plaintiff in error, as appears by the bill of exceptions.

Spann vs. Baltzell.

3d. The Court erred in giving to the Jury the instructions in the 313 bill of exceptions set forth.

Without regard to the order of the errors assigned, we will endeavor, in a general discussion, to meet and dispose of all the points embraced in the assignment of errors, or which otherwise are incident to the case.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error, that the agreement, pleaded and set forth in his pleas, was binding on the parties thereto, being in the nature of an agreement substituted. In the preliminary stage of the discussion, it may be necessary to define the relative positions of Spann and Baltzell, the parties to the suit. Baltzell is the endorsee and holder of the note sued on, and Spann his immediate endorser, liable by his endorsement to all the stipulations and responsibilities of an endorser in blank. The endorsement of a note is not a collateral undertaking for the debt of another, within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, but is a new contract between the endorser and endorsee. 1 Hall Rep. 336. 1 Bailey on Bills, 149. Ib. 411. The contract of each endorser therefore, being an independent one, there can be no doubt but that he stands on the same footing as any other contractor, and possesses the same rights and powers as to any alteration, revision, or waiver of his contract of endorsement, by and with the consent of the endorsee. In this case the original contract is sought to be waived by parol agreement between the parties. As a general rule, no verbal agreement between the parties to a written contract, made before or at the time of the execution of such contract, is admissible to vary its terms or to affect its construction. All such verbal agreements are considered as waived by, and merged in the written contract. 3 Met. 489. Chitty on Contracts, 99—102. But, in this case, there is an oral agreement set up subsequent to, and before a breach of the original contract.

Lord Denman, in Goss vs. Lord Nugent, 5 Barn. & Adol. 65, lays down the rule thus: "After the agreement is reduced to writing, it is competent to the parties, at any time before breach of it, by a new contract, not in writing, either altogether to waive, dissolve, or annul the former agreement, or in any manner to add to, subtract from, or vary or qualify the terms of it, by a new contract not in writing, which is to be proved partly by the written agreement, and partly by the subsequent verbal terms engrafted upon what will be thus left of the 314 written agreement." So, in Chitty on Contracts, 112, 5 Am. ed., we find, "that, in general, where an obligation is created merely by simple contract, it may, whether reduced to writing or not, be entirely dissolved by subsequent oral agreement." 13 Pick. 446. 9 Cowen, 115. 3 Starkie, 1047. Buller Ni. Pri. 152. 1 John. Cases, 22. 6 B. & C. 587.

In these cases of substituted agreement, the plaintiff can always declare on the written contract; and unless defendant can prove performance according to the terms of the contract, or according to the agreement for a substituted performance, the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment. 3 Metcalf, 492. Cuff vs. Penn, 1 M. & S. 21 9 Cowen, 115.

These oral agreements being considered in the light of new contracts, it is requisite that they be based upon proper consideration, and the authorities shew that they must be made upon some new and valuable consideration, proceeding from the defendant to the plaintiff.

The question now arises, do the pleas in this case shew a case of substituted agreement upon good consideration, and are the pleas so framed in accordance with the artificial rules of pleading, as should have rendered them available to the defendant in the Court below? We are of opinion, that a case of substituted agreement, an agreement varied by the act of the parties upon sufficient consideration, has been made out; but that with the pleas of tender of the bills of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, there should have been a profert in curia. There having been none, the whole of the pleas are bad.

We will examine these propositions in order; and first, as to the new agreement:

Baltzell and Spann agree as follows: that in consideration that Spann promised to pay said note, the subject of the present action, at maturity, punctually and without fail, and out of his own funds, Baltzell agreed to receive payment of the said note in the bank notes or bills of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company. Here, certainly, is a substituted agreement; but to render it valid there must be a new and good consideration. Spann had previously undertaken, in his character of endorser, that, if the note was not paid by Campbell at maturity, upon due demand having been made on 315 Campbell, and upon due and reasonable notice given of such non-payment to himself, that he, Spann, would pay the same to the endorsee or other holder. The promise by Spann to pay at all events, certainly changes a liability contingent and conditional, into one absolute and certain. In fact, from being an endorser he becomes, as it were, the maker of the note. This would certainly seem to amount to a new consideration in itself; and besides, such a promise would, at law, amount to a waiver of demand and notice, and although this waiver of demand and notice is not set out in totidem verbis, yet it follows as a consequence and result of the contract, and, therefore, cannot be disregarded by the Court. There is always a certain degree of labor, trouble, and frequently, expense, in making these demands for payment, and giving the requisite notice, in case of a refusal to pay; and the law books afford the best test of the truth of the assertion, that in all these matters there is frequently uncertainty, and that mistakes are constantly occurring as to the requirements of law, in making demand and giving notice, proving in many instances fetal to the rights of parties. Although a Court may feel itself bound to notice judicially the insolvency of a banking institution, as, for instance, that of the Life Insurance and Trust Company, yet it cannot be presumed to know the precise value of the bills and liabilities of a bank after its insolvency; for, in such an event, the value of its bills and notes must, necessarily, be fluctuating and uncertain. The Court cannot know whether the notes or bills of the Life Insurance and Trust Company were worth ninety cents, or sixty cents, as alleged and admitted by plaintiff, and it can only ask, whether they were of any value, or entirely worthless?

It is urged that the agreement by Baltzell to receive less than the original amount contracted for, is nudum pactum; the payment having been agreed to be received in the bills of the Life Insurance and Trust Company. The citation from Chitty on Contracts, by the counsel for the defendant in error, does not seem to sustain the point contended for. It is to this effect: "that a promise by a creditor to accept less than the full amount of his demand, or to give time for his existing debt, is void; unless there be some new consideration as an additional or different security, or a payment varying from that agreed upon, in respect to its being effected in a manner or at a time more beneficial to the creditor, or unless an uncertain claim be reduced to a 316 certainty. Chitty on Con. 52. This law probably refers to debts due; but if not, we think it cannot vary the view we have taken of the subject, but goes to sustain it.

The certainty of the debt's being paid at the day it was to become due, may have been deemed by Baltzell a sufficient consideration for agreeing to receive the Life Insurance and Trust bills or notes, and the waiver of demand and notice was certainly advantageous to Baltzell; and if so in the slightest degree, provided it was a benefit greater than that before enjoyed, the consideration would be sufficient to sustain the oral engagement. Fetch vs. Sutton, 5 East. 231. In this case there was an acceptance of £17 for £50, and after the debt was due. Lord Ellenborough said, there must be some consideration for the relinquishment of the residue; something collateral, to shew a possibility of benefit to the party relinquishing his further claim, otherwise nudum pactum. In 6 Cranch, 253, it is laid down, if a creditor offers additional security for less sum than due, consideration is good.

So we find in 3 Campbell, 57—a parol agreement by a creditor to accept part payment of a sum, in satisfaction of the whole debt, will not be binding upon him for want of consideration, although he actually receive such part payment, and give a receipt for the whole debt. But if such part payment be made in a manner more advantageous to the creditor, than that agreed upon previously, as if it be made before the day upon which full payment is due, it operates as a new consideration, and rendered such agreement binding, although it be parol,—citing 2 B. & C. 477. 3 D. & R. 649.

The mere fact, that the consideration was, in this case, inadequate, does not render the contract nudum pactum, for it is not essential that the consideration should be adequate in point of value, for the law cannot decide upon this matter; and in the words of Chitty, "it will not interfere with the facility of contracting, and the free exercise of the will and judgment of the parties, by not allowing them to be sole judges of the benefits to be derived from their bargains; provided, there be no incompetency to contract, and the agreement violate no rule of law." Chitty on Con. 31. 5 Am. ed. So, even equity will not interfere, unless the inadequacy be so great as to shock the moral sense.

As the law will not stop to scrutinize the amount of benefits conferred upon one party, so neither will it scan the extent of trouble, 317 loss or obligation the other party has subjected himself so; and, "it is immaterial," says Mr. Chitty, "that the detriment or charge thus assumed, is, in fact, of the most trifling description; provided, it be not utterly worthless in fact and in law." Ib. 32. Spann, no doubt, was at some trouble in the procuring of the Life Insurance and Trust notes. He may have sustained loss in the re-sale, on Baltzell's refusing to accept them; and the presumption is, that he paid value for them, whatever that value may have been. If Spann's engagement had been simply to do that, which by law he was compelled to do, the agreement would have been nudum pactum; but he agrees to pay before the time he would have been compelled by law to pay; and this, we have seen, creates a new and valuable consideration, and, as such, renders the contract binding and efficacious.

The next question, as to the tender being well pleaded, will be discussed:

In 5th Bacon's Ab. tit. Tender, H. 4, it is laid down as a general rule, if a debt or duty be not discharged by a tender and refusal, the tender must be pleaded with a profert in curia; for, as the debt or duty continues, it is not enough for the party who pleads the tender, to plead a tender and refusal with uncore prist, or with tout temp prist as the case may require; but he must also bring the money, or other thing which has been tendered, into Court, that the party may, if he please, accept it.

If the thing, which has been tendered, be so heavy that it can not be conveniently brought into Court, it is not necessary to plead a tender with a profert. 2 Rolle. Ab. 524. So in Carley vs. Vance, 17 Mass. R. 392, we find the general rule laid down, that if the debt or duty be not discharged by tender and refusal, the tender must be pleaded with a profert in curia. It is not contended that the debt in this case was discharged by tender and refusal, for the plea is in bar of damages ultra. By the terms of the contract the bills of the Life & Trust Bank are to be substituted for money, and to be considered as cash, and by this waiver of gold and silver, when the bills were tendered, the allegation of tender is clearly supported, and if there had been a profert in curia, the Court would have so decided in compliance with the decision in the case of Warner vs. Mains, 7 John. Rep. 476. In this case there was a covenant to pay three hundred dollars on a certain day, on which the payee covenanted to convey a 318 farm, but before the day it was agreed that the three hundred dollars should be paid and received in bank bills, which were duly tendered at that day. "It was held by the Court that it wa scompetent to the plaintiff to shew that, before the day of payment, the defendant had agreed to accept bank bills as cash, and had dispensed with the necessity of a tender in gold or silver. The tender of bank bills was consequently good at the day, by reason of the previous waiver."—This very case is cited by the plaintiff in error to shew that the tender by the agreement of parties was a legal tender, but to have availed him, the profert in curia was indispensable in his plea. We beg leave to cite a case we find in the reoprts of Massachusetts, which seems strongly in point as to the necessity of bringing the money into Court. This was an action of assumpsit, and the declaration contained five several counts. To the four first, defendant pleaded non assumpsit, on which issue was joined. In the fifth count the plaintiff alleged a promise to pay seventy dollars in bank notes of the New Hampshire Banks, except the Coos Bank. To this count the defendant pleaded a tender in bar of damages with tout temps prist, and a profert of the bank notes into Court for plaintiff. To this plea, the plaintiff replied non obtulit, on which issue was also joined. Both the issues thus joined having been found for the defendant, the plaintiff called for the bank notes, of which the defendant had made a profert, but it appeared they had never been brought into Court. A motion subsequently was made by plaintiff for judgment non obstante veredicto.

The counsel for the defendant (as in this case) alleged that nothing but money could be brought into Court upon a plea of tender. It was decided by the Court that "judgment be entered for plaintiff in the fifth count, to which the plea of tender was made."

The payment in Life & Trust Bank bills bears no analogy to that of a payment in specific articles. The bills or notes of banks are generally treated as money in the various commercial or business transactions, and are a good tender if not objected to; and how can a promise to pay or deliver a sum of money in bank bills be considered a contract to deliver specific articles, when they are so little capable of being distinguished or identified? Besides, if they are to be considered as specific articles, a tender of them at the day and place would have been a satisfaction of the contract, and upon refusal of them by Baltzell the property in them would have been transferred to him. The relation of the parties would have been changed to that of bailor and bailee, trustee and cestui qui trust, and Baltzell would have been obliged to have resorted to the specific articles (bank bills,) and the person who tendered them as the bailee thereof for redress. It is needless to remark how remediless a creditor in such a case would be, and we only pursue the argument (perhaps ad absurdum) for the purpose of showing the consequences of considering bank bills in this case as specific articles.

With these views, we think the tender should have been pleaded with a profert in curia.

The point which next presents itself is raised by the defendant in error, that the agreement between Spann and Baltzell was void by the statute of frauds of this State. Duval 206.

The statute of frauds cannot aply to this new agreement of Baltzell and Spann. It is not a collateral undertaking of Spann's, but an absolute promise. Spann had for his object a benefit which he did not before enjoy, and this benefit accruing immediately to himself, this is, in the payment of the note by a less sum than was originally to be paid by him, in case of default of the maker. If Spann's object had been to procure a release of the property of Campbell, or benefit to Campbell, exclusive of any selfish consideration, and he had not been a party to the original contract, the contract would be clearly within the statute. So we see in Roberts on frauds, 232, the statute does not apply, if the consideration "spring out of any new transaction, or move to the party promising upon some fresh and substantive ground of personal concern to himself." So, "where the original transaction is altered, and a new consideration, moving from the plaintiff to defendant, takes place, a promise made by the defendan to the plaintiff will not be within the statute." 2 Saund. Pl. and Ev. 527, citing 2 East. 332, 2 Burr 1886, 3 Esp. 87, 4 Taun. 117.

The English doctrine, as declared in 1 Salkeld 27, would seem to be this: a promise to answer for debt, default, or miscarriage of another for which that remains liable, must be in writing to satisfy the statute of frauds; contra when the other does not remain liable. 1 Smith's leading cases, 134.

320 Under this rule, the statute of frauds cannot apply, for Spann, by virtue of the new agreement, assumes the absolute payment of the debt, whereby Campbell, the maker of the note, is entirely discharged; and the agreement further shews conclusively that Baltzell looked to Spann, and not to Campbell, for payment of the note.

In Massachusetts it has been held, that the promise of a party to pay a debt, on which he once has been personally liable, cannot be treated as within the statutes, although at the time of making the promise his responsibility had ceased. Hopkins vs. Liswell, 12 Mass 52.

The New York decisions differ from that cited from Salkeld, and go to the extent, that even if Campbell remained liable after this new agreement, still it would not come withint the statute of frauds, for they declare that an oral agreement to pay a debt previously subsisting, upon a new and different consideration, is not within the statute, even when the original debt remains. 5 Wendell 235. 10 Wendell 461. 4 Cowen 439.

It will not be necessary to say aught in relation to the argument of counsel for plaintiff in error, as to the question of the pleas being pleaded by way of accord, without satisfaction, it having already been decided they were good as shewing an agreement substituted.

Having disposed of these questions, the only ones remaining relate to the sufficiency and regularity of the demand and notice. It is contended that the promise of Spann to pay at all events rendered demand and notice unnecessary; but admitting this, if the substituted agreement had been enforced, we cannot permit the defendant in error to avail himself of portions of that agreement, so far as they enure to his benefit, and reject those which tend to his disadvantage. If taken at all, they must be taken altogether, and not detached parts of it. Besides Spann promised to pay only in Life & Trust bills.—Equity and law forbid any other decision.

We think that the facts as set forth in the protest by Ellis, the Notary, and the protest itself, were admissible as evidence to prove demand in accordance with the allegation in the declaration. As this opinion may at the first blush appear to conflict with some of the rules of evidence, it may be apposite to the present case to give somewhat at length the reasons which have guided and conducted us to our conclusions.

It has been repeatedly decided in England that the books of a No- 321
tary, after his death, were admissible in evidence to prove the dishonor of bills left with the Notary for presentment and demand. In Poole vs. Decas, 1 Bingham, N. C. 649, this point was decided by Chief Justice Tindal, who said: "We think it admissible, on the ground that it was an entry made at the time of the transaction, and made in the usual course and routine of business, by a person who had no interest to mis-state what had occurred."

This rule of evidence has reecived the sanction of the American authorities. Welsh vs. Barret, 15 Mass. 380. Merrell et al. vs. The Ithaca & Oswego R. R. Co. 16 Wendell, 587. 2 Hill N. Y. R. 537. In Nicholas vs. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, there was an entry in the book of deceased Notary to this effect: "Endorser duly notified in writing 19 July, 1819, the last day of grace being Sunday the 18th." Judge Story, in commenting upon the evidence, says, that being a promissory note, in which the action of a Notary was not necessary, the protest itself was not evidence in chief of the fact of demand; but from the usage of employing Notaries it may be inferred that "the protesting of notes, if not strictly the duty of the Notary, was in conformity to the general practice, and was an employment in which he was usually engaged." He goes on further to say: "We think it a safe principle, that memorandums made by a person in the ordinary course of his business, of acts or matters, which his duty in such business requires him to do for others, in case of his death, are admissable evidence of the acts and matters so done. A fortiori, we think the acts of a public officer, like a Notary Public, admissible, although they may not be strictly official, if they are according to the customary business of his office, and is clothed with public authority and confidence."

The Courts in this country would seem to have established another principle, or rather an extension of the principle, as before set forth in relation to the admissibility, as evidence, of the entries made in the register of the deceased Notary, and it is this: that, when these entries have been made in the usual mode of business, and are duly authenticated by the oath of the party who made them, they are admissible in evidence, though the party making them can remember and testify nothing as to the facts contained in said entries. The paper must be an original one made at the time the facts contained in it are alleged to have taken place, and confirmed by the oath of 322 the witness that he believes it contains a true statement of the facts. The true criterion appears to be this, as to the admissibility of the entries: whether after the death of the maker of them, they would be admissible; and, if so, when verified by oath of the party who made them they are likewise admissible. Farmers & Mechanics Bank vs. Beraf, 152. 20 Wendell, 72.

The case at bar comes up fully to the foregoing principles. The protest appears to be an original paper, and drawn up at the time of the demand of payment, and Ellis, the Notary, swears that the contents of said protest were true. Upon his cross-examination, however, he said he had no recollection of any of the facts stated in it, independent of the same. He swears to the presentment for payment, notice, to endorsers, &c., because he presumes the facts must have occurred, else he would not have certified to their occurrence as a Notary. He recollects no facts beyond the protest.

Evidence very similar to this was admitted in the case of Bullard vs. Wilson. 5 Martin N. S. 196. To prove notice, the Court held "the parish Judge's memorandums of his having given notice of the protest to the defendant, was on the back of the protest, and he deposed that he had no recollection of giving it, but he had no doubt of his having given it, as he never made such a memorandum without having given the notice." The entry having been made according to the course of the business of the witness, was admitted by the Court.

It is contended by the counsel for plaintiff in error that this case falls within the rule laid down by this Court, as to the evidence of notice to be given endorsers in the case of Whitaker vs. Morrison. But that case and the one at bar differ in this: the paper exhibited at the trial of the case of Morrison vs. Whitaker was a copy, and not an original instrument, and that it was the habit of the witness to make a memorandum of the notice of protest on the protest kept by him, and that, that one was lost, and the whole amount of the evidence of the Notary, on that case, was based simply upon his habit of doing business.

There has been a recent decision in the State of New York, which establishes fully and clearly the doctrine as before stated. It is found in the case of the Bank of Munroe vs. Calvin, 2 Hills R. 532. Ac-

323 tion of assumption a note, the defence was usury, to rebut which the plaintiff offered the Cashier to prove how the note came to the Bank was paid; the offer was to prove, "from the memorandum and entries, in the hand-writing of the witness made at the time of the transaction to which they refer, occurred, and while he was Cashier and had charge of the books and correspondence of the Bank, which momoranda and entries the witness would swear he believed were truly and correctly made, although independent of such memoranda and entries, the witness had no recollection of the facts; and ever. after having his memory refreshed by their examination, he could not testify to the facts independent of the entries and memoranda."—The Supreme Court, per Bronson, Judge, after observing that the entries and memoranda were made in the usual course of business, and were verified in the most ample manner, by the witness who made, and whose duty it was to make them, said: "The question is whether memoranda and entries thus verified should be allowed to speak for themselves? I think they should." See, also, 2 Wendell, 72—1 Smith's leading cases, 228, where the foregoing cases are collected, and the whole question is presented with great clearness and ability by the American editor.

The next question for the consideration of the Court is, Whether the notice given to Spann was efficient? Ellis testifies, that he sent notice of non-payment to the defendant Spann, as stated in the certificate endorsed upon the protest of the note. The certificate states, that due notice of the protest was given to the endorser, Spann, by depositing the notice in the Post Office, at Apalachicola, addressed to R. C. Spann, Franklin, Alabama, the reputed place of his abode.

The protest sets forth the demand of the note and refusal to pay, so that by the ordinary intendment of words, it seems to the Court, the evidence of Ellis goes to shew, that his notice contained the substance and facts of the protest, viz.: description of the note, a statement of the demand and refusal to pay; or, in other words, that the note was dishonored. The term, "due notice", used by the Notary, does not amount to evidence, that proper notice was given. To say so, would be to make the Notary the judge of what is legal notice to fix the endorser. He must state facts; and the conclusion of law from these facts, is a question of law for the Court, and not for the Notary. 1 Harrington. 10—Bank of Wilmington & Brandywine vs. Cooper's 324 Adm'rs. We think, however, that the facts as stated in Ellis' testimony, are sufficient to enable the Court to declare, that the notice contained sufficient averments to constitute legal notice.

There is no particular form of notice of dishonor of the note necessary. Mr. Story, in his work on Promissory Notes, lays it down, that it should contain, in substance, the following requisites: a description of the note, sufficient to ascertain its identity; the presentment for payment and refusal to pay; and that the holder of the note looks to the person to whom the notice is given, for reimbursement and indemnity. Story on Promissory Notes, s. 348. In section 354, of the same work, however, Judge Story remarks, that, by the rule adopted in the American Courts, "it is sufficient to state in the notice that the note has not been paid, and, either expressly or by implication, that the holder looks to the endorser for reimbursment or indemnity." In the case of the Bank of United States vs. Carneal, 2 Pet. R. 543—553, the Court said: "A suggestion has been made at bar, that a letter to the endorser, stating the demand and dishonor of the note, is not sufficient, unless the party sending it also informs the endorser, that he is looked to for payment. But when such notice is sent by the holder, or by his order, it necessarily implies such responsibility over. For what purpose could it be sent? We know of no rule that requires any formal declaration to be made to this effect. It is sufficient, if it may be reasonably inferred from the nature of the notice."

It seems that the notice would be good, if it be sufficient to put the party on enquiry, and prepare him to pay it, or to defend himself. Even if there be some uncertainty in the description of the bill or note, if it does not tend to mislead the party, it will be good. 7 Alabama Rep. 212—citing 2 John. Cases, 337—11 Wheat. 431—16 East. 105—Chitty on Bills, 9 Am. Ed. 501. So it has been held, that it need not be stated at whose request the notice was given, or who was the owner of the note. 1 Pick. 401.

As to the demand necessary to be proved in this case, we think a sufficient one has been proved. At the day the note fell due, the Notary went to the place, where the note was payable, to wit, at the place previously occupied by the Agency of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company. Robbins, the late Agent or Cashier, testifies, that the agency had been removed from Apalachicola, some weeks previous to the day of the alleged presentment of the note. 325
The removal of the Agency rendered the demand, therefore, impossible at the agency. Proper diligence seemed to have been used, and we are satisfied that when demand was made at the place of payment of the note, and it was found that the agency had been removed, a sufficient demand had been made. Of course, if the agency had simply been removed to another house in Apalachicola, a presentment there would have been necessary; but the testimony was, that it had been removed altogether. It is like a case where a note is payable at a particular place, and a demand being made at the place appointed, it was found shut up or deserted. In such an event, it would amount to a refusal to pay, for the demand would be useless and inaudible. 3 Kent, 96. 16 East. 112. If the agency had been continued at Apalachicola there can be little doubt but that a demand should have been made, within the usual hours of business, of the agency, as the parties are supposed to have contracted with a view to the customs of the bank; but there certainly can be extant no rules or customs of the agency, when the agency itself has no existence.

If Robbins, the former agent, had remained at the place of the agency, with power from the bank to do business, that fact may have altered the case; but Robbins testifies, that he did not consider the room formerly occupied as the agency, as an office; that he was agent up to the time of the removal of the agency, when he ceased also to be agent. The fact of Robbins' being at the place, would have no greater effect than any other person's being there.

If the note had been made payable generally, and not at a particular place, and the maker had removed, in such case it would have been the duty of the holder to have made due and diligent search for him, and made presentment, if within the State; but the case at bar is different. If the note is payable at a particular place, the demand must be made there, because the place is made part and parcel of the contract; and if, as before stated, the place is found shut up and deserted, it amounts to a refusal to pay. Dickinson vs. Bon, 16 East. 110. 8 Bingham, 214. Bayley on Bills, 197—241. Story on Prom. Notes, s. 205—227. Chitty on Bills. 399, 397. 172, 173, 174.

A question may now arise, whether the allegation contained in the declaration, as to the presentment of the note, is sustained by the evidence—but it may be laid down as a general principle, that where facts or circumstances exist, which amount to an excuse, or do away 326 with the necessity of a demand, the declaration may be in the usual form, and proof of the facts which dispense with a formal demand, will, in law, be deemed proof of demand. As in the case at bar, no demand in compliance with the terms of the note could have been made on account of the removal of the agency, and this fact being in evidence, it is a sufficient excuse for the non-presentment, and the allegation of the declaration is sustained.

The American cases go to the extent that the averments of demand and notice, in the declaration on a bill or note, were sufficiently supported by evidence of any thing which render demand and notice unnecessary. Stewart vs. Eden, 2 Caine's Rep. 121. Norton vs. Lewis, 2 Conn. R. 478. Hosmer, J., said: "that this mode of declaring, relying on proof of an excuse for the omission to make demand or give notice, had too frequently been sustained to remain questionable."

So, when no demand has been made of the maker, on account of his absence in a foreign country, it was held by Van Ness, that an averment of presentment in the common form was sufficient. Cummings vs. Fisher, Anthon N. P. 5. See also City Bank vs. Cutter, 3 Pick. 414. 4 Campbell, 52. Hodge vs. Fillis, 3 Camp. 463. 7 Cowen, 523.

So also the fact, that the maker had absconded and could not be found, may be given in evidence, under the allegation that the note was presented and payment refused. Stewart vs. Eden, 2 Caine's R. 121. Williams vs. Matthews, 3 Cowen, 252. Taunton Bk. vs. Richardson, 5 Pick. 436.

So a promise to pay after notice, will be received as evidence of notice. Martin vs. Winslow, 2 Mason, 241. 12 Wheat 183. 9 Porter, 302. As to the forwarding notice of the demand and refusal to pay the note on presentment, Ellis testifies, that on the day of demand of payment and refusal to pay, to wit, on the 25th May, 1842, he deposited the notice in the Post Office at Apalachicola, directed to the defendant Spann, at Franklin, Alabama, the reputed place of his residence. It is necessary that the endorser of a note should be notified of its dishonor, by depositing the notice in the Post Office, when that is the proper medium of conveyance, and properly addressed to him, and his place of residence proved. By the words, "reputed res- 327 idence," we understand a residence as fixed by general reputation, established opinion, or common estimation, or a fact of general notoriety.

It would have been better, no doubt, for the Notary to have been in this portion of his testimony, more definite and explicit; but we think this allegation as to the residence of Spann, sufficiently certain. Witnesses frequently, from over caution, or perhaps from carelessness, needlessly qualify their testimony; and expletives, without any very definite meaning, are frequently introduced, which generally tend to produce embarrassment, and, oftentimes, serious results.

The judgment of the Court below is affirmed with costs.

DAVID G. RANEY vs. SAMUEL BARON, ADM'R OF ISAAC S. JACQUES.

A surety is bound to the extent of the terms of his obligation, and no further.

A surety on an appeal bond conditioned, "Now if the said A. shall pay said damages so recovered by said B. against him and costs, in case the judgment of the said Superior Court shall be confirmed by the said Court of Appeals, then this bond to be null and void," is only liable for the amount of the judgment in the Court below, and costs, and not for the ten per cent damages awarded by the Court of Appeals, against A., the party taking the appeal.

A plea of payment admits the representative character of plaintiff, suing as administrator, and dispenses with proof thereof.

ERROR to Franklin Circuit Court.

This case was tried at Spring Term, 1846, of Franklin Circuit Court, Judge Douglas presiding.

Debt on an appeal bond, of which following is copy:

TERRITORY OF FLORIDA, }
Franklin County. }

Know all men by these presents, that we, the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, and George Field and David G. Raney, are held and firmly bound unto Isaac S. Jacques in the sum of two thousand dollars, for the true payment whereof we bind ourselves, our and each of our heirs, executors and assigns, jointly and severally, firmly by these presents, sealed with our seals, and dated the seventeenth day of December, 1841.

328 The condition of the above obligation is such that, whereas the above bounden Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company is about to take an appeal from a judgment rendered against it at the Fall Term, 1841, of the Superior Court of Franklin county, in favor of Isaac S. Jacques, for the sum of nine hundred and ninety-two 52-100, to the Court of Appeals of said Territory: now, if the said Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, shall pay the said damages so recovered by the said Isaac S. Jacques against it, and costs, in case the judgment of said Superior Court shall be confirmed by the said Court of Appeals, then this bond to be null and void, else to remain in full force and virtue.

DAVID G. RANEY, (SEAL.)

Plea: Payment.

At the trial below, plaintiff gave in evidence the following certificate:—

The People of the State of New York, to all to whom these presents shall come, or may come, send GREETINGS

Know ye, that we, having inspected the records of our Surrogate's Court, in and for the county of New York, do find, that on the twenty-third day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, by David B. Ogden, Surrogate of said county, letters of administration of the goods, chattels, and credits, which were of Isaac S. Jacques, late of Woolbridge, in the State of New Jersey, grocer, deceased, were granted and committed unto Samuel Barron, of Woodbridge aforesaid, and that it does not appear by said records that said letters have been revoked.

In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of our said Surrogate to be hereunto affixed. Witness David B. Ogden, Surrogate of our said county, at the City of New York, the nine-[N. Y. Surrogate's Seal.] teenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, and of our independence the sixty-seventh.

DAVID B. OGDEN.

Defendant objected to its introduction on the ground that it was 329 not properly authenticated, according to the act of Congress; but the Court overruled the objection. Plaintiff also gave in evidence the judgment of the Court of Appeals at its session, 1843, of which the following is a copy:

"Southern Life Insurance & Trust Company, Appellant, vs.
Isaac S. Jacques, Appellee.

"Upon a certificate from the Clerk of Franklin Superior Court, that a judgment was rendered at December Term, 1841, of said Court in favor of the Appellee, and that an appeal was taken and bond duly filed in the Clerk's Office:

"On motion of the appellee, by his attorney, it is ordered, that this appeal be put on the Court Docket, in its proper place: and the transcript of the record and proceedings in this cause, not having been filed according to law, and the appellants, though solemnly called, came not; therefore, it is considered by the Court, that this appeal be dismissed, and the appellee recover against the appellant ten per centum damages, for retarding the execution thereof; and also, the sum of two dollars and twelve cents, his costs, by him about his defence in this behalf expended: which is ordered to be certified to the Court below."

Defendant objected to the introduction of this judgment; but the Court overruled the objection, and permitted the paper to go to the jury. Plaintiff then gave in evidence the appeal bond herein before set forth, and an execution showing amount due thereon.

Defendant asked the Court to instruct the jury, that plaintiff is not entitled to recover the ten per cent. damages, mentioned in the decree and judgment of the Court of Appeals, as a part of his damages on the bond sued on; which instruction the Court refused, and defendant took his bill of exceptions.

The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff.

Plaintiff in Error, assigned the following for error:

1st. The Court erred in refusing to give the instructions asked for by the counsel of plaintiff in error.

2d. The Court erred in permitting the letters of administration to be offered to the jury.

3d. The Court erred in permitting the paper purporting to be a transcript of the Supreme Court, to be read to the jury.

W. G. M. Davis, for Plaintiff in Error. 330

Carmack & Baker, for Defendant.

MACRAE, Justice:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Franklin county, rendered in an action of debt, instituted therein by Samuel Baron, administrator of Isaac S. Jacques, deceased, against David G. Raney, as one of the sureties of the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, in an appeal bond executed by it to the plaintiff's intestate.

To the declaration the defendant pleaded payment, and upon the issue joined upon this plea, verdict and judgment were rendered for the plaintiff, for the sum of seven hundred and seventy dollars.

The main ground of error, set up by the plaintiff in error is, that upon the trial below, when the bond sued on was given in evidence before the jury, the Court refused to give the latter the following instruction, asked for by the defendant, viz.: "that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the ten per cent. damages, mentioned in the decree and judgment of the Court of Appeals, as part of his damages on the bond sued on," and to this refusal the defendant excepted.

The bond executed by the appellant, in conjunction with the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company, and declared on, must be referred to, in order to determine the extent of his liability. The condition of the bond, after reciting "that the Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company are about to take an appeal from a judgment rendered against it at the Fall Term (1841,) of the Superior Court of Franklin county, in favor of Isaac S. Jacques, for the sum of nine hundred and ninety-two 52-100, to the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida," concludes thus: "Now, if the said Southern Life Insurance and Trust Company shall pay the said damages recovered by said Isaac S. Jacques against it and costs, in case the judgment of said Superior Court shall be confirmed by the said Court of Appeals, then, this bond to be null and void, else to remain in full force and virtue."

The covenant of the defendant Raney is, to pay; provided, the said Company, the principal in the bond, shall not pay "the said damages so recovered by said Jacques against it," by which, we understand, is necessarily meant the sum of $992 52-100, before mentioned, and the costs. Such is the bond; and its obligation extends thus far, and 331 no farther. We are, therefore, of the opinion, that the defendant below, is clearly not liable on his bond, for the ten per centum damages and costs, for which judgment was rendered by the Court of Appeals of the late Territory of Florida. It is so clear and well settled a principle that a surety is bound to the extent of the terms of his obligation and no farther, that we deem it wholly unnecessary to refer to authorities to sustain it. It may be remarked, however, that the doctrine is well and fully illustrated in the case of Miller vs. Stewart, et al. 9 Wheat. 680, and in 5 Cond. R. 772.

In this view of the extent of the appellant's liability upon the bond in question, we are of opinion that the Court below erred in refusing the instruction asked for by the defendant, as set forth in his bill of exceptions, and asigned as error as before mentioned. And here, we feel justified in observing, that had the precise terms of the condition of this bond been brought to the view of the Court below, we cannot doubt that the learned Judge who presided, would have granted the instruction prayed for. That the Nisi Prius Courts are sometimes liable thus to err unwittingly, must be admitted; and it is much to be regretted, in view of the speedy and satisfactory administration of justice, the great desideratum of both Courts and suitors.

"We have not considered it necessary to determine upon the exception taken to the proper legal authentication of the letters of administration, submitted in evidence, in this case, in the Court below. It is clear that the character in which the plaintiff sued, is admitted by the defendant's plea, and, therefore, was not required to be proved. It is consequently, not material to the right and law of the case, whether the Court erred, or not, in permitting the letters in question to be offered to the jury. It may be regarded as a work of supererogation on the part of the plaintiff's attorney, which should not prejudice his client. Be this as it may, the objection may be made in another trial of the same case below, if it can again be raised under the pleadings.

We consider it equally unnecessary to decide the third error assigned. As to the question of a remititur of damages by this Court, in the alternative which has been decided, we think it needs no discussion, considering, as we do, that it is obvious that the remititur sought for, cannot be awarded in view of the character of the verdict apparent upon the face of the record. We might remark, however, 332 that there appears to be a blunder in the entry of this part of the proceedings.

On the whole we are of opinion, and accordingly adjudge and order, that the verdict and judgment in thise case in the Court below, be set aside, and that further proceedings be had therein in accordance with this opinion.

Judgment reversed, and venire de novo.

OCTAVIUS H. GADSDEN vs. GEORGE JONES, ADMINISTRATOR, AND MARY JONES, ADM'X. OF WILLIAM B. NUTTALL.

A., administrator of B., was, by the judgment, or decree of the County Court, under Act of February 15, 1834, sec. 5, discharged as administrator of B. On the same day with the discharge, a suit was instituted against A., as administrator, to which A. pleaded his discharge. Held, that the judgment, or decree, discharging A. from the administration, was a bar to such suit.

A discharge can be obtained by an Executor or Administrator only after six months' notice of his intended application for a discharge has been given, and after he shall have faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him; and it is the duty of the Judge of Probate or County Court to see, before granting such judgment or decree of discharge, that he has well and truly administered, paid the debts so far as the assets would go, and made distribution of the rest, or residue, of the estate according to law.

By the Act of 15th February, 1834, sec. 5, a discharge granted an Executor or Administrator by the County Court, or Court of Probate, is an immediate and effectual bar to suits instituted against such Executor or Administrator in their fiduciary capacity; but it is not a bar to a suit against the person so having acted as Executor or Administrator, for any personal liability incurred by him in the management of the assets, if the suit be brought within five years from the date of the discharge.

When a suit is brought against the person who has acted as Executor or Administrator, the onus probandi rests on the plaintiff to show by his pleadings and proofs, that at the time when the discharge was granted, the Executor or Administrator had not faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him.

ERROR from Jefferson Circuit Court.

Assumpsit by Plaintiff, as Endorsee of a Promissory Note, against Defendants, the Administrator and Administratrix of William B. 333

Nuttall, the maker thereof. The case was tried at the Spring Term, 1846, of Jefferson Circuit Court, Judge Macrae, presiding.

Pleas. 1st Gen. issue. 2d. Statute of Limitations. 3d. Plene Administravit. 4th. That defendants had been discharged of and from their adminstration of the estate of William B. Nuttall, deceased. The case was decided on a demurrer to the 4th plea, which, with the other pleadings, is recited in the opinion of the Court.

The demurrer to the 4th plea having been overruled, plaintiff sued out his Writ of Error.

T. H. Hagner, (with whom was L. A. Thompson), for Plaintiff in Error, argued:

That the main question in the Record, turned upon the validity of the 4th plea of Defendants in Error, as a bar to this action. That plea, is, that "on the day of the commencement of this action, and before its commencement on the 25th March, 1844, the Defendants were duly and lawfully discharged from their administration of the estate of Nuttall, by the County Court of Jefferson County." The Plaintiff in Error demurred specially to this plea, and assigned as causes. 1st. That there was no allegation of full adminstration, nor of their delivery over of the property to any new Administrator. 2d. That the Defendants do not allege that they had no notice of the demands of the Plaintiff in the declaration mentioned before or at the time of their alleged discharge.

On the first point, he cited 2d Wms. on Executors, 1196;—Wentworth on Executors, 472; Packman's case, 6 Coke, 18; 11 Viner's Abridg. 118—9; Keble vs. Keblt, Hobart, 49; 3 Chitty's Pleading, 1240.

On the 2d point, he insisted that whether the discharge set up be by virtue of the Statute (of 1834, sec. 5, p. 188, of Duval) or according to the course of the common law, that it could not operate to discharge the Administrator from liability to satisfy those debts of which he had notice, and for which, therefore, he was entitled to retain.

Upon the construction of the Stat. of 1834, above referred to, he took two exceptions to its operation in this case at bar. In the first place, the discharge by the Statute only is made to operate as a release from the duties of Administrator or Executor prospectively—not an exemption from liability already incurred, nor to permit him to screen himself from existing responsibility. Having had notice of 334 this demand, his duty as Administrator was fixed by law; and from that responsibility it was not the design of the Legislature to release him. It would have been no valid objection to the release contemplated by this Statute, for any creditor to object that he had not yet paid a debt of which he had had notice; the ready answer would have been, "I retain for it. I cannot exempt myself from past responsibility, by being released from future duties." Next, the Statute expressly declares that the operation of this discharge as a bar to any suit, shall not commence "until five years from the date of such discharges," against the person so having acted as Administrator or Executor—that is, for their actings and doing prior to their discharge. Of course, it would be answer enough to any action against him as Administrator or Executor, founded upon any new demand against the estate, arisen after the date of the discharge, and of which he had had no notice, that he is not such Executor or Administrator: for as to all such new duties, the discharge operated as a release. Thus the whole Statute is made sensible, and works no injury to any man.

A. E. Maxwell, for Defendant:

The plea is good, and the demurrer properly overruled. 'Tis a plea of ne unques administrator; the subject of it being, that they are not "now Administrator or Administratrix," and the matter about discharge being added by way of explaining the substantial part relied upon. The plea of ne unques, &c., can be pleaded in bar. 1 Tidd, 644. It is not a plea in which full adminstration, or the turning over of assets, is ever set up. The fact itself, that the party is not Administrator or Administratrix, is a sufficient bar.

It is contended, however, that it is a plea of discharge, and analogous to a plea of revocation of letters. Admitting that a plea of revocation, and grant of letters to another, should aver full administration, or the turning over of assets, yet that doctrine cannot apply to a plea of discharge under our Statute. A distinction must be drawn between revocation and discharge. The former presupposes error or fault; the latter can only be given when the Court is satisfied that the Administrator has "honestly and faithfully discharged" his duties. While, therefore, in the former, the party might be required to account in the plea as to his administration, there would be no

Gadsden vs. Jones, Administrator.

335 propriety in this in the latter; for the Court which discharged him has given a judicial sanction to his acts.

Besides the notice which Administrators are required by the Statute to give to creditors to present their claims against the estate, full notice is also required before a discharge can be had. Duval, 188. Any person having a claim against the estate, or other objection to the discharge, is by this notice warned to make it known, otherwise not to raise objection afterwards. This must have been the intention of the notice. The discharge must be complete for all purposes, and if there is any liability after that, it must be upon the administration bond—not against the administrator as such. but, in the language of the Statute, against "the person so having acted" as Administrator.

Douglas, Ch. J.:

This suit was brought up by writ of error from the Circuit Court of Jefferson County. It was instituted, (as apears by the declaration), to recover the amount of a promissory note for two hundred and two dollars, with interest from the first day of February, eighteen hundred and thirty-four, given by William B. Nuttall, (in his life time), to one Francis C. Prioleau, and endorsed by him to the plaintiff. The defendants put in four pleas. First, the general issue. Second, the Statute of Limitations. Third, Plene Administravit; and Fourth, a plea in the following words, to wit: And for further plea in this behalf, said defendants come and defend the wrong and injury when, &c., and say actio non; because they say they are not now either of them Administrator or Administratrix of the said William B. Nuttall, deceased; but on the day and year of the commencement of this action, and before its commencement, to wit, on the 25th day of March, 1844, in the County aforesaid, they were by competent authority, to wit, the Hon. the County Court of Jefferson County, duly and lawfully discharged of and from their administration of the said estate of William B. Nuttall, deceased, as appears by the record remaining in said County Court, and this they are ready to verify by said record. Wherefore, they pray judgment, &c.

Upon the first plea, issue was joined. To the second and third, the plaintiff, by his counsel, demurred; and his demurrers were sustained. To the fourth, the plaintiff, by his counsel, put in a special demurrer, and assigned therefor the following causes, viz: For that the said defendants do not allege in their said plea, that they have 336 fully administered all the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, rights, credits and effects, which were of said William in their hands to be administered; nor do they therein allege that they have delivered all and singular the goods and chattels, &c., in their hands to be administered, not administered at the date of their alleged discharge from said administration, to the hands of such person, or persons, (if any such there were), named and appointed Administrator or Administratrx in their place and stead, and to whom administration of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, rights, credits and effects of the said William, unadministered by the said defendants, hath been granted: and also, for that the said defendants do not in (their said) plea, allege that they had not notice of the said demand of the said plaintiff in said declaration mentioned, before or at the time of their alleged discharge: and also, for that said plea is in other respects uncertain, informal and insufficient.

This demurrer was overruled, the plea sustained, and for that cause alone the case was brought up to this Court.

The errors assigned are: First. The Court erred in overruling the demurrer of the plaintiff to the defendants' fourth plea. Second. The Judgment of the Court should have been for plaintiff below on said demurrer.

The Statute authorizing the discharge of an Executor or Administrator is in the following words, viz: That if an Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix, shall be desirous of obtaining a discharge from his or her executorship or administratorship, it shall be competent for him or her to receive the same upon application to the Judge of the County Court, or other person charged with the duties of ordinary. Provided, That six months' notice of such intended application be given in one or more of the gazettes nearest the place where the letters were granted: And provided also, That it shall appear that said applicant has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him or her; and the discharge so obtained, shall be taken to operate as a release from the duties of Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix; and shall furthermore operate as a bar to any suit against the person so having acted as Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix, unless the same be commenced within five years from the date of such discharge, saving to all persons non compos mentis, infants, imprisoned, or beyond the seas, who may have any interest in the said estate 337 two years from the time of the removal of any disabilities herein enumerated. See Act of 15 February, A. D., 1834, sec. 5, Duval's Comp., page 188.

This presents several very important questions upon the construction of this Statute, which have been very seldom raised, and never, it is believed, settled by any authoritative decision in this State; and which, viewing them in any aspect in which they may be presented, are not perhaps entirely clear of difficulty, although we think that a due consideration of the phraseology of the section referred to; and the application thereto of the proper canons of construction, will leave little room for doubt upon the subject. Whether there is such a Statute in any other State or county, we are not advised; certain it is, that we have not been referred to any decisions made upon a Statute like this, and without the aid of any such decision we must endeavor to construe it by such lights as we have.

This case has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff in error, as though it stood upon the same grounds as if there had been a revocation of the letters of administration granted to the defendants in error upon the estate of Nuttall; but a reference to the reasons for a revocation of such letters, and the mode of proceeding in relation to a revocation, and the mode of proceeding to obtain a discharge under this Statute, and what the Statute requires to be shewn before a discharge can be granted, it will be seen that the two cases are widely different, and bear little or no analogy to each other. If there be an Executor, and administraton is granted before probate and refusal, it will be revoked on the will being afterwards proved, because it is void. Comyn's Digest, Title Admr., B. 1. Or, if there be two Executors, and one of them proves the will and the other refuses, and he who proved the will dies and administration is granted before the refusal of the survivor, subsequently to the death of the Co-executor. Abrams vs. Cunningham, 2 Levintz, 182. Toller on Executors, 120, (to which many other cases of a similar description might be added). Also, if granted by incompetent authority. Toller on Exors., 120. In all these instances the administration is nullity. But theer is another class of cases, where administration is not void, but voidable only; as if administration be granted to a party not next of kin. Blackborough vs. Davis, Salk. 38. 1 P. Wms. 43. Or to one of kin together with one not of kin. Comyn's Digest, 338 Title Admr. B. Or to the wife's next of kin, instead of the husband's. 11 Vin. Abr. 11. Or if it be granted on the refusal of an Executor who had before administered. Comyn's Digest, Title Admr., B. 8. Or to a stranger. Wilson vs. Patterson, Moore, 396. Or if the grantee has become non compos mentis, or otherwise incapable. 11 Vin. Abr. 115, 116. In all these cases, and many more that might be added, the revocation is made on the ground that it was granted improvidently, or was granted to the wrong person; or that circumstances have occurred since it was granted, which shew that it ought not to be any longer continued in the same hands. Our Statute seems to have added another, viz: "Where the securities on any bond given by Executors or Administrators are insufficient, the Court or Judge shall order that additional security be filed; and if not complied with, within such time as shall be directed in said order, the said Court or Judge may revoke the letters testamentary or of administration and appoint a receiver or other administrator." Act of 20th Nov., 1828, Duval's Comp. page 176, sec. 31. In England, the ordinary cannot revoke the grant on account of abuse, and the reason alleged is, that he ought to take sufficient caution in the first instance to prevent maladministration. 11 Vin. Abr. 15. Thomas vs. Butler, 1 Ventre. 219. Toller on Extos. 125.

At common law the ordinary might reveal an administration at his pleasure; but now, since the Statute 21st Hen. 8, if administration be regularly granted to the next of kin, according to the provisions of the same, the ordinary has no such discretion. If he assign a cause for a repeal, the temporal courts are to judge of its sufficiency. 11 Vin. Abr. 114. Comyn's Digest, Title Admr., Book 8. Blackborough vs. Davis, 1 Peere Wms., 42. How far the Statute of 21st Hen. 8, affects the powers of Judges of Probates in this State, or whether it affects them at all, it is not necessary for us now to enquire. It certainly does not prevent a revocation of letters by them, pursuant to the provisions of the 31st section of the Act of 20th Nov. 1828, above cited. In every case, however, of a revocation of letters of administration, whether absolutely void or merely voidable, the Court, at the instance of some person interested, or upon its own motion, proceeds against the person to whom administration has been committed; and upon the ground, too, that he never had any just 339 claim to such letters, or that the interests of those who have a claim upon the estate would be jeopardied by his being permitted longer to hold it, and not upon the ground that the person to whom such letters had been granted had fully administered. In the proceeding now under consideration, the Court (after due notice) acts upon the application of the party to whom administration was granted, (and who seeks a discharge), and cannot grant such discharge until it shall appear "that the said applicant has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him or her." Now, what is the trust and confidence reposed in an Executor or Administrator? This will be best answered, perhaps, by referring to the oath which they have respectively required to take in relation to the performance of this trust, and the act concerning wills, letters, testamentary, and letters of administration, and the duties of Executors, Adminstrators and Guardians. Sec. 4, Duval's Comp., pages 169, 170 provides, "that all Executors taking out letters testamentary on the estate of their Testator, and all Administrators with the will annexed, shall make oath, or affirm, before the Court or Judge, that they will well and truly perform the last will and testament of the Testator and pay all just and lawful debts, so far as his goods and chattels, rights and credits, will extend, and that they will make a true and correct inventory of the same, and render a true account of their administration when required." And every Administrator is required by the same Act to "swear, or affirm, that he will well and truly administer all and singular the goods and chattels, rights and credits, of said deceased, make a just inventory of the same, pay his debts as far as the assets of the estate shall extend and the law direct, and make a fair distribution according to law, and render a true account of the adminstration of the estate when thereto required." The bond required by the 9th section of the same Act, Duval's Comp., page 170, also imposes upon an administrator an obligation "well and truly to administer all and singular the goods, chattels, rights and credits, of the deceased, at the time of the death of said deceased, or which at any time after shall come to his hands or possession, or into the hands or possession of any other person or persons for him, according to law; and, further, to make, or cause to be made, a true and just account of his administration when required, and to deliver and pay all the rest and residue of said goods and chattels, which shall be

340 found remaining upon said Administrator's acount, the same being first examined and allowed by the County Court of the county where the said administration was granted, to such person or persons respectively at the same Court by their order or decree, (pursuant to the true intent and meaning of this act), shall appoint and direct." And if we resort to the principles of the common law on the subject, we shall find the trust and confidence reposed in Executors and Administrators is in effect the same. Now how can it be said that an Executor or Adminstrator has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him until all these requirements have been fulfilled—until the Executor has well and truly performed the last will and testament of the Testator, and paid all just and lawful debts so far as his goods and chattels, rights and credits, would extend, &c.; or the Administrator has well and truly administered all and singular the goods and chattels, rights and credits of the deceased, made a just inventory of the same, paid his debts so far as assets extended and the law directs, and made a fair distribution according to law, &c.? We think it cannot, and that it was the duty of the Judge of the County Court, before granting the discharge set up as a defence in this case, to see that these defendants had well and truly administered, paid the debts so far as the assets extended, made a fair distribution of all the rest and residue of the estate, according to law; because without this they cannot be said to have faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed to them. The word discharged here means performed, executed, freed from obligation. Before the Court can bear the application of an Executor or Administrator under the provisions of this act, before it can even take jurisdiction of the case at all, "six months' notice," (as we have seen), "of such intended application must be given in one or more of the gazettes nearest the place where the letters were granted."

Does a discharge, obtained pursuant to these provisions, operate as a bar to suits instituted against the person who has been thus discharged in the character of Executor or Administrator, treating him and charging him as such in the same manner as though no such discharge had been granted? This question depends upon the proper construction of the fifth section of the act of 15th Feb., 1834, before cited. One of the primary rules laid down by the sages of the law for the construction of Statutes is, that "there are three facts to be considered in the construction of all remedial statutes; the old law, the 341 mischief, and the remedy,"—that is, how the common law stood at the time of making the act, what the mischief was for which the case did not provide, and the remedy the Parliament hath provided to cure the mischief. 3 Reps. 7, Co. Litt. 11, 42. 6 Bac. Abr. Title Statutes, 383. 2 Inst. 301. Now what was the old law? By the common law, as it stood at the time of the passage of this act, an Executor or Administrator, although he may have fully adminstered, although he may, (in the words of the act), have faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him, he could not obtain a discharge. The mischief was that he still remained liable to be sued by creditors, legatees and persons entitled to distribution: and to defend every such suit, was obliged to employ counsel, put in his plea of plene administravit, go into an investigation of his accounts, and shew that he had fully administered; by which, even if he succeeded in his defence, he was put to great vexation, trouble and expense; but by sickness, loss of vouchers, or other casualty, both himself and counsel might be prevented from making the necessary defence, and a judgment would in such case be obtained against him without any proof of assets, which would render him liable to pay the debt out of his own estate, (if he had any), and would render his sureties liable, wherever surety had been given, (and it must be given in all cases by Administrators, and in some cases by Executors also); and where the defendant should be unable to satisfy the judgment, his sureties would of course be compelled to pay it for him, unless indeed they could shew, (as the statute would permit them to do), that he had fully administered; to do which, would subject them to the same vexation, trouble and expense, which would be a great hardship on them, thus placing a party in a situation most inconceivably distressing to an honest and ingenuous mind. Another evil resulting from this state of things was its tendency to prevent persons the most suitable for the discharge of such duties from incurring such interminable liabilities. The remedy intended by the Legislature was, we think, a speedy "release from the duties of Executor or Executrix, Adminstrator or Administratrix," after a faithful and honest discharge of the trust. And another rule of construction requires that in construing a statute, the intention of the makers is to govern, although such construction may seem to be contrary to the letter of the statute. Bac. Abr., Title Statutes, 383. Jackson 342 vs. Collins, 3 Cowen, 89. Reddick vs. Governor, 1 Miss., 147. Beall vs. Howard, 2 Harr. & John., 167. Wilkinson vs. Leland, 2 Peters, 662. People vs. Utica In. Co., 15 John. 338. Minor vs. Mechanic's Bank of Alexander, 1 Peters, 64. Dwarris on Statutes.

We are not obliged in this case, in order to sustain our view of the proper construction of this Statute, to carry the intention of the Legislature beyond the literal words of the 5th section of the Act, or to put a construction upon them that may seem even to be contrary to the letter. Until we arrive at the provision in the Statute now under consideration, Executors and Administrators are always spoken of as such, but here the phraseology of the Act changes. They are no longer spoken of as Executors and Administrators: no longer considered as such, and certainly they no longer represent the estate.— To this the case of Skinner vs. Frierson & Crow, 8 Alabama Rep. N. S. 915, which arose under a Statute of that State, authorizing Executors and Adminstrators to resign their authority by writing, delivered into the Clerk's Office, Aikin's Digest, 127, is in point. The words of the provision we are discussing, are, "and the discharge so obtained shall be taken to operate as a release from the duties of Executor of Executrix, Adminstrator or Administratrix; and shall furthermore operate as a bar to any suit against the person so having acted as Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix, unless the same be commenced within five years from the date of said discharge." The discharge is not a bar to any suit brought against the person so having acted, if brought within five years from the date of such discharge. This change of phraseology, we think, has a meaning too clear to be disregarded.

The distinction between suits against Executors and Administrators "as such," and suits to charge them personally, runs through all the books, is familiar to every lawyer, and must be supposed to have been known to the Legislature who passed this Act; and having provided for a discharge, which should operate as a release from all the duties of Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix, they took care, (in authorizing suits to be brought against them after such discharge), to use a term which only authorizes suits to charge them personally. "Any suit against the person so having acted," is clear and definite, and would seem to admit of no misapprehension. "A Statute ought, upon the whole, to be so construed that if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence or word, shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant." I Shower, 108. Bac. Abr., Title Statutes, 384. One part of the Statute, too, should be so construed by another, that the whole may, if possible, stand. Ut res magis valeat quam pereat. 1 Reps. 48. 1 Blk. Comm. 89. The words, "the person so having acted," are very significant. Suits may be brought against the person so having acted; but when they are so brought, the burder of proof is changed. The onus probandi rests on the plaintiff; and he must, to enable him to recover, shew by his pleadings and his proof, that at the time when the discharge was granted, the defendant had not faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him or her. This is the remedy intended by the law-makers for one of the evils above suggested, and it is a remedy of which the plaintiff has no cause to complain. The application for such discharge is a proceeding in which all the persons interested in the estate are to be brought before the Court by advertisement for six months, the Statute seeming to suppose what in most cases is true, that an Executor or Administrator cannot know the names of all creditors, and persons entitled to distribution. The Statute does not say in terms, what effect this notice is to have; but if it can have a sensible meaning, it should not be disregarded; and when we see the next proviso, to wit, that if it shall appear that said applicant has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him or her, we are led to the conclusion, that the six months' notice was designed by the Legislature to give all creditors and distributees, ample time and opportunity to appear and contest the question whether the Executor or Adminstrator had in fact "faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him or her." If they fail to appear, the discharge, of course, is granted upon the applicant's own showing, if he satisfies the Judge of the faithfulness and honesty of his transactions. If they appear and contest, and the decision is against them, they have a remedy by appeal under the provisions of the Statute; and in either case, they still have a further remedy by suit against the person, as before stated. No such discharge can be granted until the expiration of two years from the grant of letters testamentary or of administration; because that time is given by the 18th section of the Act of 20th Nov., 1828, above mentioned, within which to present claims against the estate, unles it be where the assets have been entirely exhausted by the payment of privileged debts, under the provisions of the 29th section of that Act, or of the Act of 12th February, 1841, amendatory thereto. See Acts of 1841, page 186. And due notice is required by law to be given for the presentation of all claims against the estate by the 20th sec. of the Act of 20th Nov., 1828.

This is not a solitary instance where our Legislature has evinced a laudable disposition to save the honest and praiseworthy from the grasp of a rapacious creditor, while it has taken care, at the same time, to leave an open way whereby to reach dishonesty and fraud. The Supreme Court of Alabama, in the case of Thompson vs. Haynes' Executors, 5 Stewart & Porter, 181, held that an Executor cannot, by resignation of his authority as such, avoid the rendition of a judgment against him as may be in regular process for assets unadministered at the time of his resignation; but remarked, "What would have been the consequence of a resignation at an earlier stage of the administration, it is not now necessary for us to enquire."

This proceeding, however, is essentially different from the one we have been considering. There, no notice is given, no account required, no shewing made or required to be made of a full and faithful adminstration, no action of the Court is had. Here, was a full accounting, and a judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction, which we are not at liberty to disregard, rendered in a proceeding governed entirely by the provisions of a Statute highly remedial; a proceeding to which the ordinary rules relating to the rights of creditors to the Ecclesiastical Courts and Courts of Probate have no application. But a judgment to which the general principles of law relating to the conclusiveness of judgments, do not fully apply; for by those principles, a judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive upon the parties as long as it remains in force. Wallace vs. Usher, 4 Bibb, 508. Hayden vs. Booth, 2 A. K. Marsh, 353. So a judgment or decree of a Probate Court, is conclusive between the parties, until legally disaffirmed, and cannot be enquired into collaterally. Judges of Probate vs. Filmore, 1 Chipman, 423. Bush vs. Sheldon, 1 Day. 170. This judgment, however, owing to the peculiar provisions of the Statute, is not so far conclusive as to bar suits against the person to whom letters testamentary or of administration have been granted, and who have been duly and legally discharged, if brought within five years after the date of such discharge, for any personal liability incurred in the management of the assets; and why should a suit be brought for any other purpose?

This discharge is "to operate as a release from the duties of Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix." This language is in "presenti," but a release from these duties would not (it is apprehended) operate as a bar to a suit brought against the person who had thus acted as such Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix, for any liabiliay incurred for an unfaithful or dishonest act in regard to the assets with which such person had been entrusted, and for which, if a suit were instituted, it would charge him personally. As, however, the discharge might operate as a bar to such a suit, the Legislature having declared the effect of the discharge as to the duties, went on to declare that such discharge shall furthermore operate as a bar to any suit against the person so having acted, &c., unless the same be brought within five years from the date of such discharge; which is equivalent to saying that it shall not bar such a suit if brought within five years from the date of the discharge. This is in "futuro," and shews, we think, most clearly, when taken in connection with the provision as to the duties as above stated, the "intent of the law-makers," that the discharge should be an immediate and effectual bar to suits instituted against such parties in their fiduciary character.

Again, if a suit were brought against such party in that character, it would of course be for the non discharge of some duty as Executor or Executrix, Administrator or Administratrix; and to say such discharge shall operate as a release from those duties, and yet that the person thus released may be sued for a non discharge of any of those duties, would be a solecism; and, besides, if the party has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him, what reason is there why he should be harrassed with such suits? We think there is none, and that it was the intention of the Legislature that he should not, and that it has in effect so said.

If the view that we have taken of this matter be correct, (and we entertain no doubt on the subject), then the Court below did not err in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to the fourth plea of the defendants.

We have gone more fully into the questions presented in this case than we otherwise would have done, because they are new and important, and there is some diversity of opinion in relation to them; and because we desire if possible, in putting a construction upon this singularly framed Statute, to give effect to every part of it, and to carry out what we believe to have been the intention of the Legislature in passing it, without endangering the rights and interests of any person or persons whose cases may be brought within any of its provisions. Whether we have accomplished these objects or not, time must determine.

The Judgment of the Court below is affirmed with costs.

BALTZELL, J., delivered the following dissenting opinion:

This case depends upon the effect to be given to a discharge by the Judge of the County Court to an Administrator, under the 5th section of the act "in addition to an act concerning wills, &c., approved 15 Feb., 1834," by which it is provided, "that it shall be competent for an Executor or Administrator to receive a discharge upon application to the judge of the County Court, provided six months' notice of the application be given, &c.; and provided, also, that it shall also appear that the said applicant has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him, and the discharge so obtained shall be taken to operate as a release from the duties of Administrator, &c.; and shall furthermore operate as a bar to any suit against the person so having acted as Executor or Administrator, unless the same be commenced within five years from the date of said discharge; saving to all persons infants, non compos, &c., who may have an interest in said estate, two years from the time of the removal of any disabilities herein enumerated." Duval, 188, sec. 5.

The majority of the Court in the opinion delivered, affirm the doctrine that a discharge obtained under this act is a bar, and although in the case under consideration it was obtained on the very day the suit of plaintiff was instituted, yet they hold a plea setting up the discharge to be conclusive and fatal to it. I cannot concur in this judgment of the Court, nor in the reasoning contained in the opinion delivered; and conceiving that important principles are involved far beyond the mere amount in controversy, have felt it a duty to record the grounds of my dissent.

The Statute under discussion, has been a subject of anxious study and reflection with me, especially since reading the opinion of the Court, and yet I cannot agree with the meaning given to its terms. It is perhaps my misfortune not to perceive room for construction. I find neither ambiguity nor obscurity in any part of the act. The terms are of common use, and as well understood as any in the language; nor do I discover from the opinion delivered, either word or sentence which is asserted to be susceptible of diversity of meaning. If this be the case, construction is inadmissible; interpretation which seeks to attain the meaning of the words, and thereby find out the design of the Legislature, is the true and only guide. Lieber, in his work on Hermeneutics, takes the distinction between the two terms not sufficiently regarded in the law-books, "construction differing from interpretation seeks to discover a design beyond that expressed by the Legislature," and is obviously a most delicate and oftentimes a dangerous task. To declare that the Legislature meant differently to what they have expressed, and either more or less than they have expressed by the language used, would seem to be the making, not the exposition of a law, a repeal of the old, and enactment and substitution of a new law,—this, most clearly, is legislation, and not the exercise of judicial power. Is it not better and safer, by far more wise and accordant with our institutions, based as they are upon a system of laws, for the Courts to decline the exercise of power so questionable, and say at once the law is too ambiguous or obscure to be enforced? The English Courts of the present day are taking the right course and placing their decisions, in cases of construction, on grounds of the clearest propriety and most indisputable truth. "When the legislature has used words of definite and plain import, it would be very dangerous to put upon them a construction which would amount to holding that the legislature did not mean what it had expressed. The fittest course in all cases where the intention of the legislature is brought into question, is to adhere to the words of the statute, construing them according to their nature and import. The most enlightened and experienced Judges have some times lamented the too frequent departure from the plain and obvious meaning of the words of the law by which a case is governed, and themselves hold it the much safer course to adhere to the words of the statute construed in their ordinary import, than to enter into any inquiry as to the supposed intentions of the parties who framed the act." Dwarris on Stat. 703. 6 B. & C. 712. 10 ditto. 527

348 "The Judges are not to presume the intentions of the Legislature, but to collect them from the words of the law, and they have nothing to do with the policy of the law." Dwarris, 703.

"Recently, all the Judges, and particularly the late and present Lord Chief Justice, have manifested the strongest inclination to adhere more closely in the construction of Statutes to the words of the Act of Parliament. I have often lamented, says Lord Tenterden, that in so many instances the Courts have departed from the plain and literal construction of the Statutes relative to the settlement of the poor. Where the authorities are silent, I shall hold myself forced to construe these Acts of Parliament according to the plain and popular meaning of the words." 2 B. & A., 522. Dwarris.

In another case, the same distinguished Judge says, "the words may probably go beyond the intention; but if they do, it rests with the Legislature to make an alteration, the duty of the Court is only to give effect to the provision." "It is safer," said Mr. Jus. Ashurst, "to adopt what the Legislature has actually said, than to suppose what they meant to say." Dwarris, 707—8. 1 T. R., 52.

If these Courts, in the fullness of a career distinguished by singular wisdom, ability and virtue, gained each day upon the confidence and affections of their people, have thus so clearly and evidently disavowed this doctrine in its past extent, may it not well become a Court just entering upon its weighty and responsible duties to pause before they affirm doctrines thus condemned as improper, and which may certainly be questionable in reason and good sense?

If resort is to be had to construction, however, let us examine the rules appealed to by the majority of the Court. The first is, that "a Statute is to be construed that no clause, sentence or word, shall be superfluous, void or insignificant." This rule supports the views we entertain; for, according to our conception, the decision of the Court can only be sustained by the disregard of all the words after, "Executors or Administrators," and by treating the words, "unless the same be commenced within five years from the date of said discharge," and also the saving of infants, &c., as wholly "superfluous, void and insignificant." These words stricken out, the decision of the Court is well supported.

The second rule relied upon, is that "the intention of the makers is to govern, although such construction may seem to be contrary to the letter of the Statute." Dwarris, who has written most extensively on this subject and whose work is quoted with approbation in the English and American Courts, says of this rule, "it appears that the letter of a Statute may be enlarged or restrained by an equitable construction, and there are also certain cases which are of necessity by construction excepted out of Statutes. Such are cases out of the meaning of the law, and therefore held not to be within its operation, though included in the terms of it. It is principally in reference to such cases that it is said a remedial Statute shall be expounded contrary to the words—contrary to the text, &c.; in all its shapes a questionable doctrine, in its stricter sense quite inconsistent with the sounder principles of judicial interpretation, and requiring, it is apprehended, to be greatly modified before it can be at all admitted as a rule of construction." Dwarris, 725. 349

He continues, "the determination of the Judges in Edrick's case, is very deserving of attention. And the Judges said they ought not to make any construction against the express letter of the Statute, for nothing can so express the meaning of the makers of the Act as their own direct words—'index animi sermo.'" Dwarris on Stat., 725.

"All Acts are to be taken by reasonable construction, and in doubtful cases Judges may enlarge or restrain the construction of Acts of Parliament, according to the sense of the law-makers." "Beneficial Statutes have always been taken and expounded by equity ultra the strict letter, but not, it is well and wisely said, contra the letter."—Dwarris, 726. But admitting the rule to its fullest extent, where is its application to the case under consideration?

Still a third rule is referred to, "that the old law, the mischief and the remedy, are to be considered, and we are to give such construction to the new law as will suppress the mischief of the old and advance the remedy under the new one."

It is first important to ascertain with accuracy and correctness the state of the old law; and here, we apprehend, the Court is in error in supposing that a discharge of the Executor by the Court of Probate was not allowed previously to this Statute. In the earliest period of legal proceedings, we find it thus described: "The effect which arises of a just and true account is this—the Executor having well and faithfully performed his office, and made his account accordingly, ought to be acquitted and discharged from further molestation and suits as one that has fully administered and finished his office; neither is he 350 to be called by the ordinary to any further account." Swinburne on Wills, 379.

And "thus the ordinary, finding the account to be true and perfect, may pronounce for the validity thereof, and so acquit the Executor so far forth as appertaineth to the Ecclesiastical Court. But this is perpetually to be observed, that the creditors to whom the testator did owe anything, and the legatees, and all others having interest, are to be cited to be present at the making of the said account, otherwise the account made in their absence, (and they never called), is not prejudicial to them." Swinburne, p. 39. And this has been the law of Florida, also; for, at the earliest period of the Territorial Government, the common and statute laws of England of a general and not of a local nature, down to the 4th of July 1776, were declared to be of force. The law prevailing in the Ecclesiastical Courts on the subject of Wills, Executors and Administrators, was by various English Statutes, and by recognition in the English Courts, part of the law of England, and consequently thus embraced by our statute. Preface to Swinburne on Wills. Duval, 357. Whilst the Executor was thus discharged by the court of ordinary, he was yet liable in the common law courts and in the courts of chancery: in the former to shew that he had fully administered at the suit of a creditor, and in the latter his account was allowed to be falsified at the instance of any party interested by shewing error, mistake, &c. 2 Williams on Exors., 1213, 1239—40. 1 Story's Equity, 509, 512. The reason for deviation in these cases from the rule as to the conclusiveness of the ordinary action of judicial tribunals, was that a creditor of the estate could not falsify the account in the court of ordinary, his remedy being held to be at common law—he could not contest the payments of the Executor or Administrator, but as to him the oath of the party was conclusive. 2 Will. on Exors., 645—8, 1265. 1 Story's Eq., 509.

This was the state of the former law. The mischief pertaining to it is stated at large in the opinion of the Court, and made to consist of a "continuance of liability to suit by the Administrator; objection to reinvestigation of his accounts, expense of counsel, and trouble and vexation of defence of suit, embarrassment, &c., from sickness, loss of vouchers," &c.

351 Language so variant from that of all the authorities ancient and modern, announcing without exception, so far as I have been able to discover, the sound and salutary principle that Executors and Administrators are trustees to be held to a strict responsibility, and giving no encouragement to remissness or neglect in their accounts, has greatly surprised me. The earliest authorities agreeing with those of recent date are to the following effect:

"Surely if it stand with reason that stewards, receivers, bailiffs, tutors, fathers, and such as have to deal for other persons, should be accountable for their stewardship, &c., with greater reason may it be maintained that an Executor should be subject to account rather than they; for they for the most part have to deal for such as be living, who may have an eye to their doings; but an Executor hath to deal for a dead person, who can neither see nor hear if his Executor deal unjustly. Again, if the Executor have well and faithfully executed his office and discharged the trust reposed in him, what should move him that he should not willingly make a due account thereof, &c. On the contrary, if he have played the unjust steward, much rather in that case ought he to be urged and compelled to make an account, that his fraud and deceit being detected he may be justly punished, and others by his punishment premonished." Swinburne. 376.

"The account is to be made to the Ordinary, who, therefore, not unaptly may be termed the Executor of Executors, because he examines the account of every Executor, and the father of the fatherless, for that to poor orphans he is instead of a father." Swinburne. 377.

To close the door against enquiry, to prevent investigation and a suit to obtain their rights by creditors, legatees or distributees, are views as to the intention of the Legislature we conceive not lightly to be entertained. The excuse made, if a good one, would equally prevail against all investigation, and a settlement of accounts even before the Judge of Probate; for an Administrator may there, also, "be put to great trouble, vexation and expense, and be prevented from settling his accounts by sickness, loss of vouchers or other casualty." If he "has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust, and be in fact of an honest and ingenuous mind," what reason has he to fear trouble or investigation; would he not rather invite the latter and reject, as an imputation upon his good name, a statutory provision which 352 would screen him from it? Can there be a question but that investigation and scrutiny, free, open, full and fair, as under the old law, are the true and best security of the officer, whilst mischief and injury are the sure and certain result of presenting to his weakness, negligence or cupidity, the temptation of an Act of the Legislature to stifle and exclude enquiry into his accounts and prevent a just responsibility for his official action?

But let us look at the remedy which finds such favor with the Court, and which it is said is so greatly preferable to the old rule. The discharge is thus obtained: "It shall be competent for the Administrator to receive the same on an application to be made after six months' notice in one of the gazettes nearest the place where the letters were granted; and provided it shall appear that the applicant has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him." The proceeding is not entirely exparte, but as nearly so as it could well have been made, if any notice were to be given. It is not directed to be addressed to any one, nor is a time or place fixed for the hearing, but the discharge is to be after six months' publication. But a more material omission and objection is that there is no provision for the making and issue by any of the parties as to any distant fact, as to payment of debts, amount of assets, or contestation of the items of the account in any respect. Nor is there provision for the trial of any such issue, and yet upon the rightful solution of all these questions depends the result whether "the Administrator has faithfully and honestly discharged the trust and confidence reposed in him." This material and important matter is disposed of by the lame and unsatisfactory provision—"provided it shall appear that the applicant has faithfully discharged the trust." If a legatee desire to contest the receipt of his legacy—a creditor the satisfaction of his demand—a distributee the alleged amount of the assets—the expenditures and disbursements—how are all these to be disposed of? The Judge of Probate is not skilled to decide intricate questions of law. According to our Constitution, the jury are judges of the fact, and there is no power given to summon one. Even his power to subpoena witnesses is questionable; and yet rights of property to any the greatest extent are put in jeopardy and determined by a proceeding before unheard of; without any time or place fixed for the hearing; without any issues; without witnesses, without jury, and without judge.

353 And this proceeding, so derogatory to principles of the common law the most venerated, and hitherto most sacred, is to be extended and carried beyond the provisions of the Act by construction. The Court says, "the Legislature took care to use a term which only authorizes suits to charge them personally." With due deference, the design of the Legislature was different from what is here stated. The statute was to relieve Executors and Administrators from responsibility in their official capacity, and did not concern with their individual or personal relations. There is no such expression in it as authorizing suits to "charge them personally." It speaks not of the institution of, but of the defence to a suit. But it is said that the words, "against the person so having acted as Executor,"&c., are clear and definite, and support this idea of a charge personally. The Legislature, it seems to me, used these words as appropriate to the granting a discharge to a person who was no longer Executor or Administrator, and who yet might be liable to suit for past conduct. They could not with propriety say the discharge shall operate as a bar against such Executor, for he was out of office; but appropriately might say, as they have said, that it should operate against the person so having acted as such Executor, &c.

It is supposed to be incongruous, and a solecism, to discharge these officers and release them from their duties whilst their responsibility continues; but why is it so? Sheriffs, clerks, and other officers, are discharged from office and released from duty, and yet continue to be liable on their bonds for years afterwards. This has always been the case with Executors and Administrators, whose duties cease long before their responsibility. "Familiar as the distinction between suits against Executors and Administrators as such, and suits to charge them personally, may be to every lawyer," yet I confess myself wholly at a loss for the meaning of the Court in this position. Was it the design to say that they should be charged in the declaration individually, or personally, and not as Executors? This would seem to be the rational inference. If this be true, actions then under this statute can only be brought for "transactions arising subsequent to the death of the testator; for these are contracts of the Executor or Administrator, which charge him personally and in his individual character," and not officially. 1 T. R. 487, 691. 4 T. R. 104. 8 Mass., 213. 3 do. 318, 190. 6 Hals., 163.

354 It cannot apply to the ordinary case of a suit against an Executor, because its primary object is to make the money from the estate; and it is only on proof of misappropriation of assets by an executor, that he is made liable personally.

It is suggested that the action for a devastavit is alluded to. This can hardly be the case; for it is said, in case of a suit to charge the Administrator personally, "the burden of proof is changed, the onus rests on plaintiff, and he must shew by his pleadings and proof, that at the time the discharge was granted, the defendant had not faithfully and honestly discharged his duty." Now, in case of devastavit, the proof always lay on plaintiff as it does in all other actions. What change then is made? 3 Chitty Pl., 254. 1 Saund. 219, N. 8.

What then are the actions that may be maintained, and how are they to be preferred under this new rule of action?

If the discharge by the Statute operates only as a bar personally, or to a personal action, it would seem to me that actions against the Administrator in his official character, not being embraced by its provisions, would not be barred; they remain as at common law. It is said that "the discharge is a judgment, to which the general principles of law relating to the conclusiveness of judgments do not apply." This, it seems to me, surrenders the whole ground; for, if not conclusive, it cannot be a bar; if not a judgment, and having the effect of one, there is no other position to occupy with it. How otherwise is it made to conclude the action of plaintiff and prevent recovery? After the lapse of five years, we consider that the discharge has the full effect of a judgment, and prevents all contestation as to the Administration. The Statute, in my view creates a new remedy, providing a prospective bar to operate unless suit be commenced within five years—allows suits by persons generally against the person having acted as Executor or Administrator within five years after his discharge; and infants, persons beyond seas, and others, five years and two years after their disabilities are removed, to bring suit.

Whilst the decision of the Court makes the discharge an absolute bar, the opinion makes it an immediate bar and not a bar—"a judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction," and yet "not a judgment so that the general principles of law apply to it"—conclusive and not conclusive—a proceeding of a Court of Probate, yet to which 355 "the rules of such Courts have no application;" for the most part, a defence to the action, and then to authorize suits against a defendant to charge him personally, and discriminating as to the person and object of the suit,—again, a proceeding which is "to change the burden of proof." All this is produced by construction of a Statute which is declared highly remedial, though innovating most seriously upon common law principles. A construction, too, asserting that the intention is to govern against the letter, yet maintaining the letter against the intention; and declaring a mischief under the old law, whilst it creates a greater mischief under the new remedy.

A decision supported by such a contrariety of positions, leaving the subject in such uncertainty and obscurity, being so clearly in opposition to the manifest and unequivocal expressions of the Statute, can scarcely prevail as a permanent rule of action.

By the Constitution of the State, the Judges of Probate are confined to the duties usually pertaining to courts of ordinary, subject to the direction and supervision of the courts of chancery. It is to be hoped that this provision may correct, at least so far as action under the State Government is concerned, the evils which I apprehend may flow from this decision of the Court.

356 ISAAC W. MITCHELL vs. HENRY DOGGETT.

The 1 & 2 sec. of the Act of 1833, "regulating the rate of interest," were repealed by the Act of 1844; but prior to the repeal, a contract was made whereby a greater rate of interest than that thereby allowed was reserved and taken: held that the repeal of the Act of 1833, was no bar to the plea of usury under that Act; and that the rights of the parties must be governed by the law in force at the time of the making of the contract, and that they were not affected by the subsequent repeal of the said Act.

When a contract is, by force of a Statute, illegal at the time of its inception, no action can be maintained upon it, although the Statute declaring it illegal be repealed.

The law of 1833, which declared that the interest on any usurious contract shall be void and the obligor forever exonerated from the payment of the same, vested in the obligor a right which could not be divested by posterior legislation repealing such law.

When illegal interest is taken or contracted for, the whole interest becomes void from the time of the taking of the usurious interest.

To establish usury, it is not necessary to show that the Plaintiff actually took or received more for interest than the law declared lawful, but it is sufficient to show that it is promised to be paid; and it is immaterial whether the usurious interest is secured by a distinct instrument, or is included in the instrument which secured the principal.

In order to render the offence complete, so as to subject the lender to the penalty under the Statute, there must be an actual receipt of the usurious interest; but the contract may be rendered void without such receipt.

A contract to pay more than legal interest for past forbearance is illegal.

When the original contract is lawful no subsequent taking of, or contract to take, illegal interest, will invalidate it; and if sued on, Plaintiff may recover the principle and interest of such original valid contract; but when suit is brought on a new note, tainted with usury, which had been substituted for the original valid one, plaintiff can only recover the original and valid principal with interest thereon up to the time of the taking of illegal interest.

ERROR from Leon Circuit Court.

This case was tried at the Spring Term, 1846, his Honor Judge MACRAE, presiding.

Assumpsit on a Promissory Note.

Plea: Non assumpsit, and a notice setting up usury.

The Plaintiff insisted that so much of the law of 1833, "regulating the rate of interest," as prohibited the taking or reserving of a greater than a certain rate of interest therein expressed, having been repealed by the Act of 1844, there was no law in force, applicable to his case, against the taking of usury. 357

The facts of the case will be found in the opinion of the Court.

A. E. Maxwell, for Plaintiff in Error:

Contended it was the effect of the repeal by the Act of 1844, of the 1st and 2d sections of the Act of 1833, relating to interest, that except as to transactions past and closed, they are to be considered as if they had never existed; and, therefore, defendant cannot now sustain the defence of usury as to any contract made while these sections of the Act of '33 were in force. Statutes of usury are penal statutes, and the consequences which attach to penal statutes generally, also attach to those on the subject of usury. It is a well settled rule of law, that the repeal of a penal statute operates as a release to all who have incurred the penalty, unless there is a saving in the repealing clause to the contrary. Why shall not the same effect follow the repeal of a usury law? To avoid the force of this general principle in this case, it must be shown that statutes of usury form an exception to penal statutes generally. If it be said that the 3d section of the Act of 1833, which was not repealed, is the one relied upon here, it is a sufficient reply that that section does not declare what usury is; and to have any meaning or force, must be connected with the 1st and 2d sections. But these sections are repealed, and all connection between them and the 3d cut off; for they are to be considered as if they "never had existed." Dwarris on Stat., 676. 2 Cond. R. S. C. U. S., 256.

This doctrine, though, is not confined to penal statutes. In some cases, civil rights are affected in the same way by a repealing Act. 1 Hills. R., 324.

It may be contended, as was done below, that this view of the law will have the effect to render lawful and valid any contract which, at the time it was made, was unlawful. But this same objection would equally apply to the case of penal statutes; for their repeal has the effect of legalizing acts which, when committed, were unlawful. The objection is too sweeping. Our law is merely prohibitory. It does not declare the contract, or any part of it, void. The words in the 3d section, "and the interest on the same shall be void," are without meaning. It would be the same thing to say, that the money promised in a note shall be void. These words not making void the 358 contract or any part of it, the whole of said section, fairly construed, amounts to giving a privilege to the "obligor or obligors" to get exonerated from the payment of the interest; so that any law which affects this privilege, affects only the remedy, and not the contract itself.

He contended, also, that the Act of 1833, operated only upon the usury which it prohibited, and did not forbid the recovery of the principal with legal interest. The 1st section of the Act of '33 declares, that all "bonds, contracts, &c., on which a higher rate of interest is received or taken than is hereby allowed, shall forfeit the amount of said interest." "Said interest," evidently refers to "higher rate of interest," for its antecedent; and "higher rate" must mean a rate above the legal rate; and therefore so much as is legal is not to be forfeited. This section declares what usury is, and the 2d and 3d, must be construed in connection, and not inconsistently, with it.

Third. There can be no usury under the Act of 1833, until the party has actually taken or received more than lawful interest. In that act there is nothing said about "reserving" interest, and in this respect it is different from other usury laws. The 1st section of the Act, which declares what usury is, and which imposes a forfeiture, &c., is penal, and must be construed strictly. That section nowhere says that to reserve, or contract for, more than ten per cent. interest, is usury; but to take, accept, or receive more, is prohibited by it. The 3d section is a nullity without the 1st; for it cannot be ascertained when a contract is usurious without reference to the 1st; and, consequently, only that is usury within the meaning of the 3d section, which is declared to be by the section upon which it depends for its construction. This proposition is fortified by reference to decisions under the statute of Anne. Under that Statute the clause which avoids the contract contains the words, "whereby there shall be reserved or taken above," &c.; but the clause making usury a penal offence, only contains the words, "take, accept and receive," &c. It has been repeatedly decided, that under this Statute, there must be an actual taking of excessive interest before the offence of usury is complete; whereas, the contract itself, and the note or other evidence of it, are voided from the time of the making thereof. Why this difference, unless the word reserve makes it. See Fisher, qui tam. vs.

Yakima Law

Beasly, Douglas' R. 235. Maddock vs. Hammet, 7 Term. R., 184. 359
in 10 Eng. Com. Law, R. 91. This last case holds that the taking of a note for usury is not a sufficient taking to constitute the offence. Now, the Act of 1833, has nothing about reserving interest, but only of "taking," &c. Must we not give to this the same construction which has been given to the corresponding clause in the Statute of Ann. The same language is used—the same meaning should be given to both. The criterion of usury in England is different as affecting the contract and as affecting the penalty. In the former case the criterion being "the reserving or taking," &c., in the latter, the criterion being the "taking, accepting or receiving," &c. Here the criterion is the same with reference to both contract and penalty —it being the same which in England tests the usury with reference to the penalty. It should receive the same construction with reference to both contract and penalty, which is there given with reference to the penalty alone.

The reason to sustain this point becomes stronger under the principle that this Statute must be construed strictly. Unless this rule of law be departed from, the Court cannot make the words, "take, accept or receive," mean, "reserve or stipulate for," or any thing else, other than that imparted by their strict letter. "The Court must not, in order to give effect to what they may suppose to be the intention of the Legislature, put upon the provisions of a statute a construc- not supported by the words, though the consequence be to defeat the object of the act." Dwarris, 702—3.

But, the most conclusive point in the case is this—where a contract is originally legal and valid, it will not become tainted by a subsequent taking of, or contract to take, usury. The authorities upon this point are numerous, and they all sustain the proposition here laid down—not one to the contrary. It will be enough to cite merely a few of them. See Blydenburg on Usury, 97—102. 3 Camp., 119. 3 Barn. & Cres., 257. 8 Mass., 256. 19 John., 294. 5 Wend. 295. One, or more, of these cases shows that where there has been a renewal of a good note, and upon renewal there is usury, this shall not prevent a recovery of the old debt upon the money counts, though the new note be valid. Under this law, if usury is proved in the note here sued upon, we are, notwithstanding this, entitled to recover, under the money counts, upon the contract of 1839, which it is not pre- 360 tended was usurious. Unless all these cases be founded in error, and are not law, the judgment of the Court below must be reversed.

J. & L. Branch, for Appellee:

Did the Court err in admitting the documentary evidence? The hand-writing of Mitchell was sufficiently proven. 2 Starkie, 651 And the most overwhelming circumstantial evidence proved that the figures related to the subject matter of this suit. These circumstances and the original papers, were commented on at large.

2. The Counsel for Appellant, contends that inasmuch as the usury law of 1833 was repealed prior to the commencement of this suit, though subsequent to the making of the contract, the act of 1833 cannot be pleaded to defeat this suit.

It is worthy of remark, that the act of 1844 did not indicate any change of policy by the State, but only reduced the legal rate of interest from ten to eight per cent.; and this contract is a greater violation of the act of '44 by two per cent., than the act of '33. But we contend that even if this contract would be legal under the act of '44, it is to be governed by the act of '33, which was in force at the time it was made.

The cases cited by the Counsel for Appellant, do not bear upon the case. 5 Chanch, 281; 1 N. Hamp., 61; and 11 Pick., 350; are all criminal prosecutions. 1 Hill, 320, was a case in which a right to redeem land within two years after a sale under execution, was claimed, after the law granting the privilege was repealed. Dwarris, 676, says, "a repealed statute is to be considered, as to all transactions not past and closed, as if it had never existed." We say this transaction—this contract—was "past and closed," before the repeal of the act of '33. From these cases, we may gather that—1. Criminal, or quasi criminal, (as qui tam), penalties cannot be inflicted after the repeal of the statute inflicting them. 2. Gratuitous favors granted by a law, which the State is under no obligation to grant or continue, are withdrawn by the repeal of the law and the adoption of a different policy. Not a single one of them involves a question of civil right between individuals. We admit that according to those authorities, the usurer in this case cannot be prosecuted and punished under the 2d sec. of the act of '33; nor can he be sued in a qui tam action by an informer under that section. The State will forego punishing him for an act which has ceased to be against its policy; for it is no longer desirable to deter him, or others, from a repetition 361 of the act. But there is an obvious difference between refraining from punishing a man for an act which has ceased to be unlawful, and permitting him to recover the fruits of his iniquity. The doctrine contended for by the Appellant, would be most startling in a country where laws are so short-lived. In a country where a contract is rarely executed before the law under which it was made is repealed, the books would abound in cases in which it has been asserted.

Even in England, where the Parliament is considered omnipotent and knows no control, except the tacit and inherent right of revolution, the Courts have uniformly refused to give to laws a retrospective operation, "unless the legislature in the language used show a clear intention to vary the relation of such parties;" because it would be contrary to reason and subversive of natural rights. Camden, et al., vs. Anderson, 6 D. & E., 723. Jacques vs. Witley, 1 H. Blacks. 65. Chitty on Cont., 5 Am. from 3 Lond. ed., 698. Hitchcock vs. Way, 2 Nev. & P., 72. 6 Ad. & E., 943.

In the United States, the prohibition against interfering with vested rights, or impairing the obligation of contracts, has been so often repeated in the Federal and State Constitutions, that it may be considered as the characteristic of our forms of government. We consequently find the decisions of our Courts uniform against retrospective laws. Ogden vs. Blackledge, 2 Cranch., 272. Lewis vs. Brackenridge, 1 Blackf., 220. Day's Digest, 433. Story on Confl. of Laws, 205. Hannay vs. Eve., 3 Chanch, 242. Springfield Bank vs. Merrick, 14 Mass., 322. Russel vs. Degrand, 15 Mass., 36. 1 Kent, 455. Brunswick vs. Litchfield, 2 Greenl., 28. Ib. 275. King vs. Dedham Bank, 15 Mass., 477. McMahon vs. The Mayor, 2 Harr. & J., 41. In most of these cases, the Legislature undertook, in express terms, to make the law retrospective, and the Courts declared the laws unconstitutional and void. How much less will Courts make them retrospective by mere construction and implication! The law existing at the time the contract is made enters into and forms a part of the contract; and to alter the rights given to either party by that law, is to impair the obligation of the contract. On this point we might, if they were not already so familiar to the Court, cite the decisions of the Supreme Court of U. S., and the Courts of almost all the States of the Union, against the validity of 362 relief and stay laws—the numerous devices that have been unsuccessfully resorted to to delay the collection of debts, and the strictness with which the Courts have confined the Legislature to bona fide legislation on the remedy. But admitting that the cases cited for Appellant are applicable, our case is untouched. The act of '44, only repeals the 1st. and 2d. secs. of the act of '33, leaving the 3d. in force. That sec. (the 3d.) declares, "that if any note," &c, &c., "shall be given on a usurious contract, the interest on the same shall be void, and the obligor forever exonerated from the payment of the same." But, says the Counsel, what is "usury" after the 1st. and 2d. secs. are repealed? We reply, we can certainly refer to the 1st, and 2d. secs., to assist us in interpreting the 3d., and to enable us to ascertain what the Legislature meant by a technical word used in the 3d.

3. Appellant contends that money must be taken before the usury is consummated, and relies on Douglas' Rep., 235—6; and Maddock, qui tam. vs. Hammett, 7 D. & E., 183. These cases only prove that the offence is not committed until money is taken. The policy of the law is to prevent the money from being taken—to prevent the offence from being committed; and, therefore, it avoids the contract to pay it. He now asks this Court to enable him to take the money —to enable him to commit an offence for which he would be indictable under the 6th sec. of the act of '33. Would not this Court be particeps criminis if it were to do so? Counsel also relies on the phraseology of Stat. of Anne, to show that money must pass. The words of that Stat. are—"all notes by which usury is reserved or taken, shall be void," &c., showing that usury may be taken by note. Vide, Chitty on Cont., 548.

4. Appellant contends that he is entitled to his original claim with legal interest thereon.

If so, then our usury law would be a nullity. The law makes the whole interest void from the time the usury commenced; yet, Appellant insists on his right to recover interest on the same debt during the same time, by the simple expedient of falling back on a different evidence of the contract.

5. To what extent does the usury affect the contract? The 1st sec. of the act says, "shall forfeit the amount of said interest." The 3d. sec. says, "the interest on the same shall be void." Under these two secs., we contend that the whole interest on the usurious contract 363 is void—that is, that the interest on the debt ceased from the moment that usury commenced.

Long & Walker, also for Defendant:

This judgment is sought to be reversed on four distinct grounds: 1. That since the act of 1844, repealing the 1st and 2d sections of the usury act of 1833, it has become lawful to collect the interest contracted for on the note now sued on, although the same was void at the time the note was made.

The authorities cited to this point are not applicable. The case from Dwarris on Stat., 676, declares that the repeal of a Bankrupt law, without any reservation in favor of pending cases, deprives the Court of any further jurisdiction in such pending cases. The case from 5th Cranch, 281, declares that the repeal of a law under which a vessel and cargo are condemned, while the cause is pending in the Appellate Court, operates as an abatement of the suit. The case in 1st Hills. Rep., 324, simply declares that where a statute allows a person whose land is sold under decree of Chancery to redeem the same on certain terms, within a given time, and the statute is repealed after the sale and before the redemption, there remains no right to redeem —the same being a mere gratuitous privilege, which may be withdrawn at any time. The case in 1 N. Hamp. Rep., 61, declares that a qui tam action for a penalty, cannot be maintained after the repeal of the law imposing the penalty; and the case in 11 Pick., 350, only reiterates the familiar doctrine, that a man cannot be indicted after the repeal of the law which he is alleged to have violated.

The obvious reason why these cases, which are believed to be good law, do not apply to the case at bar, is this: Mitchell is neither indicted criminally for usury, nor is this a qui tam action against him to recover the penalty inflicted by the first and second sections of the usury act of 1833. On the contrary, he is seeking to enforce that part of a contract which was unlawful and void when made. I am unable to perceive any resemblance in principle between the two cases. But this is put beyond all question by the authorities, in point, cited by my colleague.

2. The second ground relied on for reversal, is—that the Court below erred in holding that by the act of 1833, a person who contracts for more than lawful interest, shall not be permitted to collect 364 any interest whatever. The verbal criticism of the act, by which this conclusion is arrived at, seems rather deficient in force. The first clause of the third section declares, "That when any note, notes, bond or bonds, shall or may be upon, or on account of, any usurious contract, the interest on the same shall be void, and the obligor, of obligors, forever exonerated from the payment of the same."—This is too plain for comment.

3. The third ground assumed on the other side, is—that under our statute, in order to constitute usury, more than lawful interest must be actually received, not merely contracted for or reserved. If this be so, it follows, that a defendant can never successfully resist the payment of the interest arising upon a "note or notes, bond or bonds," "upon or on account of any usurious contract," although the third section of the act expressly declares the same to be void, and forever exonerates the obligor, or obligors, "from the payment of the same." It may be true that nothing short of actual payment of usury will justify a qui tam action for the penalty inflicted by the second section, or an indictment prescribed by the 6th section. But it is little less than absurd to say that a defendant must pay the usury before he can resist its payment, which he is expressly exonerated from ever doing This distinction is clearly laid down in Blydenburg on Usury, so much quoted on the other side, at page 129, viz: "The difference in the effect of the stat. in the avoiding of the contract, and the accruing of the penalty, is therefore manifest. As soon as an usurious contract is made, it is ipso facto ab initio void. But the penalty does not arise upon the making of the contract. That is only incurred by the execution of the contract; or by the receipt of excessive interest without any previous usurious agreement." Quere—Whether Mitchell will not be subject to the penalty prescribed by the 2d section of the act of 1844, and indictable under the 6th sec. of the act of 1833, if he shall now recover and collect this interest? The contract is not executed until payment; and it is the execution of the lawful contract, which is penal and criminal, says the authority above quoted. It amounts to this: Mitchell is desirous to commit a crime and incur a penalty; and finding it difficult to accomplish this object, invokes the aid of the Court. It will scarcely be contended, we imagine.

4. But the fourth point seems to be relied upon with most confidence, viz: That the debt sued on, and evidenced by the note in 365 question, may be recovered with legal interest, as the same was not originally tainted by usury, under the money counts in the declaration, although the interest secured by the note may be void, &c. The authorities read to this point, from England, Massachusetts and Maryland, do establish the principle that where a note is made wholly void on account of usury, the original debt for which the note was given remains, and may be recovered, if sued for in the proper manner and at the proper time. But that is not the case here. This note is not void, or ever was. Therefore, its execution and continued existence as a valid security for the debt, was a perfect extinguishment of the demand for which it was given. If the usurious note had been void, its execution would not, of course, have extinguished the claim. Therefore, it follows, that as the Flake notes were delivered up and cancelled, in consideration of the note sued on, the effect of the transaction was to give up a note bearing interest for one bearing no interest. This Mitchell had a right to do if he chose; and it may be presumed that he is willing to risk the chances of getting no interest at all, for the sake of the chances of realizing a greater sum than legal interest.

Our statute expressly declares that the interest shall be void—that is, the interest shall never be paid; "the obligor shall be forever exonorated from the payment of the same." Now, interest is the rent or hire money—a price agreed to be paid for forbearance in its collection. The money due upon the Flake notes was agreed to be forborne at an unlawful price; and when that occurs, the statute declares that no price for the forbearance shall be collected. Plaintiff has a judgment for his original debt; to ask interest also, is to ask to nullify the statute.

L. A. Thompson, for Plaintiff in Error.

HAWKINS, Justice, delivered the following opinion:

This was an action of assumpsit brought originally against the defendant Doggett and J. W. Cotten. Cotten dying before the trial, the suit abated as to him, but continued as to Doggett.

The declaration contained a special count on the note, and the usual money counts. The note declared on was in the following words and figures, to-wit:

"On or before the first day of January next, we or either of us 366 promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell or order, fifteen thousand nine hundred and fifty-five dollars, with ten per cent. interest from date, for value received this the 2d day of January, 1841."

"H. DOGGETT.
"J. W. COTTEN."

(Endorsed),

"Received the interest on the within note up to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-four, this the 5th January, 1844."

To the declaration the defendant pleaded the general issue and notice of usury. The notice sets up, that the defendants being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $14,504 65, on the second day of January, 1840, it was agreed by and between them, that in consideration of forbearance by the plaintiff for the space of one year, to wit, from the second day of January, 1840, until the first day of January, 1841, the defendants would agree to give and allow to the plaintiff the sum of $1,813 01, by way of interest for said forbearance. The notice then avers that this interest was at a greater rate than at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, to wit, at the rate of twelve and a half per cent.; and that in pursuance of such corrupt and usurious agreement, the defendants executed and delivered, and the plaintiff accepted, his further note for the (amount) of $362 61. That the defendant will insist, that the said note is void as to so much as is for interest on $14,504 65; that is to say, for the said sum of $1813 01. And the notice further avers that on the 2d day of January, 1841, the defendant being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $13,186 05, with the interest thereon, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, from the 1st day of January, 1839, it was corruptly and usuriously agreed by and between them, that said plaintiff would forbear and give day of payment for the further space of one year, until the first day of January, 1842, in consideration that the defendant would give and allow to said plaintiff for interest on said sum of $13,186 05, for three years from the first day of January, 1839, to 1st January, 1842, the sum of $5125 98, being more than at the rate of ten per cent., but at the rate of twelve 95-100ths, for the forbearance of one hundred dollars for one year; and that in pursuance of such usurious agreement, the defendant did on the second day of January, 1841, execute and deliver to said plaintiff the note in the declaration men-

367 tioned: and the said defendant, Doggett, did on the same day and year execute and deliver his further note for $362 61, payable on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and his note for $398 87, payable on the first day of January, 1842, all which were accepted by plaintiff; and that it will be insisted that the sum of $5125 98, being for interest from the first day of January, 1839, when usurious interest was first taken, was and is void.

On Monday, the 25th day of May, 1846, the cause came to trial, and the plaintiff gave in evidence the note as before set forth.

On the part of the defendant witnesses were introduced, who swear that the following papers were in handwriting of Mitchell:

1. "On or before the first day of January next, we jointly and severally, promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell, or order, thirteen thousand one hundred and eighty-six dollars, for value received, with ten per cent. interest from date, this the 1st January, 1839."

(Endorsed on face, "Paid—H. Doggett.")

2. "On or before the first day of January next, I promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell or order, three hundred and sixty-two dollars sixty-one cents, for value received, this the 2d day of January, 1841.

"H. DOGGETT."

3. "On or before the first day of January next, I promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell, or order, three hundred and ninety-eight dollars and eighty-seven cents, for value received, this the 2d January, 1841.

"H. DOGGETT."

"One day after date, I promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell, or bearer, at Tallahassee, six thousand, six hundred and seventy-six dollars, and sixty-four cents, for value received, with ten per cent. interest from the first day of the present month, this the fifth day of January, 1844.

J. H. T. Lorimer was introduced as a witness, who proved that the following notes were in the handwriting of one William Flake:

5. "One day after date, we jointly and severally promise to pay William Flake, or bearer, five thousand and sixteen dollars, for value received.

"Jan'y 1, 1838."

(Endorsed),

"Jan'y 1, 1838. Received of the within note, four hundred and thirteen dollars and fifty cents. Received on the within note, one 368 thousand three hundred and sixty-nine dollars and 11-100, January 1st, 1838."

6. "On or before the first of January, eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, we jointly and severally phomise to pay William Flake, or bearer, eight thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars, with interest from the 13th December, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, for value received.

"H. DOGGETT,
"J. W. COTTEN."

"January 1st, 1838."

Besides these notes, certain papers were introduced by the defendant Doggett. Upon them were figures and calculations, sworn to be those of Mitchell. They appear to have been so clearly made in connection with the note sued on, and the other notes before set forth, and so clearly to have reference to them and the transactions between the parties, and carry upon their face so strong evidence of the true nature of the whole affair, that we think the Court below was right in submitting them as testimony to the jury, for their consideration.

Upon this evidence the case went to the jury, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff for fourteen thousand one hundred and forty-one dollars and nine-nine cents.

From the notes as produced in evidence for deefndant, and the exhibits containing the figures and calculations of Mitchell, the following may be stated as the facts of the case:

Originally there was two notes given by Doggett and Cotten to William Flake,

One dated 1 Jan'y, 1838,	$ 5,016 00
Credited by payments to,	1,782 16
Which deducted leave,	$ 3,233 34
Interest to first January, 1839,	258 66
Making,	$ 3,492 00
The other note from the same date, with interest from 13th December, 1836,	8,333 00
Interest to 1st January, 1839,	1,361 05
Two notes added together,	$13,186 05

On the first day of January, 1839, a new note was given for this 369 amount, by Dogett and Cotten, and payable to Mitchell, (see, 1). who would seem to have obtained the two notes from Flake. The following statement may illustrate the true situation of the whole affair:

	$13,186 05
10 pr. ct. int. to 1st Jan'y, 1840,	1,318 60
	$14,504 65
(Inter't on this amt. 2 1-2, to 1840, is $362 61, for which note marked 2 was given.)
Int. to 1 January, 1841,	1,450 40
For this amt. note sued on was given,	$15,955 05
10 pr. ct. interest to January, 1842, is	1,595 50
		1,595 50
2 1-2 pr. ct. to Jan., 1842, is $398 87, which with compound interest at 12 1-2, to 1 Jan., 1844, is (Note 3)		507 06
	$17,550 55
Interest to Jan'y, 1845	1,755.05
		1,755 05
2 1-2 pr. ct. to Jan'y, 1843, is		438 75
	$19,305 60
10 pr. ct. to 1 Jan'y, 1844,	1,930 56
		1,930 56
2 1-2 to 1 Jan'y, 1844		449 73
	$21,236 16	$6,676 65

The aggregate of these amounts carried out, would seem to constitute the note of 1844, marked 4.

The errors assigned by the plaintiff are as follows:

1. The Court erred in admitting as evidence the papers marked C. D. E. F. G. & H., and A. & B.

2. The Court erred in refusing the 1st, 2d and 3d instructions asked for by the plaintiff, and in substituting the instruction it gave for the 3d above named.

3d. The Court erred in allowing the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th in- 370 structions asked for by defendant.

4th. The Court erred in giving instructions 1st and 2d, named in the bill of exceptions, and given after allowing instructions for defendant.

The first question for the consideration of the Court, is the effect of the repeal of the statute of usury of 1833, by the act of 1844. The first section of the act of 1833, is to this effect: That no person shall upon any contract take, directly or indirectly, for the loan of any money, &c., above the date of ten dollars for the loan of one hundred dollars for one year; and all bonds, &c., for payment or delivery of any money, goods or merchandise, to be lent, on which a higher rate of interest is received or taken, shall forfeit the amount of said interest. Section 2d, is to the effect, that any person taking, accepting or receiving, above the rate of ten dollars for the forbearance of one hundred dollars for one year, shall forfeit and lose for every such offence the whole amount of interest due; one half to be paid into the treasury of the county where the offence is committed, and the other half to him or them who will inform and sue for the same, to be removed in an action of debt in any competent court. Section 3d declares, that when any note or notes, &c., shall be upon, or on account of, any usurious contract, the interest on the same shall be void, and the obligor, or obligors, forever exonerated from the payment of the same, &c.

On the 15th day of March, 1844, the two first sections of the foregoing act of 1833, were repealed, and new sections substituted.

There can be no truth of the truth or validity of the assertion, that where there is a repeal of a penal statute, no penalty can be enforced, nor punishment inflicted, for violations of the law while in force, unless some special provisions were made for the purpose.—This principle is too well settled to admit of controversy. Nor can it be denied that the Legislature can alter or modify the remedy as to the enforcement of contracts, unless carried to the extent to take away virtually, or substantially, the remedy.

If this were the case for the enforcement of the penalty, as prescribed under the second section of the act, the conclusion of the Court would be at once in accordance with the views of the counsel for appellant; but the Court think there is a broad distinction between a law affecting the remedy, or creating a penalty, and a law in relation to the contract itself. The authorities, as cited for the plaintiff in error, are mainly directed to one or the other of the two first cases, viz., the law affecting the remedy, or in regard to the enforcement of a penalty, where the law creating it has been repealed. The case at bar must stand upon the law in relation to the contract itself, and we can find no authority that declares, that a contract rendered void by statute, can, upon a repeal of that statute, acquire a vitality which it did not before possess. Sound policy, justice and morality, unite in stern opposition to such a principle.

On the other hand there are authorities entitled to the highest possible respect, which can be cited in support of the principle, we are prepared to assert, viz., where a contract is illegal, at the time of its inception, by force of a statute, no action can be maintained upon it although the statute is reepaled, which declared it illegal "ex nudo pacto, non oritur actio." Judge Story remarks, "where a contract was made in France to smuggle goods into our own country in violation of our laws, the contract will be treated by our Courts as utterly void, as an intended fraud upon our laws. And in such a case, brought into controversy in our Courts, it will be wholly immaterial whether the parties are citizens or foreigners. So, if a collusive capture and condemnation are procured in our Courts by fraud of our laws by foreigners, who are even enemies at the time, their contract for the distribution of the prize proceeds will be held utterly void by our Courts; and it will make no difference that the laws have since been repealed, or that the war has since ceased, for the contract being clearly in fraud of the laws existing at the time, the execution of it ought not to be enforced by the Courts of the country, whose laws it was intended to evade." Story's Conflict of Laws, 205.

In Hannay vs. Eve, 3 Cranch, 242, we find the same doctrine as laid down by Judge Story, and the opinion of the Court pronounced by Chief Justice Marshall.

So in Jacques vs. Withy & Reid, 1 H. Black. R., 65. This case would appear analagous to that at bar. There was a statute of 19th George the 3d, in relation to the purchase and insuring of lottery tickets, with a penalty for an infringement of its provisions. It was repealed by a statute of 22d of George 3d. The decision in this 372 case goes to the effect to declare that a contract declared by statute to be illegal, is not made good by a subsequent repeal of the statute.

The same principle is enforced in the case of the President, Directors & Co., of the Springfield Bank vs. Samuel Merrick, et al., 14 Mass., 322. In Massachusetts there was a law that the bills and notes of Banks not incorporated by law, should not be received or negotiated by the banking corporations of that State, under a heavy penalty. It was holden, that a promissory note payable in such bills to a banking corporation, made while the statute was in force, was void; and that no action could be maintained upon it, by the promisees after the statute was repealed. Chief Justice Parker remarks, that "the subsequent repeal of a statute could have no effect upon a contract made while it was in force. As well might a contract made for the purpose of trade with an enemy, during a war, be purged of its illegality by the return of peace." In the argument of the cause, the case of Camden vs. Anderson, 1 Bos. & Pul., 277, was cited by the counsel for the plaintiff in support of his side of the question.—Judge Parker says in relation to it: "The case of Camden vs. Anderson does not prove the point it was cited to support. It would seem rather, from the provisions of the statute commented upon in that case, that when a penal statute was repealed, it might still be pleaded against any contract made in contravention of it, unless in the repeal act provision was made to the contrary." We have examined the authorities cited for the plaintiff in error with attention; but we cannot think they are in point as to this case; and even if they were, they must be borne down by the decisions cited, sanctioned as they are by the names of the great and illustrious jurists we have quoted. The plaintiff in error has cited the following from Dwarris on Statutes: "When an act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered (except as to those transactions past and closed) as if it never had existed." Without intending to controvert this as a general proposition, we must remark that except as to the law in relation to remedies and penalties, it seems rather broadly and unqualifiedly declared. Without stopping to ask if a contract consummated (though we think there is force in the suggestion) is not embraced by the terms "transactions past and closed," so as to bring it within the exception of this dictum, we find this principle met by another, which is not only the doctrine of the English law, but is founded on principles of general jurisprudence, and it is this, "that 373 no statute shall be construed to have a retrospective operation without express words to that effect." 7 Bacon Abr. Statute C., 439. "A retrospective statute would partake in its character of the mischief of an ex post facto law as to all cases of crimes and penalties, and in measures relating to contracts or property, would violate every sound principle." Dwarris on Sta., 680, 681. Would we not, by applying the principle asserted to the case at bar, give the repealing law of 1844, an ex post facto operation, and really impair the obligation of contracts? The relative rights of the parties would certainly be changed by granting to one a privilege not before enjoyed, and imposing upon the other an obligation which previously did not exist under the law as it stood, at the time the contract was made. The law of 1833, declares that all interest over the rate of ten per cent. shall be void, and the obligor forever exonerated from the payment of the same. Is not this exoneration by virtue of the law governing the contract at the time it was entered into, a right—a right vested by the law of the land, (that it is a mere negative right can create no difference in principle), and can it now be divested by posterior legislation?

To admit all this, and to say that a contract declared a nullity by a statute, a contract that never had an existence, can, by the galvanic process of repeal of that statute, have infused into it a new life and being, so as to be enforced in a court of justice, we must admit, is at variance with all our notions of sound policy, morality and law. Having decided that the repeal of the statute of 1833, does not affect contracts entered into before its repeal, the case before us must therefore be governed by that statute, as though no repeal had ever taken place.

We are clearly of the opinion, that by the letter and spirit of the statute, whenever illegal interest is taken or contracted for, the whole interest is void. The legal interest, when agreed for in conjunction with usurious interest, receives the taint of usury, and is extinguished and becomes at once nudum pactum. Nor is it necessary to establish usury as contended for by plaintiff in error, that the plaintiff actully took or received more for interest than the law declared lawful; and it is enough that it is only promised to be paid. Hammond vs. Hoppin, 13 Wendall, 505. So, if at the time of a loan, a note be taken as a security for principal and usurious interest, it will be inferred that the money was lent on usurious terms. Scott vs. Mitch- 374 ell, 4 Doug., 318. And "if parties enter into usurious agreement, any remote security for any part of the illegal interest, or to enforce the tainted contract with a distinct and valid debt, cannot be enforced." 7 Pickering, 40. Chitty on Con., 706. 1 Greenleaf, 167. Moncure vs. Dermott, 13th Peters, 345.

In Jackson vs. Packard, 6 Wendell, 415, we see that a mortgage taken on a loan of money including the taint of usury, destroys the whole security.

The point as to the necessity of proof of the receiving the interest, is clearly laid down in Clark vs. Badgley, 3 Halstead, 234. It is there decided, that if the contract be for usurious interest, although no usurious (interest) is taken, the contract is usurious; and it is immaterial whether the usurious interest is secured by a distinct instrument, or is included in the instrument which secures the principal.

So, in Warren vs. Crabtree, 1 Greenlf., 171, we find, "if the principal and interest are secured by distinct notes, or the usury by a parol promise only, and both are executed at the same time, all are void; because such promise to pay such interest, constituted a part of the contract for the loan, and the statute declares the whole contract void. If such a device could protect the lender from the penalties of the statute, it would always be evaded with impunity."

In order to render the offence complete, so as to subject the lender to the penalty under the statute, there must be an actual receipt of the usurious interest; but though the penalty of the statute be not incurred till the usurious interest be received, still the contract may be void, without such receipt. Chitty on Contracts, 712. And this law seems in compliance with our statute, (second section), which contains the words, "take, accept or receive." Blydenbr. on Usury, 129.

We come now to the discussion of the last point assumed by plaintiff in error, "that where the original contract is lawful, no subsequent taking of, or contract to take, illegal interest, will invalidate it; and, therefore, that plaintiff may recover principal and interest of the original valid contract." The authorities are full and decided upon this point, and the doctrine cannot be denied. 8 Mass. 256. 5 Wendell, 595. Blydenburgh on Usury, 97, 102. Authorities cited by counsel for plaintiff in error. So also, 3 T. R., 539. 1 Saund. 294.

375 The notes given by Doggett and Cotten to Flake, were extinguished by the new and substituted note given by them to Mitchell on the 1st Jan'y., 1839.

The note of 1839, was clearly upon a good and valid consideration, and if that note had been sued on, we are not prepared to say but that it would have remained unaffected by any subsequent usurious contract, and all the legal interest upon it, have been enforced. It would seem by circumstances of the case, the inference is clear. (and usury may be inferred from circumstances.—Fulmer vs. Hays, 3 McCord, 256), that illegal interest was bargained for from 1 January, 1840 to 1841, as evidenced by the small note for $362 61, and dated 1 Jan'y., 1841, and clearly given for the excess over and above legal interest on $14,504 65, for the period above set forth, to-wit, from 1st January, 1840, to 1st January, 1841. This small note and the note sued upon, were given at one and at the same time, the legal portion of the interest from 1840 to 1841, being secured in the note in suit, the illegal interest in the note marked 2, or small note.

The note of 1839, was extinguished by the substituted note of 1841, and the question now arises, was the latter note based upon or on account of any usurious contract?

If the amount contained in the small note had been embraced in the note in suit, clearly the contract would have been usurious. The fact that the notes were separate, we see, creates no difference.—Their separation was a mere device, a shift, a shallow artifice. The true question is, what was the contract? and we are indifferent as to the mode or manner of its enforcement. If the contract was usurious, the means resorted to to enforce its execution become impotent. These two notes, therefore, must be considered as constituting one entire transaction—as an (entirety), and embracing the same subject-matter.

It appears, that thees notes, the small note altogether, and the note in suit in part, were given to secure the interest or premium for past forbearance on the note of 1839, from 1840 to 1841. Is a contract to pay illegal interest for past forbearance illegal? Clearly so; and we refer to the case of Joseph L. Willie vs. Ezra Green, 2 New Hamp., 333. Here it was decided that a contract to pay more than legal interest for past forbearance is illegal. With these views, there can be no doubt but that the note sued on, intending to secure the 376 payment of illegal interest from 1840 to 1841, became an usurious contract. The interest contained in the small note being usurious, and being as it were a portion of the note in suit, it taints the legal in that, corresponding in time, for which it was given, to-wit, from 1 Jan'y., 1840, to Jan'y., 1841, for the law says that when usurious interest is taken, the interest shall be void.

We are therefore of opinion, that as much of the interest on $14,504 65, from 1 Jan'y., 1840, to 1 Jan'y., 1841, as is embraced in the note sued is void, and was properly deducted by the jury in their verdict.

The facts further shew, that at the time the note in suit was given, another small note for $398 87 (3) was given, embracing the illegal interest on the note sued up to 1842, and that the amount of this note with compound interest at twelve and a half per cent. to Jan'y., 1844, and all the accruing interest upon the note in suit, legal and illegal, were embraced in a separate note given on 1 Jan'y., 1844, marked 4. Here is another distinct note intended, beyond doubt, to evade the statute of usury. We think we have said enough in relation to this point, to declare that no interest is payable on the note declared on from the day it was given, it being clearly based on usurious consideration and therefore void.

It is contended that the original consideration being valid, a new note substituted, though tainted with usury, would be valid, inasmuch as it was a subsequent agreement. We have already said, perhaps sufficient upon this subject; but we have authority strongly in point to show the reverse. Here it must be recollected there is a new note substituted and given in lieu of the old one. How much soever the principle contended for might have applied to the former note, it has no reference to the new contract. The case of Swartout vs. Payne, 19 John. Rep., 296, is directly in point, and we set it out at some length.

The plaintiff in this case received from the defendant a note for four hundred dollars, drawn by Titus Goodman and endorsed by Vissher and Goodman, in payment for lands sold and conveyed by plaintiff and wife to defendant. The note was received as part of the consideration money, upon defendant's assurance that it was good as the bank, and would be punctually paid.

Judge Spencer, who delivered the opinion of the Court, remarks: "If it shall appear that the note was void for usury, and that the de- 377 fendant knew it to be so, there can be no doubt of the plaintiff's right to recover:" that is, on the original consideration of the contract, viz., the value of the land sold.

"It appeared by the evidence, that the defendant received this note which he passed to the plaintiff, in renewal of a former note, and that on giving up the first note, and taking the note in question, the defendant exacted and took from T. Goodman, jun., an additional note for a premium for renewing the first note.

Judge Spencer further goes on to say: "The first note is not shewn to be usurious, and we must therefore consider that as a bona fide security, and a bone fide debt from the parties on it to the defendant. The amount of the argument on the part of the defendant is, that the subsequent usury in taking the new note did not affect or destroy the antecedent debt, which was free from usuary. This is undoubtedly true, and Gray vs. Fowler, 1 H. Black., 462, and 1 Saund., 295, A, and the authorities here cited, fully maintain the position. But is is equally certain, that if in receiving the new security, a rate of interest above seven per cent. was received for forbearance, the new securities are void by the statute; and in this view, it is immaterial whether the illegal interest was reserved and made payable by a distinct note, or was incorporated into one note. They are considered as one assurance and all are void, into whose hands soever they may come. The note being a nullity, according to the case of Markle vs. Hatfield, (B John. R., 455), the plaintiff had a right to sue on the original contract." Judgment for plaintiff.

With our view thus expressed, we think the verdict of the jury in the Court below was in compliance with law, and should not be disturbed. In the decision of the question we have, of course, regarded the the subject in a point of view purely legal. Whether the law governing interest is founded upon true policy or political expediency, is not for us to enquire, nor for us to ask whether the taking usury is an act immoral in itself, or only rendered immoral by arbitrary enactment. We cannot draw distinctions in our decisions between malum prohibitum and malum in se, but must declare the law as we ind it.

Per Curiam. The judgment of the Court below is affirmed.

DENISON B. WOOD and NATHANIEL J. DEBLOIS, trading, &c., as 377
D. B. WOOD & CO., vs. BANK OF THE STATE OF GEORGIA.

In cases of judgment by default, the plaintiff is bound to see the regularity of his judgment, and that his declaration and pleadings are correct at law, so as to entitle him to such judgment upon an inspection of the record.

Where a writ of summons ad respondeudum was dated 18th December, and made returnable "on the first Monday in December next," but which, by the return of the officer thereon, appeared to have been received in his office on 18th November, and to have been served on defendant on the 19th November: held, that after an appearance by the defendant, and a judgment without objection, this Court will not reverse the judgment for such defect or irregularity; and that if defendant wished to avail himself of such defect in the writ, he should have taken exception in the Court below by motion to quash, or otherwise, before final judgment.

Apart from radical errors apparent o frecord, the proper office of this Court is not to repair mere omissions and irregularities of the parties of their Counsel in the Court below; but errors committed by the latter in decisions made upon points submitted to it, or refusals to decide questions so submitted.

The case of Dorman vs. Bigelow, decided at this term, referred to.

The entry of an Attorney's name by the Clerk on a docket regularly kept for that purpose, is, under the Statute of this State, a plea entered of record to show that the defendant appears and contests the action, and that he claims an imparlance at least for the purpose of further preparation or reflection as to the mode of such defence.

ERROR from Franklin County.

His Honor Judge DOUGLAS, presided at the trial of this case, at the Fall Term, 1845, of Franklin Circuit Court.

Assumpsit on a Bill of Exchange, of which the following is a copy:

"APALACHICOLA, 6 Feb., 1844.

"Exchange for $8,500.

Ninety days after sight of this first of Exchange second unpaid, pay to the order of ourselves, eight thousand five hundred dollars, value received, and charge the same to account as advised.

"Your obedient servants,

"D. B. WOOD & CO.

Endorsed on face: "Feb. 21, 1844—Buck & Co."

379 Endorsed:

"D. B. Wood & Co., pay to the order of J. Henry, Cashier.

"H. T. HALL & J. A. DEBLOIS.

"Pay to F. W. Edwards, Esq., Cashier, or order.

"J. HENRY, Cashier."

The writ of summons was dated 18th December, 1844, and made returnable "on the first Monday in December next." By the return of the Marshal, the writ came to his hands on 18th November, 1844, and was served on defendant on 19th November, 1844. The declaration was filed on 23d December, 1844, and contained a special and the money counts.

Thereupon an appearance was entered for defendants, by the entry of the names of their counsel on the Clerk's docket. On the 4th August, 1845, plaintiff's counsel filed an affidavit in the Clerk's office of a default by the defendants to file a plea for seventy days, as required by the rules of Court; and at the Fall Term, 1845, a judgment by default was taken for want of a plea.

There was no bill of exceptions, but the following assignment of errors, will show the grounds on which plaintiff in error relied:

1. Because the said writ of summons is illegal and void, not being returnable to the Term of the Court next succeeding the date of the issuing of the writ. The writ is dated 18 Dec., 1844, and is returnable on the 1st Monday of December next.

2d. Because a default is entered against the said defendants below on the 4th August, 1845, before the return day of the process.

3d. Because the plaintiff below has not in his declaration averred any demand of payment of the bill sued upon to have been made upon the acceptor.

4th. Because the said plaintiff below has not, in his said declaration, averred any refusal of payment by the acceptor; in default of which, if liable, still the defendants were liable.

5th. Because the said plaintiff below has not in his said declaration alleged the non-payment of the second of said sett of Exchange.

6th. Because the said plaintiff below has not in his said declaration alleged the precise time of the protest for non-payment.

7th. Because it appears from the bill of exchange filed in the cause, that the title thereto was not in the plaintiffs, but in one F. W. Edwards, Cashier, to whom it had been specially endorsed.

380 W. G. M. Davis and L. A. Thompson, for Plaintiffs in Error.

Carmack & Baker, for Defendants.

MACRAE, J., delivered the following opinion:

This case has come up by writ of error, from the judgment of the Circuit Court of Franklin County, rendered in an action of assumpsit brought by the Bank of the State of Georgia against D. B. Wood & Co., merchants, &c., to recover the amount of a bill of exchange drawn by the defendants and endorsed to the plaintiffs.

The declaration contains a special count on a bill of exchange for $8,500 drawn by defendants, and the usual money counts. Judgment by default and damages were duly assessed by a jury under a writ of enquiry.

There is no bill of exceptions returned in this case, but it has been brought up to this Court by writ of error, under which various ground of error have been ssigned, the principal of which, however, as disclosed by the record, is that the writ under which the action proceeded, "is illegal and void, not being returnable to the Term of the Court next succeeding the date of the issuing of the writ."

There is no question that in cases of judgment by default, the plaintiff is bound to see to the regularity of his judgment, and that his declaration and pleading are correct at law, so as to entitle him to such judgment upon an inspection of the record.

Let us then, examine the situation of this case in the Court below, and enquire whether the law has been complied with so far as to entitle the plaintiff to judgment upon the pleadings of record. In making this enquiry, it is necessary, upon the question which has been raised, to look at the writ in its connection with the other proceedings of the case; and it is insisted for the defendant in error, that we shall also, in the same connection take notice of the docket of the Court below, a transcript of which has been sent here under a writ of certiorari, in order to avoid the objection thus set up.

It appears that on the 15th day of November, 1844, the plaintiff's attorney filed his praecipe agreeably to our statute, with the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Franklin county, on which the latter issued the writ of summons and respondendum in question, bearing date the 18th of December, 1844, and made returnable "on the first Monday of December next." On this writ the folowing return was endorsed by the Marshal who served it: "Received in office, 18th Nov'r.,

1844, and served personally by copy on D. B. Wood, and by copy 381 for N. J. Debleis left at his office with a white person over fifteen years of age. R. MYERS, Marshal, Nov. 19th, 184. Pr. H. R. TAYLOR, D. M.

On the 23d day of December, 1844, the plaintiff, by his attorney, filed his declaration, immediately after which on the amended record is the following entry:

"And thereupon the said defendants by Davis and Brockenbrough their attorneys, entered their appearance in this cause."

The record next sets forth an affidavit of the plaintiffs' attorney made on the 4th August, 1845, pursuant to law, to the effect that defandant had failed to file any plea in this cause for seventy days in accordance with the rules of Court, and praying judgment. Next appears the entry of judgment by default for the want of a plea, entered 19th of Dec., 1845, and then follows the award of a writ of enquiry, which was executed the same day, and final judgment entered up against the defendant accordingly.

This is a summary of the whole of the proceedings appearing of record.

We deem it pertinent here to suggest, that a course different from that which has been pursued in the Court below in this case, might, and perhaps ought to have been taken by one or other of the parties, by the plaintiff, in correcting any mistake that may have existed in the process, if any such appeared, by amendment or a new proceeding; or by the defendant in taking exception to the writ, by motion to quash or otherwise, before final judgment was rendered. Be this as it may, the ground of error here assumed gives us occasion to repeat what has been declared in other opinions of this Court, pronounced during the present term, that apart from radical errors apparent record, the proper office of this Court is not to repair mere omissions and irregularities of the parties, or their counsel in the Court below; but errors committed by the latter, in decisions made upon points submitted to it, or refusals to decide any questions so submitted. In this instance, neither of the parties appear to have taken any notice of what seems to have been a mere blunder in the inception of the suit, much less to have brought it to the consideration of the Court; whereas, had it been noticed it might have been rectified without inconvenience or expense.

We are, however, of the opinion that, in the aspect in which the 382 case presents itself, the entry of the attorney's names by the Clerk on the docket regularly kept for that purpose according to law, cured the irregularity occasioned by the erroneous date of the writ, in virtue of the 22d section of the act of this State, concerning judicial proceedings, (Duval's Comp., page 95), which provides, "that when the name of any attorney of the Court is placed upon the appearance docket as counsel for the defendant, it shall be considered as so far equivalent to filing the general issue, as to prevent a judgment by default, though no plea or answer be in fact filed in said cause."

This Court will take judicial notice of the law in this respect, and in view of the necessary connection of this entry of appearance with the other proceedings in the case, will, to that extent, regard such entry on the docket as matter of record, so as to save the judgment, if there be no other objection.

All pleas are matter of record, and although the entry in question, may not be in fact a plea filed in the cause, it is a plea entered of record, to the extent and intendment contemplated by the statute, to wit, to shew that the defendant appears and contests the action, and that he claims an imparlance, at least, for the purpose of further preparation or reflection as to the mode or means of such defence, if he shall think proper to continue it in the regular forms of pleading. All such proceedings are vital steps in the progress of the cause and should therefore be considered inseparable from the record of the case. As the mere act of spreading a subject matter upon the record book of the Court, does not therefore constitute it a matter of record in law, so the mere failure to insert on the minutes a matter of fact essential to the record, and properly a part of it, does not divest it of its character and vitality as such, but it may be brought to the view of the Appellate Court when so omitted by the means adopted in this case. This point having been sufficiently considered and determined in another case decided at the present term, we deem it unnecessary to illustrate it by authorities or further to discuss it.

But independently of this view, we see no good reason to disturb the verdict and judgment on the ground that the writ was void; on the contrary, we think that a sensible view of all the facts and circumstances, obviates the difficulty growing out of the erroneous date of the writ. It was made returnable to "December next," and notwithstanding it bears date, in writing on its face, the 18th December, 383

1844, it was evidently in fact issued as early as the 18th day of November, 1844, for on that day it was served on the defendants as appears in the officer's return dated the following day. This furnishes an historical date to the process, that precludes the idea that it issued on a day subsequent to the date of its service, or the supposition that the defendants were misled as to the appearance day to which they were summoned. It being an impossible date, it may be regarded as if no date had been expressed; and when we consider that this must have been such by the actual service of the process on the shown to have been such by the actual service of the process on the 18th of November 1844, we hardly think that the defendants could have been misled or surprised by it.

It may, perhaps, have been well to have amended the writ in the Court below, or to have quashed it; but, under all the circumstances, we do not think that after judgment without objection, this ground of error commends itself in any respect to the favorable consideration of this Court.

As to the remaining errors assigned, the defendants are not properly recti in curia. Their objections not having been presented and determined in the Court below, they cannot be noticed here, unless they were staring us in the face on the record. As has been already decided by this Court, the note assumed to have been the ground of the verdict, is not a part of the record, not having been made so by bill of exceptions. In this view, there is nothing to combat the inference that there was legal evidence presented before the jury and Court sufficient to sustain the verdict of damages in response to the declaration. The only question then is, is the latter sufficient to support the verdict and judgment? In view of the various counts in the declaration, we do not think it necessary to discuss the objections taken to the first one in order to determine that the declaration is sufficient, with adequate proof to sustain it, which proof, as before tated, it is presumable, was presented on the trial below. We are therefore of opinion that there is no error in the judgment below, that appears from a careful inspection of the record, wherefore it is affirmed with costs.

WYLIE BLUETT, ADMINISTRATOR OF ARABELLA BLUETT, vs. JAMES NICHOLSON & WILLIAM N. AVERITT, EXECUTORS OF MALCOM NICHOLSON, AND THE MINOR HEIRS OF MALCOM NICHOLSON. 384

This Court will only decide such questions as are presented by the cases before it.

The Administrator of a deceased wife is entitled to receive her distributive share of her father's estate; and a bill filed by him for that purpose against the Executors of the last will and testament of her father, will be sustained.

This case, decided at Fall Term, 1846, of Gadsden Circuit Court, Judge Hawkins presiding, was brought up by consent of parties.

A Bil of Chancery was filed by Complainant as Administrator of his wife, Arabella Bluett, which alleged: That Malcom Nicholson, the father of said Arabella, died, leaving a last will and testament, which was regularly admitted to probate; and that James Nicholson and William N. Averitt, were appointed the Executors thereof: That the said Nicholson and Averitt were duly qualified as Executors, and took possession of the assets of the said estate: That on the 6th day of February, 184, Complainant, a citizen of Georgia, intermarried, with the said Arabella, who had removed to the said State, after the death of her father; and that the marriage was solemnized in the said State of Georgia, where the said Complainant and Arabella resided up to the time of her death, which occurred on 14th December, 1844; That on 8th January, 1845, letters of Administration on the estate of the said Arabella weer regularly granted to Complainant, by the County Court of Gadsden County. The Bill further alleged that Mary Hinson, the widow of the said Malcom Nicholson, together with the said Arabella, Archibald, Mary Ann and Angus, the children of the said Malcom, were the devisees under the said will, and entitled to an equal share of the real and personal estate remaining in the hands of the said Executors, after the payment of the specific legacies; and that their portions, with the exception of such amounts as had been handed over to the said Mary, still remained in the hands of the Executors. The Bill then averred a demand by Complainant upon his marriage with said Arabella, and since her death and after his appointment as Administrator, upon the said Executors for her share or portion of the said estate under 385 the said will; and prayed that the portion of the said Arabella be set apart and divided accordingly to the provisions of the said will; and that the said Executors, James Nicholson and William N. Averitt, be ordered and decreed by the Court to deliver the same to your orator as Admiinstrator of the said Arabella, and for such other and further relief. &c

Defendants demurred to the Bill.

At Fall Term, 1846, the following agreement was entered of record:

"By agreement of parties, by their Solicitors, it is ordered that the demurrer filed herein be sustained, for the purpose of taking the cause to the Court of Appeals, and that the said judgment shall be without prejudice to either party, and that security for costs shall not be required."

Carmack & Baker for Complainants.

L. A. Thompson and C. H. Dupont, for Defendants.

BALTZELL, J., delivered the following opinion:

This is a suit in Chancery, filed by appellant as Administrator of his wife, who was one of the legatees of the late Malcom Nicholson, deceased, to recover the personal property to which she was entitled by virtue of the will of her father. Defendants filed a demurrer to the bill, which, by consent of parties, was sustained, thereby dismissing the bill, so as to take the case to the Appellate Court.

Whilst the right of Complainant to relief has not been very seriously questioned, the Court has been earnestly desired by both parties to decide the question as to the distribution of the property, in the event of a recovery, whether it shall be held by complainant as husband, without distribution, or whether it shall be distributed agreeably to the law of the State regulating descents

Desirable as it may be to prevent litigation by an early adjudication of matters in dispute between parties, the Court is constrained by a sense of propriety, as well as the superior injunction of the Constitution of the State, not to determine questions unless they are presented by the cases before them. Such resolutions partake not of the character of decisions and impose no obligations; if indeed they might obtain the respect sometimes accorded to an opinion of the judges informally delivered. The parties are not concluded by them 386 and so far from ending a controversy, their tendency may be to prolong and embitter it, involving, it is to be feared, the tribunals of justice in the consequences attendant upon a false and erroneous position. A Court should not, we think, especially one of the last resort, so place itself as to pronounce a decision which may not be rightfully carried into execution. We therefore decline the exercise of jurisdiction until a proper case is made and presented.

This question disposed of, the enquiry remains, whether the Court erred in giving a decree for defendants. Theer is no reason, that we have been able to discover, for refusing the relief asked for.—Complainant, as Administrator, is entitled to the estate of his intestate, let the distribution be as it may. The object of the bill was to obtain this, and no objection has been presented to it either in form or in substance.

The only point of objection raised, is that the grant of letters of Administration was void; but there is nothing in the record to justify such a conclusion, nor do the pleadings raise the question. The demurrer is a general one to the equity set forth in the bill, and if it does not admit plaintiff's right in this respect, certainly does not contest nor put it in issue. The fact of non-residence at the date of the grant, upon which this exception has been presented, is not even made out by the record.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the demurrer should have been overruled in the Court below, and the defendants ordered to answer.

It is therefore decreed and ordered that the decree of the Superior Court be, and the same is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

387 ARCHBALD T. BENNETT vs. THOMAS H. HERRING.

The Statute of Limitations begins to run from the day the cause of action accrued; and the Endorsee of a note cannot bring himself within its saving by alleging that at the time the cause accrued to him, he was beyond the seas, &c.

ERROR to Franklin County.

This cause was tried at Spring Term, 1846, of Franklin Circuit Court, Judge Douglas presiding.

Assumpsit by Plaintiff, as endorsee of the following promissory note:

$981 97. "NEW-YORK, August 15, 1836.

"Fifteen months after date, I promise to pay to the order of Messrs Young & Van Eps, at the Commercial Bank at Apalachicola, nine hundred and eighty-one 97-100 dollars, value received. Due Nov 15, 1837. (Signed), A. T. BENNETT."

(Endorsed), "Edward Young & Van Eps."

Plea—Statute of Limitations.

Replication—That at the time the said several causes of action in said declaration mentioned accrued to the Plaintiff, the said Plaintiff was in fact beyond seas, to wit, at New-York, &c.

To this replication there was a rejoinder and surrejoinder, which, upon demurrer, were ruled out in the Court below. The question in this Court was upon the efficiency of the above replication.

W. G. M. Davis, for Plaintiff in Error.

Carmack & Baker, for Defendant.

BALTZELL, J., delivered the following opinion:

This was a suit instituted by Herring against Bennett as endorsee of a promissory note in the following words:

"NEW-YORK, August 15, 1836.

"Fifteen months after date, I promise to pay to the order of Messrs. Young & Van Eps, at the Commercial Bank at Apalachicola, $981-97, valued received. A. T. BENNETT."

(Endorsed), "Edward Young & Van Eps."

There were various pleas in the Court below, but the defence principally relied upon was the statute of limitations, the questions
388 arising upon which, for the principal subject for the consideration of this Court.

Without noticing the great variety of pleas filed and the changes of the pleas in the record, it is sufficient to state that defendant plead that "the action did not accrue within five years," to which there was a replication by plaintiff, and a rejoinder by defendant, and a surrejoinder by plaintiff, Defendant then demurred to the surrejoinder, and the Court being of opinion that the rejoinder of defendant was bad, overruled this plea, of defendant and ordered him to answer further. He then offered additional pleas which the Court rejected. The propriety of the last decision has not been called in question. It was the rule of the late Court of Appeals of the Territory, agreeing with the practice of the Supreme Court of the United States, not to interfere with or disturb the discretion of the Courts below in refusing and granting amendments, nor has any effort been made before us to establish a different rule. These rejected pleas, are, then, not to be regarded in deciding the case.

The demurrer of defendant raises the same questions in this Court which were presented in the Court below. When filed by either party it lays open to the Court, not only the pleading demurred to, but the entire record for their judgment upon it as to the matter of law; and if two or more of the pleadings be bad in substance, the Court will give judgment against the party who committed the first fault. Arch. Pl. & Ev., 315.

No objection has been made to the declaration nor to the plea of the statute of limitations.

The replication, which is the next in order, has been excepted to, and we are called upon to decide as to its sufficiency. Statutes of limitations have presented questions of all others most embarrassing to the Courts, both in England and in this country, as well as in the various aspects of the cases presented as in the conflicting decisions upon it. Within a very short period after its passage, it was decided "not to be necessary for the defendant to plead the statute, all the Court holding, that if it appear by the plaintiff's own showing, that the action is not brought within the time limited by the statute, he cannot maintain his action." Brown vs. Hancock, Cro. Car., 115. 2 Saund., 63, n. 6.

"Afterwards it was adjudged that the defendants must plead the statute, and the reason assigned was because the plaintiff might be 389 within the exceptions in the statute, and the action therefore well brought although the cause of action appeared on the face of the declaration to have accrued out of the limited time." Cro. Car., 381 2 Saund., 63, n. 6. "There is no contrariety of opinion that the statute begins to run from the day the cause of action accrued." 1 Arch. N. P., 130.

When the statute once begins to run, no subsequent disability will prevent it from running. 4 Taunt., 826. 1 Wils., 134. 1 Arch. N. P. 131.

The statute provides that "all actions of trespass, debt, &c., shall be commenced within the time and limitation hereinafter expressed, that is to say, within five years and not after." Duval, 155. The same statute provides that "if any person, or persons, that is or shall be entitled to such action be, or shall be at the time of any such cause of action given or accrued, beyond the seas, or out of the country, such person or persons, shall be at liberty to bring the same action, so as they take the same within such times as are before limited, after their coming from beyond seas, &c., as by other persons having no such impediment should be done." Duval, 156.

A personal privilege is by the latter clause provided in favor of persons entitled to an action who shall be at the time of such cause of action accrued, beyond seas or out of the country, and in its original design was probably intended to favor those who, away from home at the time a claim became due, were prevented by absence from asserting it.

If the suit now pending, were instituted by the payee of the note, or original promisee, we should feel no hesitancy in declaring the replication good, the precedents in the different books of reports and the forms being fitted to such a case. But this is the suit of an endorsee, and the question is whether the same averments and proof will avail him as are admitted to be valid in the case of the payee. Has the plaintiff in this case, by the allegations in his replication, brought himself within the statute, so as to enable him to recover. No authority has been brought to bear directly upon the point, nor have we been able in our researches to find one, though the question would seem to have been of such frequent occurrence as to have been repeatedly decided by the Courts.

The rules of pleading, especially those applicable to cases of rights 390 and privileges granted by statute, however, will furnish, we trust, a safe guard in ariving at a true and just conclusion.

Referring to these, we find it laid down that "the rules of pleading in a case of declarations and pleas in bar, are applicable also to replications." As a plea is either a denial or a confession and avoidance of the complaint stated in the declaration, so a replication is either a denial or a confession and avoidance of the defence stated in the plea. Arch., pl. and ev., 242.

A replication requires more certainty than a declaration. Arch., 257. "If matter of the defence be true, so that the plaintiff cannot safely traverse it, he may admit it by his replication and avoid it by a statement of new matter in the same manner, as a defendant may do by his plea with reference to the declarationa." Arch., 251, 199, 203.

"The declaration must shew plainly and certainly all circumstances material to the maintenance of the action, for if there be two intendments, it shall be taken most strongly against the plaintiff."—Arch., 108.

"A plaintiff should state every fact necessary to inform the Court that his case is within the statute. If a man entitle himself by a lease which by a proviso in a statute will be good, if the ancient rent be reserved, he must shew that a rent is reserved, and aver it to be the ancient rent." R. Pl. Com., 105, b. Arch., pl. and ev., 94.

The matter of a plea in bar must consist of such facts and circumstances as amount to a complete defence to the action or to such part of the declaration as it purports to answer, and whether the matter of defence be founded on a public or private statute, the plea must state all the facts and circumstances necessary to bring it within the statute. Arch., 171. The replication in this case is, "That plaintiff ought not to be barred from his action against defendant, because he says that before and at the time said causes of action accrued to said plaintiff, the said plaintiff was in fact beyond seas, to wit, at New-York," &c. Now, may not this be literally true, and yet not bring the case of plaintiff within the saving of the statute, nor be an answer to or in avoidance of the plea? A party's pleading is to be taken most strongly against himself and most favorable for his adversary, and when anything is omitted which is necessary to give 391 certainty to the statement, it shall be taken most strongly against him. Co. Litt., 303, b. In this replication there is an omission of the facts we have deemed material to relieve plaintiff from the bar. He does not allege that he was beyond seas when the action accrued, nor that, being entitled to the action when it accrued, he was beyond seas at that time, but that "when the cause of action accrued to him, the plaintiff, he was beyond seas." Now, if this were a sufficient reply to the plea, notes due and long since barred, might be revived by transfer, so as to evade the statute, to a person beyond seas at the time the action either accrued or at the time it was transferred. It is argued that plaintiff could not reply a different time of transfer of the note to that set forth in the declaration on account of the departure, but we think differently. If the plaintiff in his replication vary from his count in anything not material, it is no departure, as in assumpsit if the plaintiff allege a promise twenty years before, and to a plea of the statute of limitations replies assumpsit infra sex annos, it is no departure, for the time of promise in the declaration was not material. Arch., pl. and ev., 260.

The form of a replication given in Story on Pleadings, is that "he, the said plaintiff, at the time when the cause of action in said declaration mentioned accrued, was in foreign parts beyond seas, omitting the words 'to the plaintiff.'" P. 71. This differs from the form in Chitty's Pleadings, which also differs from Precedents by Joseph Chitty, Jr., written some twenty years after the work of his father. The words "to the plaintiff," after "accrued," also omitted as by Judge Story; thus showing a change in the mode of regarding this subject by the English Courts, in accordance with, and sustaining, the view we have expressed. 1 Chitty's Precedents, 346 .

Nor do we think there is hardship imposed upon the plaintiff by this course of pleading. By the lapse of five years prescribed by the statute, his note is prima facie barred—in contemplation of law, is extinguished, and the remedy for its recovery gone. Should he not under such circumstances, be held to allege and prove affirmatively, every fact and circumstance required by statute to revive the right and to bring him within the saving?

Defences, under these statutes, are more favorably regarded and not discountenanced, in England and in this country, than they were formerly. The Supreme Courts of the United States, agreeing with 392 other enlightened Courts in the States, have, on repeated occasions, "declared them statutes of repose, as resting upon sound policy, and tending to the welfare and peace of society. The Courts do not now, unless compelled by former decisions, give a strained construction to evade their effect. By requiring those who complain of injuries, to seek redress by action within a reasonable time, a salutary vigilance is imposed and and end is put to litigation." 3 Cond. Rep., 51. 3 Peters, 270.

We are, therefore, of opinion, that the replication of plaintiff is bad, and should have been overruled. It is, therefore, considered by the Court, that the judgment of the Circuit Court, and the verdict of the jury, be, and the same is hereby reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded to that Court, with liberty to the plaintiff to reply over and for other proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Philip Fraser vs. Felix Livingston, Solicitor, &c.

On the ex parte application of A., who claimed to be the owner of a writte paper filed with an indictment, an order was granted allowing him to withdraw the paper, which he accordingly did; afterwards, upon a petition filed by the Solicitor of the Circuit before the Judge of the Circuit, another order was made directing A. to show cause why the former order granting him permission to withdraw the paper, should not be rescinded, and why he should not return it to the files of the Court; and at the first Term of the Court thereafter, A. having shown cause by filing an answer to the petition, the order nisi was made absolute, and A. directed to return the paper in accordance with the prayer of the petition; held, that the petition and proceedings under it are not properly matters of record, and that no appeal will lie in such case either at common law or in virtue of the several acts of the Legislature of Florida, giving the right, and regulating the mode, of suing out writs of error and prosecuting appeals.

Such case properly belongs to that numerous class of rules and orders of a summary character which a court of record is empowered, in its discretion, to make in regard to causes therein pending or determined, or otherwise relating to the record, proceedings and files of the court, in the exercise of its inherent powers of general superintendence and control over all matters affecting its dignity and policy, or its due and rightful administration of the 393 laws; and such matters are not subject to be reviewed by writ of error or appeal in the halls of superior tribunals.

Appeal from an order granted at the Fall Term, 1846, of Duval Circuit Court, Judge Baltzell presiding.

It appears from the record, that on 13th November, 1846, Felix Livingston, the Solicitor of the Circuit, filed a petition before Judge Douglas, the Judge of the Circuit, the object of which was to have an order, made on the 15th September previous, allowing Fraser to withdraw from the files of the Court a certain written paper which had been filed with an indictment, and of which he claimed to be the owner, annulled and for a rule on the said Fraser to show cause why he should not be required to return the said written paper to the files of the Court. The petition recited at length the facts and circumstances on which the application was based and was supported by several affidavits.

Upon the filing of the petition, the Judge of the Circuit granted an order, "that the said Philip Fraser shew cause before the Circuit Court for the Eastern Circuit of the State aforesaid, on the first day of the next Term thereof, to be holden at the Court House in Jacksonville in Duval county, on the 4th Monday of the present month of November, or so soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, why the order so made on 15th day of September last, giving to the said Philip Fraser leave to withdraw the said written paper from the files of said Court shall not be revoked and rescinded, and why he, the said Philip Fraser, ought not to return the said written paper to the files of the same Court; and it is further ordered that notice of this rule be given to said Philip Fraser, &c.

At the Fall Term of the Circuit Court, to wit, on the 25th November, 1846, Philip Fraser shewed cause, under the said rule, by filing his written answer to the said petition, which set forth fully his rights in the premises.

After having heard the petition and evidence on both sides, and after argument on behalf of petition and respondent, the Court made the rule granted on 13th November absolute, and ordered as follows: "It is therefore considered by the Court, that the order entered on the 15th day of September, A. D., 1846, granting to the party the possession of the original paper, the subject of this rule, be and the same is hereby annullel. And it is further ordered, that the said 394 paper be returned by the said Philip Fraser to the files of this Court by the first day of January next."

From this decision and order of the Court, the said Fraser thereupon in open Court prayed an appeal, which was granted. On the 1st December, 1846, he filed his appeal bond, which was approved of, and is in the usual form.

On the 4th January, 1847, appellee, by Randal & Hagner, his Attorneys, moved the Court to dismiss this case from the docket of this Court, on the following grounds:

1. Because no appeal was obtained in Court from the order of 25th November, 1846, made by his Honor Judge Thomas Baltzell, and no proper appeal bond filed.

2. Because no appeal lies from said order, the same not being a final judgment, sentence or decree, within the purview of the 1st sec. of Act regulating the mode of suing out writs of error and prosecuting appeals, &c. Duval, p. 108.

3. Because the granting of said order was an exercise of the discretion of the Court below, in defence of its own proper right, and in the assertion of its own self-respect, of which the Court below is alone the rightful judge, and over which discretion, when so exercised, this Court has no jurisdiction.

4. Because the said order of 25th Nov., 1846, was a revocation of a prior order of 15th Sept., sub-granted by the same Court. That said prior order of 15th Sept., accorded to said Philip Fraser a liberty and privilege upon an ex parte showing then made by him, which liberty and privilege the said Court was under no obligation to grant, nor said petition any legal right to claim or require; and as the granting of the order was a matter of favor and not of right, the retracting the privilege and requiring the delivery of the paper in question, and replacing the same upon the files of the Court, is within the legitimate exercise of the peculiar privileges of the Court below, and not subject to revisal or review in this Court.

Randal & Hagner for appellee, in favor of the motion to dismiss. They moved to dismiss this appeal, upon the grounds following, viz:

1. Because no appeal was obtained in Court from the order of 25th Nov., 1846, made by his Honor Judge Baltzell, and no proper appeal bond filed.

395 An appeal cannot be sustained, unless it appears from the record that it was granted. Clark vs. Lowry, 1 Overton, 313. Moody vs Moody, 1 Fairfield, 247.

The appeal bond in this case is conditioned to pay "the debt, damage or condemnation money, and costs, in case the judgment, sentence or decree, shall be confirmed." There was no debt—there was no condemnation money to be paid—no judgment, sentence or decree; and the condition is entirely nugatory. The appellant was required to deliver up a paper formerly withdrawn from the Court, and the bond given is no manner of security that he will do it upon confirmation of that order of the Court.

2. Because no appeal lies from said order, the same not being a final judgment, sentence or decree, within the purview of the 1st sec. of the Act regulating the mode of suing out writs of errors and prosecuting appeals. Duval's Comp., 108.

The whole statute relates to controversies between parties to a litigation according to the course of the common law. A judgment is the remedy prescribed by law for redress of injuries, and the suit or action is the means of administering it. Tomlin's Law Dict., Title Judgment.

It is the conclusion of a suit. A suit is the lawful demand of one's right. 6 Wheaton's Reports, 264.

An action is defined thus, "actio nihil aliud est, quam jus persequendi in judico quod sibi debetur." Justinian, Lib. 4, Tit. 6, De Actionibus.

Thus, then, it is clear that the statute has in view the prosecution by parties in interest of their rights by action—and that according to the course of the common law. But an appeal is granted. Now, an appeal is a civil law process, and removes a cause entirely, subjecting the law and fact to a review and retrial; while the writ of error, also embraced in the same statute, is a common law process, and re-moves, for re-examination nothing but the naw. U. V. vs. Goodwin, 7 Cranch, 108.

The appeal being unknown at the common law, and only given by statute, is not to be extended beyond the terms of the statute. 7 Pickering Rep., 320.

Such an appeal lies only where the cause has been tried, and a sentence or judgment rendered; and a non-suit, for example, for non-396 compliance with an interlocutory order, is not a sentence or judgment, and not within the statute. Hoyt et al. vs. Brooks, 10 Connec., 188.

The appellee's counsel then reviewed the outline of jurisdiction of the Courts, (citing 2 Chitty's Gen. Prac., 312-3. 3 Chitty's Gen. Prac., 33), and they showed that summary applications appertain to the peculiar jurisdiction of the Court exercising it, with which appellate jurisdiction does not interfere. Same citations weer made; also. late jurisdiction does not interfere. Same citations were made; also 1 Chitty's Archbold's Pr., 346. 2 do., 1194.

Now the original statute of 1832, before referred to, gives no ap- 1833, (Duval, p. 111), gave the appellate Court jurisdiction in certain applications of that suit.—Rules over their own officers, &c.—expressio unius alterius est exclusio."

Again, by the common law, rules of court are not records, only remembrances, not entered on the rolls of the Court. 1 Tidd's Prac., 490. 1 Wilson's Rep., 41. 2 Barn. & Ald., 61.

These rules, not being records, are no part of the cause, even where they occur in the progress of a cause; they are strictly and properly matters of practice, regulated by the power of amendment which the courts of law possess, either by the common law or the statutes of amendment. In the House of Lords. Melvish vs. Richardson, 9 Bingham, 125. Scales vs. Cheese, 12 Mees. & Welsby, 685.

But it may be contended that being set up here in the record, this rule is to be considered as part of it. Not so. The same case of 9 Bingham, 125, denies such effect. "For if the grounds of the amendment are not in themselves removable by the writ of error; and if the parties to the suit have not ex debito justitiae, the right to put the rules and orders for the amendments upon record, then the Superior Court would have, or would not have, authority to enquire into the propriety of the amendments according as the Inferior Court did or did not return in the particular instance the order by which the amendment is made."

Now, the order complained of is interlocutory only. That it is not final, in any sense, is too clear to require argument.

3. Because the granting of said order was an exercise of the discretion of the Court below, in the defence of its own proper right, and in the assertion of its own self-respect, of which the Court be- 397 low is alone the rightful judge, and over which discretion, when so exercised, this Court has no jurisdiction. 3 Chitty's Gen. Prac., 32. 1 Hawks' No. Ca. Rep., 93-4.

4. Because the order appealed from was a revocation of a prior order granted by the same Court; that said prior order accorded to the said Philip Fraser a liberty and privilege upon an ex parte showing then made by him,—which liberty and privilege, the said Court was under no obligation to grant, nor had said petitioner any legal right to claim or require. And as the granting of the order was a matter of favor and not of right, the retracting the privilege and requiring the re-delivery of the paper in question, and the replacing the same upon the files of the Court, is within the legitimate exercise of the peculiar privilege of the Court below, and not subject to revisal or review in this Court. 1 Devereux' Rep., 74-5. 2 Harris & Gill, 79. 10 Conn., 188. 1 Murphy's Law & Eq. 7 Vermant. 476—534.

Philip Fraser, for Appellant.

This appeal is well taken. It is from a final order in an original proceeding in the Court below. This is not an interlocutory order in any cause pending in the Court below, resting solely in the discretion of the Court. The Act of the Legislative Counsel, approved , provides for appeals in all cases from any final judgment, sentence or decree, pronounced in the Court below. It is under this Act that the appeal is taken. It is evident that the Legislature intended by this Act something further than to provide for appeals from judgments in actions at law, and decrees in suits in equity. Else, why use the word "sentence?"

Again, in the Act of the subsequent year, upon the same subject, the Legislature gives an interpretation of its meaning in the former Act by the words, "final judgment, order or decree;" clearly showing that it was the intention of the Legislature to provide for appeals in all cases where a final judgment, order or decree, had been made in the Court below.

2d. The Court below had no power to make the order from which this appeal is taken. It was not a matter resting in their discretion. See Rex vs. Cator, 2 East. Rep., 361.

The libel had been published, and, consequently, ceased to be the 398 property of the person publishing it. It was proven in the Court below, that the author of the libel posted copies of it in public places. It was also proved to be in his hand-writing; establishing clearly the fact of publication. See 2 Starkie's Ev., 454. Starkie on Slander.

The libel having come to the hands of the appellant against whom it was published, became his property; and he had a right to the possession of it. And, parting with that possession for a time, for the purposes of justice, did not determine that right; and he was entitled to a return of it in accordance with the conditions upon which he parted with it.

As to the bond, it is drawn in strict compliance with the statute under which the appeal is taken.

It is not necessary that it should appear by the record that an appeal was granted in the Court below. If an appeal is applied for in open Court, and an appeal bond is approved by the judge, this is a full compliance with the statute.

Macrea, J., delivered the following opinion:

This case comes before this Court upon a motion made by the counsel for the appellees to dismiss it, on the following general grounds: First, that the appeal sought to be prosecuted here from the order in this case in the Court below, was not obtained according to law: and, secondly, that no appeal lies from said order, whether by the rules of common law, or in virtue of the statutes of Florida, giving the right and regulating the mode of suing out writs of error and prosecuting appeals.

It appears from the record in this case, that a rule nisi was granted by the Judge of the Circuit Court for the Eastern Circuit, for the County of Duval, conformably to the prayer of a petition which had been filed by the appellee before said Judge, by which rule it was ordered that appellant show cause before said Circuit Court, at the then next ensuing term thereof for said county, or so soon thereafter as counsel could be heard, why an ex parte order formerly made by the same Judge, giving said appellant leave to withdraw a certain "written paper" from the files of said Court, should not be revoked and rescinded: and why he, the appellant, ought not to return the said "written paper" to the files of the same Court; copies of which 399 order and petition were duly served upon the appellant, who answered thereto in writing. It further appears, that the matter of said petition and answer having been fully heard and considered by said Court, at the last term thereof, it was by the same thereupon ordered, that the order above mentioned granting to the appellant the possession of the paper the subject of said rule be annulled, and that the said paper be returned by said appellant to the files of the Court by a day appointed in the order. It also appears that said appellant, having in open Court applied for an apeal from the order last mentioned, thereafter in open Court filed his bond for said appeal in the usual form, conditioned to pay the condemnation and costs in case the said order should be confirmed by the Appellate Court; which bond was endorsed, "approved of," by the Judge of said Circuit.

We deem it unnecessary, in order to a decision of this motion, to determine the points arising upon the first gound taken by the counsel for the appellee. It may, however, be proper to remark, that the acts of a Judge of a Circuit Court, in relation to any application for an appeal to which a party may be entitled in virtue of the provisions of the Acts in question, are to be regarded as simply ministerial in their character and effect.

With regard to the other ground assumed by counsel for appellee, we are of the opinion, that clearly no appeal from an order of the tenor and effect of that which has been brought in question before this Court, will lie, either at common law, or in virtue of the several Acts of the Legislature of Florida giving the right and regulating the mode of suing out writs of error and prosecuting appeals, or either of them.

That this appeal does not lie at common law, is sufficiently apparent from a consideration of the nature, form and objects, of the common law processes, by means of which the judgments of inferior tribunals may be reviewed. These are writs of error, prohibition, certiorori and mandamus. Any other mode is unknown in a Court proceeding as a Court of common law jurisdiction, unless expressly given by statute; and where the latter limits the operation of appellate power to specific subjects, or classes of cases, this Court has no power to transcend the limits so assigned. Murdock, appellant, 7 Pickering, 320. At common law, as is well expressed and held in 1 Chitty's Arch. Prac., 346, "a writ of error lies, when a person is 400 aggrieved by an error in the foundation, proceeding, judgment or execution, of a suit, provided it be an error in substance, not aided at common law, or by some of the statutes of jeofails. It can be brought only on a judgment, or an award in the nature of a judgment, given in a Court of record, acting according to the course of the common law; but when the Court acts in a summary way or in a new course different from the common law, a certiorari, and not a writ of error, lies.

But again, at common law, the appellate power extends to matters of record only; and here it may be remarked, that a matter of proceeding, spread upon the record or minutes of the Court, not being properly a record matter or proceeding in legal regard, does not thereby become such; nor can it be therefore made a subject upon which to exercise appellate power and jurisdiction. Are, then, rules of the legal character of that now under consideration in this case, properly matters of record in legal contemplation? We think not. In England it is held that rules are not records, but mere remembrances not entered on the rolls of the Court. 9 Bing., 125. Tidd's Prac., 490; and the cases there cited in 1 Wills., 40, and 2 Barn. & Ald., 61. In the correctness of this doctrine we fully concur, and consider it applicable to similar proceedings of the Courts of this State, embracing the case now before us. Moreover, it is held in English practice, "that if a cause be moved in Court in the presence of the counsel for both parties, and the Court shall thereupon make an order, no person shall afterwards cause the same to be moved contrary to such rule or order;" and that "a rule made in the Bail Court is not more liable to be re-opened and argued in Full Court after the term in which it was made, although the Judge who heard the case sanctioned the application to the full Court." 2 Chitty's Arch. Prac., 1194. The principles involved in this authority well apply to the case of which a review is now sought at the hands of this Court; and we deem it superfluous to add anything further in order to illustrate and sustain the opinion, that at common law, this Court has no appellate power or jurisdiction over this case.

But it is contended by the appellant, that the right of appeal in question, is conferred by statute; and he refers to the Act of the Legislative Council of the late Territory of Florida, now in force, on this subject, contained in Duval's Compilation, p. 108, sections 1 & 2, in support of his position. By sec. 1 of the first mentioned Act, it is 401 provided, "that if a party, in either of the Superior Courts of this Territory, shall be aggrieved by a final judgment, sentence or decree made, or pronounced, by any or either of said Courts, it shall and may be lawful for such party, during the session of the Court at which such judgment, sentence or decree is rendered or pronounced, or within ten days thereafter, to obtain in Court, if the appeal be made in term time, or in the Clerk's office if it be in vacation, his, her or their appeal to the Court of Appeals," &c. Section 2 provides, that the party appealing, if defendant, shall give "bond with one or more securities, in a sum sufficient to cover the amount for which judgment has been given, decree rendered, or sentence pronounced, together with costs, conditioned that the appellant shall pay the costs, if plaintiff, or if defendant, the debt, damages or condemnation, and costs in case the judgment, sentence or decree of the Superior Court shall be affirmed," &c. This section evidently refers to cases of suits, actions or causes in Court, in which there are adversary claims in a regular course of litigation. The case under consideration here is not one of those just referred to, but properly belongs to that numerous class of rules and orders of a summary character, which a Court of record is empowered in its discretion to make in regard to causes herein pending or determined, or otherwise relating to the record, proceedings and files of the Court, in the exercise of its inherent powers of general superintendence and control over all matters affecting its dignity and policy, or its due and irghtful administration of the laws. And such matters are not subject to be reviewed by writ of error or appeal, in the halls of superior tribunals. This view is fully sustained by the principles advanced in the decision of the case of Willis vs. Willis, Adr., 5 Iredell's N. C. R., 14, founded upon a statute of North Carolina similar to that above recited; and is fortified by other determinations and authorities, some of which have been already cited.

The appellant again contended that the Act just mentioned, if otherwise inapplicable to the case before us, is nevertheless made so by construction to be derived from the terms of the second section of the Act last above mentioned, passed subsequently to the former. We are unhesitatingly of a contrary opinion. The 2d section referred to provides, "that in all cases in which a rule of Court, or other summary order to any of the officers of Court and their securities or de- 402 puties, is in effect a judgment for the payment of money or other thing, the party aggrieved may prosecute his, her or their appeal, writ of error or certiorari," &c., as therein set forth. It is insisted that the words "rule or other summary order," used in this section, show that the Legislature construed and intended the words, "judgment, sentence or decree," contained in the first recited Act, to embrace rules and orders of the nature and effect of that from which an appeal is now sought. We consider this construction manifestly erroneous. This section, indeed, not only limits the right of appeal strictly to the cases therein provided for, but agreeably to the maxim, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," goes further to establish the construction which we have placed upon the first and second sections of the Act first above mentioned, the provisions of that Act being extended, yet limited to cases of rules and other summory orders affecting officers of the Court, and their securities or deputies, where such rules or orders do, in effect, operate as a judgment for the payment of money or other thing. This motion is therefore sustained, and the case dismissed.

Per totam Curiam.

403 ARCHIBALD T. BENNETT vs. OSCAR FILYAW

Where the declaration alleges that defendant followed the occupation of master or owner of a steamboat plying on a navigable river, this is a sufficient averment to fix the character which the common law attaches to masters and owners of ships, steamboats, &c., so as to charge the defendant with a breach of the duty which alone results from that character, without an express averment, totidem verbis, that defendant was a common carrier.

In such case the onus probandi is upon the defendant to show that in virtue of some special public notice, or other good legal ground, he was not chargeable and responsible as a common carrier in his capacity and occupation of master and owner of the steamboat in question.

ERROR from Franklin County.

This case was decided at the Fall Term, 1844, of the late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida for the County of Franklin.

The declaration was in trespass on the case against Bennett as owner and master of a certain steamboat called the "Louisa," and was to recover damages for the loss and non-delivery of a quantity of tobacco shipped by Filyaw in Dec., 1842, on board the same at Mount Vernon, for the city of Apalachicola.

The declaration contained two counts. The first set forth that Bennett was master and commander of a certain steamboat called the "Louisa," lying in the river Apalachicola opposite the town of Mount Vernon, and bound from thence to the city of Apalachicola; that Filyaw thereupon, and whilst she was so lying in the river Apalachicola, delivered to Bennett, then and there being master of said steamboat, and that he then and there received on board said steamboat three boxes of tobacco, to be by him conveyed in the said steamboat to the city of Apalachicola, for a certain reasonable reward, &c.: and averred the loss and non-delivery of said tobacco by reason of the negligence and bad conduct of the said Bennett, &c. The second count alleges that Bennett was owner of the said steamboat "Louisa," and is in other respects similar to the first count. There was no express averment in either count that Bennett, the plaintiff in error, was a common carrier.

Plea—Not guilty.

Upon the trial, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

404 Defendant prayed in the Court below the following instructions:

1st. That defendant has not been declared against in defendant's declaration as a common carrier, and that under the pleadings he is not liable as such.

2. That defendant has been declared against as a private person undertaking the carriage of goods under an express contract for hire or reward, as alleged in the declaration; and that the jury must be satisfied from the evidence, that the loss or damage which plaintiff's goods may have sustained, while in the charge of defendant, arose from acts of fraud or negligence on his part or the part of his servants, and that defendant is alone liable for one or both.

3d. That no terminus of the voyage was proven.

Which instructions the Court refused to give, and in lieu thereof instructed the jury as follows:

1. That the averment in the declaration, that the defendant "was master of the steamboat Louisa," was a sufficient allegation that the defendant was a common carrier.

2d. That proof that the defendant was master of the steamboat, was evidenced that defendant was a common carrier.

3d. That if the jury was satisfied from the evidence that the steamboat "Louisa" was bound for Apalachicola, they might infer from that fact, in the absence of an express agreement upon the subject, that plaintiff's goods were to be delivered in Apalachicola as alleged in the declaration.

To which instructions and refusal defendant excepted.

No counsel appeared for plaintiff in error.

C. H. Dupont, for defendant.

MACRAE, J., delivered the following opinion:

This is an action on the case instituted in the late Superior Court of Franklin County, by Oscar Filyaw against Archibald T. Bennett, to recover from the defendant, as master and commander and owner of a certain steamboat, damages for the non-delivery and loss of a quantity of tobacco alleged to have been shipped by the plaintiff on board the same, in December, 1842, to be carried by the defendant from the alleged place of shipment on the Apalachicola river to the city of Apalachicola, to which city said steamboat was alleged to have been bound at the time of shipment.

In the cause below, the defendant filed a plea of the general issue, 405 and upon a trial had upon the issue joined, verdict and judgment were rendered for plaintiff. Various instructions were prayed for by defendant and refused by the Court, and others in lieu thereof were given by the Court to the jury on the trial below; to which refusal of instructions, and instructions given, the defendant excepted, and thereupon sued out his writ of error to this Court, assigning for error the refusal on the one hand, and the giving on the other of the instructions in question.

The questions of error, thus presented for the decision of this Court, will be considered in the order in which they appear from the bill of exceptions, and have been stated by counsel in the argument of this case.

In the first place, then, it is contended for plaintiff in error, that he was not declared against in the Court below as a common carrier, but as a private person, and that under the pleadings he is not liable in the former character.

A common carrier in law has been defined to be one who undertakes for hire or reward to transport the goods of such as chose to employ him from place to place, as a business and not as a casual occupation pro hac vice. 1 Stalk., 249. 1 Pick., 50. Story on Bailments, § 495. Common carriers by water are the masters and owners of ships, and all water crafts, including steam vessels, towboats, and other steamboats, belonging to internal as well as coasting and foreign navigation; lightermen, hoymen, ferrymen, canal boatmen, and others engaged in the transportation of goods by water for persons generally, for hire. 5 T. R., 143. 1 Bell's Com., 467. 2 Steph. N. P., 961. 2 Kent, C. 597, and 2 Am. C. Law cases, 527. But if the owner of a ship employs it on his own account generally, or if he lets the tonnage with a small exception to a single person, and then for the accommodation of a particular individual, he takes goods on board for freight (not receiving them for persons generally), he will not be deemed a common carrier; for he does not hold himself out as engaged in a public business or employment.—Story on Bailments, § 501.

It is clear, then, that the steamboat in question comes under the general description of vessels, the masters or owners of which are held to be common carriers in law, and liable as such.

But it is insisted that the plaintiff below should have averred that 406 the defendant was a common carrier in totidem verbis; that the masters and owners of steamboats, &c., not being in all cases liable as common carriers, he should have been charged as a person generally engaged in carrying goods on board the steamboat "Louisa," for persons in general, for hire; and that in defect of these allegations, this must be regarded and pleaded to as a declaration against the defendant as a private person, on an express contract requiring corresponding proof to sustain it.

Without referring to the case of Dale vs. Hall, 1 Wils. R., 281 we are satisfied, on general principles, that the declaration contains sufficient allegations and averments to charge the defendant as a person following the occupation to which, prima facie, the legal character is attached, in respect whereof he was employed by the plaintiff, to wit, that of a common carrier. The exceptions to the general rule in this regard, stated by Mr. Story in his treatise on Bailments, § 501, indicate plainly that they constitute grounds of defence by way of plea, or proof, by defendant under the general issue, rather than matter to be averred and proved by the plaintiff.

The declaration is in case, and in the first count avers, that the defendant was, before and at the time of receiving the goods thereinafter mentioned, master and commander of a certain steamboat called the "Louisa," then lying in the river of Apalachicola, &c., and bound from the place of shipment to the city of Apalachicola; that the plaintiff thereupon, on a certain day, delivered to the defendant, being then and there the master of said steamboat, three boxes of tobacco, which defendant, as such master, received, to be carried in said steamboat to said city, for a certain reasonable reward, &c., and that the defendant, not regarding his duty as such master, did not, nor would, take care of, or safely or securely carry or convey, said boxes of tobacco, in or on board the said steamboat, or otherwise, to said city, but wholly neglected and failed so to do, whereby they were lost, &c.; pursuing, substantially, the usual form of declarations in such cases. The second count is to the same effect, charging the defendant as owner of the steamboat "Louisa."

A formal inducement does not in any case appear to be necessary in pleading. It appears to be sufficient, if the subject matter of the inducement were alleged in any part of the declaration, but it is useful in composition, for the purposes of perspicuity, and to avoid misconception and dispute, to use such formality. In a declaration against an attorney for negligence, or a coach proprietor, a wharfinger, a captain of a ship, or an inn-keeper, for the loss of goods, &c., it is usual and proper to show, by way of inducement, or at least by other averment in the declaration, that the defendant followed the occupation in respect of which the plaintiff employed him. If no such allegation be contained in the declaration, the defendant cannot be charged thereon for the breach of a duty which results only from the particular character which he held, and in reference to which he was retained or employed. 1 Chitty's Pl., 290, 291. The declaration here shows that the defendant followed the occupation of master or owner of a steamboat, lying in a navigable river, at a designated place, and bound thence to another designated place as a terminus. Is not this averment sufficient to fix the character which the common law attaches to the masters and owners of ships, steamboats, &c., so as to charge the defendant with a breach of the duty which alone results from that character, without an express averment to that effect? Let us see. In the omission to charge the defendant as a common carrier, in totidem verbis, &c., as insisted on, this declaration does not appear to vary in that respect from the forms of declarations against masters and owners of ships, &c., in their character of common carriers, as framed by Mr. Chitty, and contained in the second volume of his work on pleading. It would seem quite clear, then, that this distinguished pleader did not consider an express averment of the character, &c., as necessary by way of inducement in the cases which he illustrates, but that the averment of the occupation of master or owner of a ship, &c., was in such cases, prima facie, sufficient to fix the character of the defendant as a common carrier. 2 Chitty's Pl., 365, 656, 665. But we are not left to the negative authority furnished by the forms to which we have referred; for, although it seems that in England it was usual formerly to declare in cases of this kind, setting out the custom of the realm—yet, it has been since better held that this custom being the common law it need not be stated. 1 Wils. R., 281. 3 do., 429. Bac. Ab., Carriers, A. Mr. Chitty says, "In case the carrier must be sued, as if his liability was founded on such custom or law, and not on a contract," and to fix his character, "it does not appear to be necessary to commence 408 with an inducement of the defendants being a common carrier, but the declaration will suffice if it merely state the delivery to the defendant of the goods, &c., to be carried from, &c., &c., and his undertaking to carry accordingly." 2 Chitty's Pl., 356, note a.

We therefore consider that the declaration in this case is sufficient to charge the plaintiff in error as a common carrier in law, and that under the pleadings he is prima facie liable as such, if the plaintiff's allegations be supported by the evidence, the onus probandi being upon the defendant to show that in virtue of some special public notice, or other good legal ground, he was not chargeable and responsible as a common carrier, in his capacity and occupation of master or owner of the steamboat in question.

The remaining objection set up by the plaintiff in error is, that no terminus of the voyage in question was proved, and that the Court below erred in overruling the instruction asked by him to that effect, and in lieu thereof, instructing the jury that if they were satisfied from the evidence that the steamboat "Louisa" was bound for Apalachicola, they might infer from that fact, in the absence of an express agreement upon the subject, that the plaintiff's goods were to be delivered in Apalachicola, as alleged in the declaration.

It was clearly proved on the trial below, as appears from the testimony brought up by the bill of exceptions that the plaintiff in error was the master of the steamboat in question, plying to and from the city of Apalachicola, on the Apalachicola river, in the year 1842, in answer to an interrogatory to that effect to which no exception was taken. It was further testified by one of the witnesses, that certain boxes of tobacco, of the crop of 1842, belonging to Filyaw, were taken by the latter, the same year, to his lower place for the purpose of being shipped to Apalachicola, and these boxes were spoken of by the same witness as having been sent off to Apalachicola at the time before mentioned. It is fully proved, too, that these boxes were shipped on board said steamboat as alleged in the declaration. Whether this, with other evidence adduced, was sufficient to satisfy the jury that these boxes of tobacco were shipped for Apalachicola as the terminus of the voyage as alleged, was clearly a matter of fact which it was their province to determine, and not one as to which the Court should charge them. If they erred in regard to this question of fact the remedy of the defendant below was by motion for a new trial on that ground. We therefore think that the Court below did not err 409 in overruling this instruction, nor do we consider that it erred in giving the last excepted to.

The instruction last mentioned, would seem to be to the effect, that if it appeared that the steamboat "Louisa" was bound for Apalachicola, and there was no evidence that the same was bound also for some intermediate point, so as to contradict that conclusion, then the jury might infer, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, that Apalachicola must have been the terminus of the voyage and the place of delivery. This appears to be a self-evident proposition, and therefore furnishes no ground for exception, if it were otherwise objectionable, and we are satisfied that it is not.

Upon the whole case we are of opinion, that the Court below did not err in refusing, on the one hand, and giving, on the other, the instructions, the subject of the bill of exceptions returned in this case to this Court.

The judgment of the Court below is therefore affirmed with costs.

THOMAS RANDALL vs. REDDING W. PARRAMORE & SIMEON ALEXANDER SMITH.

Where a debtor indebted on several accounts makes a payment, he may apply it to either account; if he does not, the creditor may do so. If neither does, the law will appropriate it according to the justice of the case, provided there are no other parties interested.

Where a party has sustained no injury from the rejection of admissible testimony, he cannot avail himself of the mistake to reverse the judgment.

The identity of the answer and party who made it being shown, an answer of a party to a Bill in Chancery, which is depending and before the Court, may be read in evidence in a Court of Law to the jury, without the reading of the Bill: and if the name and description of the defendant in law agree with the name and description of the party answering in Equity, it is prima facie 410 evidence of identity.

The Bill, as a general rule, is not read; but an exception to the rule is, that where the answer is an answer to articular interrogatories in the Bill, it also must be read; so, if the answer is obscure and needs any portion of the Bill to be read to explain it, then it may be read.

If a verdict be conformable to the law and evidence, it will not be set aside merely because the Court refused to give instructions which might have been properly given.

The refusal of the Court to give an instruction which would not benefit the party asking it, is not error; nor is an erroneous instruction upon an abstract question of law, which is not involved in the decision of the Court, a ground for reversing the judgment.

After a verdict in favor of either party, he has a right to demand of a Court of Errors that it look to the evidence for only one purpose and with a single eye, to ascertain whether it was competent in law to authorize the jury to find the facts which make out the rights of the party on a part or the whole of his case. If in his judgment, the Appellate Court shall hold the evidence was competent, then they must found their judgment on all such facts as were legally inferable therefrom in such manner and with the same legal results as if they had been found and definitely set out in a special verdict. So, on the other hand, the finding of a jury on the whole evidence in a cause, must be taken as negativing all facts which the party against whom their verdict is given has attempted to infer from or establish by evidence.

ERROR from Jefferson County.

Judge Hawkins, before whom this case was tried at Fall Term, 1846, of Jefferson Circuit Court, did not sit at the hearing in this Court.

The facts of the case are recited in the opinion of the Court.

The following instructions, asked for by defendant, were given the jury by the Court:

1st. That when a debtor, indebted on several amounts, makes payment, it is his legal right to direct their application; and that such application is considered as made when such payment is made, and is to be determined by the facts and circumstances attending the payment.

2d. That the mere giving of the debtor's individual check or order on a Bank, is not a payment and discharge of a mortgage lien, but that an actual payment and receipt of the money is necessary to constitute such discharge.

5th. That when an answer in Chancery is given in evidence in a

411 Court of Law, the whole answer is to be taken as prima facie evidence of the truth of the facts stated in it; and that the party who reads it, makes the whole of it evidence, and that it is not competent for the petitioners here to take such parts of the answer of the defendant as suits their purposes and reject such parts as make against them.

6th. That a debtor owing money secured by mortgage and money due on simple contract not secured by mortgage, has the legal right to direct any payment he may make to the satisfaction exclusively of mortgage debt; and that if the jury believe that Thomas Randall the defendant in this case, made payment to the petitioners on account of mortgage debt, and to be applied to the extinguishment of the mortgage lien which petitioners then held, of a sum of money adequate to the satisfaction of all the debt then due by him on said mortgage to petitioners, and the said sum of money was received by petitioners as pavement, then that the defendant did, in contemplation of law, pay and satisfy the notes embraced in the mortgage, no matter what notes the said defendant, through error or mistake, took up and cancelled.

7th. That if the jury believe that the defendant, accounting with said petitioners, paid them in satisfaction of mortgage debt, a sum of money adequate to discharge the lien held by such mortgage, and if the jury further believe that the petitioners yet permitted defendant to take up notes not embraced in the mortgage, although said petitioners were aware of his error in so doing, yet that in law the application of the money to mortgage debt is full and complete, and the covenants in the mortgage are satisfied and fulfilled.

8th. That a subsequent mortgagee advancing and paying money to a prior mortgagee, with the purpose of discharging such prior mortgage, has a right to direct the application of such payment to the satisfaction and extinguishment of the mortgage lien.

12th. That a person owing money on several accounts, some secured by mortgage and some not, has undoubtedly a right to apply his payments to whichever debt he may choose; and that even though no express direction of the application of his payment at the time of their being made had been given, yet the power may be completely exercised without any express direction given at the time; that such direction may be evidenced by circumstances as well as by words, 412 and a payment may be attended by circumstances which demonstrate its application as completely as words could demonstrate it.

13th. That if the jury believe from the evidence that Thomas Randall, the defendant, being indebted to the petitioners upon the mortgage sued on, and upon simple contract not secured by mortgage, he, the said defendant, did, on the 12th December, 1838, direct the payment of a sum adequate to the purpose to be applied in extinguishment of the mortgage debt, and the said sum was afterwards paid to petitioners, then that these circumstances demonstrate the application of the money to the satisfaction of the whole mortgage debt.

To which instructions so given, petitioners, by their counsel, except, &c.

Defendant, by his counsel, further moved the following instructions to be given by the Court to the jury, which the Court refused to give:

3d. That if the jury believe from the evidence, that on the 12th December, 1838, defendant Randall did direct the application of a sum adequate to that purpose, to the payment of the mortgage debt now sued on, both principal and interest, and such sum was actually paid by his agent to the petitioners, and by them received, then such payment enured to the satisfaction and extinguishment of said mortgage debt and lien, although one of the notes secured by said mortgage may, by mistake of said defendant, have been left outstanding in petitioner's possession, and other debts not secured by mortgage taken up in its stead.

4th. That in this proceeding the cause is tried on principles of equity, and that if the intention of the defendant to apply the money paid to mortgage securities is proved to the satisfaction of the jury, and the jury further believe petitioners well knew such to be defendant's intention, and thereupon received a sum sufficient to discharge the mortgage sued on, then that the same is fully paid, satisfied and discharged, notwithstanding any mistake, error, or misapprehension under which defendant acted by taking up notes not secured by the said mortgage.

9th. That if the jury believe from the evidence that the sum of $11,866 09-100, or the check of defendant Randall, was paid by the Union Bank of Florida to petitioners, and when paid was intended by said Bank to be applied to the payment and discharge of the whole amount secured by the prior mortgage of said petitioners, then the 413 receipt of such sum by petitioners enured to discharge and extinguish such mortgage lien, and this whether or not such intended application of the money was made by said petitioners, and in such last case, it is not competent for the petitioners, or defendant Randall, to make any other application.

10th. That if the jury believe from the evidence that when the petitioners presented to the Union Bank of Florida the check of defendant Randall, and received payment of the same, if such payment was designed by defendant Randall and by said Union Bank to be applied to the discharge of their prior mortgage lien, and was paid with such design, then the receipt of such payment in itself constituted a discharge of such mortgage lien.

11th. That the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the Court, if in favor of the defendant in the present action, will not prevent or bar the petitioners from recovering from defendant in another and suitable action, any amount actually due them by defendant as a simple contract debt.

To which last ruling of the Court and refusal to grant the instructions prayed, the defendant, by his counsel, excepted, &c.

Petitioners then offered the following instructions, which they prayed the Court to give to the jury, defendant objecting thereto, but the Court overruled the objection, and did give the instructions as prayed for by petitioners:

Petitioners, by counsel, moved the Court to instruct the jury that if they believe the defendant appropriated the payment by calculation of the amount due on the notes then due and by receiving the same from the petitioners, that it was a valid appropriation, and the petitioners had no right to appropriate the payment to a note not then due, whether a mistake was made by defendant or not in so doing.

2d. That the Union Bank had no right to appropriate the payment of the check to any different note, and especially a note not due, than the notes to which Randall had appropriated it, whether by mistake or not.

To which last ruling of the Court and granting the said last mentioned instructions, the defendant by his counsel, excepted, &c.

And his Honor the Judge further instructed the jury—That the mortgage was an incident to the note—if the note was paid, the mort- 414 gage was discharged, and if the money was applied to the mortgage, the note was discharged; and that while the debt on the note was subsisting, the mortgage was not discharged.

That the application of payment must have been either by the act or agent of parties, or by the act of law—that the party paying had a right to direct the application of payment, and if he did not, the law would apply it—that circumstances may indicate appropriation of payment as well as words themselves, and when thus a mortgage, application would be made to it, as most beneficial to the party paying; and when a payment is made generally, without application of it, the law would apply it to a subsisting debt or note due, if there were other demands—That any transactions between the defendant and the Union Bank and will not be regarded by the jury unless a knowledge of them is directly brought home to the petitioners.

T. H. Hagner, (with whom was L. A. Thompson), for Plaintiff, said:

This was a petition for the foreclosure of mortgage. The controversy turned upon the appropriation of payments. It was clearly shown, that while defendant had appropriated moneys more than adequate "to the extinguishment of the mortgage lien," distinctly so termed, that other notes than mortgage notes had been taken up and cancelled.

For the defendant it was contended, that the appropriation was made by him to the mortgage debt; and that the character and description of payment, as upon "mortgage lien," was the distinctive and determining feature, while the mistake or misapprehension in taking up one note for the other, might be corrected, and the payment considered as made in extinguishment of mortgage lien, as had been the declared purpose.

The principles of construction and of the application of the statute approved 11 Dec., 1824, entitled, "An act to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages by the courts of the common law," come under discussion.

The petitioners insisted on the strict rules of the common law, and the Court concurred with them.

The defendant urged that he was to be debarred of no equitable defence in this proceeding.

415 Upon the admissibility of the answer in Chancery of defendant to the Bill of the Union Bank against him and said petitioners, without the production of the Bill, a question arose.

Upon the specific instructions given and refused by the Court, we shall also offer argument.

1st. The instructions given at the instance of defendant below, if not opposed or taken back by other instructions subsequently refused 416 or given, would have been exceptionable and some favorable to defendant. But the refusal of others asked by defendant, operated by way of negative pregnant, to deefat and nullify those first granted.

This refusal gives rise to a contradiction on the part of the Court. 1st. Instruction 3, asked by defendant, results as a corrollary, or necessary inference from 12, granted; and its refusal is in opposition to 6 and 7. No. 3 merely applies the facts proved or admitted—facts undeniable—to the principles laid down in Nos. 6, 7 and 12; yet this was refused.

No. 9, refused, also contains an undeniable fact and an inference fairly deducible therefrom, a conclusion of law which it was competent for the Court, and the Court only, to apply; and is directly contradicted by No. 8, granted.

No. 10 is subject to all these remarks and principles.

The refusing these additional instructions, deprived the defendant of all benefit of those before given, and precluded the jury from finding in his favor, although they may have fully believed all the facts on which they were founded.

The refusal of Instruction No. 4, is clearly error. The first part has been sustained by argument and prior adjudication in Florida, as a settled rule of construction of the act in question. The second part, founded on intention of petitioners, and on facts properly indicative of that intention, should have been left to the jury as prayed for. It was carefully worded, and was fully within the principles previously laid down by the Court in 7th, 8th, 12th and 13th. Its refusal by the Court must have destroyed, in the minds of the jury, all the favorable effect of the prior instructions. This refusal is error. 3 Cranch Rep., 298. 3 Blackford, 433.

Instruction 9, refused. The first part of this instruction is subject to the same remarks as apply to the 4th, down to the two last lines in the printed record. It merely applies to the facts referred to the jury, and on the supposition of their being by them believed, to the principles already laid down by Instructions No. 7, 8, 12 and 13, granted. The concluding part of it, that it was not competent for the petitioners or defendant Randall to make any other application, results necessarily from the principle of No. 8, granted by the Court. The refusing this last, was in direct contradiction to and subversive in the minds of the jury, of said 8th instruction.

No. 10, refused, should have been granted. 417

There were facts enough proved or admitted, from which the jury might have inferred the design of the payment made on the part of Randall and the Bank, and the legal conclusion necessarily resulted from the principles already laid down by the Court.

11th Instruction. This should have been granted. The debt of defendant on the note outstanding, more especially, after defendant's assumpsit written on it as proved by Seward, constituted, per se, a debt independent of the mortgage, or even of the original note.

The question before the jury was not a mere question of debt, but of mortgage debt—the last issue might be found for defendant, without barring the debt. Plowder, 173. 5 Coke, 114. Co. Litt, 209. 7 Bacon's Abridg., 60.

Defendant in his answer in Chancery, admitted a debt, and in his plea only desired a mortgage lien for that debt. The two questions are separable, and should have been separated. 1 Caine's cases, 60. 5 Wendell, 572. 18 Johnson, 110. 5 New Hamp., 252. 14 Mass., 101. 5 Maddock's Rep., 351.

Nothing prejudiced so much the cause of defendant as refusing this instruction. Then compare this instruction asked with the first paragraph of his Honor's general instruction, and its importance is manifest. The last clause of that general charge, "that while the debt on the note was subsisting the mortgage was not discharged," of itself prevented the possibility of the jury finding for defendant, although they may have been ready to find every other issue in every other instruction favorably for defendant. It covered the whole of the petitioner's case with an impenetrable shield, and left no opening for the facts and legal inferences favorable to defendant. It repudiated and nullified every favorable instruction and construction applicable to his side of the case.

The two instructions given at the instance of petitioners, are humbly submitted to be manifestly wrong. They, in a word, prostrated the whole defense of defendant, and left him nothing to stand on.

And 1st. Both instructions make Randall's alleged calculation (exhibited in his answer) of the amount due on the notes "then due." and his receiving the same (notes given) from petitioners as a valid appropriation, &c., in spite of mistake, &c. Now, there is no proof that Randall made any calculation whatever. He admits in his answer a conjectural caluculation, the supposed basis of the then settle 418 ment; but by whom made, does not appear.

2d. It assumes as a fact what is contradicted by all the proofs on both sides—that such "calculations" was based on notes "then due," whereas, it is undeniable, that one of the notes taken up, was not "then due," but was paid before due and interest abated. This false fact assumed in the instruction would alone, if there was no other error in the cause, justify a reversal.

The fact was all-important in itself, as going to show the primary intention of all the parties. For if one note "not due" was paid, why not another? And yet the second instruction on this point precluded the Bank the "second mortgagee" from applying the payment to the note in question because "not due," in contravention of their legal right as established in instruction No. 8, granted.

3d. It contradicts the 8th instruction given; for while that instruction admits the right of the Bank as second mortgagee, to make the appropriation of its own funds in extinguishment of the mortgage lien, (a duty which law also enjoined), that right is, by the last instruction in question, by anticipation precluded and barred.

4th. While the 8th instruction admits the right of the second mortgagee to make the appropriation, the instruction given at instance of petitioners gives the right to defendant Randall. On the whole, the charge of the Court is so contradictory, that the jury could not know what the law was. For this, the case ought to be reversed. Selim vs. Snyder, 11 Serg. & Rawle., 319.

A. E. Maxwell, for defendant.

The first error assigned relates to the refusal of the Court to admit in evidence papers marked B. & C. The correctness of this refusal depends upon the relevancy of said papers to the issue before the jury. What were those issues? The action was brought to foreclose the mortgage given by defendant to the plaintiffs to secure the payment of three notes. Two of the notes had ben paid and taken up. The third was outstanding, and its alleged non-payment was the cause of the action. The defendant pleaded payment, and thereby the satisfaction and extinguishment of the mortgage. The testimony of H. L. Rutgers was taken to prove that defendant, with the knowledge of plaintiffs, had mortgaged his lands to the U. Bank, which 419 under its charter, he could not have done, except upon condition that he would appropriate the first moneys drawn on the faith of his stock to the extinguishment of the prior mortgage; and also that he made a payment sufficient to cover his mortgage indebtedness, with circumstances intended to show an appropriation for that purpose. Th papers B. & C., which were exhibits annexed to his deposition, were a statement by Randall and a certificate of the Clerk of Jefferson County, showing, as was required by the charter, before any one could mortgage lands to the Bank, the extent and nature of the liens upon his lands. It is evident that such papers were not pertinent to the issues. On their face there is nothing which could have been used as evidence. The circumstances that they were presented to the Bank only proves that one of the necessary steps towards making a mortgage to the Bank was taken; but this cannot affect the mortgage in this suit. Nothing that the Bank and defendant did will be permitted to destroy plaintiff's rights. Nothing but the acts of the parties themselves can affect these rights. If the papers were designed to show that a mortgage had been made to the Bank, they were inadmissible because better evidence of that fact could have been had. They were mere private papers relating to transactions between defendant and the Bank, and there is no evidence to show any privity of plaintiffs, or that they had knowledge of the existence of the papers. They were therefore properly excluded as being res inter alios acta. To allow such papers to go to the jury would be to permit a party to make evidence for himself.

But if they were admissible, the error of the Court in rejecting them was of such slight consequence, that it is not good ground for reversal. "Where a party has sustained no injury by the rejection of admissible testimony, he cannot avail himself of the mistake to reverse the judgment." Smith vs. Ruecastle, 2 Halst., 357. 3 J. J. Marsh., 717. These papers are unimportant for any purpose. They supply no link in a chain of evidence, and tend to prove no fact which there was not better evidence to prove. Their rejection, then, could cause no prejudice to the defendant.

The next error to be considered, is the refusal of the Court to admit the bill with the answer. A bill cannot be used as evidence. 7 Durn. & East., 2. The bill in this case certainly cannot, for it is the bill of a third party. The authorities which hold that the bill 420 should be admitted, give as the reason, that otherwise it will not appear that there was a suit in which the answer was filed. In other words, that the bill is necessary to prove the answer. This reason though it may have been good in England, where the Chancery and common law Courts are separate and distinct, will not apply here, where they are blended in one court. Courts take judicial notice of their own records. 2 Bac. Abr. Ev., 642-3. There could be no occasion to introduce the bill to establish the fact of the existence of the Chancery suit. The Court knew it judicially, and could so instruct the jury. The reason ceasing, the authorities no longer apply. The answer was used to show the admissions of defendant, and was sufficiently proved by the certificate of the judge before whom it was sworn. There could be no higher proof that it was what it purported to be.

Here, also, the remark may be repeated which was made in reference to papers B. & C. No injury can result from the rejection of the bill. It contained no evidence internally, and could prove nothing which could possibly affect the merits of the case. Its admision could not have had the slightest influence upon the jury. 2 Halst., 357. 3 Marsh, 717.

The 3d instruction asked for by defendant, was properly refused. It supposes a state of facts which there was no evidence to support, the evidence being directly the reverse and uncontradicted. 2 Peters, 625. Besides, this instruction was but a repetition of the 5th which was granted, and which the Court might have given in preference to the other, because its phraseology better suited its view. 6 Peters, 628. One or the other of these grounds must prevail to sustain the Court.

The 4th instruction, like the 3d, supposed a state of facts not warranted by the evidence.

The 9th instruction could not have been given upon any principle of law or justice. The intention of the Bank cannot be so controlling as is implied in that instruction. It had no right to make the appropriation of payment. In all the conflict of doctrine on the subject of appropriation of payments, I imagine that no author or judge will be found holding that a third party, other than the debtor or creditor, has, under any circumstances, a right to direct the appropriation. Yet the instruction claims that right for the Bank.

The 10th instruction was also properly refused. The mere design 421 of defendant and the Bank, could not affect the appropriation. The debt to which it was contended the appropriation was made not being due at the time, the appropriation to it cannot be established without showing a positive direction to the creditor, indicated either expressly or by conclusive circumstances, and his action in conformity thereto. How easy would it be for parties to allege such design as an afterthought, when they found it to their interest to do so. This consideration is enough to show the evil and error embodied in this instruction.

The 11th instruction is but an abstract proposition, and as such, properly refused. 1 Scammon, 407.

The 8th and 9th errors are badly taken. The instructions to which they refer asserted nothing more than the right of the debtor to make appropriation of his payment, and that his mistake in making the appropriation shall not enure to the disadvantage of the plaintiffs, they not having done anything to cause the mistake and being ignorant of it. The defendant can derive no aid from the law relating to the appropriation of payments. His answer shows that he made the appropriation to another debt than the one sued on. Can he get rid of the consequences of that appropriation by saying it was made under a mistake? Even if this proceeding were in a Court of Equity, which is not the case, I cannot see the slightest ground for the relief which those Courts sometimes give on account of mistakes. So far as the mistake affects the defendant himself, there is certainly nothing entitling him to relief. He has sustained no injury, nor lost any valuable right. He has paid no debt which he did not owe. The Court would not interfere, except upon condition that defendant should do equity, by paying or tendering in Court what he acknowledged to be due. The mistake of one party, unless caused by the misconduct of the other, is not a good ground for relief. 1 Story's Eq., 160. There is no pretence here that plaintiffs did anything to cause the alleged mistake. Another reason why this mistake should not avail is, that it does appear that defendant would have been better off if no mistake had been made. If plaintiffs had been asked to accept the money in payment of the mortgage lien, (though one note was not due by twelve months), probably they would not have done so. The presumption is, that they would not; for it would have been giving up their best security without any consideration. It 422 would be a most summary way of setting aside a creditor's rights to allow the debtor's mistake to destroy the highest security for the debt.

Courts will no relieve against mistakes, where they might have been avoided by due diligence, nor unless the macts are material. 1 Story's Eq., 159-60; 163-4. The mistake here set up might have been a ground of relief for the Bank from its contract with defendant, but certainly cannot affect the contracts between the parties to this suit.

The instructions given by the Court of its own motion, which are assigned for the 10th error, were correct. They embody the plainest principles of the law applicable to this case, and nothing more. If there can be anything wrong in them it is favorable to defendant, and he cannot object to it. 15 Wendell, 24. 1 Story's Com. Eq., 159, 163-4.

Douglas, Ch. J., delivered the following opinion:

This case was brought up by writ of error from the Jefferson Circuit Court.

The suit was commenced by petitioner to foreclose a mortgage under the Act of Decr. 11th, 1824, "To regulate the foreclosure of mortgages at Common Law," &c. Duval's Comp., page 38.

The record shews that the mortgage was given on the 19th day of Decr., 1836, by the said Thomas Randall to the said Smith & Parramore, the petitioners in the Court below, upon certain lands in the mortgage described, to secure the payment of three certain promissory note of the same date, amounting in the whole to nine thousand seven hundred and fifty-four dollars and ninety-two cents, one of which said notes was payable one year after the date thereof for the sum of $3027 39; one other of said notes was payable two years after the date thereof for the sum of $3251 64, and the other was payable three years after the date thereof for the sum of $3475 89. The two notes first mentioned were paid before the institution of this suit. The foreclosure is sought, therefore, for the alleged non-payment of the last mentioned note. To this petition the defendant Randall put in three pleas. The first and second are pleas of payment. In the third plea, the defendant alleged that after the execution of the said deed of mortgage, he did by deed of mortgage duly 423 executed, of which the said Randall and Parramore had notice, mortgage and pledge the lands and property in the mortgage first referred to contained, and conveyed to the Union Bank of Florida, to secure a certain amount of stock of said Bank, then subscribed in the name and behalf of said Thomas; and by the terms of the charter of said Bank it was provided and conditioned, that all money to be borrowed on the pledge of the stock of said Bank, where the property so secured was subject to a former mortgage, was first to be applied to the payment and extinguishment of said prior lien, of which provision and condition in said charter and law aforesaid the said Smith and Parramore had notice; and further, that on the 12th day of December, 1838, he being then indebted to the said Smith and Parramore as well on the three notes in the first recited mortgage, and in the said petition referred to, as also other promissory notes not secured and provided for in said mortgage, did then by check on the Union Bank of Florida to said Smith and Parramore delivered, order and direct the payment of the sum of eleven thousand eight hundred and sixty-six 9-100 dollars to said Smith and Parramore, in full payment and satisfaction of said three notes in the said petition referred to, and in extinguishment of the lien in said mortgage, and that the said Smith and Parramore did then and there accept the same on said terms, and did on the 14th day of December, 1838, present the said check at the said Union Bank, and did then and there receive payment in full of the same. To each of these pleas a general replication was filed by the petitioners, upon which issue was joined. The payment relied upon by the plaintiff in error was the check for $11,866 09 upon the said Bank, given by him to Smith and Parramore on the 12th day of December, 1838. It appears from the testimony of Hy. L. Rutgers, Cashier, set out in the bill of exceptions which constitutes part of the record in this case, that the plaintiff in error was at that time a stockholder in that Bank to the amount of 581 shares, which he had procured at different times by mortgages upon slaves and land; and that he was entitled to draw two thirds of the amount of his shares, say $38,733 34-100, and that he had drawn at various times before the 14th of December, 1838, $18,450 76-100, leaving a balance at the time when the above mentioned check of $11,866 09 was drawn, of $26,282 58 against which he could drawn, being $8,619 49 over and above the amount of the check, 424 and $5,140 60 more than sufficient to pay the note on which this suit was brought. At the time when the check was drawn, viz., the 12th December, 1838, upon his complying with the requisitions of the charter, the lands mortgaged by the plaintiff in error to the Union Bank, as appears by other evidence in the case, included certain tracts which he had purchased of Smith and Parramore, and one Jesse H. Willis, which he (Randall) called his Ocilla lands, and also other land which he had bought of the United States. His indebtedness to Smith and Parramore was for the purchase money of the lands which he had purchased of them and of said Willis, who had transferred to them some of Randall's notes. This check of Randall for $11,866 09, Rutgers, the witness before mentioned, says was presented to him by Reddin W. Parramore, one of the parties, on the 14th of December, 1838, and paid; and that Reddin W. Parramore, at the time when he presented the check for payment, delivered to John Parkhill, Esq., who was then Cashier of the Union Bank, (Rutgers being at that time Teller), a letter bearing date on the same day that the check was drawn, in which the plaintiff in error said to Parkhill, "I have this day drawn a check in favor of Smith and Parramore for the sum of 11,866 9-100 dollars, to be paid at your Bank, as a loan on my stock, the whole of this amount goes to extinguish so far the sum due to them on my Ocilla lands pledged to the Bank." It does not appear from the proofs in the cause, that Parramore was expressly informed of the contents of the letter, or whether it was opened or sealed. The plaintiff in error, however, in his answer to a bill in Chancery, which it appears had been filed by said Bank against himself and others, and which was offered in evidence by the defendants in error and permitted to be read to the jury, states that from the nature of the transaction and the perfectly frank and open manner of dealing between the parties, he is fully satisfied that the contents of the letter must have been communicated to Parramore. It further appears by the bill of exceptions, that the said Jesse H. Willis, and Smith and Parramore, were appraisers of the lands so mortgaged by the plaintiff in error to the Union Bank; and the plaintiff in error in his said answer in the Chancery suit says that "as well from the fact of said appraisement so by them made as also from personal communications made to them by him and Jesse H. Willis, in his presence, he fully believes that said Smith and Parramore were advised and well knew that his said lands were proposed 425 to be placed in said Bank by him, and also that from the proceeds of the loan to be made on the stock so secured on their pledge, defendants (Smith and Parramore) were to be paid the amount of their lien on said land. Randall, in his letter to Parkhill before mentioned, says, "I left with you a power of attorney to sign my stock notes for me in my absence, under which you can still act for the purpose of making a stock note to cover the amount, and also the further sum of 3,000 dollars, for which I have given them a check on your Bank of this date. To avoid trouble, however, I have signed my name on the opposite page to a note in blank, to be filled up as a stock note, if needful;" said Rutgers, in his testimony, says the notes in the mortgage of Smith and Parramore amounted to $9,704 on the 12th of December, 1838, and that the sum of $11,866 9-100 was paid to Smith and Parramore, as directed by letter of Thomas Randall, to extinguish the sum due to them on the Ocilla lands. There was, he says, no actual cancellation that he is aware of. It also further appears from Randall's answer in the Chancery suit that he, with his proposals to the Bank for stock, exhibited an abstract of title to the lands proposed to be mortgaged to secure it, which contain 1,175 acres, including the lands purchased by him of Smith and Parramore and said Willis, and that he (Randall) stated to the Bank that Smith and Parramore had a mortgage on part of it purchased from them and Willis to secure the sum of 12,695 9-100 dollars, which he proposed to pay off from the money first to be loaned on the stock. This sum, it also appears from another part of the answer, included a note for $2,940 18, which he (Randall) calls a cash note by him as part consideration of land. This note, it seems, was included in the settlement of the 12th July, 1838, hereafter referred to, together with the first note included in the mortgage to Smith and Parramore, both of which, including interest, amounted to the sum of $6,350 16, for which Randall gave a check of that date which was returned at the time of the settlement which took place between himself and Smith and Parramore on the 12th of December, 1838, and constituted part of the amount of $11,866 09, for which the check of that date was given, which check it was understood by and between the parties, was (it is stated by Randall in his answer in the Chancery suit) to cover the following ,viz: "This check, dated 12th July, 1838, payable 1st of August, 1838, $6,356 76, add interest four months $169 35; 426 not to Smith and Parramore payable 19th December, 1838, $3,251 64—Jesse H. Willis' note payable same date, $2,094 34;" which several sums added together make the precise amount of $11,866 09, for which the check of that date was given. This cash note of $2,940 18, and the Jesse H. Willis' note of $2,094 34, making together the sum of $5,034 52, were not included in the mortgage; both of them, however, appear to have been given as part of the price of the lands purchased by Randall, either of Willis or Smith and Parramore. The note of $2,094 34, given by Randall to Willis, was transferred by him, together with other notes, to Smith and Parramore. It appears, too, that Willis at one period held a mortgage on some of these lands, given by Randall to secure the payment of these notes, which as an act of kindness and accommodation to Randall, he (Willis) had given up to Randall, to be cancelled before the notes were transferred to Smith and Parramore; and that Smith and Parramore were aware of this fact when they took them. Randall, however, insists that when he made his statement to the Bank as to the amount of the mortgage to Smith and Parramore, and when he made the settlement above stated, he acted under the belief that the note of $2,940 18, was included in the mortgage of Smith and Parramore; and we are now asked to correct this mistake of his by applying the amount paid on it to the note now sued upon. But with every disposition to render to the appellant the most ample justice, we find ourselves upon this subject, in this case, without authority to comply with such request. If this alleged mistake can be corrected at all, a Court of Chancery, where all the parties interested can be brought in and have an opportunity to be heard, and where the respective rights and interests of each and all can be adjusted and protected, is the proper forum. We can only decide the case upon the issues before us. It has been urged that this action is in the nature of a suit in Chancery, and that the equitable rights and interests of the parties can be taken into consideration, but it is to be remarked that this is a proceeding under a statute regulating the foreclosure of mortgages by the courts of common law. It is true, as suggested by the counsel for the plaintiff in error that in the case of Manly and Moseley, Adms., &c., against the Union Bank of Florida, decided at the last term of this Court, held. "that a defendant to a petition for 427 foreclosure under this act, was not in making his defence, required to conform to all the strict technical rules of special pleading, but that if he sets out his objections or defence substantially, so that the petitioner can readily see and understand the grounds of his objections; or, in other words, if he sets them out as specifically as he would be obliged to do the matter of his defence in an answer in Chancery, or in a notice of special matter under the general issue in a suit at law, verified by oath agreeably to the provisions of the statute relating to that subject, it is sufficient." Reps. S. C. of Florida, p. 182. but this decision was founded upon the peculiar structure and provisions of the act, and we still entertain the same view of the matter. It was not however intended to be understood by that decision, nor is it inferrable from the language used, that he could put in such a defence as would enable the Court to go into an enquiry as to all the equitable matters connected with the transaction. The question, whether he could do so or not, did not arise in that case; and what equitable powers the Court might exercise in such a case upon an issue properly preesnting such equitable matters to the consideration of the Court, it is not necessary now to decide; because such an issue in this case has not been made. The issue here, is payment; and if the defendant in a suit in Chancery were to put his defence solely on the ground of payment, it is apprehended that he would fail, unless by his proofs he established that defence. And besides, before the plaintiff in error could have a right to invoke the aid of any Court to correct this alleged mistake, it would be incumbent on him to put (or at least to offer to place) all the parties to the transaction in "statu quo" in relation to it; for "he that will have equity done to him must do it to the same person." Francis' Maxims, p. 1. 2 Chan. Cases, 194-5. And when a party goes into a Court of Equity for relief he will be compelled to do equity to others. Read vs. Long, 4 Yerger's Reps., 68-9. Thomas vs. Bush, Admr., 1 Bibb, 506. McDonald vs. Neilson, 2 Cowen, 139. Lipscomb vs. Littlepage, 1 Hen. and Mumf., 454. This Court, upon the issues here presented, is incapable of enforcing this principle, and there is no voluntary offer to comply with it. And were the Court to undertake to correct the alleged mistake by applying the amount paid on the note for $2,940 18 to the note now sued upon, we should leave the defendants in error with a claim on the plaintiff in error for the 428 amount of the sum of $2,940 18, with all the interest that has accrued thereon, without any evidence of the debt, and with this debt barred by the statute of limitations. And, moreover, if the Court had the power to correct such a mistake in such a case, there is nothing in this record to show that if Randall was laboring under such a misapprehension as is alleged, Smith and Parramore, or either of them, did anything to cause it, or that either of them was aware of the fact when the check for $11,866 09 was given, or when it was paid by the Union Bank.

Whether the note for $3,475 89, included in the mortgage now sought to be foreclosed, has been paid or not, depends upon the manner in which the proceeds of that check were appropriated. The general rule as to the appropriation of payments, was correctly laid down by the counsel for the plaintiffs in error, and was not understood to have been controverted by the counsel on the other side.—Indeed, it is too well settled for controversy, that where a debtor indebted on several accounts, makes a payment, he may apply it to either account. If he does not, the creditor may do so. If neither does, the law will appropriate it according to the justice of the case, provided there are no other parties interested. The United States vs. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., Reps., 720. 5 Cond. Reps., S. C., 740. Gass vs. Stinson, 3 Mason, C. C. R., 110. Postmaster General vs. Novell, Gilpin's C. C. R., 134. Cremer vs. Higginson and others, 1 Mason, C. C. R., 337; and Devaynes vs. Noble, Baring vs. Noble, 1 Merivale R., 605-6.

It was contended, in the argument of this cause, by the counsel for the plaintiff in error, that this case comes within the exception above stated, viz., that there are other parties interested, and that the law applied the funds of Randall in the Union Bank to the payment of the note secured by the mortgage now sought to be foreclosed, and that he had no right to make a different application of them and leave this note unpaid. To sustain this proposition they referred to and relied upon the 8th section of the charter of that Bank. By the 1st section of that charter, (Duval's Comp., 442), it was provided, that a Bank should be established in the city of Tallahassee under the title of "The Union Bank of Florida," with a capital of one million of dollars, and with the privilege of increasing it to three millions of dollars, which capital was to be raised by means of a loan on the 429 faith of the Territory, by the Directors of the Bank; and by the 8th section, (ibid, 444), it was enacted, that to secure the payment of the principal and interest of bonds to be issued by the Territory for the purpose of raising the capital of the Bank, the subscribers should give a bond and mortgage to the satisfaction of the Directors, on property to be in all cases equal to the amount of their respective stock, &c.; and it is also provided, that property already mortgaged may be received as a guarantee. "Provided," that there be first deducted from the whole appraised value of the property, at least twice the amount of said mortgages and stock to be given only to the amount of the surplus after such deduction. "Provided, however, that such existing mortgage on said property shall not prevent the Board of Directors or Commissioners from receiving it, at its full value, if the subscriber shall actually employ the money to be borrowed from the Bank in the extinguishment of the said mortgage, and its extinguishment shall take place in the presence of the officers of the Bank or their appointed agents." Duval's Comp., 445.

Under this provision of the charter, there is no doubt but that the Union Bank might, if such deduction were not made, have applied so much of the money loaned to the plaintiff in error on his stock, as would have extinguished the lien of his mortgage to Smith anr Parramore, or that it was its duty to have done so. But the parties injured by the misapplication of the funds, if indeed any injury has been sustained, or any misapplication has taken place, are not before the Court; and for the reasons above stated, we have no power, as this case is situated, to bring them here. No one is here complaining of this matter, but the plaintiff in error himself; and it will appear, we think, for reasons hereafter to be stated, that he cannot avail himself in this case of that provision of the charter. But has any injury been sustained by any one, in consequence of the non-application of any portion of the proceeds of the check of $11,866 09 to the payment of the note which is the foundation of this suit? Was there any imperative rule of law requiring such application? It is to be recollected that the whole amount of the loan of the Bank to the plaintiff in error, was $38,733 34. This was raised, as appears by the testimony of Rutgers, the Cashier of the Bank, upon the mortgage of land and negroes. Considerably less than one half of the sum of $38,733 34, it would appear from the testimony before us, was raised on the lands mortgaged to Smith and Parramore. Even 430 if the deduction provided for in the charter were not made, (and we are unable to determine from the record whether it was made or not), those lands having been mixed up with other lands and with negroes in the transactions of Randall with the Union Bank, it is impossible to say from an inspection of the record in this case, whether the note now sued on should have been paid out of the $18,450 66, which Rutgers says Randall had drawn from the Bank before the 12th of December, 1838, or out of the proceeds of the check, or whether it should have been paid out of the sum of $6,584 76 which remained to his credit after the check was paid. We cannot say, therefore, even if the deduction above mentioned were not made, that the law (as the case is now presented to us)) could have made an application of any portion of the proceeds of the check to the payment of this note.

It was insisted in argument that the charter of the Union Bank is a public act, and that consequently Smith and Parramore were bound to take notice of it; and that, they having appraised the lands which Randall proposed to mortgage to the Union Bank, under an appointment from that institution for that purpose, they were apprised of the intention of Randall to mortgage to the Bank the same lands on which they had this mortgage, and were therefore bound to see that their mortgage was paid out of the first money loaned to Randall on his stock. Without stopping to determine whether the position in relation to the charter is well assumed or not, it is deemed sufficient to say that if it be, Smith and Parramore had the same right to notice the provision in the 8th section in relation to the deduction above mentioned, and also the provision in the 29th section of the charter, "that each and every stockholder shall be entitled to a credit or loan equal to two-thirds of the total amount of his shares, (Duval's Comp., 451), by which they would have seen that Randall would be entitled to draw from the Bank on the lands they had appraised, a sum more than equal to the amount of their mortgage and the check together. So that there seems to be nothing in the provision of the 8th section of the charter relied upon, to affect them in this matter so far as now appears.

It is alleged, further, on behalf of the plaintiff in error, and in support of the issue in this case, that he appropriated so much of the

431 proceeds of the check to the payment of this note as was sufficient to satisfy it and extinguish the mortgage given to secure its payment; and reliance is placed upon the letter of Randall to Parkhill of the 12th Decr., 1838, and the statement respecting it in Randall's answer in Chancery, to sustain this position. In the letter, however, he did not say that the proceeds of the check were to extinguish so far the mortgage to Smith and Parramore, but that it was to extinguish so far the sum due to Smith and Parramore on his Ocilla lands, mortgaged to the Bank. It does not clearly appear whether all of the four notes taken up by Randall in his settlements with Smith and Parramore of 12th July and 12th December, 1838, all of which were included in the amount for which the check of the latter date, were given in part consideration of the Ocilla lands or not. It is pretty evident that three of them were, and if the fourth (which was given as part consideration of land) was also, then the whole amount of the proceeds of the check, did go to extinguish so far the debt due them (Smith and Parramore) on his Ocilla lands, and the terms of the letter to Parkhill, were literally satisfied. But whether this be so or not, it does not satisfactorily appear that Smith and Parramore knew the contents of that letter, or whether the above mentioned deduction had been made from the appraisement of the lands mortgaged to them, and afterwards mortgaged to the Bank, or not. And if they even knew that this deduction had not been made, and were also aware of the contents of the letter, the facts, that its contents were not specific as to the mortgage, that it spoke of extinguishing so far he debt due them, instead of the mortgage which was less than the amount of the check; that they had just given up to Randall the four notes above mentioned, which amounted, wkith the interest agreed, to just the sum for which the check was given, and that it did not amount to a sum sufficient to cover the three notes exclusive of the note of $2,940 18, and the note now in controversy, and the silence of the officers of the Bank respecting this note and mortgage, were calculated to induce them to believe that it was intended both by Randall and the Bank, that this note which was not then due, should run to maturity. And the renewal of this note by Randall, on the 20th of December, 1844, as shewn by the proof, is pretty conclusive evidence that up to that period neither party had considered it paid. It is true that Randall in his answer in Chancery, alleges that in mak-
432 ing the settlement of 12th July, 1838, he acted under his original error to which he had before adverted, that the item of $2,940 18 was included in the mortgage to Smith and Parramor; but there is nothing in the proofs of the case to lead one to suppose that they had any knowledge of this misapprehension. But if it were otherwise, it is difficult to perceive how it could affect them. It was further argued that the request of Smith and Parramore for a renewal of this note, from a fear that it was liable to be defeated by a lapse of five years, tends of itself to exclude the idea of its being still secured by a deed of mortgage. But we do not see how such a conclusion necessarily follows. It is true that a deed of mortgage would not be barred by such lapse of time. Suppose, however, that the mortgaged premises, upon a sale under a decree of foreclosure, were not to bring the amount of the debt. Then their remedy would be upon the note for the residue, and it is not reasonable to suppose, that while they were indulging the plaintiff in error with further time, they might wish to guard against the contingency of the note being barred by the statute of limitations? It would seem so. Seward, the witness, who acted as agent of Smith and Parramore in procuring that renewal, however, says that he made the application for it of his own mere motion. He also further said that he told said Randall that he had a mortgage; but he did not shew it. He said it was a correct debt. Being cross-examined, he said Judge Randall looked at the note, said it was a just debt, meant to pay it. This conversation took place on the day of the endorsement. Taking, then, all these circumstances into consideration with the lights we now have before us, we cannot resist the conclusion that in the settlement made on the 12th day of December, 1838, between Smith and Parramore and the plaintiff in error, he specifically appropriated the amount of the check of $11,866 09 of that date to the payment of the notes which he then took up, and left the note now in suit unpaid.

From the view we have taken of this case we might, perhaps with propriety, spare ourselves the trouble of examining the several errors assigned; but as some of them seemed so strongly relied upon by the counsel for the plaintiff in error, we proceed briefly to consider such of them as appear to be deserving of special attention. The first is, that the Court erred in refusing to let exhibits B. and C. to the deposition of H. L. Rutgers, offered in evidence in the Court below, to be read in evidence. By reference to the bill of exceptions, 433 it appears that exhibit B. was a list, or statement, made out by the plaintiff in error and handed to the Union Bank, of the lands which he proposed to mortgage to that institution, to which was annexed the following remark by him: "Smith and Parramore have a mortgage on part of it, purchased from them and Willis, to secure the sum of $12,695 09, which I propose to pay off from the first money loaned on the stock. There is nothing, however, to shew that Smith & Parramore had any knowledge of this paper, and it appears to have no bearing upon the issue in this case. The same remark too, is applicable to exhibit (C.) If they were admissible we can see no injury that the party has sustained by their rejection; and where the party has sustained no injury from the rejection of admissible testimony, he cannot avail himself of the mistake to reverse the judgment. Smith & Ruecastle, 2 Halstead, 357. But we do not consider them admissible. To allow such papers to go to the jury would be to permit a party to make evidence for himself. We think therefore, that they were properly rejected.

The second error assigned is, that the Court erred in allowing the answer of Thomas Randall to the bill of complaint of the Union Bank, exhibited against said Randall and Smith & Parramore, to be read in evidence to the jury without the bill of complaint, to which the same was an answer.

In order to a correct determination of the question here presented, it becomes important to ascertain the purpose for which a bill should be before the Court, when the answer is offered in evidence. It is not as proof, because a bill cannot be used as evidence. Doe on the demise—Bowerman vs. Sybourn, 7 Durnf. and East, 2. The bill, in this case, most certainly could not; for it was the bill of a third party. The reason given in the books why an answer cannot be given in evidence without the bill, is, "because without the bill there does not appear to be a cause depending." 3 Bac. ab. Title Ev. 559, Archd. Pr. 219. An answer is proved by shewing the allegations in the Court, by shewing the bill which is the charge, and the answer which is, as it were, the defence of the bill. 1 Starkie Ev. 287, 288. An answer in Chancery is proved by the production of the bill and answer, or of examined copies of them; but no proof of the proper officer that the bill has been searched for in the office and cannot be found, the answer may be read without the bill. Roscoe 434 on Ev. 57—Gilb. Ev. 55. From these authorities it would appear that the object of having the bill before the Court is, to show a cause is depending and to identify the answer. There is much force in the suggestion made, arguendo, by counsel for the defendants in error upon this point, that "this reason, although it may have been good in England where the Chancery and Common Law Courts are separate and distinct, will not apply here, where they are blended in one and the same Court; and especially when applied to a case like the present, where the Chancery and Common Law suits were pending in the same Court, and the record of both suits were kept in the same office by the same clerk. It is a well established principle that Courts take judicial notice of their own records. 2 Bac. ab. Title Evidence, 643, 644. But in this case the objection is not that the answer was permitted to be read without that proof of identity. There is no complaint that the bill was not before the Court, but that the answer was permitted to be read to the jury, without the bill. The entry in the record of the Court below is, "And petitioners further offered to read in evidence to the jury, the answer of said defendant to the bill of complaint of the Union Bank of Florida, now pending in this Jefferson Circuit Court, to which evidence defendant, by his counsel, objects, unless the bill of complaint to which it is an answer, be also read to the jury." Here the pendency of the Chancery suit is distinctly shown, and we have in this entry record evidence that the bill was before the Court, and that the answer read to the jury was the answer to that bill. It is said in the books that some proof of identity of the parties is requisite. Roscoe on Ev. 57—Gilbert Ev. 55. Darbuall vs. Howard, R. and M., 169. No objection appears to have been taken for want of such proof in this case, and could not well be, for the answer contains intrinsic proof of identity. If the name and description of the defendant at law, agreed with the name and description of the party answering in equity, it is prima facie evidence of identity. Hennell vs. Lyon, 1 B. and A., 182. cited in Roscoe on Ev. 57. That is the case here; and, the answer relating to the same subject matter embraced in this suit, the proof of identity would seem to be complete. The pendency of the suit being shewn, the bill being before the Court, the identity of the answer and the party who made it being shown, there was no valid ob-

435 jection to allowing the answer to be read to the jury, without the bill's being also read to the jury. The bill, as a general rule, is not read; but an exception to the rule is, that where an answer is an answer to particular interrogatories in the bill, that also must be read. 3 Phil. Ev., 929, per Bailey, Justice, in Rowe vs. Brenton, 3 Mann and Rye, 271, 273, and Lord Tenterden, Chief Justice, ibid. So, if the answer is obscure, and needs any portion of the bill to be read to explain it, then it may be read—ibid. It does not appear that the Court below refused to permit the defendant to read the bill. If the answer was obscure, or was to particular interrogatories, so that without reading the bill it could not be understood, the proper course, we think, would have been (if he deemed it essential to his interest,) to have moved the reading of it, or such parts of it as were necessary to his case; and if the Court then refused to permit it to be read, he should have excepted, and brought up such part of the bill as he had offered to read, that this Court might be able to judge of its materiality. In the absence of interrogatories, (said Bailey, Justice, in Rowe vs. Brenton, 3 Mann. and Rye, 271,) we shall see from the document itself, whether it be, or be not fairly and distinctly intelligible; and as no part of this bill is brought up, this duty would seem now to devolve on us, in relation to the answer in question. No principle of law appears to have been violated in allowing this answer to be read to the jury, without the bill having been at the same time read to the jury.

We do not deem it necessary to remark upon the other errors assigned, all of which are founded either upon instructions given, or asked and refused to be given to the jury, further than to say that we have examined them all, and do not find that the Court below erred either in the one or the other.

But if it had, the verdict in this case is conformable to the law and the evidence, and should not be set aside, merely because the Court refused to give instructions which might have been properly given. Thomas et us, 6 Monroe's Rep. 61—Breckenridge vs. Anderson—such as the facts authorized, will the judgment be disturbed, merely because the opinion of the Court (in his instructions to the jury,) was given in an improper form, or was founded on a misconception of the law. Lee vs. Chambers, 3 J. J. Marshall, 508. So the refusal of a Court to give instructions which would not benefit the party asking it, is not error—4 J. J. Marshall, 398—or an erroneous instruction upon an abstract question of law, which is not involved in the decision of the Court, is not a ground for reversing the judgment. Reed vs. McGrew, 5 Hamm., 375—Jordice vs. James, ibid, 88.

436 After a verdict in favor of either party, he has a right to demand of a Court of Equity that they look to the evidence for only one purpose, and with a single eye to ascertain whether it was competent in law to authorize the jury to find the facts which make out the right of the party on a part, or the whole of his case. If, in its judgment, the Appellate Court shall hold that the evidence was competent, then they must found their judgment on all such facts as were legally inferrable therefrom, in such manner and with the same legal results as if they had been found, and definitely set out in a special verdict. So, on the other hand, the finding of a jury on the whole evidence in a cause, must be taken as negativing all facts which the party, against whom their verdict is given, has attempted to infer from, or establish by the evidence. Hepburn vs. Dubois, 12 Peters, 376.

Testing this case by the principles here laid down, we think the law is for defendants in error, upon the facts found by the jury.

The judgment of the Court below is therefore affirmed with costs. Per curiam.

CHARLES STEWART & JOHN FONTAINE, MERCHANTS, TRADING, &C. 437
AS STEWART & FONTAINE, vs. ARCHIBALD T. BENNETT.

Two pleas being filed, the one alleging that the cause of action did not accrue within four, instead of five years, and the other being a plea in abatement, not sworn to and filed after a plea in bar, the Court below took no notice of, or action on them: held, that these pleas being nullities which, on motion of plaintiff, would have been set aside, the judgment will not be reversed, because of the omission of the Court below to dispose thereof.

As a general rule, until judgment is signed or there is final judgment, amendments to the pleadings may be allowed to the parties upon proper and equitable terms, and the declaration may be amended at any time, so long as the proceedings remain in paper.

The doctrine of amendments as it stands at common law, independent of the statutes of amendments and jeofail, seems based upon the discretion of the Court, and applications for amendments are in nature of appeals to the equitable side of the Court.

Suit was instituted against four defendants, A., B., C. and D., and service of the writ perfected on A., B. and C., who filed a joint plea of non assumpsit: afterwards all the defendants filed a joint plea in abatement, and of the statute of limitations: plaintiff then dismissed the suit as to C., and a trial was had and a verdict rendered against A., B. and D.; but, on motion, a new trial was granted. Plaintiff, thereupon, by leave of the Court, amended his writ and declaration by striking therefrom the names of C. and D. as defendants; and upon a trial a verdict was rendered against A. and B. Held, that the Court had a right, in its discretion, to allow plaintiff to amend his writ and declaration by striking out the names of C. and D. as defendants, and that the allowing of such amendment was not error, for which the Court will reverse the judgment.

ERROR from Franklin county.

His Honor, Judge Douglas, presided at the trial of this case in the Court below.

This was an action of trespass on the case, instituted in the late Superior Court of the Territory of Florida, for Franklin county, at its Spring Term, 1841, against Charles Stewart and John Fontaine, merchants, trading, &c., as Stewart & Fontaine, and Hampton Smith and Philo D. Woodruff. Service of the writ was perfected on Stewart and Fontaine, and Smith; and returned, "not found," as to Woodruff.

On 12th April, 1841, plaintiff filed his declaration against all the defendants named in the writ: it contained two counts against the de- 438 fendants, as owners of a steam-boat called the Reindeer, for the loss of certain goods shipped on the said boat, and alleged that they were common carriers. On the 6th December, 1841, Stewart, Fontaine and Smith, filed a joint plea of non assumpsit. On the 31st October, 1843, the defendants pleaded jointly in abatement, that John Victory and Daniel J. Britt were part owners and ought to have been joined; but the plea was not sworn to. On the same day the defendants filed a joint plea of statute of limitations, that the cause of action did not accrue within four years. To neither of these pleas was there any replication or issue.

On 13th December, 1843, on motion of plaintiff the suit was abated as to Woodruff, and a trial was had and a verdict rendered against the other defendants. At the same Term of the Court a new trial was granted.

On the 15th April, 1846, plaintiff, after having moved to enter a nolle prosequi as to Smith and withdrawn it, by leave of the Court amended his writ and declaration, by striking out the names of Smith and Woodruff as defendants, and on the same day a trial was had, and a verdict and judgment rendered against Stewart and Fontaine.

On the 25th April, 1836, there was a motion in arrest of judgment, which was refused.

Plaintiff in error assigned the following errors:

1st. Because the Court gave judgment against the plaintiff in error, upon the trial of the issue, on the plea of non assumpsit, when there were two other pleas on the said record, upon which there were no issues, and upon which there has been no trial or action of the Court below.

2d. Because the Court allowed the plaintiff to amend the declaration and writ immediately before the trial, and after plaintiffs in error and their co-defendant, Hampton Smith, had jointly pleaded, by striking out the names of Smith and Woodruff, as defendants, from the writ and declaration.

3d. Because the Court below did not grant plaintiffs in error motion in arrest of judgment.

4th. Because the Court refused said motion, and entered judgment for defendant in error.

5th. Because said record is, in other respects, erroneous.

Carmack & Baker, for plaintiffs in Error, after reciting the facts of the case, said:

There is a plea in abatement alleging a nonjoinder of two persons, John Victory and Daniel J. Birtt, as defendants. To this plea there has been neither demurrer or replication, nor motion to strike out.

The same may be said of the plea of the statute of limitation.

Both of these pleas are defences to the plaintiff's action, and until they are disposed of in the Court below, there can be no valid judgment.

Again: the judgment ought to have been arrested on the ground, that, after the defendants, Stewart and Fontaine, and Hampton Smith had filed their joint pleas; and after a trial of the suit, in which the plaintiff obtained a joint judgment, and a new trial was granted, the defendant amended his writ and declaration, by striking from the same the names of Smith and Woodruff.

It is important to note the time at which this amendment was made. It was immediately before the trial—on the same day of the trial—and, of course, long after the defendants had jointly pleaded.

This is an important circumstances, to distinguish this case from that in 3 Sumner, 379. There the striking out the name of one of the defendants from the writ and declaration, was allowed, and it was called an amendment, instead of calling it by its proper name, a mutilation, to avoid the difficulty of a joint plea, and the consequent necessity of a nolle prosequi.

Judge Story takes a distinction between the right of a party to enter a nolle prosequi against one of the defendants before, or at, or after a trial, and the right of the Court to allow him to amend, by striking out a party from the record. "The latter," he says, "is a matter of discretion in the Court, to be granted or refused, according to circumstances. The former (at least in some cases,) is a matter of right, if it exists at all, dependent upon principles of law, and yet subject to the discretion of the Court.

Now, if Judge Story does not intend to confine the exercise of the discretion of the Court in allowing the amendment, by striking out to a time before the defendants have pleaded jointly, it is difficult to know what he means when he says, "that the very object of the present motion is to get rid of a possible difficulty, if the defendants should join in their pleas of entering a nolle prosequi at the trial. Is this not equivalent to the assertion, that, after the defendants have jointly pleaded that the difficulty could not be reached by a motion to amend, by striking from the record the name of one of the defendants.

The nolle prosequi would be unavoidable after that time, or, as he stated, when he points out the distinction between the amendment and a nolle prosequi, the latter is the remedy, (when it may be done, "before or after a trial." This, he admits, is not a matter of discretion in the Court, but is a matter of right, if it exists at all, dependent upon principles of law. If I have stated the meaning of Judge Story corectly, it is immaterial, in this case, whether the plaintiff chooses to call the process by which he undertook, in the Court below, to get clear of Smith and Woodruff as defendants, by the name of an amendment by striking out, or by our old acquaintance the nolle prosequi. It he called it an amendment, he made it too late, and the Court had no power or discretion to allow it. If he chooses to adopt the old name, then we say that, in this case, a nolle prosequi could not be entered as to one or more of the defendants, and the suit be prosecuted against the rest

Without regard to the case now before the Court, this last assertion is certainly true as a general proposition; the exceptions to it are enumerated by Sergeant Williams, in his note Salmon vs. Smith; 1st Saund. Reps., 207—Note L. D. In the case of Miner vs. The Mechanics Bank of Alexander, 1st Peters, 46. The case now before the Court does not fall within any of the exceptions. It is admitted to be a question of law by Judge Story, and if the general rule decides it, for the appellants.

W. G. M. Davis, for Defendant.

HAWKINS, J:.

The defendant in error, Bennett, brought his suit, trespass on the case on promises, against the plaintiffs in error, Hampton Smith and Philo. D. Woodruff, in the Court below. The writ was served upon Stewart & Fontaine, and Smith, and returned, not found. as to Woodruff. The declaration was filed against the above parties, and contained two counts against them, as owners of the steamboat Reindeer, for the loss of certain goods, alleging that they were common carriers.

On the 6th day of December, 1841, Stewart & Fontaine, and Smith, filed a joint plea of non assumpsit. Nearly two years after, the defendants pleaded, in abatement, the nonjoinder of two other persons, and at the same time pleaded the statute of limitations. To these pleas there are no replications. The plea in abatement was not sworn to; and the plea of the statute of limitations says, that the cause of actions, &c., in the declaration contained, did not accrue in four years, &c. At the same term a motion was made, that the suit abate as to Woodruff. A trial was had, and a verdict and judgment against the defendants. A motion for a new trial was made, and granted by the Court.

At the ensuing Term leave was granted by the Court to Plaintiff, to amend his writ and declaration, which was done by striking out the names of Hampton S. Smith and Philo D. Woodruff. On the same day a trial was had, and a verdict and judgment against Stewart & Fontaine, and, at the same Term, a motion in arrest of judgment.

The first error assigned is, "The Court gave judgment against the appellant upon the trial of the issue, on the plea of non-assumpsit, when there are two pleas in said record, upon which there are no issues, and upon which there has been no trial or action of the Court below." One of these pleas is, in abatement; the other, a plea of the statute of limitations.

The plea in abatement was not verified by affidavit, as is requisite at common law and by the statute of the State; and it could have been treated by the plaintiff as a nullity, or he might have moved to set it aside. Moreover, it was not filed in the preliminary state of the proceedings, but was filed after a plea in bar of action; the latter plea waiving all matter in abatement. The plea of the statute of limitations also put in, is bad on the face of it; for it does not come within the statute of limitations of the State, which declares that all actions of assumpsit, case, &c., shall be commenced and sued within five years, next after the cause of action or suit accrued; and the plea in this case alleges, that the cause of action did not acrue within four years. They are bad on their face—and will this Court reverse a judgment of the Court below on this account, when, even if the case were remanded thither, neither of them would avail the defendants, or place them in any better situation? Can the defendants suffer any detriment or injury—are any of their legal rights impaired—or are they deprived of any good defence, by this Court's disregard of these pleas? We think not. It would have been more regular to be sure, to have disposed of them; but they being, virtually, nullities, this Court cannot take action upon them, without deeming they would be doing injustice; for it must, upon an examination of the whole record; "decide according to the legal right, as it may upon the whole appear."

The second error assigned is, because the Court allowed the plaintiff to amend the declaration and writ, immediately before the trial, and after the appellants and their co-defendant, Hampton S. Smith, had jointly pleaded, by striking out the names of said Smith and Philo D. Woodruff, as defendants, from the writ and declaration.

As a general rule it may be remarked, that until judgment is signed, or there is final judgment, amendments to the pleadings may be allowed to the parties upon proper and equitable terms, and the declaration may be amended at any time, so long as the proceedings remain in paper. Stephens on Pl. 97. 1 Wilson, 7—149.

The doctrine of amendments, as it stands, at common law, independent of the statutes of amendments and jeofail, seems based upon the discretion of the Court, and applications for amendments are in the nature of appeals to the equitable side of the Court. The doctrine, even in England where great strictness prevails than in this country, has been carried to a great extent, and we will take a cursory glance at some of the decisions, as found in the reports of that country.

In the case of Rex vs. The Corporation of Grampend,—7 Term R.. 699,—a question arose as to the propriety of amending the return to a mandamus, after a mandamus was filed. Lord Kenyon remarked: "I wish that could be attained, that Lord Hardwick in the case before him lamented could not be done, namely, 'that these amendments were reducible to certain rules'; but there being no such rules, each case must be left to the sound discretion of the Court. And the best principle seems to be, that on which Lord Hardwick relied in the same case, that an amendment shall or shall not be allowed to be made, as it will best tend to the furtherance of justice;" and further, "that these amendments are not made under the statute of jeofails, but under the general authority of the Court.

In Tomlinson and another vs. Blacksmith, 7 Term Reports, 128, 443 (132), leave was granted upon the application of the plaintiff, to amend his declaration after verdict, by increasing the damages laid, according to the truth of the case as found by the jury; the former verdict at the same time being set aside, and a new trial granted to enable the defendant to make his defence to the demand so enlarged. So. we find in the case of Sayer vs. Pocock, 1 Cowper, 407, a replication was amended after verdict, by inserting the simileter, instead of the writ and declaration, and to proceed against the husband alone. of, &c.; Lord Mansfield remarking, that he did not stop to enquire whether the amendment was within the statutes of jeofails, or not.

The case of Billing vs. Flight, 2 Marshal R., 6 Taunton, 419, is an instance where assumpsit was changed to debt, after six terms of the commencement of the action. In Mace qui tam vs. Lovett, 5 Burr, 2833, the declaration was amended in an action for usury after record made up, carried down to trial and withdrawn by plaintiff. Justice Ashton says, "The Court here have gone a great way in allowing amendments towards the attainment of justice. They have amended in cases where the limited time of bringing the action would run against the plaintiff, if he were to be put to bring a new one. The case of Millish vs. Robinson, 9 Bing., 125—2 Term Rep., 738, can also be cited as affirming the doctrine of amendments.

The American decisions go still further than those of England. Judge McLean, in U. S. vs. Buford, 3 Peter's U. S. Reports, says: "This Court has repeatedly decided that the exercise of a discretion of the Court below, in refusing or granting amendments of pleading, or motions for new trials, affords no ground for writ of error." And this power of the Courts is sustained, and allowed to be carried to great extent in the following cases: Chirac vs. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. 280—5 Cranch, 15—Green vs. Robinson, 3 Howard's Missip. R. 117—10 Cow., 460—Celdwell's Admr's vs. McKeo, 8 Missouri R., 334—Holloway vs. Lowe, 1 Alabama R. N. S., 246, where additional counts were added after reversal of judgment in Court above, and Palmer vs. Ledue, page 743, of the same book, where leave was granted to plaintiffs to strike out one of the defendants—1 Cowen, 133, citing 18 John. Reports, 510—3 Cowen, 42—McClure vs. Burton, et al. 1 Carolina Law Repository, 473, case of caveat against Richard and James Bullock—there was a variance between writ and declaration, viz.: that the defendants, Richard and James Bulloch, were named in the writ, but were not parties to the deed; leave was 444 granted plaintiffs to strike out their names by virtue of the statute of North Carolina giving Courts the power of amendments. The Supreme Court of New Jersey have also gone far in sustaining the doctrine of amendments. Van Dyke vs. Adm'rs of Catharine Van Dyke, 4 Harrison Rep., 1—ib. 5.

The case of Colcord and another vs. Swann, 7 Mass., 292, would seem to be analagous to the case at bar. It was an action for covenant broken, and the Court ruling that it could not be maintained against the wife, a motion was made for leave to strike her name out of the writ and declaration, and to proceed against the husband alone. It was contended, that this could not be done except in actions for torts, but the Court granted the motion to strike out.

The case of Parsons vs. Plaisted and others, 13 Mass., 189, was similar to that of Colcord vs. Swann, and the same order made striking out the writ and declaration the name of one of the defendants, who was a feme covert. Judge Story holds the same doctrine in Tobin vs. Clafley and others, 3 Sumner's R., 379. Here the writ and declaration were amended by striking out the name of David Green, one of the defendants. Judge Story remarks in his opinion, that though the amendment, in a technical sense, might go to the foundation of the suit, if all the defendants are not proved to have joined in the contract, yet it is plain that it does not touch the merits: and if all the defendants are not proved at the trial to have made the contract, a cerdict must be found for the defendants. The object of the amendment was to get rid of this technical objection—that it is an application in furtherance of justice, and to suppress expensive litigation. He cites the cases from Massachusetts with approbation, and observes as to that of Parsons vs. Plaisted, that though the defendant in that suit was a feme covert, it made no difference in principle, since the only ground for striking out her name was, that she was not legally bound by the contract, which is equally true in regard to every other persons joined as a defendant in any suit, who is not a party to the contract sued on.

In Chitty's Pl. 15, note H., we find that even in cases where there has been a misjoinder of plaintiffs, "the doctrine of amendments has been, in some instances, usefully applied to remedy or mitigate the evil, as orders have been made to strike out the name of the plaintiffs, in a late stage of the proceedings, where otherwise the statute of limitations would bar a fresh action; and in Fox vs. Clifton and 445 others, C. P., Nov., 1829, an order was made just before the trial, that some of the defendants' names be struck out." See 3 Chitty's Gen'l Prac., 173—174.

The note from Chitty is not cited as the present law of the English Coutrs, but only to show their strong leaning in favor of their power to amend. It would be carrying the doctrine pretty far to allow the striking out the names of plaintiffs, for it is to be presumed that any plaintiff is aware of the names of those who should be co-plaintiffs; but this presumption cannot apply to the cases of defendants, and especially those who may be sued as common carriers. Take, for instance, the case at bar, where the defendants are sued as owners of a steam-boat. The slightest reflection must shew the extreme difficulty of ascertaining the true parties to be rendered liable. The names of all the owners of these boats are seldom known to the public, and if the old rule of misjoinder or nonjoinder is to be enforced, without the application of the salutary law of amendment, great injustice would arise. Even the register of the vessel, granted upon oath in accordance with the revenue regulations of the country, is not prima facie evidence of ownership. The Parliament of Great Britain seeing, no doubt, the extreme injustice done by those who sought redress from this class of defendants, passed a statute (1 Wm.4,) declaring, that one or more mail contractors, &c., or common carriers, may be sued, and no action shall abate for the nonjoinder. An appeal to the Legislature of our State as a remedy for a similar evil with us, would be superfluous, as long as the 17th rule of our Courts declaring that "amendments affecting the merits of a cause may be ordered at the discretion of the Court, on such terms as they may think proper to impose," is in force, and in which the power of granting amendments is so full and unqualified. It is not intended by these remarks to inculcate the idea, that a Judge at nisi prius, possesses that absolute and arbitrary power to overleap all or any of the old established rules of pleading, at a wild or capricious indiscretion, or set at naught the old land-marks of the law. There can be no doubt but that these technical rules of pleading were based upon principle, policy and reason, and lightly should the hand of innovation be placed upon them. But while responding to the sentiment of Lord Kenyon," the forms of justice always best used, when subservient to the cause of justice," we remark, that the administration of law in our 446 country cannot but partake somewhat of the free nature of our institutions, and imbued with this spirit a liberal judicial policy will guide our Courts in the dispensation of justice.

In fine, the doctrine may be summed up thus: a power to a certain extent inherent in our Courts, and rendered more ample by statutory regulations to allow amendments in pleading for the furtherance of substantial justice, to be exercised with a liberal and enlarged discretion, but with caution and due deliberation, and upon such terms as they may see fit to prescribe.

With these views, we think the Court below, in granting the amendments, acted in accordance with the discretion vested in it, and it is not for this Court to revise this discretion thus exercised.

Much stress is laid upon the fact that the trial took place on the same day of amendment. The record shews no motion for a continuance, and if one had been made, no doubt the Court would have granted it as one of the terms upon which plaintiff was permitted to amend his writ and declaration.

The question of entering a nolle prosequi cannot be raised in this case, where it is one of amendment purely—they are distinct and separate in their nature. Judge Story says: "The latter (amendment,) is a matter of discretion in the Court, to be granted or refused according to circumstances. The former (at least in some cases,) is a matter of right, if it exists at all; depends upon principles of law, and not subject to the discretion of the Court. 3 Sumner R., 381. After a new trial, the pleadings of both parties can be amended by leave of the Court. 2 Hayward's Reports, 162—7 T. R., 128—the judgment is not final, and till that occurs, the record is in fieri, and can be amended.

The judgment of the Court below must be affirmed with costs.

447 JOHN BRETT, JR., vs. SUSAN A. MING, ADM'X. OF FREDERICK L. MING.

Where it appeared by the record of a judgment rendered by the Court of Appeals, that the Administratrix of a deceased Appellee was, by her Counsel, before the Court, when its judgment was pronounced affirming the judgment of the Court below, but that from some cause, not stated in the proceedings her name was not inserted in the judgment, an execution issued on such judgment will be set aside.

A Court of Errors may amend an error apparent of record, if there is any thing to amend by.

When a suit has abated by the death of a party, it cannot be revived until some person has been named as the representative of the party deceased.

After the death of the Appellee, the judgment of the Court below was affirmed, without naming the Administratrix of the deceased Appelee, when, from the nature of the entry, in the judgment of the Court of Appeals, it was manifest that the Administratrix appeared there by her Counsel, and it was highly probable that her name, as Administratrix, must have been mentioned to the Court, else the Court would not have heard the cause; so, that it was almost a moral certainty, that the leaving of her name out of the record was a clerical error—Held, that upon the filing of the letters of administration, this Court will make the Administratrix a party, and so amend the judgment that she may have execution thereof in her own name; with a saving, however, to all persons of the rights which they have acquired, since the rendition of the judgment.

A final judgment of the Court of Appeals of the late Territory of Florida, is conclusive of the question, and stands on the same footing in regard to this matter, as if the judgment had been rendered by this Court.

A promissorp note, reading—"On demand, the first of January next, I promise," &c., is payable presently, and suit may be brought thereon immediately, without demand; the words, "first of January next," applying to the interest, and not the principal. The interest on such a note, begins to run from the first of January, and not from the time of demand.

APPEAL from Jackson County.

The facts are contained in the opinion of the Court.

Randal & Hagner, for Appellant.

C. Yonge, for Appellee.

DOUGLAS, C. J.:

This is an action of assumpsit, originally instituted by Frederick L. Ming, in the Superior Court of Jackson County, to recover the 448 amount of a certain promissory note, given by the appellant to the said Frederick L. Ming, which note is as follows:

$615. On demand, the first day of January next, I promise to pay Frederick L. Ming, Agent, &c., six hundred and fifteen dollars, value received. Oct. 19th, 1839.

(SIGNED,) JOHN BRETT, Jr.

Such proceedings were had in said suit, that, on the 18th day of October, A. D., 1843, judgment was rendered against the defendant for the sum of eight hundred and one dollars and fifty cents, in favor of the plaintiff, for his damages, with legal interest on the same, from that date until paid, together with his costs, &c. It appears from a bill of exceptions taken and filed in the cause which makes a part of the record in this case, that the note above described was the only testimony that was offered in the cause by the plaintiff, and that the defendant contended, that he was entitled to interest only after demand; and as no proof of any demand was made, interest should only be given after the ocmmencement of the suit; but the Court directed the Clerk to calculate interest from the 4th of January after its date, which being done, a judgment accordingly entered, and an appeal was taken by the defendant, (by agreement of the plaintiff's Counsel,) and the cause carried up to the Court of Appeals of the late Territory of Florida. During its pendency in that Court, the said Frederick L. Ming departed this life, and on the 13th day of December, A. D., 1843, letters of administration were duly granted on the goods and chattels which were of the said Frederick I. Ming, deceased, at the time of his death, to Susan A. Ming; and afterwards, to wit, on the 31st day of January, 1845, said cause came on to be heard in said Court of Appeals, when (as appears by the record of said Court) Judgment was entered as follows, viz: "Upon an appeal to a judgment of the Superior Court for the Apalachicola District for Jackson County, rendered on 18th day of October, 1843, whereby it was considered that the appellee recover against the appellant the sum of $801 50 with costs, &c. The death of the appellee having been suggested at a former term of this Court, and a scire facias awarded against the legal representatives, this day came the said representative of the appellee, and the said appellant by their attorneys, and they having been fully heard, and the transcript of the record of the judgment aforesaid having been seen and inspected by the Court, and the Court being divided in opinion, the Hon. D. Jordan not hav- 449

ing heard the argument of this cause on a former day, it is therefore considered by the Court that the said judgment be affirmed, and that the appellee recover against the appellant his costs by him about his defence in this behalf expended, which is ordered to be certified to the Court below." At the last term of this Court, to wit, on the 21st day of January, 1846, the following proceedings took place in this cause, as appears by the record, and the following entry was made: "This day came the attorney for the appellee and moved the Court to docket this cause, and the same not being objected to by the attorney of the appellant, the same is done accordingly."

"And thereupon afterwards on the same day came Susan A. Ming, Administratrix of Frederick L. Ming, deceased, whose death was heretofore suggested at January term of the Court of Appeals of the Territory of Florida, in the year 1844, and scire facias awarded, and presented letters of administration in due form of law certified, and by her attorney moved the Court that she be made a party appellee to this cause in place of the said Frederick L. Ming, deceased, and the same is done accordingly. And now on the same day comes John Brett, Junior, appellant, by Thomas H. Hagner, his attorney, and shews to the Court here that an execution hath issued in this case from Jackson Circuit Court in the name of Susan A. Ming, Administratrix of Frederick L. Ming, upon the judgment entered in this case before the said Susan A. Ming, Administratrix as aforesaid, was made a party to the record, and that such execution hath been levied, and that the same is altogether irregular and illegal; and the said Susan A. Ming, Administratrix of the said Frederick L. Ming, not objecting hereto, and for good cause shewn—It is ordered that the said execution be set aside and held for nought, and it is further ordered that a copy of this order and judgment be certified to the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Jackson County, and a copy of said certificate by the said Clerk be certified to the Sheriff of Jackson County. And on motion of Susan A. Ming, by her attorney, it is ordered that this cause be continued till the next term of this Court, upon a motion for a hearing as to the regularity and validity of the judgment of the Court of Appeals, rendered in said case at the January Term, 1845, of said Court." And now, at the present term of this Court, the said Susan A. Ming, Administratrix, &c., as aforesaid, by C. C. Yonge, Esq., her attorney, comes and moves the Court that the said 450 judgment of the Court of Appeals be amended by introducing the name of the representative, Susan A. Ming.

To this the counsel for the appellant objects, that the motion made at the last term has been waived by the counsel for the appellee, and all benefit of it voluntarily surrendered by submitting a written argument on the whole case, on the 26th of January last, on the errors assigned. But if the motion can be sustained, the appellant by his counsel insists that there was no valid judgment rendered by the Court of Appeals. That the appellee has admitted it on the record of this Court. First, allowing the old cause to be docketed here after notice without objection. Second, presenting letters of administration here in this Court on the 21st of January, 1846, and moving to be made a party here in place of the decedent. Third, admitting that an execution had issued on the judgment of the Court of Appeals entered in this case before the appellee, Susan A. Ming, Admx., was made a party to the record. Fourth, admitting that in consequence of such failure to make the appellee a party before judgment entered, the execution was irregular and void, and that it is too late now after such admission of record, for the appellee to take them all back and attribute her own default to a clerical misprison. But may it not as well be said that the fact that Susan A. Ming, Admx., as aforesaid, was made a party in the case at the last term, without objection, placed her "rectus in curia?" We do not consider, however, that any admissions or waiver of objections was made by counsel on either side, that can prejudice their clients. The Clerk, in docketing the case ,followed the old docket instead of the judgment of the Court of Appeals. It had been more proper, perhaps, to have docketed it, "the representative of Frederick L. Ming." Then all that would have been wanting was precisely what the counsel asked, to have the name of Susan A. Ming, Admx., used in the further proceedings as such representative. Both parties were before the Court at the last term, and both moving in the case. It appears by the record of the judgment rendered by the Court of Appeals, that the legal representative of the appellee, by her counsel, was before the Court when the judgment was pronounced, although from some cause not stated in the proceedings, her name was not inserted in the judgment. We are not prepared therefore to say that the judgment is for that cause a nullity, although we are satisfied that no execution ought to have issued up it until she was made a party by name. It was therefore properly set aside. From the letters of administration now on file, it appears that Susan A. Ming was Administratrix long before and at the time when the judgment was rendered, and that she yet continues to be such administratrix, and the question now presented is, whether she is entitled to have the benefit of her motion either literally or substantially, by an order that she have execution of said judgment in her name as such Administratrix. We think that she is thus entitled, but it must be with a saving to all persons of the rights which they have "bona fide" acquired since the rendition of the judgment . In the case of Zimmerman vs. Brigons, 5 Watts, 186, it was held that the entry of a defendant's name in a judgment is not amendable so as to affect a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer: and in the case of the Bank of Newburg vs. Seymour, 14 John., 219, a judgment record was allowed to be amended by adding the name of another defendant, saving to all persons the rights they had bona fide acquired since the dcketing of the judgment. The case of John C. Chamberlain vs. Ebenezer Crane, 4 New Hampshire Reports, 115, was a writ of entry in which the demandant originally counted upon his own seizen in fee, but afterwards having obtained leave to amend, counted upon his own seizen as of freehold. Judgment was rendered in favor of the demandant at May Term, 1817. (See 1 New Hampshire Reps., 64). But judgment was by mistake entered upon the original instead of the amended count. Hubbard moved to amend by striking out the original count and inserting in its stead the amended count which was on file among the papers of the case. Parker, who appeared for a person to whom Chamberlain had conveyed the land since the judgment, cited 14 John., 219; Bank of Newburgh vs. Seymour, and 3 Cowen's Rep., 54, note Hart vs. Reynolds. By the Court: We entertain no doubt judgment was entered upon the original count in this case by mistake, instead of the amended count, and thus justice requires that the record should be amended; and we are of opinion that the record may be legally amended. And 19 John., 244, Mechanic's Bank vs. Minthorne; 18 John., 502, Lansing vs. Lansing; 17 do., 86, Lee vs. Custis; 14 ditto, 219, Bank of Newburgh vs. Seymour; 3 Durn. & East., 349, Rees vs. Morgan; 2 Tidds. Pr., 863; 1 Cowen's Rep., 9; 5 Burrow, 2730, Short vs. Coffin; 4 Maule & Selwyn, 94, Usher vs. Dansey; 1 Taunt., 221, Mann vs. Calow; 4 Taunt., 875, Halliday vs. Fitzpatrick; 1 Wilson, 61; 2 Strange, 1209; 4 Burr., 1989; 10 Mass., 251, and 1 Pick., 353, are cited; and the leave to amend was granted with a saving of all rights acquired by third persons under the judgment. This was at May Term, 1827; after a lapse of ten years, and without affidavit.

A Court of Error may amend an error apparent on the record if there is anything to amend by. Sears vs. United States, 1 Gall., 257. Smith vs. the United States, Ibid., 261; and see Boyle vs. Connelly, 2 Bibb, 7, 88. 1 Monroe, 18. There is nothing in the nature of an appellate jurisdiction, according to the common law, which forbids the granting of amendments. 1 Gall., 22. The permitting of amendments is matter of discretion. Mandeville and others vs. Wilson, 5 Cranch., 15. And there is nothing in the case of Turbin, Admr. of James, vs. Thomas' Representatives, 2 Hen. & Mumf., 139, cited by the counsel for the appellant (as we understand it) which militates against the exercise of such discretion in the case before us. These are the circumstances of that case. "The cause having abated by the death of one of the parties, was revived by consent against the representatives of the party deceased without naming them. No party having been made defendant by name in consequence of that order, I was of opinion, said Judge Tucker, that we ought not to proceed to a hearing of the cause, until the parties were before the Court by name. Judge Roan cited Southal vs. McKeand, 2 Wash., 339, which appeared to me to favor my idea. Judge Flemming concurred in opinion with me. Another cause was called; but Mr. Hay afterwards suggested that there was a Mr. Thomas, who was either Executor or Administrator, and the cause was opened. But the Court seemed to agree that in future no cause should be considered as revived until some person should be named as a party representing the party deceased." In the case now under consideration a judgment had been rendered which we had no power to disturb, but we have power over the execution that issued on that judgment, and therefore set it aside; and should not have permitted another to issue until the proper representative was made a party by name. And we fully agree with the Court of Appeals of Virginia, that no cause should be considered as revived until some person should be named as a party, representing the party deceased. Although the record does not show the fact, yet from the nature of the entry in the judgment of the Court of Appeals, showing that the representative appeared there by her attorney, and the fact that the letters of administration of Mrs. Ming bear date long anterior to that time, it seems highly probable, indeed almost a moral certainty, that her name as such representative must have been mntioned to the Court, and that the leaving it out of the record was a mere clerical error. Indeed, it cannot properly be presumed that the Court of Appeals would have heard the cause unless it had been thus mentioned. At all events, we have now those letters of administration of Mrs. Ming on file to amend by if necessary; and they, together with the order of the last term making her a party, clears the case of all difficulty on that point.

The doctrine of amendments was so fully discussed in the case of Stewart and Fontaine against A. T. Bennett, decided on a former day of the present term, that we do not consider it necessary to enlarge upon it on the present occasion.

We proceed, therefore, to the next and only remaining ground of error assigned, which is that the note on which the suit is founded is payable "on demand on the first day of January next," &c., and that withotu proof of any other demand than the suit brought, the Court allowed interest to be computed from the first day of January, &c. But the decisive answer to this is, that the judgment of the Court of Appeals is conclusive upon that question; for notwithstanding this Court held in the case of Stewart vs. Preston, at the last term, that "the Act of the Legislature of the State organizing the Supreme Court is imperative that all cases now pending in said Court of Appeals shall be transferred to said Supreme Court, and tried and decided therein and theerby, except cases cognizable by the Federal Courts," and although we are disposed to give the most liberal construction to that Act of the Legislature, and extend its meaning so as to make it reach all the cases that were left in that Court at its dissolution, in which any action of this Court may be necessary to enable the parties to such cases to obtain the full benefit of them if possible, to the same extent that they could have done if the existence of that Court had been continued until they had been perfected and the judgment satisfied; or as if such judgment had been rendered in this Court,—yet we have never claimed the right, or supposed that we possessed the power to review a final judgment of that Court. Indeed, this Court has already decided, at the present term, that a petition for re-hearing of one of its own judgments must be presented at the same term at which the judgment was rendered, and within fifteen days after its rendition. The cases from the late Court of Appeals are transferred to this Court as its legitimate successor; and when here, stand upon the same footing in regard to this matter as if the judgment had been rendered by this Court. The only mode by which we could reach the point, would be to treat the judgment of the Court of Appeals as a nullity. This, as before stated, we do not feel authorized to do. But if it were directly before up for our decision therein, we are by no means satisfied that it would be our duty to render a different judgment. The objection is that this note was payable on demand on the first day of January next, &c., and that without proof of any other demand than the suit brought interest was calculated from that day. The general rule seems to be that a note on demand becomes due, and an action lies against the maker immediately, and without any demand. Field vs. Nickerson, 13 Mass., 131, 137. Conner vs. Harrison, 2 McCord, 246. Horton vs. Bishop, 3 Wendell, 13. Thompson vs. Ketchum, 8 John., 189. Herrick vs. Bennett, Ibid, 374. A note payable when demanded, is the same as payable on demand, and the statute of limitations begins to run from its date. Kingsbury vs. Butler, 4 Vermont, 458. Where no time of payment is specified in a promissory note, it has been held that its legal effect is that it is a note payable on demand, and must so declared on. Bacon vs. Page, 1 Conn., 404. Mason vs. Potter, 1 Miss., 279; and in Newman vs. Kettle, 13 Pickering, 419, the Court held that where a note is payable "on demand with interest after four months," payment may be demanded immediately, and intrinsic evidence is inadmissible to shew that the demand was not made till after four months. And in Rice vs. West, 2 Fairfield, 323, the Court also held that a note payable "on demand with interest after six months," is due presently, the six months applying to the interest and not to the principal. With these authorities before us, if we are called upon to decide this question, we should be very much inclined to hold that this note, being payable on demand, was due presently; that suit might have been brought upon it immediately, and without any demand; and that the words, "the first day of January next," applied to the interest and not to the principal. We have thought proper to throw out these hints for the purpose of showing the appellant that he has not perhaps lost so much by the view that we have taken of this case, as he might have otherwise supposed.

The judgment of the late Court of Appeals rendered in this case affirming the judgment of the Court below must stand, and Susan A. Ming, Administratrix, &c., of the said Frederick L. Ming, deceased, as aforesaid, have execution of the aforesaid judgment of the Court below, but with a saving of the rights of all third persons, acquired, "bona fide," since the 31st day of January, A. D., 1845, the day of the date of said judgment of the Court of Appeals. All of which to be certified to the Court below accordingly.

Per Curiam.

BENJAMIN A. PUTNAM, EXECUTOR OF PETER MITCHELL, vs. JOHN H. LEWIS, ET UX.

Under the laws of this State, no appeal will lie from an interlocutory decree.

A decree for the partition of land, passed by consent, ascertaining the interest of the respective parties, and appointing commissioners to make partition of the land according to their respective rights and interest as therein ascertained by the Court and established by the decree, who were ordered, after having made such partition, to report the same in writing to the Court without delay, is not a final but an interlocutory decree, from which no appeal will lie.

A supplemental Bill is in the nature of a Bill of Review, or possibly an original Bill, and not a Bill of Review, is the appropriate remedy by which to have such interlocutory decree reviewed or reversed.

APPEAL from St. Johns County.

This was an appeal from a decree rendered by his Honor Judge Hawkins, at Spring Term, 1846, of St. Johns Circuit Court.

A petition was filed in the Court below for leave to file a Bill of 456 Review for the purchase of having a certain decree for the partition of the "Arredondo Grant," rendered at June Term, 1845, reviewed, reversed and set aside so far as defendants, John H. Lewis and wife who were parties and claimants under the said decree, were concerned.

The petition alleged that petitioner had been lulled into security by the letters and declarations of John H. Lewis, that he had no design to avail the claim of Peter Mitchel, his testator, until about the time the cause came on for hearing, when it was too late to make any effectual resistance: That being taken by surprise when the whole claim of Peter Mitchell in the said grant was most unjustly and unexpectedly assailed by said Lewis and wife, he was forced to submit to a compromise with the said Lewis and wife; and that he, under these circumstances, had consented to the said decree: That since the rendition of the said decree, newly discovered evidenc had come to his knowledge, which clearly showed the injustice of the claim then set up by Lewis and wife, by which they had acquired under the said decree a much larger share or portion of said grant than they were legally and equitably entitled to, and which should in equity and justice have been decreed to petitioner, whose claim had been proportionately diminished thereby

The petition was sworn to, and recited at length the facts and circumstances on which petitioner relied, and was accompanied by numerous exhibits.

The decree for partition sought to be reviewed and reversed, so far as the defendants Lewis and wife were interested therein, was made at June Term, 1845, with the consent of all parties. It ascertained and settled the rights and interest of each of the parties in the said grant, and appointed commissioners to make partition thereof in accordance with the decree, who after having done so, were directed to "report the same in writing to this Court without delay."

On motion to dismiss the petition, it was ordered, adjudged and decreed, "that the said motion to dismiss the said petition be granted, and that the prayer in the said petition contained for leave to file said Bill of Review be, and the same is hereby, denied and refused, with costs to said Lewis and wife."

From this order of the Court, petitioner appealed.

The following errors were assigned:

1. The petitioner having set forth as the ground for a Bill of Re- 457 view that new matter had come to the knowledge of the petitioner since the rendition and enrollment of the decree, of the existence of which the petition was ignorant at the time of the rendering and enrolling said decree, and which he could not have used or by any reasonable diligence have obtained at the hearing of said cause; and which said new matter is important and material to the issue, and would have materially altered the decree if it could have been adduced on the hearing of said cause, and that said new matter was in writing; the motion to dismiss should have been overruled and the petition granted.

2. That the matters alleged in said petition having been verified by affidavit, and not denied by answer under oath, the petition could not be dismissed on motion.

3. That the petition showed by his petition, that he was taken by surprise, and from necessity made the consent on which said decree was founded, being ignorant of the facts since discovered essential to the proper exercise of his discretion, and which, if true, entitle him to a review of said decree.

4. That the said Court refused to grant said petition principally on the ground that said decree sought to be reviewed was entered by consent; whereas, the petition sworn to shows that if such was the case, yet that the petitioner was deceived and imposed upon by the said John H. Lewis; and from the necessity in which the petitioner was placed, he submitted to the compromise and arrangement on which said decree was founded, being ignorant of the new and material evidence now presented, which at the time of the consent was not within his knowledge, but which has come to his knowledge since the hearing of the cause.

Thomas Randall. for appellant.

After stating the facts of the case, as disclosed by the record, argued the erors assigned, insisting—

That the materiality of the new evidence disclosed would be tested by the inquiry, "Whether it were possible that if the appellant had been in possession, at the time of decree rendered, of the evidence exhibited with this petition, he could ever have consented to the decree in question?" And next, "Whether, if the claim of the appellee had been advanced in behalf of Mrs. Lewis, in the 458 face of the evidence newly discovered now adduced, it could for one moment have been countenanced by a Court of Equity?"

After commenting upon the evidence in the record, he cited Lord Bacon's Ordinance in Chancery, (Cooper's Pleadings, 89), as the ground of the rule requiring application, "for the special license of the Court" to file a bill of review, and Lord Hardwicke's re-assertion of the same ordinance with an additional requisition by order of Oct., 1741. 2 Atkyn's Rep., 139. And he alleged—

1st. That the petition shows most clearly that the petitioner in consenting to the decree, "was taken by surprise, and from necessity and in ignorance of facts since discovered essential to the proper exercise of his discretion," was betrayed into such consent.

2d. The petition was deceived and imposed upon by the defendant, John H. Lewis, and that petitioner submitted to the compromise and arrangement under which the decree was founded, in ignorance of material facts, while there has been a studied suppression and concealment on the other side.

If the Court is satisfied on these points, then our case comes within the rule, and as a case of extreme hardship on the part of the appellant, and of unmerited success on the part of his adversary, the present application commends itself to the favorable consideration of the Court.

The Court (he said) desired argument upon this point, "Whether the judgment or decree rendered in the Court below in dismissing the petition for leave to file a bill of review, be such a final decree as justified the appeal? Final it certainly is, in its effect—a final determination of our right to relief in the more sought; and he submitted whether or not, as this "license of the Court" was an essential to the obtention of relief, the withholding the means be not equivalent to denying the end? If the door be shut against our entrance into the sanctuary of justice, is it not the same in result as if, having gained admission, our prayer had been denied? Before the Court below could thus summarily dismiss our petition, it must have decided in advance, that the same showing made on a bill of review, would not entitle the applicant to the relief sought. To him, therefore, the present decree dismissing his petition, is as final and as fatal as would be a decree dismissing a bill of review. Nay, this further hardship 459 results, he is not permitted even to appeal to the conscience of the other party, who thus escapes the ordeal provided for the exposure of fraud and detection of imposition.

But it will be argued on the other side, that the question refers back to the original decree of partition sought to be reviewed, and that that decree is not a final decree. Whether we confine our attention to the order of dismissal of our petition, or look back to the decree of 1845, in either respect it becomes important to regard our statute regulating appeals. (Duval, p. 109,) We contend that the case of the appellant comes clearly within the letter as well as the spirit of the statute,—"if a party shall feel aggrieved by a final judgment, sentence or decree," &c. And although ther is nothing which would seem to us to require the Court to go beyond the immediate judgment and decree appealed from, which must be conceded to be final, yet we contend on reason and authority that a like final character is impressed on the decree of partition itself. Pp. 24 to 35 of the record.

In this bill of partition, agreeably the rules of Equity Practice, two questions were involved mainly and specifically.

1st. The number and names of the tenants in common and the quality of their estates.

2d. The quantity of their respective estates in the whole tract.

These were the chief matters of equitable and judicial cognizance, properly speaking. All else was the consequence—the means of effectuating the decree: ministerial and not judicial acts. After ascertaining the various interests and settling the rights of the respective litigants, the judicial power of the Court was exhausted; and the decree is therefore final as to the results involved. The naming commissioners—the ordering surveys—are ministerial acts, and subject to the future control and supervision of the Court: these are the executing the decree.

As to what constitutes a final decree, he cited—1 aBrbour's Ch'y. Prac., 330-1-2-3. 2d Daniel's Ch'y., 175, 638. 1 Harrison Ch'y. Prac., 420. Mills vs. Hoag, 7 Paige, 18. Story's Equity Plead., sec. 408. Field vs. Ross, 1 Monroe, 137. Seaton on Decree, 382. 2 Bligh's Rep., 263. 7 Ves., 222. 1 McCord, b. Rep., 32. 4 Paige's Ch'y. Rep., 561. In Leigh's Va. Rep., 108, Harvey vs. Bronson, the Court will find a strong case, strikingly analagous to that at bar. Also, we cite Taylor vs. Royall's Admr., 1 Rand., 421.

460 We are next met by the objection, urged as an estoppel, that the decree of which we now complain, was entered up with the express consent in writing of the appellant himself. As this is a material point in the case, and is believed to have been the ground on which the learned Judge in the Court below dismissed in the petition, it has received full consideration at our hands.

Certainly a hasty examination of some of the cases might lead to the idea of the conclusiveness of this objection, but a more careful investigation and estimate of the weight of authority, will serve to convince us that an undue importance has been ascribed to the mere circumstance of consent. In 2 Smith's Ch'y. Prac., 50, it is laid down that "if a decree has been taken by consent, a bill of review will not lie against, for 'consensus tollit errorem.'" For this broad doctrine a single authority is cited—Webb vs. Webb, 3 Swanston, 658—a case which we will examine. The Court will note, a consent there after great deliberation, to put a stop to afmily feuds: a settlement purely equitable and just—not impeached for fraud, or advantage, or surprise, or concealment—not for newly discovered matter, now upon any other legitimate ground for bill of review. In the absence of all the occasions for reviewing the decree, the prominent fact of consent given—a consent not impeached—seems to nave furnished the readiest answer; and a rule in a special case—thus commending itself to the Court, it has been sought to have extended to a universal application. For a like citation in Mitford, p. 94, a single case from Ambler, Bradish vs. Gee, stands as the sole support. That was a case of consent made by counsel. The remedy of the party was declared to be against his counsel. There was no allegation of fraud or covin, surprise or other ground of interference, the consent remaining unimpeached. It is true that the Lord Chancellor does state hypothetically, that "if the decree was by fraud and covin, the party may be relieved against it, not by re hearing or appeal, but by original bill." And it is this negative, wherein the value of the authority consists, in the eyes of our adversaries. For this dictum, however, two authorities are cited—Richmond vs. Tailleur, 1 P. Wms., 734-5. Lloyd vs. Mansel, 2 P. Wms., 73.

It is not too bold in us to say, that that negative cannot be established by those cases. They establish affirmatively that an original bill would not lie to set aside a decree by consent upon the fraud imputed in the first case; and in the second, that a decree by consent 461 obtained by fraud, not denied in the answer, was set aside upon original bill. If then, Lord Hardwicke is not supported by the authorities he invokes, what force can be given to the assertion, not pronounced upon the authority of his own great name, nor necessarily arising in the cause before him? In Lloyd vs. Mansel, Lord Macclesfield granted the relief, (as he says),notwithstanding the objection urged that, "according to this rule, a decree might be set aside by original bill," thus showing this course to be the exception and not the rule, and predicating the answer to the objection upon "the gross fraud"—"an abuse of the Court, and sufficient to set any decree aside."

In Hicks vs. Conyers, M. S. Rep., 7 Viner's Abridg., 398, Cowper, Ch'r., declares, "It is irregular to bring a new bill to alter and vary a decree already pronounced," &c. Again, "by the course of the court, if the original decree had been inrolled, the now plaintiff, upon affidavit of new matter come to his knowledge since the former decree, might have a bill of review, but he cannot now be relieved against the former decree by this new bill and rehearing the former cause; for the decree is right upon the pleadings and proof in the cause, and therefore cannot be varied upon a rehearing; and the now plaintiff canot be relieved upon his new bill, because it is contrary to the course of the Court to alter a decree upon a new original bill exhibited after the decree pronounced." This case exhibits clearly the true bearing of the decision of Lord Macclesfield above cited. Another case relied on is Harrison vs. Ramsey, 2 Vesey, Sen., 488, A. D. 1752. That was a case of consent by counsel, against whom the party had recourse. Yet the Lord Chancellor, though he refuses the application, says—"If they could prove collusion against the counsel, it would be a different thing." Next, it is to be noted that there was no allegation of fraud or surprise—none of new evidence; but on the contrary, the editor and commentater, (Mr. Belt), in his supplement says, "the Court proceeded on the idea that the decree by consent was for the benefit of the infant, the party impeaching it." Again, the case is professedly founded on Bradish vs. Gee, in Ambler, and upon another cited, yet less reliable, viz., Norcott vs. Norcott, 7 Viner's Ab., 398. This case is reported at large in Colle's Parliamentary Reports, which we exhibit to the Court to speak for itself, as conclusively showing that the comment in Viner is as un- 462 waranted as it is vague. These embrace all the cases of conclusiveness of consent. Now let us examine the authorities on the other side.

I refer the Court to Butterfield vs. Butterfield, 1 Ves., Sen'r., 133, 154. 3 Ves., Sen'r., (Belt's Suppl't.) S. C. Here was an express decision that a decree by consent might be "set aside on appeal or after re-hearing." In Burnesby vs. Powell, 1 Ves., Sen., 119 and 283, the Court not only set aside a consent by a party, but also judgments or decrees of the Exchequer and Ecclesiastical Courts, which they could not directly review or reverse.

In order to show the disposition with which Courts of Equity proceed to defeat schemes of fraud, I cite—1 Molloy, 472; Lord Chancellor holding that there is no rule of court not flexible to justice. 2 Eden's Rep., 115. 2 Schoale & Lefroy, 666. Also, 1 P. Wms., 128.

On the main point of consent, I cite also—4 Russell, 142. 1 Brown, C. C., 484, which latter case clearly establishes that there is nothing conclusive in the consent, but that it may be explained and its reasonableness examined into. In Gould vs. Tancred, 2 Atkyn's 533, the leave to file such bill of review was refused upon grounds which repudiate the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the consent given; for the Lord Chancellor, speaking of the newly discovered evidence, declares, "this is a proper ground for a bill of review, supposing the evidence came up to it," &c.

Buck vs. Fawcett, 3 P. Wms., 242, has been sought to be wrested from us, who claim it as an authority in our favour, by an interpretation put upon the language of the Lord Chancellor opposed, as we think, to the plain meaning. The party petitioning for a rehearing had entered into "an order by consent to submit to the decree and not to appeal." Notwithstanding, Lord King, who made the decree, allowed a re-hearing, which his successor, Lord Talbott, refused to vacate. On the occasion of such refusal, he says, "This order is of a very singular nature, insomuch that had the agreement been disclosed to the Court, I hardly believe such order would have been made."

Our opponents attempt to ascribe the language of Lord Talbot, "this order is of a very singular nature," &c., to the order for re-

463 hearing, where as it is very plain he refers to "the order by consent to submit to the decree and not to appeal." Had that argument been disclosed to the Court at the time of entering the decree, Lord King would never have made it. There was nothing singular in an order for re-hearing; there was nothing even opposed to the consent not to appeal. And had the order for a re-hearing been considered so singular, why did not Lord Talbot discharge it? On the contrary, he says it is "fitting the Court should have the opportunity of amending it;" and yet "more reasonable" in this case, in view of the action of his predecessor. The reporter seems thus to have considered the true reading of the decision as shown in the marginal note. We hold this case as a clear instance of the reversibility of decrees by consent. There it was before decree enrolled—here, application is made after. The mode of relief is different, but the right to it stands on the same footing.

I cite also, Earl Portsmouth vs. Effingham, 1 Ves., Sen., 430. Cann vs. Cann, 1 P. Williams, 723, 727. In this last case, though declining to interfere under its peculiar circumstances, he yet excepts cases of "ignorance and concealment," which he admits would invalidate the consent and all rights accruing from it; an exception sustained, we think, by authority, and upon principles of equity and natural justice. See Brodereck vs. Brodereck, 1 P. Wms., 240.

A case in principle, as well as in detail, strikingly like that at bar, we find quoted in 2 Wheeler's Am. Ch. Dig., p. 472. It is the case of Broaddus vs. Broaddus, 3 Dana, 526, where, in case of deception, it is declared that "the Court should at any time it has power over the cause, reinstate the parties and admit the defence."

But it is alleged that our relief is only by original bill and not by bill of review. If the authorities already cited do not sufficiently point to this as the proper remedy, we would cite also—Wormley vs. Birkhead, 3 Atkyn's 309. Dexter vs. Arnold, 5 Mason, 304. Story's Eq. Plead., sec. 412, 413. Also, 421, 422.

On the subject of parties we cite—Story's Eq. Plead., 428. 1 Leigh's Rep., 108 and 121. Calvort on Parties, &c., p. 15, and 48th Rule of Practice of Courts of Equity in U. S.

We have made all those parties whose rights we seek to affect—all with whom any controversy exists.

T. H. Hagner, for appellant, in reply said, that he proposed briefly to exhibit the circumstances under which the consent decree was made, the facts as then disclosed, and the newly discovered evidence whereon is grounded the prayer for the intervention of the Court. This proceeding for partition of the Arredondo Grant, in its inception, was an amicable proceeding as between the parties to this record. The claim of the appellant was for one fourth of the whole grant; the evidence of his claim a deed from Arredondo & Son, dated 21 Jan., 1822, declared on its face to have been made pursuant to a contract entered into in 1818, the next year after the grant was made. This claim of the estate of Peter Mitchell had been recognized by the appellees. In a letter of 19 Sept., 1843, (pp. 18, 18, 467 of record), John H. Lewis declares to Benj. A. Putnam, the Executor, "I have been long aware of Mr. P. Mitchell's claim, and am satisfied as to its justice;" and again, in the same letter, "Peter Mitchell claimed under deed from the Arredondos say 70,000 acres;" and again, "I have no design to thrown any impediment in the way of Mitchell's heirs." And, as is shown in the record, this very proceeding for partition was the result of the united friendly action, as made to appear at the time, of the appellee, John H. Lewis, and the appellant.

On the 15th March, 1821, Arredondo & Son sold 144,822½ acres of the grant to Jasper Ward—(pp. 11, 12, of record), The agreement does not appear to have been signed by Sam'l. H. Betts, under whom the appellees claim, but by the Arredondos, whose partner Betts is alleged to have been. The appellant had no evidence at any time before the decree in this case, that eBtts had assented either to the sale to Ward or to that to Peter Mitchell; nor was such evidence called for had good faith been kept between the parties. The claim set up by Lewis and wife had been known to be 15,000 acres of land, conveyed by F. Arredondo on 15th Dec., 1831, under an arrangement between them, declared in the deed to be "a full and satisfactory arrangement by which a final settlement had been effected between the said Arredondo and the said Lewis and wife, heirs and representatives of Betts." And this 15,000 acres is alleged to be given and received in release and acquittance of all and every claim which the said Lewis and wife "may now, or at any time might or could, have to any part, share or interest of, in or to the results of the said mercantile house of F. M. Arrendondo & Son, as the representatives of the said Samuel H. Betts, deceased, a partner of said house, as well as to any further claim to any part or portion of said grant." Pp. 14, 15, of record

The appellant, as Executor of Mitchell, assured by the repeated recognition of his claim, without suspicion of the truthfulness of the frequent reiterations by Lewis of the absence of all design to throw any impediment in the way of Mitchell's heirs; seeing that the limited extent of the claim of Lewis and wife forbade the idea of any conflict from that quarter; knowing that there was no other claimant who could molest him, felt that his case was sufficiently made out—even in the absence of the contract of 1818, recited in the deed 468 to Peter Mitchell, which contract had been lost or destroyed. While such was the character of this proceeding, Lewis and wife filed their answers to the bill denying generally the titles of Mitchell and Ward; yet, even after their answers, lest they might awaken suspicion of hostility, renewed protestations are conveyed to the appellant of the sincerity of Lewis—of the absence of all design on his part to interfere with the interests of Peter Mitchell's estate. But what was his consternation when, on the trial of the cause, he discovered that all these protestations were unmeaning words, and that the Executor was now called upon to make proof of his claim as against the representatives of Samuel H. Betts,—they insisting that Betts was a full partner of Arrendondo & Son; as such, entitled to one-third of the whole grant; denying that he had ever joined in the sales to Mitchell and Ward, and demanding then and there proof of both. The appellant was thus completely at the mercy of John H. Lewis; and to save any part of the land to the estate of his testator, was forced into a concession, without equivalent, of upwards of 30,000 acres of land, while Lewis and wife unjustly acquired, by his adroit management, 45,000 acres over and beyond what they were fairly and legally entitled to.

The Court will see that the whole case, at the time of this forced consent, turned upon the point, whether Betts, being a partner in the house of Arredondo and Son, did or did not assent to the deeds to Peter Mitchell and to the sale to Jasper Ward. The appellant had no evidence of such assent—was ignorant of the existence of such evidence, and submitted from necessity—advantage being taken of the circumstances by which he was surrounded; inveigled by a blind confidence into the trial of the cause, he was forced to succumb; and the rights of the estate in his hands have been thus grossly trenched upon. Since that consent given—since that decree made—he has discovered "new proof, relevant and material," "come to light after the decree was made, which could not possibly have been used at the time." This new evidence, no wset forth with the petition, as the ground of application "for the license of the Court" to file a bill of review, discloses the following distinct facts.

1st. That Samuel Betts, on 29th August, 1820, acknowledged that the house of Arredondo & Son were then "owners of three-fourths 469 of the grant only, having previously disposed of one-fourth;" (p. 9 of record)—which facts settle that the sale to Mitchell was prior to 1820, and that the one-fourth sold to him was an entire fourth of the original grant.

2d. That Samuel Betts, on 15th March, 1821, together with his associate, did close with Jasper Ward, the sale of 144,822½ acres of land—(p. 9 of record)—and on that declared they had but 70,000 acres left; and that the sale was negotiated by Betts, and the contract drawn up and prepared by himself.

3d. That Joseph Arredondo, prior to 1825, did expressly affirm to John H. Lewis the right of Peter Mitchell to 70,000 acres, as against each and every member of the firm of Arredondo & Son.

4th. That in the winter of 1831-2, Lewis had a meeting with F. M. Arredondo, at St. Augustine, and with much trouble and by an advance of $200 in money, got him to transfer to Mrs. Lewis 15,000 acres—she agreeing to give him a release of all other claims accruing to her; and that said deed was so accepted in satisfaction. (P. 17 of record).

5th. That, on Oct. 30th, 1833, Lewis declared his interest in the grant to be 15,000 acres; and referred to his deed on record as the evidence of his title—(p. 12 of the record),—and on the 29th Oct., 1842, again declares this the extent of his claim, alleging that he "could have recovered more land by suit;" and that he received such undivided portion of 15,000 acres, abandoning all further claim to any part or portion of the said grant.

And the appellant alleges that these new proofs, at the same time that they establish an estoppel in law on Lewis and wife's setting up these pretensions to a greater interest in the grant, render such pretensions, if set up, worse than idle.

The counsel for the appellees, feeling the force of this accumulated evidence, yet insist that although it may prove that Lewis & wife got too much of the land, it does not show that Putnam, Executor of Mitchell, got too little. And they insist that there is nothing in the record to show that Samuel H. Betts, when he declared, on the 29th Aug., 1820, "we are owners of three-quarters of the whole tract, having previously disposed of one-quarter," referred to the previous sale of one-fourth to Peter Mitchell. Now concede this for the sake of argument, and then the dilemma in which the learned counse
470 places his clients, is as fatal as his hypercriticism is refined. Lewis, as has been shown, repeatedly recognized Peter Mitchell's claim at 70,000 acres; and it is evidenced, in 1822, by the highest muniment of title; this quantity must, then, come out of the land. Now, in March, 1821, Samuel H. Betts, declares, "We have about 70,000 acres left." The deed, then, to Peter Mitchell in January, 1822, took those 70,000 acres—the whole remainder of the grant; and the counsel has thus proved his clients to be entitled to not one acre of land!

But, I ask, does it not as well appear that Mitchell's estate got too little as it does that Lewis got too much? Was not Mitchell entitled to one-fourth of the whole grant? Was not the sale to him made prior to 1820, and the deed in 1822; and is it now shown that Betts was a party to the contract himself, admitting the sale made? Does not Betts himself declare that they had sold three-fourths of the grant, and in March, 1821, had property only in 70,000 acres? Representing a third interest in this residue, Lewis and wife have obtained 62,000 acres, more than 6-7ts of the whole—while Mitchell's estate, representing one-fourth of the original grant of upwards of 280,000 acres, have received less than 27,000 acres of land. The Court seeing, then, such rank injustice done under the forms of law, will it not look around it for the means of relief?

But we are told, "your resource is an original bill to set consent for fraud." And we are told at the same time, "there is no fraud—Lewis has been guiltless of all fraud." How then will such original bill bring us relief? It would be superfluous for me to go over the argument of my associate who examined nearly every case since cited by the other side; nor will it be needful for me to bring in review the authorities which fortified our positions in the outset. We believe that these have lost none of their original force under the attack of the learned counsel while those have gained no new vigor since their true bearing was pointed out by my associate.

To the case of Atkinson vs. Manks, 1 Cowan, 693, we were cited by the appellee's counsel, to establish that an order or decree in Chancery, entered by consent, is not the subject of an appeal or rehearing. Now that case was in the Court of Errors, the appeal was from the decree of rerefence, and that decree was by consent. That is not this case. But examine the opinion of the Court, p. 709,—

"Whether that decree was erroneous I do not consider open for in- 471 quiry. The decree, in everything that respects the reference, purports to have been made by consent. If the Chancellor was mistaken in supposing Atkinson's counsel to have consented to it, application should have been made to him to have the mistake as to the consent corrected. That course not having been pursued, this Court cannot try the question," &c. "We must take the facts as stated in the decree," &c. Now what does this prove but that our course here is the correct one—to apply in the Court below to get rid of the consent. We do not appeal from the decree of partition. If we had done so, then our case would have been analogous to 1 Cowen, and we would have been met by the consent decree. But here, if the Court pleas, our appeal is from a refusal of the Court below to grant just such an application as the Court of Errors in New-York declare ought to be made.

In Brockett vs. Brockett, 2 Howard, 238, the Supreme Court simply declare that an application to the Circuit Court to re-hear the same case after decree rendered, is an application to the discretion of the Court; and that no appeal lies, such refusal not being "a final decree or order." We apprehend it has no bearing upon the case at bar.

It is next alleged, that the granting or refusing of leave to file a bill of review is a matter of "judicial discretion," not open to appeal. Although I concede the general principle "that where the subject decided by the inferior Court is left by law to their dischetion, as in the refusal to grant a new trial, it has been adjudged that a writ of error will not lie," (for which I cite 2 Har. & Gill, 81); yet I cannot yield that this comes within the rule. True, the granting of such a bill of review is not a matter of right, but of sound discretion in the Court; but the license of the Court is t obe given or refused under the law of Courts of Equity, and to affirm that when exercised it is incapable of review in an Appellate Court is to clothe the inferior tribunal with an amplitude of power, beneath which the rights of parties litigant might be overwhelmed.

The objection has been urged at some length, that the petition for leave to file a bill of review should have been filed on behalf of Peter Mitchell's heirs; that Executors and Administrators have only power over the lands for the payment of debts or to effect division among those entitled, and the acts of 1841, pp. 39-41, have been cited.— 472
To this we say that the Court can decree that the bill of review may be filed—it will be at our own hazard whether all the parties proper are then made Putnam, as Executor, is certainly a proper party though perhaps not the only party. But if he is to be regarded, not as a party in interest, then in entering into the stipulation, he can alone be viewed as counsel entering into an improvident and ruinous consent under surprise and ignorance of the facts material to the exercise of a sound discretion, and a fortiori ought not the heirs be bound by such a consent. Drought vs. Bedford, 1 Molloy, 572. Furnival vs. Bogle, 4 Russ., 142. Gould vs. Tancred, 3 Atk., 533. Buck vs. Fawcett, 3 P. Wms., 242.

And if the counsel have indeed succeeded in disproving any fraud on the part of Lewis, then our case rests on the ground of surprise, ignorance of facts, newly discovered proofs come to light since the decree made—and this bill of review, and not an original bill, is the proper remedy.

The only remaining matter I will examine is upon the suggestion of the Court, the nature of a decree of partition. It is final or interlocutory merely? The 6th sec. of Act of 1844, under which this bill was filed, contemplates yet another decree, upon the confirmation of the report, a "final decree shall be entered, which shall accordingly vest in the respective parties the title," &c. But may it not be that the term was here used merely to indicate the closing of the whole matter, and not in the sense in which our Statute of Appeals and the Courts regard it? The proceeding by partition at common law was by writ "de partitione facienda." That partition was made by the Sheriff, and 12 lawful men of his bailwick, the text of Littleton is, "the judgment shall be thus, that partition shall be made," &c. 1 Coke's Inst., 168, a. Lord Coke adds, "and it is to be observed that there be two judgments in a writ of partition. Of the former, Littleton speaketh in this place. And when partition is made by the oath of twelve men and arrangement and allotment thereof, and so returned by the Sheriff, then the latter judgment is "ideo consideratum est, quod partitio praedicta firma et stabilis in perpetuum teneatur;' and this is the principal judgment. And of the other, before this is given, no writ of error can lie." Now, in the notes on 3d book of the Institutes, 169, a, note 23, several new modes

473 of partition are noticed, amongst the rest, "a compulsory mode by decree of Chancery exercising its equitable jurisdiction on a bill filed praying for a partition, in which case it is usual for the Court to issue a commission for the purpose to various persons who proceed without a jury." This mode was unknown in Littleton's time,—the earliest instance of a bill for partition is thought to be in the time of Elizabeth

It is manifest that this is the character of the proceeding in analogy to which our statute is framed, and the practice in Chancery will be the best guide to determine whether the decree in question is final or not. In Baring vs. Nash, 1 Ves. & Beames, 555, we are told that the remedy at law by writ was extended to bills in equity by stat. 31 Hen. 8, and 38 Hen. 8; and in Wiseby vs. Frisby, 3 Randolph, 370, it is declared to be a remedy substituted for the difficult and perplexed remedy by writ of partition.

Now the difference between a judgment at law in partition (which is that spoken of by Littleton & Coke where they tell of two judgments and that the second is the principal one), and a decree in equity in partition is very great. It is pointed out in 1 Maddock's Chan., 245: "A partition at law operates by the judgment of a Court of law and delivering up of possession in pursuance of it, which concludes all the parties to it; partition in equity proceeds upon conveyances to be executed by the parties." In 2 Newland's Ch., 327, is a precedent of such a decree. Sir William Grant, Master of the Rolls in Agar vs. Fairfax, 17 Ves., 543, says, "the Court is to ascertain the proportions and rights of the parties, and when that is done, then the duty of the commissioners begins." From the decree in that case an appeal was at once taken to Lord Eldon, Chancellor; and it will be noted that after the appeal, the cause was yet heard for further directions and upon the casts. Yet a decree may be final although it require the confirmation of a further order of the Court before it can be acted on. 1 Barbour's Chan. Prac., 332. Neither does the reservation of liberty to any party to apply to the Court for directions, alter the final nature of the decree. Same, p. 333. We would submit then, under these authorities, that although the bill in equity may be in its effect and object the same as the writ at common law, yet the decree embodies in itself both judgments. All the 474 judicial power of the Court is put forth in the one decree—all that follows after is the execution of it.

BALTZELL, J., delivered the following opinion:

The record in this case presents an application for a bill of review through a petition and affidavit for that purpose, alleging the pendency of a suit in Chancery between petitioner and other, and defendants and others, for partition and the rendition of a decree in the case, which is stated to have been duly recorded and signed. It asks for liberty to file a bill of review for the purpose of having said decree reviewed, reversed and set aside, having recited facts, in the opinion of the applicant, sufficient to entitle him thereto.

The Court below refused the application, from which an appeal is taken to this Court.

It is conceded that a bill of review lies only after a final decree, so that the first enquiry is whether the decree rendered in this case is of that character.

By reference to the record, it is seen that the decree passed by consent for the ascertaining the interest of the respective parties, and also appointing commissioners to make partition of the lands and premises mentioned in the pleadings among the said parties, according to their respective rights and interests therein, as ascertained by this Court and established by this decree, and said commissioners were ordered, after having made such partition, to "report the same in writing to this Court without delay."

We are clearly of opinion that this is an interlocutory and not a final decree. "In proceedings in partition, both at law and in equity, there are two judgments and decrees, the one interlocutory and the other final. The first is quod partitio fiat inter partes detenementis, upon which a writ or commission goes comanding that partition be made, and upon the return of this writ or commission executed, if the proceedings are approved by the Court; the second judgment is given quod partitio praedicta firma et stabilis in perpetuum teneatur. This is the principal judgment, and of the other before this is given no writ of error lies." 1 Coke Litt., 167, b., 168, a. Thomas Coke, 1 vol., 807-8. 8 Missouri Rep., 55. "All the authorities state that a bill for partition is exactly the same as the writ at common law." 17 Vesey, 549.

It is contended, however, that the test of a decree's being final, is 475 that an appeal will lie upon it; and we have been referred to various cases of partition in the English Courts, showing appeals from decisions of the Master of the Rolls to the Lord Chancellor in cases like the one under consideration. If their mode of proceeding were like ours, such an authority would be entitled to great respect. But we find no such similitude or resemblance. By our statute, which in this respect is the same as that prevailing in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, a decree must be final before an appeal can be had. Not so in the English Courts of Chancery; for there an appeal may be taken from every order on a petition; motion or interlocutory decree, in the progress of the suit; and this seems to be the course in New-York. 3 John. Chy., 66, 68, 123, 163. 15 Vesey, 184. 16 Vesey, 213, 218. 18 Vesey, 453 9 Vesey, 319. 14 Vesey, 184. 15 Vesey, 585.

If there were doubt, however, as to the character of this decree upon the authorities, there can be none under the law of the Legislature under which this proceeding was instituted. The sixth section of the Act "to provide for the partition or division of real estates. approved 14 March, 1844," enacts that either party may file objections to the report of the commission within ten days after they shall be notified of the filing of the same, &c.; and if no objections are filed, or if the Court is satisfied that they are not well founded, then the report shall be confirmed, and a final decree shall be entered up, which shall accordingly vest in the respective parties the title of the several parcels or portions of the premises allotted to them respectively, and shall give to each of them the possession and quiet title to their respectiev shares as against the other parties to the suit, or those claiming through or under them, and a certified copy of said decree recorded in the office of the County Clerk in which the lands lie, shall have the same effect as if mutual releases had been executed between the parties. Acts of 1844, pages 23-4.

The decree in this case being interlocutory, a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, would seem to be the appropriate remedy. 2 John. Chy., 490. 2 Atk. 40, 534. 2 Vesey, Senr., 598. Mit., 71. 17 Vesey, 177. Possibly an original bill might accomplish this object. This, however, will be for the consideration of the Circuit Court. We. then, concur with that Court in refusing to grant the petition and dismissing the case, and order that the same 476 be affirmed without prejudice to an application, if thought proper, for other appropriate proceedings.

The decree is therefore affirmed with costs.

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

AT

JANUARY TERM, 1848.

THE UNION BANK OF FLORIDA, FOR THE USE OF CHARLES MORRISON, vs. BURWELL MCBRIDE.

A writ of Error will be dismissed on motion made for that purpose, where the plaintiff in error was the original plaintiff, and had not, previous to suing out his writ of error, paid all costs incurred in the court below, and given bond, as required by statute.

There is no exception to this rule in favor of non-resident plaintiffs.

LANCASTER, JUSTICE:

This cause comes up by Writ of Error, from the Circuit Court for Jefferson county, Chief Justice THOMAS DOUGLAS having sat at the trial.

MCCANTS, for Defendant, moved the court, that this Writ of Error be dismissed.

1st. Because plaintiff in error (who was original plaintiff) had not, at the time of suing out the writ, paid costs. 2nd. Because the plaintiff in error had not given a bond for costs, in such case provided by law.

Hagner, for Plaintiff, stated:

He did not know that costs had been paid, but thought it probable that, pursuant, to a general understanding between the Clerk of the Circuit Court and himself, the costs had been charged to him. Also that a bond for costs in this court has not been given, and that Morrison, the real plaintiff in interest, resides in England, too far away to have been yet heard from, since the trial below.

8 The statute of February 12, 1836, Thompson's Digest, 447, section 5, referred to by defendant's attorney provides that "no "appeal, or Writ of Error, shall hereafter be granted to the original "plaintiff in any suit, unless said plaintiff first pay all costs which "may have accrued, in and about said suit, up to the time when "said appeal or Writ of Error is prayed; and, also, enter into bond, "with one or more securities, in a sum sufficient to cover all costs "which may accrue, in the prosecution of said appeal, or Writ of "Error, conditioned to pay the same, if the judgment, sentence, or "decree of the court shall be affirmed."

This act of the Legislature (believed by the court to be in full force) is regarded by them as applicable to and conclusive on this motion. The payment of all costs below, and entering into bond, as in the act prescribed, seem to be steps precedent to granting a Writ of Error, imperatively required by the statute. Any other construction would, they think, be repugnant to the act, an evasion of it, and, in some instances, render it inoperative.

The reason assigned for not having given the required bond does not, in the opinion of the court, strengthen the plaintiff's position. He is admitted to be a non-resident, and, therefore, not within the reach of process from the courts of this State. It is not sufficiently apparent that he paid all costs which accrued in and about his suit in the Circuit Court, the best evidence of which would be the certificate of the Clerk of that court, and in the opinion of this court, therefore, the most proper evidence. He failed in his suit below, yet, without payment of past costs, or security for those which may here accrue, he seeks further to pursue this defendant. His being a non-resident, adds legal force to the liability he was under to pay all costs below, as well as give bond for those which might accrue here before suing out his writ.

The court are unanimously of opinion the motion must be allowed, and do order this cause to be dismissed, and that the defendant, Burwell McBride, have judgment for his costs.

9 MARGARET BUTLER, ADMINISTRATRIX, &C., vs. THOMPSON & HAGNER, TRUSTEES.

WHERE, in an action of debt against two joint defendants the writ is returned "non est inventus," as to one, and a verdict is obtained against the other, but judgment on the verdict is arrested on motion, on account of the insufficiency of the return as to the other: and where the order granting the motion in arrest, after reciting that the parties appeared by counsel, and that the motion was argued, simply concludes, "it seems to the Court that said motion be sustained," the Court may, at a subsequent term, permit the return of the Sheriff to be amended, and the pleadings to be amended, and a trial upon the merits to be had, notwithstanding such order arresting the judgment.

The order sustaining the motion in arrest was not final, but the cause remained in fieri, and the plaintiff might very properly have had leave to amend.

Where in such case the plea to the original declaration reached the whole merits of the cause, as well after as before the amendments to the declaration, it is a plea to the amended declaration, and makes an issue between the parties to be submitted to the jury.

Whether an entry by the Clerk, reciting "this day came the parties by their attorneys," is of itself evidence of the appearance of both parties—quære?

This cause was tried in the Leon Circuit Court, before Judge BALTZELL, and comes up on Writ of Error. A full statement of the case is given by the Chief Justice, who delivered the opinion of the Court.

Mr. Archer, for Plaintiff in error:

If the judgment of the court upon the motion in arrest was incomplete on the record, amendments at any time would be allowed to complete and perfect it, there being that in the record to amend by. Nevertheless, the order is final, as much so as any other informal entry of judgment. If the order was final, the further proceedings at the next term, being without notice to defendant, are of course void. Hair vs. Moody, 9 Alabama, 397. And such proceedings are without notice, unless the entry of the clerk, "this day came the parties," &c., is to conclude the defendant. But this entry is no evidence of defendants appearance. Gwin vs. Planter's Bank, 1 Howard, Miss. Rep., 527.

But the amendments in this case should not have been permitted. 10 The object of amendments to informal judgments is, in all cases, to perfect them. Here amendments are allowed to defeat, to set aside the judgment. This is the exclusive province of an appellate tribunal.

Again: there was no issue in May, 1847, to be tried by the jury. The amended declaration (the amendment being in substance) was a new declaration, and the plea to the original was not to be regarded as a plea to the amended declaration, particularly in the absence of the defendant, who, by such construction of the pleadings, was made a party to those subsequent proceedings, when in fact he was not a party.

Mr. Thompson, for Defendants in error.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This is an action of debt instituted by the defendants in error in the Leon Circuit Court against Alexander Patterson, Thomas J. Latham and Bradley McKimmy. The writ is in the following words to wit:

"STATE OF FLORIDA.

"TO THE SHERIFF OF LEON COUNTY—GREETING.

"We command you to summon Alexander Patterson, Thomas J. Latham, and Bradley McKimmy, if they are within the County of Leon, personally to be and appear before the Judge of our Circuit Court for said County, in Tallahassee, on the second Monday in November, next, being the first day of our next term, to answer Leslie A. Thompson and Thomas H. Hagner, Trustees, &c., of an action of debt. Debt $10,000, damages $5000, and have you then and there this writ.

Seal of Court } Witness, Daniel McRaeny, Clerk of our said Circuit Court this 31st day of October, A. D. 1845, and 70th year of American Independence.

By JOHN B. KEEN, D. C."

Which said writ was duly returned by said sheriff endorsed in these words: "Executed by serving a copy hereof on two of the defendants, Latham and McKimmy. Patterson 'non est inventus.' October 31st, 1845. A. A. FISHER, Sheriff.
By J. W. SHERWOOD, D. S."

Margaret Butler, Administratrix, &c. vs. Thompson & Hagner, Trustees.

11 At the November Term of said court for the year 1845, 70 days were allowed the plaintiffs within which to file their declaration, and by the record, it appears that they filed it on the 10th day of February following, complaining of Bradley McKimmy and Thomas J. Latham defendants, against whom (together with Alexander Patterson, not a resident of said County of Leon,) process has been served, summoned to answer said plaintiffs of a plea that they render unto the plaintiffs the sum of ten thousand dollars lawful money, &c.—The first count declares that a joint and several bond for the sum of two thousand dollars, and the second and only remaining count charges the defendants with the sum of $8000, had and received by them part of the $10,000 demanded. No account for this latter sum is annexed to or filed with the declaration as required by the statute, and it does not seem to have been relied upon in the subsequent proceedings.

To this declaration the defendants, Bradley McKimmy and Thomas J. Latham, put in the plea of non est factum upon which issue was joined, and on the 10th day of November, 1846, (the death of Bradley McKimmy, having been previously suggested,) this issue was submitted to a jury, who returned a verdict in the following words, to-wit:

"We the jury find that the bond sued on, is the bond of the defendants." Upon which the following judgment was entered, viz:

"Therefore it is considered by the court, that the plaintiffs recover of said defendant, the debt in the declaration mentioned and their costs. But forasmuch as it appears to the court here, that said bond hath a condition, thereunder written, and the court doth not know what amount of damages said plaintiffs have sustained, therefore let a writ of enquiry issue, returnable at this term."

On the record for the 16th day of the same month of November, the following entry appears, viz:

"This day came the parties, by their attorneys, and thereupon the motion in arrest of judgment upon the jury's verdict in this cause, being argued, it seems to the court that said motion be sustained."

And afterwards, on the same day, the plaintiffs filed their assignment of breaches of the condition of said bond, which breaches are set out at length in the record. Nothing more appears to have been done in the case, until the next term on the 30th day of June, 1847, when the following entry was made upon the record, to wit:

12 "This day came the same parties, by their Attorneys, and on motion of the said plaintiffs, by their attorneys, it appearing to the court, that the judgment heretofore entered in this case, was arrested by reason of the insufficiency of the return of A. A. Fisher, by J. W. Sherwood, D. S., as to Alexander Patterson, one of the original parties named in the writ returned 'non est inventus,' and it also appearing to the court, that the first writ or summons was sufficient: It is therefore ordered by the court, on the motion of the plaintiffs' attorneys, that the Sheriff of Leon county, amend his return as to the said Alexander Patterson, and that the said Sheriff make return whether or not the said Alexander Patterson, did or did not reside in the county of Leon at the time of the service of said writ upon the other defendants; and thereupon the said Sheriff did amend his return accordingly, and thereupon the court do allow the said plaintiffs to amend their declaration according to said return, and the same was done accordingly, and thereupon came a jury, to-wit:—Charles Demilly, (and eleven others, naming them) who being elected, tried and sworn the truth to speak upon the issues joined upon their oath do say, 'We the jury find that the bond sued on is the bond of the defendant Thomas J. Latham, and we do assess the damages said plaintiffs have sustained by occasion of the defendants breach of the condition thereof at seven hundred and thirty-three 49-100 dollars." Therefore it is considered by the court that the plaintiffs recover against the defendant $10,000 the debt in the declaration mentioned and their costs by them about their suit in this behalf expended, and the said defendant in mercy, &c. But this judgment is to be discharged by the payment of the damages assessed as aforesaid and the costs."

The plaintiff in error, by her attorney, has assigned the following errors, viz:

First, That the proceedings in this cause, had, after the November term, 1846, are without notice to the defendant Latham, and not binding on him or his representatives.

Second, That the judgment of the court arresting the judgment upon the verdict of the jury, was final and could not be disturbed after the expiration of the term, save by the action of an appellate court.

Third, The court erred in permitting the return of the summons to be amended, and the declaration to be amended.

Fourth, The verdict of the jury, on the 30th of June, 1847, is a 13 nullity, as there were no issues joined between the parties and by them submitted to the country.

Fifth, That the proceedings and judgment appealed from, are otherwise irregular and insufficient.

The 12th section of the Act regulating judicial proceedings, Duval's Comp. 92, Thompson's Digest, No. 3, page 327, provides that 'when any original summons has been sued out against two or more defendants, and returned by the sheriff or other officer, served upon one or more of the defendants, and that the other defendants do not reside in said district or county, as the case may be, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff at his option to proceed to judgment against those upon whom process has been served, or obtain from the court time to perfect service,' &c.

The plaintiffs in this case seem to have selected the first alternative of this provision, and the amendment of the Sheriff's return, and of the declaration complained of, appear to have been made to meet it.

The counsel for the defendants in error insist that the amendments were made at the same term of the court at which the order arresting judgment was entered, and that the court then directed the record to be amended commencing at the first error. As, however, the record does not show these facts, we do not permit them to influence our action, but proceed to enquire whether they could properly be directed and made at a subsequent term. It is contended in behalf of the plaintiff in error, that the order in relation to the arrest of the judgment is final and conclusive and could not be disturbed after the expiration of the term, save by an appellate court.

We cannot assent to that proposition. The order upon the motion to arrest the judgment is in these words:— 'It seems to the court that the said motion be sustained.' It would we think, have been more correctly entered in this form:—"It seems to the court that the said motion should be sustained," or "it is ordered that said motion be sustained." Entered however in either way the effect is the same. It does not import finality or conclusiveness, but is substantially just such an order as our statute on the subject in such a case would seem to require, to be followed by the order to amend, and it may well be doubted, whether the court could, with propriety, have entered one of any other import. In the case of Edwards vs. the Union Bank—Florida Reports, 144, which was cited by the at- 1 torney for the plaintiff in error as in point, final judgment was entered upon the motion in arrest. On reference to that case it will be found that it was so entered because the opinion of the court was against the plaintiff in the court below, upon the merits of his case, the court holding that the action (which was trespass,) would not lie against a corporation, and the plaintiff had not by law a right to judgment in his favor. Here the reason on which the opinion of the court was founded, was the insufficiency of the return of the sheriff as to Alexander Patterson, one of the original parties to the writ returned "non est inventus" whereas it appears the return, according to the provisions of the statute above cited and the facts of the case, should have been "the said Alex. Patterson does not reside in Leon county," a defect that had nothing to do with the merits of the case. This error of the sheriff was no fault of the plaintiff's, and they should not be permitted to suffer by it, if by the rules of law such a contingency could be avoided. The question is could that be done. The 52 section of the Act (above cited) regulating judicial proceedings, Duval's Comp. 99, Thompson's Digest No. 2, page 351, provides that 'When a judgment is arrested the plaintiff shall not be compelled to bring a new suit, provided, the first writ or summons shall be sufficient, but the court may order new pleadings to commence where the error causing the arrest began.' The first writ or summons we have seen in this case was sufficient. No objection was taken to it. In view of this provision of the statute therefore, it does not appear that the defendant in the court below was (as has been contended,) out of court so soon as the order of the 16th of November, 1846, was made, or that he has been out of court at all. The objection therefore, "that the proceedings in the cause had after the November term, 1846, are without notice to the defendant, Latham, and not binding on him or his representatives," fails. When a party is once brought into court, he is chargeable with whatever is done there in the suit in which he is a party, although he did not in fact appear, and had no actual knowledge on the subject, Deleplaine vs. Hitchcock, 6 Hill's N. Y. Reps., 17. After that order was made, the cause remaining in fieri, the plaintiff might very properly have had leave to amend. They did it seems, actually amend, immediately after the order was made, but the record does not show that they had leave so to do. The defendant did not move for a final judgment in his favor, and thus the record stood over until the next term, when it is objected that it was too late to permit these amendments to be made. Upon general principles, however, we see no objection to the amendments. In the case of Malone vs. Samuel, 3 Marsh, 350, it was held to be correct to allow the sheriff to amend his return even at a subsequent term, and the amendment, (said the court,) will relate back to the proper return day. In Gay vs. Caldwell, Harden 63, a sheriff was permitted to amend his return to a writ of ad quod damnum, several years after he went out of office there being the inquest to amend by. So in Hutchins vs. Brown, 4 Harr. and McHenry, 498, a sheriff was permitted to amend his return of an attachment several years after the term to which the return was made. And in Thatcher vs. Miller, 11 Mass. 413, it was held that an officer may be allowed to amend his return, although several years have elapsed. And so of a common recovery. Ibid. Ringold vs. Brown, citing 2 Bl. Reps., 747—1065, and 3 Wil. 154. And in Smith vs. Daniel, 3 Murph. 128, the court held that the sheriff might be permitted to make or amend, according to the truth of the case, a return upon an execution at any time after the return day, even when important consequences may be produced by such amendment. In Massachusetts a declaration may be permitted to be amended, even after judgment is arrested for defect in the original declaration, a new trial being granted. Williams vs. Hengham Turnpike Co., 4 Pick., 341. And in Wilson vs. Brown, 5 Monr., 35, it was also so held, and the provisions of our statute above cited, would seem to be tantamount to the granting of a new trial in a case where the defect does not reach the substantial merits of the case. Where a plaintiff on leave to amend, struck out a count erroneously supposing he had a better remedy for the cause of action on which it was founded, and took judgment on the remaining counts, he was permitted on a review of the first action to restore that count, having first unsuccessfully attempted his other supposed remedy. Parker vs. Parker, 17 Mass. 376. And in Salters vs. Bayard, 12 Wendell 228, it was held that though a cause had been two years at issue, and twice noticed for trial, the declaration may be amended by adding a new count upon the same cause of action on the plaintiff's paying only the costs of the motion, unless the pleas are withdrawn or a new defence is rendered necessary by the amendment. And in Miller vs. Watson, 9 Wendell 506 a declaration was permitted to be amended, by adding a new count setting forth a special agreement nine years after 16 the commencement of the suit and after three trials at the Circuit. With these authorities before us we do not deem it going too far to say that the amendments made in this case were properly permitted at the next term after the order of arrest was entered. Indeed we presume the learned counsel who argued this case for the plaintiff in error would hardly have contended that it was too late to amend if he had conceded that his client was properly in court when they were made.

And we might perhaps have dispensed with the citation of cases to this point, but we have thought proper to refer to a few out of the many that might have been adduced to show how far other courts have gone in relation to such amendments and to these we may have added that of Stewart & Preston vs. Bennett decided by this court at the last term, Florida Reports 442; where we held that as a general rule "until judgment is signed or there is a final judgment, amendments to the pleadings may be allowed to the parties upon proper and equitable terms, and the declaration may be amended at any time so long as the proceedings remain in paper," citing Stephens on Pl. 97, and 1 Wilson 7 and 149.

But it was further insisted on behalf of the plaintiff in error that there was no plea to the amended declaration and consequently no issue for the jury to try, and that the verdict of the jury on the 30th of June, 1847, is a nullity. The answer however to this is, that the plea of non est factum was in, which reached the whole merits of the case as well after the amendment as before. The defendant had the right to plead over to the amended declaration, but if he chose to waive that right and go to trial upon the issue as it stood, he might do so. Had he asked leave to plead anew we presume he would have obtained it. As a general rule where a party is permitted to amend or amends without leave, the other party has a right to plead de novo. Crosby vs. Hill, 1 Wash. 360. Perry vs. VanCleef 1 Hall 165. But if a defendant when a declaration is amended instead of availing himself of this right goes to trial upon a plea or pleas already in which reach the whole declaration and upon which an issue or issues had been joined, he cannot we apprehend properly assign for error that there was no issue for the jury to try. On amending the declaration in King's Bench after plea pleaded the defendant is at liberty to plead de novo if the case requires it, and has two days allowed him for that purpose after amendment made. 1 Tidd's Pr. 3 Amer. from 9 London Ed. 107. And in Common Pleas he may do so if he has occasion or thinks proper, but he is not 17 obliged to vary his first decision. Ibid, 708.

Where the plaintiff neglected to reply to the statute of limitations, and went to trial upon a nisi prius record omitting it, but the defendant had the full benefit of a defence upon the statute at the trial, the court refused to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff for irregularity, but suffered him to amend. Snyder vs. Snyder, 4 Cowan, 394. And the same was virtually decided by the Common Pleas, in the late case of Cooke vs. Buell, 8 Taunt., 184—where there was process against two, one not served and pleadings and judgments against both, judgment was permitted to be amended at a subsequent term, by striking out the name of the defendant not served.

The case of Hair vs. Moody, cited by the attorney for the plaintiff in error, from 9 Alabama Reports, 399, is not, according to our view of this case, in point. There the suit had been dismissed, and there was no question but the defendant was out of court. It was, therefore, undoubtedly irregular to set aside the judgment of non pros. at a subsequent term, without notice to the defendant; but even this irregularity was waived in that case, by the subsequent appearance of the defendant. Here, as we have seen, the defendant was never out of court—but, on the contrary, was rightly in court, and chargeable with notice of every step there taken in this case. The question, therefore, to which the case of Gwin vs. the Planter's Bank, 1 Howard's Miss. Rep., 527, also cited by the attorney for the plaintiff in error, whether an entry by the Clerk, "This day came the parties by their attorney," &c., would, or would not, be conclusive evidence of the fact of such an appearance does not arise, as, if we are right in the opinion that this defendant was never out of court, that entry on this record was properly made. But it may certainly be very questionable, whether in every case, such an entry would not at least be prima facie evidence of the appearance of both parties, unless the contrary is shown by some other part of the record.

In the case of Williams vs. Hingham Turnpike Company, before cited, Chief Justice PARKER, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is unpleasant to arrest the course of judicial proceedings, on account of defects which have nothing to do with the real merits of the matter in dispute." And again: "Certainly objections which are apparent in the beginning of a cause, but which are passed until the expense of a trial has been incurred, ought not to 18 be favored." And we fully accord with that able and enlightened jurist in these sentiments. Such is the case before us.

But we find ourselves more fortunately situated than the learned judge, whose words we have just now quoted; for he was obliged to yield to the objection, but there was no charge in the declaration in that case which would support the verdict. But we think the judgment in this case is sustained by the provisions of our statute, and the general principles of law applicable to it, and it is therefore affirmed.

Per curiam.

ROBERT MITCHELL vs. JOSEPH CHAIRES, EXECUTOR, &C.

Where the plaintiff in an action of Assumpsit, filed a replication to one of several pleas of defendant, and, afterwards, by leave, filed an amended replication, to which the defendant demurred, and the court sustained the demurrer; and where, on motion of the plaintiff, the judgment on the demurrer was set aside, and the plaintiff permitted to have a trial of the issue made by the original replication, as well as of the other issues in the cause. Held:

That the plaintiff cannot now be heard to complain that the demurrer to said amended replication remains undisposed of, or to insist upon any matter in relation to it as error, the judgment upon it having been set aside at his instance to enable him to submit the matters of fact in his case to a jury, and he having pleaded over for that purpose.

If he intended to rely upon this objection, he should have permitted the judgment to stand, and assigned it as error.

And although error should appear upon the record, yet if, in distinct pleadings, a complete bar is shown to the action, the judgment for defendant must be affirmed.

Where there are several issues, requiring proof on the part of the plaintiff to sustain them, and a verdict upon them was rendered for defendant, and there is no bill of exception, to show on what ground it was rendered, the court will presume the verdict to be right, and will sustain the judgment entered upon it.

This case was tried below in the Leon Circuit Court before Judge BALTZELL, and comes up by Writ of Error. A statement of the case will be found in the opinion of the court.

Robert Mitchell, vs. Joseph Chaires, Executor, &c.

19 Hagner, for Plaintiff in Error.

Long, for Defendant.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This case was brought up by writ of error from the Leon Circuit Court. It is an action of assumpsit instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant as executor of the last will and testament of Benjamin Chaires, deceased, to recover the amount of two promissory notes; one for the sum of $1998 64 1-4 dated February 8th, 1838, payable on the first day of January, 1839, and the other for a like sum bearing the same date and payable on the first day of January, 1840, both made by one Jesse H. Willis, payable to the order of the said Benjamin Chaires at the Union Bank of Florida, and endorsed by him. The declaration contains a count upon each note, counts for work and labor, goods sold and delivered, and the common money counts.

To this declaration the defendant puts in five pleas:

First, That neither he nor the testator undertook or promised in manner and form, &c.

Second, That said Benjamin Chaires in his life time did not undertake or promise in manner and form, &c.

The third plea denies demand upon or notice to the defendant as alleged in the first and second counts of plaintiff's declaration.

The fourth sets up the statute of limitations of five years as a bar, &c., "non actio accrevit."

The fifth is in the following words to wit: "And for further plea in this behalf the said defendant by leave, &c., says said plaintiff actio non, &c., because he says that after his appointment and qualification as executor of the last will and testament of said testator by advertisement dated the 20th day of October, in the year 1839, which he caused to be published that day, and once a week for the space of four weeks in a newspaper printed in Tallahassee, Leon county, Florida, giving notice to all creditors, legatees and persons entitled to distribution of said estate that their claims and demands would be barred unless exhibited within two years; and said defendant avers that said several claims and demands in said plaintiff's declaration mentioned, or either, or any of them, were not 20 exhibited to him within said period and this he is ready to verify wherefore he prays judgment," &c.

To the first, second and third pleas, the plaintiff joined issue and to the fourth and fifth replications as follows, to wit:

"And as to the said plea of the said defendant by him fourthly above pleaded the said plaintiff says he ought not to be barred or precluded from having, &c. Because he says that the said several causes of action in the said declaration mentioned, did accrue to the said plaintiff within five years next before the commencement of this suit and this he prays may be enquired of by the country, &c.

"And as to the said plea of the said defendant by him fifthly above pleaded the said plaintiff says that said plaintiff ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action, &c. Because he says that the said several claims and demands in said declaration mentioned were exhibited to him the said defendant within two years from the publication in said plea mentioned, and this he prays may be enquired of by the country."

After the filing of these replications the plaintiff obtained leave to amend his replication to the said fourth plea, and filed an amended replication as follows, viz:

"And the said plaintiff saith that the said defendant ought not to be admitted or received to plead the said plea by him fourthly above pleaded wherein he alleges that said several causes of action in plaintiff's declaration mentioned did not accrue to said plaintiff within five years next before the commencement of this suit. Because he says that the said several causes of action in the plaintiff's declaration mentioned accrued to the said plaintiff after the death of defendant's testator, and that after the same so accrued the same were duly presented to the said defendant, executor of the last will and testament of Benjamin Chaires deceased, as demands of said plaintiff against the said estate of the said testator within the period of two years after the grant of the letters testamentary to said defendant, executor as aforesaid, to wit, at the county aforesaid according to the statute in such case made and provided and this he is ready to verify, wherefore he prays judgment if the defendant ought to be admitted or received against the said presentment and demand aforesaid to plead the plea by him fourthly above pleaded in this suit as aforesaid."

To this last replication, the defendant, by his attorneys, demurred, and their demurrer was sustained. The following entries in 21 regard to it appear on the record, to wit:

"This day came the parties by their attorneys, and thereupon the matters of law arising upon the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's replication to the plea of the said defendant, by him fourthly above pleaded, being argued, it seems to the court that the said replication, and the matters therein contained, are not sufficient in law to maintain the action aforesaid. Therefore, it is considered by the court, that the said demurrer be sustained, and that the plaintiff take nothing by his bill, but for his false clamor be in mercy," &c.

Twelve days after which, the following entry appears: "This day came the parties by their attorneys, and thereupon, on motion of the plaintiff, by his attorneys, the judgment herein entered on the 17th day of June instant is set aside, and thereupon came a jury, to wit: Edward Houston, &c., (naming the other eleven jurors,) who, being elected, tried, and sworn the truth to speak upon the issue joined, and having fully heard the evidence, upon their oath do say: 'We the jury find for the defendant.' Therefore, it is considered by the court, that the plaintiff take nothing by his bill, but for his false clamor be in mercy," &c.

The only point insisted upon as error is, "That the court erred in refusing to sustain the replication of estoppel to the bar of limitations of five years."

We are by no means prepared to say, that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to this replication. But whether it did so or not, is wholly immaterial to this inquiry, for the judgment rendered upon it was set aside on the plaintiff's own motion, and for his benefit.

The plaintiff's counsel alleges that he understood at the time that the order of the court, setting aside the judgment on the demurrer, was intended merely to change that judgment from a final one to a judgment of "respondeas ouster," and so he treated it; for it appears by the record, that he refiled his original replication to the defendant's fourth plea, (after this judgment,) which he had abandoned by putting in his amended replication. The effect of all which seems to be, that the defendant waived his demurrer to the amended replication to the fourth, and that the plaintiff abandoned his amended replication, fell back upon the original one, and that the case was submitted to the jury upon the issues joined upon the first, second and third pleas, and the replication to the fourth plea, 22
(as originally filed,) and to the fifth plea.

And the plaintiff cannot now be heard to complain that the demurrer to said amended replication remains undisposed of, or to insist upon any matter in relation to it as error, the judgment upon it having been set aside at his instance, to enable him to submit the matters of fact in his case to a jury, and he having pleaded over for that purpose. If he intended to rely upon this objection, he should have permitted the judgment to stand, and assign it as error here. In the case of Davis vs. Dickson, 2 Stewart's Reports, 370, it was holden, "that where a plea in abatement to a writ and declaration is overruled on demurrer, the party cannot insist on the same matter in arrest of judgment, if he pleads over." If, after the refusal of a court to reject a plea, the plaintiff reply or join issue on the plea, the refusal to reject the plea cannot be assigned for error 7 Blackford, 355.

There were five distinct issues of fact submitted to the jury in this case—a verdict upon them for the defendant, and a judgment upon that verdict. None of the testimony is before the court, no bill of exceptions is to be found in the record, and it is to be presumed that the plaintiff failed in his proofs. No motion appears to have been made for a new trial—from which it may be fairly inferred that the plaintiff himself was satisfied that his testimony did not sustain his issues.

In the case of the United States vs. Carlton, 1 Gallison Reports, 400, the court held that, "although error appear upon the record, yet if in distinct pleadings, a complete bar is shown to the action, the judgment for the defendant must be affirmed." Here no error appears, certainly none of which the plaintiff has any right to complain. The pleas present a complete bar to the action unless met by proof, and there is nothing to show what proofs, if any, were offered.

In the case of Blaney vs. Findley, et al., 2 Blackford's Reports, 338, the court said, "There is no bill of exceptions to show us on what grounds the court decided, but as the presumption of law is in favor of the decision, if there were any facts that could have been legally before the court that would authorize their judgment, we are bound to sustain it." The reverse of this here holds good, as there were several distinct issues that required proof on the part of the plaintiff to sustain them, and a verdict was rendered for the defendant 23 upon them, and there is no bill of exceptions to show us on what grounds it was rendered. We are bound to presume that the verdict is right, and to sustain the judgment entered upon it.

The judgment is, therefore, in all things affirmed.

David Gordon and Wife vs. John G. Camp.

The Territorial act of Feb. 12, 1836, entitled "an act to amend an act regulating the mode of suing out writs of error and prosecuting appeals in the Territory of Florida, passed February 8, 1832, is not repugnant to the 5th Sec. of the act of Congress approved May 15, 1826, entitled "an act to amend the several acts for the establishment of a Territorial Government in Florida."

The act of February 12, 1836, is restraining and prohibitory. What was before a writ of right, is no longer so to original plaintiffs. They are not entitled to a writ of error unless they first pay all costs incurred in the court below, and give bond as required by the statute.

Filing money in court to be substituted for the personal security required in the plaintiff's bond under that act, will not meet the requirements of the act.

The powers of an attorney at law do not extend to the execution of a bond for his client.

Motion to dismiss the case for non-payment of costs below, and for want of bond to secure costs to accrue.

Douglas & Hogue, for the motion.

Brockenbrough, Contra.

Lancaster, Justice.

On motion to dismiss this cause for want of bond for costs.—Brockenbrough showed cause against the motion.

It is admitted that at the time the writ of error in this case was granted, no bond was then given. Since that time the attorney at law of the plaintiff has signed and filed a bond in their name, for costs, and as security on the bond, has deposited with the Clerk, one hundred dollars in money.

24 Perceiving that the opinion delivered at this term in the case of Morrison vs. McBride, had not met the approval of the bar, and being anxious to be right, the court have bestowed much care in an examination of the statutes, on the subject of appeals and writs of error. It was objected that the first section of the act Feb. 12, 1836, Duval's laws, 112, on which the decision in the case of Morrison vs. McBride proceeded, was never of force, being repugnant to the 5th Sec. of the act of Congress, entitled "an act to amend the several acts for the establishment of a Territorial Government in Florida." Approved May 15, 1826. By reference to that section it appears to the Court, it was provided "that writs of error and appeals shall lie and may be taken on all final decisions of said Superior Courts where the matter in dispute shall amount to the sum or value of one hundred dollars exclusive of costs, to the Court of Appeals of said Territory, in the cases in that section enumerated, all of which are cases arising under the Constitution and Laws of the United States, in the same manner that appeals are directed to be taken from a District to a Circuit Court of the United States. The 6th Section then provides that in the cases enumerated in the first part of the preceding secion, certain sections of the act of 24th Sep., 1789, entitled "an act to establish Judicial Courts of the United States," and another act to amend and explain the 22d Section of that act shall as far as practicable be observed as the regulations to govern writs of error and appeals in such enumerated cases.

The fifth section of the act of 15th May, 1826, then provides in the last part of it, in all other cases writs of error and appeals may be taken from said Superior Courts to the Court of Appeals in such manner as the Legislative Council have directed or shall direct. What other cases? Doubtless all such as do not arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and such as the Courts of this State have new jurisdiction of under the Constitution of the State.

The Legislative Council under the authority of the provision of the act of Congress before recited, passed an act regulating appeals and writs of error, dated Feb. 10th, 1832. See Duval's laws 108-9. The seventh of that act provides for the test of writs of error that they shall issue on demand as matter of right, and then enacts sundry other regulations concerning them. This act remained in force until the year 1836 when the statute of Feb. 12, was enacted. That provides that no appeal or writ of error shall hereafter be granted to the original plaintiff in any suit unless he shall first pay 25 all costs accrued up to the time, &c., and also enter into bond with &c., Duval's laws 112. It must be seen that the act of 1832 remained in force four years; what evils if any resulted from it, is not declared in the act of 1836. But so much of it as provided that writs of error should issue on demand as a matter of right, is clearly repealed by the act of 1836, in the case of original plaintiffs praying appeals or writs of error, unless they shall first pay all costs, &c., and enter into bond, &c., as therein prescribed. In all cases of which the Circuit Courts of this State now have jurisdiction, the act of 1836 was fully and completely in force at the time of its passage, because the act of Congress before referred to had given power to the Legislative Council to provide by law the manner in which appeals and writs of error might be taken in all such cases.

Let it be remembered that the act of Feb. 12, 1836, in the case of original plaintiffs, provides that all costs in the court below shall first be paid, and a bond with one or more securities shall first be entered into, before an appeal or writ of error shall be granted to such parties, and that this act succeeded or rather superceded another which provided that writs of error should issue on demand as a matter of right. It will be difficult to imagine a form of words, better calculated to restrain and prohibit the granting the writ, except upon the precedent conditions in that act prescribed.

No statute of any other State (brought to the notice of the court) is so conclusive, or rather exclusive in its terms, and the construction given by the courts to theirs furnishes us no precedent in construing ours. The statute of New York, referred to as among the most restraining, contains no requirement that costs below shall be first paid, and bond with security also first given, before the writ shall be granted. Their courts had a discretion left them. There was no room for construction. It is said that the act of 1836 is remedial, and should be construed most effectually to meet the beneficial end in view, and to prevent a failure of the remedy. It appears to the court to be restraining and prohibitory. What was before a writ of right, is no longer so for original plaintiff's unless they first perform the conditions upon which it may be granted.

The counsel for the plaintiffs in error alleges the bond given and security filed in this case are sufficient to meet the requirements of this act. It will be sufficient on this point to say, the bond was signed for plaintiffs by their attorney at law—that the powers of an 26 attorney at law, do not extend to such a transaction, and the party plaintiff can execute a valid bond only by himself, or his attorney in fact to whom that power is delegated. Moreover, the bond filed was not given until after the writ was granted, nor is there one or more securities on the bond as required by the act. The bond is therefore defective and insufficient. A majority of the court are of opinion that filing money in court, to be substituted for personal security, will not meet the requirements of the act which is prohibitory and restraining, and only such a bond as it provides for is allowable.

It is not necessary for the Court to attempt to assign the reasons which influenced the Legislature in the passage of this act. It may have been to restrain plaintiffs who fail in their suits below, from further harrassing defendants, except on the terms in the act prescribed; or some other reason may have influenced them. Be this as it may, the act is too plain to be misunderstood. "Ita lex quod scripta est," and the alternative remains with the court to enforce the law, or to annul and repeal it. The power of repeal is Legislative. The power of the court is judicial. If the act is unjust, impolitic, or oppressive, the remedy is with the Legislature.

The motion must be allowed. It is therefore considered and ordered by the court, that this writ of error be dismissed, and the defendant do recover his costs in this court, to be taxed by the clerk, &c.

David C. Wilson, Administrator of James Lunn &c. vs. Richard Hayward.

27 DAVID C. WILSON, ADMINISTRATOR OF JAMES LUNN vs. RICHARD HAYWARD.

The Territorial act entitled, "An act to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages by the Courts of common law of this Territory and for other purposes," approved December 11, 1824, may afford a remedy in favor of the mortgagee, or his assignee, against the mortgagor, but not against the assignee of the mortgagor, because the statute gives judgment for the debt which cannot be rendered against the assignee of the mortgagor.

The party claiming a judgment of foreclosure under the statute should be the owner of all the demands secured by the mortgage, otherwise he is not entitled to judgment.

Where several notes in the hands of different parties were secured by mortgage, and the holders of a part of the notes had by petition under the statute obtained judgment of foreclosure against the administrator of the mortgagor, whereby he and all persons claiming through his intestate were barred of all right and equity of redemption in the mortgaged premises, and a sale of the premises had been made under the judgment—the holder of any of the remaining notes, secured by the same mortgage cannot afterwards have a foreclosure under the statute of the same mortgage against the same defendant.

Writ of error to Leon Circuit Court.

In Nov. 1845, Richard Hayward filed a petition against David C. Wilson administrator of James Lunn, deceased, under the statute regulating the foreclosure of mortgages approved December 11, 1824, setting forth in substance—that on the 4th June, 1840, Lunn executed a mortgage to Robert K. West, of a certain lot in Tallahassee, to secure the payment of $5000 due from Lunn to West on five several promissory notes, bearing date with the mortgage, of $1000 each, payable respectively in one, two, three, four, and five years from the date. That on the 6th May, 1841, West endorsed and delivered to Hayward the note last due and also assigned and transferred the mortgage by written agreement endorsed thereon. That Lunn died intestate and on the 15th October, 1841, administration of his estate was committed to Wilson the plaintiff in error. The petition concludes with a prayer for judgment for the amount of the mortgage debt due to Hayward, and for a foreclosure of the mortgage.

To this petition Wilson filed several objections by way of plea
28 under the statute alleging that the mortgage had already been foreclosed under the same statute, by judgment and decree against him as the administrator of Lunn rendered in the Leon Circuit Court, at the fall term 1843, in favor of Wilson & Herr merchants of Baltimore, who had become the holders of three of the notes secured by the mortgage, being the three first due. That a sale without objection, under the judgment and decree had been made by the marshal according to law, that Hayward had notice of the sale, and that said Wilson & Herr became the purchasers of the mortgaged premises. Upon these facts, Wilson insisted that another judgment of foreclosure, ought not to be given against him, and also that the claims of Wilson & Herr, to satisfy which the premises had been sold, had priority over the claim of Hayward.

To these objections the petitioner demurred, and the court (Douglas, Chief Justice presiding,) sustained the demurrer, and gave judgment for the petition on the 12th November, 1847, for the amount of the note assigned to him with interest, to be levied of the mortgaged premises, and if that was insufficient then to be levied of assets of James Lunn, quando acciderint, &c.; and also entered decree of foreclosure of the equity of redemption in usual form.

To reverse this judgment and decree under the statute, Wilson the administrator of Lunn prosecutes his writ of error in this court.

Douglas & Hogue, for Plaintiff in Error.

Thompson, for Defendant in Error.

BALTZELL, Justice:

The case before us arises upon an application of the holder of one of five notes secured by mortgage, to obtain a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant insists that another party, holder of three notes secured by the same mortgage due before that of the petitioner, and to whom the mortgage was assigned, obtained at prior term of the court judgment of foreclosure in legal form against the defendant, the representative of the mortgagor. That a sale was had under the judgment, and Wilson & Herr the plaintiffs in the judgment and execution became the purchasers. It appears by the mortgage that there is also a fifth note outstanding, and embraced in the same mortgage. The plaintiff objects to the defence as insufficient to prevent his recovery, and the Court agreeing with him gave 29 judgment of foreclosure. The propriety of this decision is now presented to this Court. The statute for the foreclosure of mortgages by the Courts of Common Law, under which this proceeding was had, has created no little embarrassment in the decision of cases based upon it.

It may answer where there is merely a mortgage between mortgagor and mortgagee, or between the assignee of a mortgage, having a transfer of the entire debt, and the mortgagor. We incline to the opinion that it will not answer where there is an assignment by the mortgagor against his assignee, because the statute gives judgment for the amount of the principal and interest with costs, &c.

In many cases beyond this there may be difficulty, owing to the peculiar character of the instrument—its complexity and the various conflicting interests to be settled, adjusted and arranged. Mortgages are the creatures almost entirely of the Courts of Equity, in opposition to the sterner rules of the Common Law, asserting an absolute transfer of the title on the failure by the mortgagor to pay the debt. The Courts of Equity moderated this rigor and harshness and in a decree obtained their almost entire regulation and control by framing rules and principles adjusted to their nature and character.

In imposing upon the common law Courts the duty hitherto discharged in equity, it was clearly not the design to revive common law rules and principles in reference to this subject—this would be to destroy them. So far from it, equitable rights are maintained by requiring the person holding the equity of redemption, whether he be mortgagor or any one else to be served with notice, and by the permission to him to file objections, and contest the foreclosure.—Still the Legislature provide but imperfect means of executing their purpose, and give few directions as to the mode of action. We are then left to the rules in equity; or we have none to direct us. These we are constrained to adopt, approved as they are by the experience of ages and founded on the highest wisdom and propriety. So far then as the statute furnishes proper directions, we look to it as the guide, but beyond this the rules of Courts of equity applicable to this subject must govern. We find a difficulty of this kind in the case before us. There has been already a foreclosure and sale of the property mortgaged to pay a portion of the debt embraced in the mortgage. The same tribunal is asked for a second order for sale of the same property to pay another portion of the same debt against the 30 same defendant, while in all probability an application will be made by the holder of the last note for a third judgment and a third sale of the same property. There being then separate interests, there will be necessarily three claimants of property under three judicial sales. Suits and conflicts between the owners of the various judgments if they purchased, and if others purchased between innocent parties, will ensue, and no one will know what he is buying and each one will dread a controversy as to the title. Such a state of things, so well calculated to do injustice and injury and impair confidence in the action of the Courts is to be avoided, if possible. It could not occur in a Court of Equity under the mode of proceeding prevailing there. Thus in the case of Palmer vs. the Earle of Carlisle, on an application by the owner of one sixth part of the money due on a mortgage, by bill to foreclosure a sixth part of the mortgage estate, the Vice Chancellor held "there can be no foreclosure or redemption unless the parties entitled to the mortgage money are before the Court." Palmer vs. Earle of Carlisle, 1 Simons and Stu., 423. 1 Brown, Ch. 368. Story's Eq. Pl. 201. 1 Daniel's Prac. 260, and this we consider as the settled rule of that Court.

Finley vs. Bank of U. S. was an application by a mortgagor to set aside a sale had under a decree at the instance of a party holding a subsequent mortgage. The Court say "it cannot be doubted that Coleman ought regularly to have been a party defendant, and that had the existence of his mortgage been known to the Court, no decree ought to have been pronounced in the case, until he was introduced into it." We do not think the decree erroneous because the prior mortgagee was not made a defendant, that fact not having appeared to the Court until the decree was completely executed.—11 Wheaton, 304—6 Cond., 321.

The first section of the law of mortgages itself contemplates the plaintiff to be owner of the entire interest, in saying that the "assignees, &c., may take the same remedies which any mortgagee can take for the foreclosure of any mortgage and for the recovery of the money secured thereby."

The necessity of all parties in interest being before the Court is apparent, for reasons manifest in this very case. Justice cannot, in our opinion, be done without it. If new parties are to be made, the proceeding at law is unsuitable, there being no provision adequate to the object. The true and only remedy is in a Court of 31 Equity—which accommodates itself to every variety of interest—where the purchaser under the previous sale, who is now a party directly in interest, and which may yet be maintained as far as equity demands, the plaintiff under the first foreclosure and the holder of the last note may all be made parties. The conflicting rights and interests being adjusted and determined, the property may then be sold, with a fair prospect of finding a purchaser, and of the rightful holders of the mortgaged security getting paid to the extent of their interest.

In considering the present case, we have been struck with the difficulty of giving a valid judgment against the present defendant, owing to his position in the matter. By the first judgment, if entered as prescribed by the statute, he was forever barred and foreclosed, and all persons under him, from all right and equity of redemption of or in the said mortgaged property, and every part thereof, the purchaser getting his right, as well as that of the plaintiff in execution, and being substituted to the place of both. If right in this view, the defendant had no further interest, but the proper course was to go against the purchaser, as the proper party to the petition, according to the terms of the statute itself. The prayer is, "that the mortgagor, and all persons claiming, or to claim, by, through, or under him be foreclosed;" and by the 4th section, "personal service of notice, &c., shall be served upon the mortgagor, or other person having the equity of redemption." Duval, p. 40.

It has been insisted that this plaintiff has, through the assignment of the mortgage, the superior legal right. But the party having the prior judgment of foreclosure has, by intendment of law, an assignment also, for without it he could not properly have obtained judgment. The counsel for defendant has contested the position, that a parol assignment will carry the interest in the mortgage.—It is sufficient in the present case to decide, without considering this point, that the party claiming a judgment of foreclosure at law should be the owner of all the notes which the mortgage was given to secure, and without it is not entitled to judgment.

The judgment of the Court below will, therefore, be reversed and set aside, and the cause remanded, with instructions to dismiss the petition, without prejudice to the right of the party to file a bill in Chancery, as herein directed, so as to protect the interests of the various parties under the mortgage and the decree of foreclosure already had, as far as possible.

32 JAMES LANIER AND BENJAMIN C. WEST, APPELLANTS, vs. DANIEL McCABE, APPELLEE.

Where a note is given in the name of a firm by one of the partners for the private debt of such partner, and known to be so by the person taking the note, the other partners are not bound by such note unless they have been previously consulted and consent to the transaction.

In such case it lies upon the creditor to show that his debtor had authority so to give him the joint security of the firm.

Where several persons formed an association, for the purpose of establishing and putting in operation a steam saw mill, one of the parties cannot issue notes in the name of the company, which shall bind the other members of the company, except the authority be given by their articles of association or otherwise. The partnership must be in a trade or concern to which the issuing or transfer of bills is necessary or usual, otherwise a copartner will not be liable for the act of his partner, unless he gave express authority.

Where a note is made by one stockholder of such association as treasurer or agent of the company, payable to another stockholder, and the latter endorses it over to his creditor in payment of an individual debt, it is in effect the making of a note by two of the members of the company, but does not vary the rule which requires that a note so given should, to bind the other members, be given with the express authority of the other members. And where the plaintiff relies upon a subsequent acknowledgment of liability by defendant such acknowledgment must be explicit and express.

APPEAL from Gadsden Circuit Court.

Daniel McCabe, in 1844, filed his bill in Equity in the late Gadsden Superior Court, against James Lanier, Thomas Hodgson, and Benjamin C. West, alleging that James Lanier, in 1844, became indebted to complainant, and being unable to otherwise extinguish his debt to complainant, transferred in payment a note dated 31st March, 1841, payable on 1st January, 1842, to defendant Lanier for the sum of $258, with interest from date, and signed by C. Harris, who describes himself as treasurer of the Quincy Steam Saw Mill Company. That at the date of said note defendants Lanier, Hodgson, and West, together with Cervantes Harris (since deceased,) who signed the note, were members of and constituted, so far as complainant was informed, the "Quincy Steam Saw Mill Company." That the note was executed in good faith by Harris as agent of the company, and upon valuable consideration passing from Lanier to the said company. That complainant had often demanded of the members of the company payment of the note, but that the same remains unpaid. The bill prays that defendants discover the names of the persons composing the company at the date of the note; whether Harris was not the agent of the company authorized to execute notes and contracts for the company; whether he was not in the habit of executing such notes with the knowledge of the company; whether similar notes or contracts had not been adopted by the company, and whether they ever repudiated his authority of public notice, and if so when; whether said Harris left the service of the company of his own accord, or whether he was dismissed for exceeding his authority by executing this or similar obligations; and if so, whether such acts constituted the only ground of dismissal; and whether it was so announced to said Harris or the public; and if to the public in what manner, and at what time. The bill also prays that the amount of the note and interest be decreed to constitute a debt against the Quincy Steam Saw Mill Company, and in default of payment thereof by the company, that it be decreed to constitute a joint and several debt against defendants as copartners, and concludes with a prayer for general relief, and for subpœnas, &c. 33

In November, 1844, West filed his answer, under oath, admitting that he is and was on 31 March, 1841, a member of the Quincy Steam Saw Mill Company, and that defendants Lanier and Hodgson, and Cervantes Harris (deceased,) were also members of said company. The answer states that he knows nothing of the consideration that passed from Lanier to the company for the note. That Cervantes Harris was employed by the company to stay at the saw mill and sell lumber and other articles, and to receive the money for the same, and to keep an account of the receipts and disbursements of the mill, but denies that Harris had authority to issue notes binding on the company. He denies having any knowledge that such was the practice of Harris until after the notes were signed and issued by Harris, and states that he immediately advised Harris that he was transcending his authority, to which Harris assented, and that he believes no other notes were afterwards issued.

West further states in his answer, that no public notice was given by the company relative to said notes, as the notes were all made to James Lanier, one of the partners, and not transferable by delivery or endorsement. That he never, to the best of his knowledge and belief, recognized any of the notes so issued; that Harris was not dismissed on account of issuing the notes, as the notes were then in 34 hands of Lanier, and considered as certificates merely that he had advanced such sums to the company.

He further states that prior to 1st January, 1841, he had advanced for the company in cash, $2177 10-100th, which exceeded the advances made by any other member. That Harris died insolvent; that defendant Hodgson is also dead and that he died insolvent and greatly indebted to the company. That Lanier is insolvent and that he (West,) is the only responsible party.

He also states that since the 1st January, 1841, he has advanced $3215 62-100th in payment of debts and expenses of the company, and that there are outstanding demands against the company to a large amount say $3000. He states that James Lanier, his co-defendant, is still interested in the recovery of the note, and has procured complainant to file the bill, well knowing that himself (Lanier) was greatly in arrears to defendant.

He insists that complainant is entitled to no greater relief than Lanier would be, and offers to account with Lanier and every other member of the company.

In November, 1845, Lanier filed his answer under oath, which states that in 1839, an incorporated company was formed, for the purpose of establishing and putting into operation a Steam Saw Mill, in the county of Gadsden. The stock was limited to $5000, and divided into shares of $50 each. That divers citizens of Gadsden together with respondent became owners, and formed the company whis has ever since been called the Quincy Steam saw mill company. That Hodgson, Harris, West and respondent were members of the company, on the 31 March, 1841, and for a long time afterwards; that at this period the company becoming embarrassed and some dissatisfaction existing among the members, it was determined to settle up the affairs of the company. That to that end Harris was authorized by the company, to collect the demands in favor of the company, to pay the debts, to audit and allow the claims against the company, and to give notes in behalf of the company for debts due by the company. That said Harris then became the active partner in the concern, and had the exclusive management of its affairs. That Harris in the settlement of the business, executed many notes similar to that held by complainant, and which so far as respondent knows and believes were always regarded by the members of the company as binding upon them. That respondent held large demands against the company (for the services of his wagon and teams, for hire of slaves, for money advanced and for goods sold,) beyond his share of the capital stock, which by agreement were submitted to Harris for allowance. That on 31 March, 1841, said company was found indebted to respondent about $4000, and that Harris executed and delivered to him sundry notes in liquidation of that sum, of which the note held by complainant is one. That a few months after the date of said note, and before the same was due, respondent transferred to complainant the note in question for valuable consideration. That Harris was authorized to sign the notes for the company, and no attempt to repudiate his authority, was made until after payments began to be demanded and suits to be instituted. That Harris was recognized as the active partner of the concern long after the notes were given, and until he voluntarily gave up the business. That no notice by the company, or any member thereof, was given to the public, repudiating the notes signed by Harris.

The death of the other defendant Hodgson, is not suggested by complainant but is stated in the answer of defendant West.

At the fall term, 1845, the complainant filed a general replication to the answers of West and Lanier, and at the November term, 1847, the cause was tried upon the bill and answers, before DOUGLAS, Chief Justice, who pronounced the following decree:

"This cause came on to be heard upon the bill and answers, and was fully argued by counsel, whereupon it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the complainant do recover of the defendants the sum of three hundred and ninety-two dollars for principal and interest of the demand sued on; and it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the complainant do recover of the defendants his costs in this behalf expended and that he have execution for the same."

To reverse this decree the defendants now prosecute their appeal before this Court.

Carmack, for Appellants.

Dupont, for Appellee, contended:

I. That Cervantes Harris, who signed the note on behalf of the company, had authority to do so.

1st. Harris had the authority as an agent, impliedly and by ratification. It is a doctrine so fully recognized as to require the citation of no authority to support it, that whatever legal act a man does by another binds him as firmly as if performed by himself. It is also an admitted doctrine, that an implied authority in the agent is as binding upon the principal as if expressed; and that this implication may be gathered either from the relation of the parties, or from subsequent ratification, or even tacit acquiescence in the acts of the agent. Now, if we apply these principles to the case under consideration, it will be perceived that the authority of Harris as 'agent,' to sign the note sued upon, is amply established. It is true, that West, one of the defendants, denies that any express authority was ever given to Harris to sign notes on behalf of the company; it is true also, that the same defendant in his answer, pretends to deny that the act of the agent was known to the company, but the pretended denial is couched in such equivocal and contradictory terms as to amount to a full admission of the knowledge of the fact. The answer of this defendant does not fully negative the allegation in the bill—the allegation is, that the fact of signing by Harris, was known to the company—the answer is, that it was not known to this individual partner, and is a tacit admission of the allegation as it is set forth, and if this knowledge is brought home to any one member of the firm, and not repudiated, it will bind the company. But again, the answer even as to his individual and personal knowledge is so equivocal and contradictory, as to amount to a full admission of the allegation, for he only denies having any knowledge that such was the practice of said Harris, until after said notes were signed and issued by said Harris." Now it is very evident that he could have had no knowledge of the existence of the fact before it had actually occurred and the tacit admission that he knew it after it had occurred, and that he did not repudiate it, is a full admission of the allegation in the bill. The law upon this branch of the case is well established—it is laid down in the books as a salutary rule in relation to agencies, "That when the principal has been informed of what has been done, he must dissent and give notice in a reasonable time, or his assent will be presumed." Hammond's Prin. and Agent, 232. 12 John. Rep., 300, Cairnes and Lord vs. Bleecker. 2 Kent, Comm. 615-16. 1 John Cases, 110. Paley on Agency, 74. 2 Term Rep. 189 and notes.

But if the facts of the case do not establish an authority to sign the note as an agent on behalf of the company, then we assume,

2d. That his authority to bind the company was ample as a copartner. The fact that Harris was a copartner at the time that he executed the note, is fully admitted by the answers of both West and Lanier. The law upon this subject is well established, "that one partner has an implied authority to bind the firm by contracts relating to the partnership, whether such contracts be evidenced by bare agreements, oral or written, or by negotiable securities as bills of exchange and promissory note." Collier on Partnership, 212.—Ibid 220.

If it be objected that the note given by Harris did not "relate to the partnership;" then we contend that this is admitted in the answer of West, who says that "the note was considered as a mere certificate that said Lanier had advanced the sum therein mentioned," and consequently is not obnoxious to the anticipated objection.—Again, if it is objected upon this branch of the case, that McCabe, the assignee of the note, or alleged "certificate," is bound by the notice which Lanier, the assignor, must have possessed relative to the character and consideration of the note, then we invoke the principle of equity, that "where one of two innocent persons is to suffer that party shall suffer who by his own act and conduct has enabled the other to be imposed upon." Story on Agency, p. 56, Sec. 56. Paley on Agency, p. 201. 2 Barn. and Ald. p. 143, Baring vs. Corrie.

And consequently if it was the understanding of the company that a security which had been signed upon their behalf, purporting to be and possessing all the essential qualities of a "promissory note," should stand only in the character of a "mere certificate," it was their duty to have given public notice of this understanding; and upon failing to do so, the loss, if any, must be borne by the company, and McCabe be viewed in the light of an innocent holder without notice, and entitled to all the privileges of the same. But again, the limitation of the general authority of a partner, that the securities made by him on behalf of the firm, must relate to "transactions growing out of the partnership business," is to be taken with this qualification, 'that the holder of the paper has taken it with full knowledge that it does not relate to the business of the firm,' otherwise the firm will be responsible whether the security so taken relate to the partnership or not. 14 Wend. Reps. 133-140. 15 Wend. Reps. 364-66, Catskill Bank vs. Stall.

This doctrine results from the implied authority growing out of the relation of the parties as copartners.

II. The second objection made in the Court below to a recovery upon this note against the company was that "it is the individual note of Cervantes Harris."

In reply we allege, that the law establishes no particular mode of signing, and if it be apparent that the note is signed with the intention of binding the firm, it is sufficient. For examples of signing Vide Collier on Partnership 228 and 228, (a.)

III. The third objection taken at the hearing was "that the paper sued upon is not a valid 'promissory note,' not containing any words of negotiability."

In reply we state the law to be that "it is not essential to the validity of a bill or note as an instrument, that it should contain any words of negotiability." Vide Chitty on Bills, 180.

IV. The fourth objection was, "that the assignee of the note took it from Lanier, the assignor, subject to all the 'equities' existing at the date of the assignment between Lanier and his copartners of the Quincy Steam Saw Mill Company." These "equities" are alleged to be the obligation of Lanier as a copartner to contribute to the settlement of the partnership debts. Now we contend that according to the proofs in the case, there are no partnership debts to be settled, and in order to determine this point it will be necessary to look into the pleadings and proofs, as presented by the Record. It will be remarked by the Court that there was a general replication filed to the separate answers of Lanier and West, which put the cause completely at issue, under the 66th rule, dispensing with a "rejoinder," or subpœna to rejoin, required by the English practice, and that without further proofs than what are furnished by the allegations and admissions contained in the bill and answers, respectively, the cause was brought to a hearing and argued accordingly. To the bill and answers alone therefore must we look for the proofs.

It is true that West, one of the defendants below, set forth in his answer, a large indebtedness due by the company; but this matter is alleged as a substantive matter of defence, or by way of avoidance, and is not responsive to any allegation contained in the bill, and in order to have made it available to him as a defence, it ought to have been supported by positive or independent testimony. This has not been done, and therefore so much of his answer as relates to the alleged indebtedness, must be rejected in the consideration of the case, as not amounting to any evidence. Vide Story's Eq. Sec. 1528-9. 2 John. Ch. Rep., 88-90, and note (a.) 7 Vesey, 587. 1 Wash. Rep., 224, Beckwith vs. Butler. 1 Munford 39 Rep., 373, Paynes vs. Coles. 2 Caines Cases in Error 66, Bush vs. Livingston, et al. 1 John. Rep., 580, Greene vs. Hart.

V. The fifth objection made in the court below to a recovery in this suit was, "that the complainant had his remedy in a court of law."

The English doctrine upon the point is too well understood by the court, to require any citation of authority to sustain it, to-wit: "that the assignee of a bond or other security not containing any words of negotiability, cannot sustain an action upon it in his own name in a court of law but has the alternative of either suing in a court of law, in the name of the assignor, or original obligee, or of resorting to a court of equity;" and in accordance with this doctrine have been the decisions in the State Courts. Vide 11 Ohio Reports 21, Townsend vs. Carpenter.

Such was the law in this state until the passage of the Judiciary act of 1828; the 34th section of which was evidently intended to operate only as a cumulative or enlarging statute, and not to restrain or otherwise limit or deprive the courts of equity of their original jurisdiction in matters of this kind. Upon the construction of statutes, Blackstone lays down the doctrine by way of illustration, that "if by a former law an offence be indictable at the quarter sessions and a later law makes the same offence indictable at the assizes; here the jurisdiction of the sessions is not taken away, but both have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the offender may be prosecuted at either, unless the new statute subjoins express negative words, as that the offence shall be indictable at the assizes, and not elsewhere." Vide 1 Black. Com. p. 90, (marginal.)

A case in point is found in our statute book, where a special statute gives to a mortgagee the right to foreclose his mortgage in the courts of common law, and yet it has never been contended or even conceived by any one, that the ordinary or original jurisdiction of the courts of equity in cases of "foreclosure," is in the slightest degree restrained or limited by the operation of this statute.

The case of 'Williams vs. Judge' lately decided in the Supreme Court of the U. S. was cited in the court below, to support the point above relied upon; but it is a sufficient answer to that authority to remind the court that, that case only decides, that under the 34th section of the statute above referred to, a bond made by an individual and others, payable to himself, may be sued upon in the name of the assignee, in a court of law; but does not in the remotest manner 40 intimate the opinion that a suit in chancery might not also be maintained.

VI. A sixth objection was made by the appellant in the court below, to wit: "that the answer of Lanier (which fully admits all the material allegations of the bill) was no evidence against his co-defendants."

It is admitted as a general rule of evidence in courts of equity "that the answer of one defendant cannot be read against his co-defendant;" but to this general rule there are exceptions, and one of the exceptions is when the co-defendant is also a copartner.—Vide Gresley's Eq. Ev., 25; citing 1 Taunt. 104, Good vs. Braddick. 1 Russ. and Mylne, 191; Prichard vs. Draper. 8 Mod. 180, Hilliard vs. Phaley.

This point of objection is here referred to, not so much for the purpose of invoking the aid of Lanier's answer, as to set forth the doctrine with its proper limitations.

Baltzell, Justice, delivered the following:

This is a suit in chancery to recover upon a note purporting to be executed by Cervantes Harris as Treasurer of the Quincy Steam Saw Mill Company. The authority of Harris being denied an effort is made to sustain it by the position that he was also a member of the company and as such had a right to execute notes in the name of the firm—and secondly, that West the party charged as another member of the firm acquiesced in the notes executed, and neither repudiated nor rejected them. Conceding that Harris signed the note as a member of the firm the question arises as to its obligation upon the other members and particularly upon West, regarded now as the only responsible party. If the company had been indebted to McCabe, for articles purchased of him which were necessary for the concern and in their usual line of business we presume there would be no difficulty. But McCabe had no claim against the company. His claim was against Lanier for a debt unconnected with the company and he took this note by the statement in the bill "believing Lanier to be in failing circumstances and unable to make any better arrangement for the payment of the debt." It is too well settled to be now disputed that "where a note is given in the name of the firm by one of the partners for the private debt of such partner and known to be so by the person taking the note, the other partners are not bound by such note unless they have been previously consulted and consent to the transaction." 16 John., 38. 2 Caines, 246. 2 John., 41
300. 4 Ibid., 251. 1 Wend., 531. Chitty on Bills, 47.

In such case it lies upon the creditor to show that his debtor had authority so to give him the joint security of the firm: prima facie the transaction is fraudulent on the part of both debtor and creditor Bailey on Bills, 57. Green vs. Weakin, 2 Stark. 307. Williams vs. Walbridge, 3 Wend., 415.

We have considered the case most favorably to McCabe by treating this as a partnership concern having the right to issue bills, but are satisfied that no such authority exists as to this company except it be given by their articles of association or otherwise. The partnership must be in a trade or concern to which the issuing or transfer of bills is necessary or usual; for otherwise a copartner will not be liable for the acts of his partner unless he gave express authority. Therefore a director or shareholder in a mining or gas light company, or a partner in a farm, is not liable like a partner in trade for every bill issued without his authority. Chitty on Bills 39-46. Dickinson vs. Valpy, 10 B. & C. 128. 5 M. & R., 126. 4 John. 267.

Nor do we consider that there was a subsequent approbation, acknowledgment, or admission as made out in the bill and answer to fix the liability of West. There must be an acknowledgement to the plaintiff or some prior holder of the bill and it must be explicit and express. Chitty 46. So far we have treated the note as signed by Harris, without reference to the endorsement by Lanier. This does not in our opinion alter the case. There was a signing by one stockholder and an endorsement by another of a note passed by the latter for his individual use. This is in effect but the making of a note by two of the members of the company in a form different from an ordinary note signed by two, but does not vary the rule which requires that a note so given should be with the consent of those sought to be charged and if not it imposes no obligation upon them. Instances have been cited of a recovery upon bills and notes issued by a firm and passed by an individual member in good faith for his own use. This may well be where a company indebted, by the consent of all the members give a note or bill. Sometimes a recovery has been had on a bill or note of this kind fraudulently put in circulation but being in the hands of a bona fide holder. But there is nothing of the kind here either by proof or the admission of the parties, indeed the very contrary appears. McCabe however as assignee of Lanier stands in his place to the extent of the note with 42
the company if anything shall be due to him on a settlement of their affairs and if he thinks proper his bill may be continued for an account and settlement with that view. If this however be unnecessary by the state of their affairs and is declined, then the bill of complaint should be dismissed.

It is therefore decreed and ordered that the decree of the Circuit Court be and the same is hereby reversed and set aside as to West and the cause remanded to that court with directions to allow the complainant, if he chooses, to have an account and settlement of the affairs of that Steam Saw Mill Company or to amend his bill to allege express ratification by West and for other proceedings consistent with equity, and if not, that his bill be dismissed with costs as to West.

Hopkins and Moody vs. Arthur Burney.

The common law did not give damages in replevin to a defendant, and the Stat. 7, Hen. 8, ch. 4. and 21 Hen. 8, ch. 19, only gave damages to avowants or other persons making connusance or justifying as bailiffs in replevin for rent or service, and have not been extended to defendants claiming property.

Under the plea of "non cepit" in replevin evidence of damage on the part of the defendant is not admissable in any case.

This plea admits the property of the thing taken to be in the plaintiff, and if the defendant means to dispute the question of property he must plead specially.

The property being by this plea admitted to belong to the plaintiff, it results as a matter of course, in the absence of all proof to the contrary, that the taking and carrying away of the property was wrongful.

The defendant cannot have a judgment of retor no habendo on a verdict in his favor upon an issue joined on a plea of non cepit.

Where the jury were sworn to try the issue joined and there was in fact no issue, and judgment upon the verdict was entered, the statute of jeofail does not cure the error and the judgment must be reversed.

Error to Duval Circuit Court, where this cause was tried before Judge Macrae.

Hopkins and Moody, vs. Arthur Burney.

43 Fraser, for Plaintiff in Error.

Burritt, for Defendant in Error.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice, delivered the folowing:

This is an action of replevin instituted in the Circuit Court of Duval county by Benjamin Hopkins and Solomon Moody against Arthur Burney to recover a certain negro slave named Charles. The declaration contains but a single count to which a plea of "non cepit modo et forma" was put in, but was on the same day on which it was filed withdrawn by leave of the court for reasons stated in the record, which however are not material to the decision of this case. On the 17th day of November, 1847, the plaintiffs by their counsel moved the court for a continuance of the cause, and filed an affidavit in support of their motion, which was after argument had thereon overruled, and on the next day, a jury was empanelled and sworn "well and truly to try the issue joined between the parties," who found for the defendant and assessed his damages at one hundred and twenty dollars for the detention of the said negro Charles from the 25th day of November, 1846, until the 18th day of November 1847, and further that the defendant was entitled to a return of the said negro Charles, upon which verdict judgment was entered for the sum so found, with interest thereon until paid, and that said plaintiffs return to said defendant the said negro Charles, and that a writ of restitution be awarded, and that said plaintiffs pay to said defendant the costs of these proceedings taxed at twenty-one dollars thirty-two cents.

The following bills of exceptions are on file, which by agreement of the parties are to be taken and considered as a part of the record in this case, viz: "on the trial of the above entitled cause to prove the issue joined in the same, the plaintiff produced William Hickman as a witness, who being duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit: That he knew the parties, knew the negro Charles in controversy in this suit. That he was deputy sheriff and served the replevin issued in this suit; that he found the negro Charles aforesaid at Arthur Burney's potatoe patch digging potatoes; that Burney then claimed said negro as his; that the potatoe patch where he found the negro was near said Burney's house; that he has known said negro four or five years, perhaps more; when he first knew him, he was in possession of James Piles' family; does not know whether he was

The plaintiffs here rested their case, and the defendant offered to prove the damage of the detention of said slave to him under the said replevin. To this the plaintiffs objected, but the court overruled the objection, and the counsel for the plaintiffs excepted and prayed the court to seal this bill of exceptions, which was done accordingly.

The counsel for the plaintiffs then requested the court to charge the jury, that under the pleading and evidence in this cause the plaintiffs are entitled to recover. This the court refused to do, and on the contrary charged the jury, that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to show by evidence affirmatively, that the property belonged to them, or that they had such right of possession as could not be lawfully divested by the defendant, they must prove that the slave was wrongfully taken. The court directed the jury that they find for the defendant in the absence of the proof required, and assess his damages for the detention of the property by the plaintiffs. To which charge of the court, and every part thereof, the plaintiffs' counsel excepted, and prayed the court to seal this bill of exceptions, which was done accordingly.

Whereupon the plaintiffs sued out their writ of error to the said Circuit Court, and have herein assigned the following error, to wit:

First. The court erred under the plea of non cepit in admitting evidence of damage on the part of the defendant.

Second. The court erred in refusing to charge the jury that under the pleadings and evidence in this cause, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover.

Third. The court erred in charging the jury that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to show by evidence affirmatively, that the property belonging to them, or that they had such right of possession as could not be lawfully divested by the defendant.

Fourth. The court erred in charging the jury that the plaintiffs must prove that the slave was wrongfully taken.

Fifth. The court erred in charging the jury that they find for the defendant, in the absence of the proof required, and assess his damages for the detention of the property by the plaintiffs.

Sixth. The court erred in rendering a judgment for a return upon a verdict found upon an issue joined upon a plea of non cepit.

That the court erred as charged in the first error assigned there can be no doubt. The common law did not give damages in replev- 45 in to a defendant, but they were allowed to certain defendants in that action by the statutes of 7 Hen. 8, ch. 4, and 21 Hen. 8, ch. 19. But these statutes only gave damgaes to avowants, or other persons making conusance, or justifying as bailiffs in replevin for rent or services. Brittenton vs. Turker, 1 Brad. & Bing. 517. And they have not been extended to defendants claiming property, 2 Bac. Abr., Tit. costs (F) 53 Turner vs. Gallillie, Hard. 153. Hopewell vs. Price, 2 Harris & Gill, 276—277. Nor to defendants who deny the taking.

The plea of non cepit controverts all the material allegations in the declaration except that which affirms that the goods are the property of the plaintiff. It disputes the plaintiff's right to recover damages, whilst it admits his right to have the chattel. Ruckey, et al. vs. Handy, 2 Mills R., 446. And it would seem absurd to deny (as does the plea of non cepit) the taking, renounce all claim to the property and yet to ask damages for the detention. In the case of Phillips vs. Harris, 3 J. J. Marsh, 121, which was an action of replevin, and a plea of property interposed by the defendant on which issue was joined, the court said that a judgment for the plaintiff in replevin, is for damages and costs, and a judgment for the defendant is for a restoration of the property and costs. This last remark was of course applied to the issue on the plea of property. And see 5 Dane's Abr. of American law, 515, Sec. 2, where the same principle is recognized.

The second error assigned is that "the court erred in refusing to charge the jury, that under the pleadings and evidence in this cause plaintiffs are entitled to recover." The instructions asked embraced matter of fact as well as of law. It is often very difficult to separate the one from the other, and as there is some diversity of views amongst the members of this court, as to the propriety of the refusal of the court below to give this instruction to the jury, and a decision of the question is not necessary to our determination of the cause and its importance has been very much diminished by an act passed at the last session of our General Assembly, prohibiting the Judges of the Circuit Courts from charging juries upon the facts in any case, we forbear expressing any opinion upon it.

The third error is deemed to be well assigned. Under the plea of non cepit it was not incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove that the slave Charles belonged to them, and the court should have so charged the jury. The plea admits that fact, and puts in issue only the ta- 46 king (as alleged in the declaration,) and the detention. McKinley vs. McGregor, 3 Wharton 69, 369. Ruckey and others vs. Handy 2 Mills Rep., 449. Golusha vs. Butterfield, et al., 2 Scammon Rep., 227. Seymour vs. Billings, 12 Wendell, 286. 1 Stark. Ev. 715. 2 Leigh's Nisi Prius, 1330. Bemus vs. Beekman, 3 Wendell, 667. Williams vs. Welsh, 5 Wendell, 290. In this last case the plea cepit in alio loco, was put in by the defendant, and the court below decided that the plaintiff must make out his case in the same manner as he would have been required to do, had the plea non cepit been interposed. The plaintiff proved the taking at the place charged in the declaration. The case was carried up, and the Supreme Court of New York held that this ruling was right. Chief Justice Savage in delivering the opinion of that court, said, "this plea does not admit the taking as the plaintiff has laid it; it traverses the place and in this action the place is material. The plea denies the taking at the place, but if the plea of non cepit alone be put in and it appear that the defendant had the goods in his custody in the place alleged in the declaration, the plaintiff will be entitled to a verdict on this plea." Leigh's Nisi Prius, 1330. Walter vs. Kersop, 2 Wilson 354, 355. But if the defendant proves the taking in another place, the plaintiff will (according to the rule laid down in 1 Strange, 507) be non suited. As however, our tenth general rule of practice page 12, pamphlet; rule 13 page 5 annexed to acts of the General Assembly of 1845, provides that the plaintiff shall in no case be compelled to submit to a non suit, the rule here would be different. The plaintiff would have a right to submit the proof to a jury but would not on such proof be entitled to a verdict. The plea of non cepit, admits the property of the thing taken to be in the plaintiffs in the action, and if the defendant means to dispute the question of property, he must plead it specially. He will not be allowed to dispute the ownership under an issue which only denies the taking. 2 Phil. Ev. 126. 1 Chitty's Pl., 159. Bemus vs. Beekman, 3 Wendell Rep., 673.

The fourth error is also well assigned. The slave in controversy (being admitted by the plea of non cepit, to be the property of the plaintiffs, it results as a matter of course, in the absence of all proof to the contrary,) that the taking and carrying away of said slave was wrongful. The taking and carrying away of a personal chattel of another person, to his damages is (prima facie at least) a tres-

47 pass. 1 Saund. on Pl. and Gv., 84, N. 2, 3. Toller on Executrs, 112. Cro. Jac., 362. 2 Bouvier's L. Dict. Title Trespass, 579.

And proof that the property was in possession of the defendant at the place charged in the declaration, is evidence of such taking.—Walton vs. Kersop, 2 Wilson, 354, 355. Croke Eliz., 869. 1 Saund. on Pl. and Gv., 347, N. 1. Bull N. P., 54. 7 Leigh's Nisi Prius, 1330. Amos vs. Sennate, 4 Scamm., 445. (In this last case it was held that a plea of non cepit in replevin for a wrongful detention presents an immaterial issue.)

The case of Moore and Moore vs. E. Moore, administrator of N. Moore, 4 Missouri Rep., 421, is also in point.

Under the plea of non cepit in replevin, the court will not permit the defendant to give evidence of special matter in justification.—McFarland vs. Baker, 1 Mass. Rep., 153. - Leigh's Nisi Prius, 1330. Dane's Abr. of Amer. Law, 530, sec. 5. 1 Saund. on Pl. and Gv., 387.

The fifth error assigned is a mere corrollary from the third and fourth, and they being well taken is consequently sustained.

The sixth. That the court erred in rendering judgment for the return upon a verdict found on an issue joined upon a plea of non cepit is well sustained by authority. This plea in replevin is said to be like a general issue in other actions. It may be so in some respects; but, if found for the defendant, if the jury say he did not take the goods, how can there be a judgment "pro retorno habendo." Non cepit is a plea in bar not involving the merits of the action, and if a defendant claims a return of the goods, he must add an avowry or cognizance inducing a return. Per Savage, Chief Justice, in the people at the relation of P. Tower vs. Niagara, C. P., 4 Wendell's Rep. 217. 1 Chitty's Pl., 490, 537. 1 Saund. on Pl. and Gv., 374, N. 1. 1 Strange, 507. Wilkinson on Replevin, 50. 6 Law Lib., 18.—The defendant cannot have a judgment of retorno habendo on a verdict in his favor upon an issue joined on a plea of non cepit, Hill vs. Stocking, 6 Hill's N. Y. Rep., 288. 2 Leigh's Nisi Prius, 1330. Seymour vs. Billings, 12 Wendell, 286. Carpenter vs. Stevens, Ibid. 589. Smith vs. Snyder, 15 Wendell, 671. McPherson vs. Melherich, 20 Wendell, 671. Prasser vs. Woodward, 21 Wendell, 205.

Hitherto we have considered this case as though the plea of non cepit was in, and issue regularly joined upon it, because from this state of the record it appears that the parties and the court at the 48 trial below acted under that impression, and because the counsel for plaintiffs in error insisted at the argument of the cause that it ought to be so considered. But that plea was withdrawn upon the same day in which it was filed and now constitutes no part of the pleadings in the case. It remains therefore to enquire what effect this should have upon our judgment.

The plea of non cepit having been withdrawn and no other plea put in, there was no issue for the jury to try, and where it does not appear that there was no issue presented to the jury a judgment on their verdict will be reversed. Oliver vs. Judge, 2 Stewart's Rep., 483. If the jury are empanelled to try the issue joined when in reality there is no issue joined, the judgment must be reversed and the verdict set aside. Wilkinson vs. Bennett, 3 Munf. Rep., 314. The want of a plea in replevin is not cured by a verdict. Lucky vs. McDermot, 5 Serg. and Rawle Reps. 331.

But it was suggested on behalf of the defendant in error that perhaps the statute of jeofails cures that defect. This question was directly presented in the case of Snyder vs. Burke and wife, 4 Rand. 161, and the court there held that the act of jeofail will not sustain a verdict and judgment in a case in which the record states that the jury were sworn to try the issue joined but does not show that any plea was filed by the defendant upon which issue could be joined, and Lucky vs. McDermot above cited is also an authority in point. This question however was fully considered at the last term of this court in the case of Miller and Croom, vs. F. Hoc, and it was then held that where the jury were sworn (as in this case) to try the issue joined and there was in fact no issue, the statute of jeofail did not cure the error, and judgment must be reversed. Florida Reports, 195. And upon mature reflection we see no reason to doubt the correctness of that opinion.

It would seem from the case of Wilkinson vs. Bennett, 3 Munf. 314, before referred to, that in Virginia a verdict in such a case will not cure the error under the statute of jeofails, although it may be against the party who failed to meet by a negative on his side, affirmative matter pleaded on the other side.

It was insisted upon the argument of this cause by the counsel for the defendant in error, that the affidavit above mentioned, filed by the plaintiffs in support of their motion for a continuance, show that the property in the slave Charles is not in the plaintiffs in error in their individual capacity and that if they have any interest in or right to him, it is not personally but as trustees, and that therefore 49 they cannot under any circumstances recover in this suit. Upon this subject it is sufficient to observe that this affidavit is not before the court; it is no part of the record and ought not to have been put into it. There is nothing to show that it was offered in evidence to the jury but if it had been thus offered, still it would constitute no part of the record unless brought into it by a bill of exceptions.

Upon a full review of this case we are constrained to reverse the judgment and remand the cause to the court below for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Per totam curiam.

CHARLES BROWARD AND WILLIAM EUBANKS vs. MARIA DOGGETT, EXECUTRIX OF JOHN L. DOGGETT.

In an action of assumpsit where no damages are stated in the declaration, the defect is cured by verdict and judgment, especially when sufficient damages are stated in the writ.

Where, in an action by the executrix to recover for professional services rendered by her testator, as general attorney of an estate of which defendants were the representatives, after the testimony of several witnesses had been received, going to establish that plaintiff's testator had for several years acted at the instance of defendants as attorney of the estate, and placing estimates upon these services—it was testified by a witness for defendants, that the plaintiff had admitted that her testator was employed to collect money due to the estate represented by defendants on a considerable number of notes which were placed in his hands, and that one of the defendants agreed to give him ten per cent. on all moneys collected. Held, that it should have been left to the jury to determine whether such agreement did not embrace all the notes which plaintiff's testator had in his possession belonging to the estate, whether collected through means of suit or otherwise.

Where in such case the defendants gave in evidence two notes of the plaintiff's testator, given for negro hire, payable to defendants as executors of the estate for which the professional services were rendered, and there was a receipt endorsed on each of the notes, one of the receipts being in the hand writing of plaintiff's testator, the receipts created a presumption of payment on account of the professional services of the plaintiff's testator, rendered for the benefit of the estate of which the defendants are the representatives.

The presumption is, that a debtor will pay his debt through an indebtedness of his 50 creditor in preference to making a payment in cash.

Error to Duval Circuit Court.

This was an action of assumpsit by defendant in error, to recover of plaintiffs in error, for professional services alleged to have been rendered to them by John L. Doggett (the plaintiff's testator,) as an attorney at law. The declaration contained a count for work and labor, and two special counts (indebitatus and quantum meruit) for professional services by the said John L. Doggett, "in prosecuting and defending divers causes, suits, and business for the defendants, executors of Stephen J. Eubanks, deceased, and for fees due, and of right payable to the said John L. Doggett, in respect thereof; and also for other work and labor, care, diligence and attendance of the said John L. Doggett in his lifetime, in and about the drawing, copying and engrossing of divers conveyances, deeds and writings for the said defendants at their special instance and request. And also for divers journeys and other attendances by the said John L. Doggett in his lifetime, before then made, performed and given in and about the said business and other business of the said defendants, and at their special instance and request.' The amount of damages laid in the declaration, was left in blank.

The defendants appeared and pleaded separately.

The defendant, Charles Broward, pleaded non assumpsit, and two special pleas. Issue was joined on the plea of non assumpsit and demurrers were filed to the special pleas. The demurrers were sustained, but as no error was assigned by the defendants on that account a further notice of these pleas is unnecessary. The defendant Eubanks also pleaded non assumpsit and issue was joined thereon.

The cause was tried at the November Term, 1847, Judge Macrae presiding.

On the trial the plaintiff in the court below introduced Isaiah D. Hart as a witness, who testified, "That Judge Doggett was, as he supposed, general attorney for the defendants as executors of Stephen J. Eubanks, deceased. That he supposed so from the fact of having seen Mr. Broward and Judge Doggett frequently together in the clerk's office, attending to the business of the estate. Knows of no other attorney employed by defendants. Doggett was Judge of the County Court, and defendants frequently had business with Charles Broward and Wm. Eubanks, vs. Maria Doggett, Executrix, &c.

51 Doggett at his office and at the Clerk's office. Broward was the active executor. Knows of Doggett being generally employed by defendants. Saw them frequently doing business in the Probate and Clerk's office. Does not recollect to have seen Mr. Eubanks the defendant, with Judge Doggett. Broward was the active executor, and seemed to attend to all the business. Saw Doggett frequently with him transacting the business of the estate, and saw him attending to defendants business in court, and knew that they had no other attorney. Would conclude that they employed him as their attorney for the same reasons that I would conclude that they employed Mr. Fraser."

William Hickman, a witness for plaintiff, also testified and said that "he had frequently heard defendants speak of Doggett doing business for them. Of Doggett bringing suits for them. Eubanks died in 1837, he believes. Knows the defendants, and knew Doggett well."

Henry D. Holland testified that he hired some negroes of the estate. In dispute about the hire, Charles Broward referred witness to Judge Doggett as their lawyer. Doggett died in February 1844.'

Robert Robinson, also testified that he had hired some negroes from the defendants as executors of Eubanks. That there arose a controversy about the wages and defendants referred witness to Judge Doggett. This was in 1841.

Wm. F. Crabtree also testified as a witness and said that he had a claim against the estate of Eubanks and called on the executors to pay it—they said they had no money but referred witness to Doggett as their attorney and collector who might have made collections and would in that event pay him—this was seven or eight years ago. Witness also says he is Judge of Probates of Duval county and that from his knowledge of the estate and its amount and its transactions he should think these services, worth $500 per annum in the same. Does not know precisely what service Doggett rendered. Heard defendants say Doggett was their general attorney. Doggett served about four years and until his death."

Plaintiffs then read in evidence a receipt of defendants to plaintiff given under a schedule of notes or claims. Receipt as follows:—

[Schedule.] "Received, Jacksonville, February 22, 1844, from the hands of Maria Doggett, executrix of the estate of John L. Doggett
52 deceased, the above papers and notes, which were given in the hands of John L. Doggett attorney at law for collection, with the exception of those marked not found.

WM. EUBANKS, }
CHAS. BROWARD, } Executors.

James W. Bryant, another witness, testified that Doggett conducted the business of defendants in court, and was their general attorney; that he had a knowledge of the estate, and from his knowledge of the estate and its business in court and elsewhere, including advice, &c., thinks Doggett's services worth at least three hundred dollars per annum; indeed, thinks his services, exclusive of matters in court, were worth that sum; thinks Mr. Burritt would have charged $600; but Doggett's services were worth less, regarding his business and professional capacities. The witness having examined the papers in five different cases in Duval Circuit Court, in which Doggett was attorney for the executors of Eubanks, said that the fees for prosecuting four of these cases to judgment should be $20 each, and for the other case pending when Doggett died $10.

It was then proved that the letters testamentary granted to defendants were dated 13th April, 1847.

Philip Fraser, a witness for defendants, was then sworn, and testified—that, as attorney of defendants, he had several interviews with the plaintiff in relation to the claim which she, as executrix of John L. Doggett, preferred against the defendants, as executors of Stephen J. Eubanks, deceased, for services alleged to have been rendered to them as attorney in the business of Eubanks' estate. That in those interviews she told the witness that Judge Doggett was employed to collect money due the estate on a considerable number of notes which were deposited in Judge Doggett's hands, and that said Broward agreed to give Doggett ten per cent. on all moneys collected, for his services—the plaintiff claimed four or five hundred dollars as her due. She claimed a sum sufficient to balance the judgments of defendants against her, and said that Judge Doggett had a great deal of trouble with the business of Eubanks' estate—that he had been the executors' attorney in all their business, and she thought enough was due him for his services to balance the said judgment—that witness, as defendants' attorney, offered to compromise by paying her one hundred and thirty-five dollars. Witness also stated that there were but four or five cases prosecuted to judgment in favor of defendants by said Doggett, as their attorney— 53 that witness had been the attorney of defendants since Doggett's death, and was familiar with business of the estate of Eubanks—that he would have done all that was done by Doggett in the business of the estate, so far as he had been able to discover from the papers and business in court, for one hundred and fifty dollars, and thinks that a high compensation.

James McRory sworn as a witness for defendants says. He knows the parties, has known Broward eight years. In January 1840 was at the hiring of slaves of Eubank's estate. Judge Doggett cried the hiring. Witness was clerk of the executors from January 1841, to the time of the division of the estate. Doggett was not the general attorney of the executors employed to manage the affairs of the whole estate. The executors consulted him also as Judge of the County Court relative to their duty. When he performed any extra services such as hiring the negroes, he was paid for it at the time. Broward was forward in transacting the business of the estate, and Eubanks concurred in his acts and undertakings as joint executor and witness considered that they acted jointly in the executorship.

Witness was Clerk generally. Doggett approved bonds as Judge of Probate. The executors were generally together when with Doggett, and held the estate indifferently between them. No other counsel was employed by them than Doggett up to the time of the latter's death. Knows of no advice given by Doggett as Judge of the County Court except as to the bonds for hires. Witness was perfectly conversant with the business of the estate, and if Judge Doggett had been employed or retained generally in all business of the estate, would have known it.

The defendants also offered in evidence two promissory notes made by Doggett jointly and severally, with Charles Merrick as his security payable to the executors of the estate of Stephen J. Eubanks, the first for the sum of $225, dated 1st January, 1840, and payable 1st January, 1841, and the other for $145, dated 4th January, 1841, and payable 1st January, 1842.

On the back of the first note was endorsement as follows:

"Received January 4th, 1841, ten dollars on account of the within note. CHARLES BROWARD, Executor."

On the other note was endorsement as follows:

"Received on the within note seventy dollars.
April 2, 1842. CHARLES BROWARD, Executor."

It was proved that the body of the last mentioned endorsement 54 was in the handwriting of John L. Doggett. It was also admitted that the notes were given for negro hire by Doggett as principal and Merrick as security. Also that these notes had been sued and prosecuted to judgment against the Executrix of Doggett; that execution had been issued and property sold, but that said judgment was still unsatisfied as to a considerable balance.

It was further admitted that the account for professional services now sued on had been filed as a set off in the suit on these notes, but owing to the pleadings was not availed of but was in some way withdrawn and that counsel waived all objections on that account.

The testimony was here closed and the counsel for defendants asked the court to instruct the jury "that, as there was a special contract between John L. Doggett and the defendants respecting the subject matter of this suit, the plaintiff cannot resort to an implied one"—which instruction the court refused and in substance charged the jury "that to the mind of the court the evidence does not show an express contract, and that no express contract is proved except as to the rate of compensation to Doggett for collections, viz: ten per cent."

The defendants counsel then asked the court to instruct the jury "that the endorsement upon the last named note in the handwriting of Doggett is evidence of an account stated between the said Doggett and defendants at the date thereof." Which instruction the court refused and in substance charged the jury "that the said notes and the said endorsements were not of themselves evidence of a settlement or account stated between the parties thereto as to all matters of account between them, but that the jury might consider them in connection with the other testimony, if any there was, tending to show that there had been such a settlement or account stated as that contended for. That it was most probable, so far as the court was capable of judging of the evidence, that these notes were given and were to be accounted for, separately, with a view to a more precise and careful administration of the estate, and to disconnect them from private individual transactions of the Executors with Doggett. That the jury need not consider the same, in making up their verdict, in any other point of view."

The defendants excepted to the opinions of the court. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $500 10-100 and judgment was entered thereon on the 22d Nov., 1847.

Charles Broward and Wm. Eubanks, vs. Maria Doggett, Executrix, &c.

55 To reverse this judgment the defendants prosecute their writ of error in this Court and assign for errors that no damages are laid in the declaration and that the Court erred in refusing the instructions prayed and in giving the instructions given.

Fraser, for Plaintiff in Error.

I.—1st. No damages are laid in the declaration. The Court erred in entering up judgment on a verdict rendered upon so defective a declaration.

Where two declarations were sent up to the Supreme Court, in one of which a blank was left for damages, and it did not appear upon the record that leave had been granted to file a second declaration, it was held that the Court might presume that the cause was tried on the perfect declaration, and that leave had been given to file the second. 1 Wharton's Dig., 613, 614. Long & Walker, for Defendant in Error:

BALTZELL, Justice:

The Court below erred, we think, in the instructions given to the jury in this case. According to the admission of plaintiff, her testator was employed to collect money due the estate "on a considerable number of notes," which were deposited in his hands. Broward, one of the defendants, agreed to give the testator Doggett "ten per cent. on all money collected." Now, it is obvious that this agreement extended as well to the notes deposited as to the compensation, yet the Court instructed the jury "that there was no express contract proved, except as to the rate of compensation to Doggett for collections, to wit, ten per cent." It should, in our opinion, have been left to the jury, whether this agreement for ten per cent. did not embrace all the notes which Doggett had in his possession belonging to the estate, whether collected through means of suit or otherwise."

The second instruction is as to the effect of the notes and receipts. In reference to these, the Court say, "they were not of themselves evidence of a settlement or account stated between them, but the jury might consider them in connection with other testimony tending to show that there had been such settlement or account; that it was most probable, so far as the court was capable of judging of the 57 evidence, that these notes were given to be accounted for separately, with a view to a more precise and careful administration of the estate, and to distinguish it from the private and individual transactions of the executors with Doggett, and that the jury need not consider it in any other point of view.

The effect of this would seem to be to destroy the weight of both the notes and the receipts. Now, we know no grounds upon which such a course may be justified. They were both in evidence and a part of defendants' case, who were entitled to the benefit of them as far as they tended to prove a fact, or conduce in any degree to thir defence. It has been insisted here, that the notes were evidence of an account stated. Without enquiring into the correctness of this position in general, it is sufficient to say, that by the admission of the parties, they were given for the hire of negroes by Doggett, so that presumption as to the cause of their execution may not be indulged. The receipts present greater difficulty. They are evidence of an acknowledgement of payment of the sums specified, and have probably had this effect already in the case in which judgment has been rendered against the estate of Doggett. Whether a jury could infer that the receipts were evidence of payments on account of those services rendered by Doggett to the estate, for which payment is now claimed by his executrix, is of more diffcult solution. The presumption is, that a debtor will pay his debt, through an indebtedness of his creditor, in preference to making a payment in cash. This is the usual and ordinary course of business, and we, therefore, incline to the opinion, that defendants were entitled to the benefit of this presumption, however slight, leaving it to be rebutted or explained by other testimony. In denying this weight to the receipt and notes, and in excluding them from the jury, as was virtually done by the instruction given, we think also the court erred.

We do not think the objection to the want of damages at the conclusion of the declaration is available, after verdict and judgment, especially, where there is sufficient in the writ, as in this case, to cure the defect.

The judgment will be reversed, and the verdict set aside, and the cause remanded for further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion.

DARIUS WILLIAMS AND JOHN A. CRAIG, vs. JOHN C. MCGEHEE, 58 ADMINISTRATOR OF JOHN MILLER.

The tendency of the present age is to allow objections to be taken rather to the credibility than to the competency of a witness, and competency is always presumed until the contrary is established.

Where a witness had vertally assumed the payment of the expenses of a suit for the benefit of the plaintiff, so as to create a mere honorary or moral obligation on his part to comply, he is not rendered incompetent to testify as a witness for the plaintiff.

Where money has been overpaid by an agent, or paid by mistake, he is a competent witness for his principal in an action to recover it back.

No man can, by the voluntary payment of the debt of another, make himself that man's creditor, and recover from him the amount of the debt so paid.

ERROR to the Jefferson Circuit Court.

This case was tried at the Circuit before Judge BALTZELL.—The facts of the case are fully set forth in the opinion of the court, delivered by the Chief Justice.

McCants, for Plaintiff in Error.

1. The whole record is before the court. 6 Har. & Johns. 81.

2. Wm. C. Miller was incompetent from his interest in the event of this cause. He was interested, because he had engaged to pay the cost, and the plaintiff had refused to conduct the suit; because the plaintiff's success would gain him a credit on reimbursement—the plaintiff's failure would cause him to loose the one or the other.—Stewart vs. Kip., 5 J. R., 256. 5 Hill's N. Y. R., 202. Greenleaf's Ev., 458. Story on Agency, 364-'5-'6-'7. Paley on Agency, 108. Starkie on Ev., 1731—note. 3 Hill, N. Y. R., 580. 1 Phillips, 61-'3. 2 Ib., 110-'17.

3. The judgment below was the consequence of William C. Miller's testimony, because no other testimony sustains the plaintiff's action for money paid by witness to defendants for John and Elizabeth Miller.

4. If we admit the testimony of William C. Miller, it proves that the witness' own money, not the plaintiff's, was paid to defendants, and in a sum different from the accounts of John and Elizabeth 59 Miller. But plaintiff must show that it was his money that was paid. Archbold's N. P., 186.

5. Wm. C. Miller's testimony, if admitted, was overbalanced by the testimony of Pettus, the entry of Rouquie, the pass book, the conduct of John Miller in paying the account of Elizabeth Miller, after being informed of the pretended payment by Wm. C. Miller, and by the inconsistency of Miller's testimony with the circumstances arising in the case, and his improbable explanation of the loss of the accounts and receipts. 4 Washington, C. C. R., 123.

Hagner, for Defendant in Error:

The questions which present themselves on this record all arise upon the point of competency of witness William C. Miller. The Court below overruled the objection made, and allowed his testimony to go before the jury.

Let us establish the general principles on which the Courts at the present day proceed. Old cases stood on subtle grounds, 1 Phillips Evid. 46. Glenn vs. VanKapff, 2 Gill & Johnson 132.

The tendency of the present age is to allow objections to be taken rather to credibility than to competency and competency is presumed until the contrary is established; in cases of doubt witness is always received. 2 Stephens' Nisi Prius 1727.

Interest of witness to exclude must be real, not apprehended.—1 Greenleaf on Evid. 455-6.

The obligation of honor, or apprehension of moral obligation is not such real interest as will exclude. 1 Campbell Rep. 144. 10 New Hamp. 88. 1 Turner & Russell, 366. 4 Wendell 292. 9 John. Rep. 219. 3 Gill & John. 282.

The reason why such obligation of honor shall not exclude is very forcibly given by Phillips Evid. 54.

Because if sense of honorary obligation be powerful enough to cause the witness to pay where not legally bound, so will it a fortiori make him speak the truth under oath.

But next it is alleged that William C. Miller, as agent, is liable to a civil action at the suit of the representative of his princpal, and that therefore he was interested to protect himself.

The starting this objection brings to view the fact that William C. Miller as the agent who transacted the business is, ex necessitate rei, competent. Greenleaf on Evid. p. 459, also declared in case cited by the other side, 5 Johnson's Rep. 236.

60 But neither John Miller nor his representative could have sued said William for alleged breach of duty in not paying Darius Williams & Company, because by this very action they exculpate the witness and allege that he did fulfil his duty.

But even were he liable to a civil action such liability will not exclude, 1 Hall's Law Journal, 230. 1 Gill & Johnson's Rep. 366.

The cases from 3 Hill's Rep. 379, and 5 Johnson 256, cited by the other side, are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar.—That from 5 Hill 202, has no sort of bearing, for the witness here has no lien on the fund, he can have none in any event.

I will now undertake to show that William C. Miller was plainly swearing against his interest. Now by the testimony of Rutgers and the check on the bank, it is plain prima facie, that William C. Miller paid his own money to D. Williams & Company. Williams & Company, though called upon failed to show any transaction they ever had with William C. Miller. Is it not plain then that he could have sued them and recovered this money as his own, paid without consideration? Yet this very witness swears he paid it on account of his brother, and transfers to that estate the benefit, if recovery is had.

Was it not the duty of D. Williams & Company to have accounted for the possession of the check of William C. Miller, and to have shown on what account they received the money? Yet they do not do so. Their own books are produced in evidence, yet D. Williams trumps up a cock and bull story, attempting to show that the money they got credit for was sent by private hand Can any man doubt that this check took $550 from William C. Miller's credit in bank, and transferred it to D. Williams & Company? Surely no man can be so blind as not to see that. If then D. Williams & Company did send money by Dr. Pettus, it was different money from this, and if they have not credit for it in bank, it only proves their right of action against the bank.

Finally, I contend, that John Miller, in his lifetime, and John C. McGehee his administrator, since his death, have had such a vested interest in William C. Miller's testimony, as utterly prevented him from rendering himself incompetent by subsequent interest. Budd's testimony shows that the imputed interest did not arise until after revival of suit in name of administrator of John Miller.

Now the authorities on this head are plain and abundant from the oldest times, and yet recognized in these days. Skinner Rep. 586. 61
1 Greenleaf on Evid. 204-462. Cowper 736. 3 D. & E. 27.—3 Levinz 152. 3 Connecticut 267. 2 Dev. 187.

See also 1 Cooke's Rep. 115.

McCants, in reply:

It is contended that plaintiff has a vested interest in the testimony of the witness Miller. But is is sufficient to reply that plaintiff himself disavows this interest by refusing to conduct the suit.

It is also contended that the liability to civil suit does not exonerate witness. But witness does not claim exemption. On the contrary, he labors anxiously to press his testimony into the cause. The cases cited on this point belong to a different rule of evidence from the one under consideration. When witness says his answer would criminate him he shall not be compelled to answer.

It is also contended that an honorary obligation does not disqualify.

But in this case witness engaged to pay the costs, for without it the suit would have fallen to the ground. The case of Gilpin vs. Vincent is a fair instance of honorary liability, and is very different from the present one.

The defendants in error rely also on the customs of banks and merchants in relation to interest of cash and checks.

But defendants have fully accounted for their credit of $550, on the 13th of March, 1848, in the bank, by the testimony of Pettus, the entry of Rouquie dated 12th March, 1838, by the pass book crediting cash, &c. Besides the general customs of banks and merchants are different, and in this case afford no ground of inference.

The case of Elizabeth Miller is deemed to stand on the same grounds, and the same views are offered in that case. Besides plaintiff cannot contradict his own witness as is attempted in this case.

Douglas, Chief Justice, delivered the following opinion:

This is an action of assumpsit instituted by John Miller in his lifetime against Darius Williams and John A. Craig to recover a sum of money alleged to have been overpaid to them and money paid them by mistake. The declaration contains counts for work and labor and for an account stated and common money counts.

Plea non assumpsit, upon which issue was joined and upon the 62 trial of that issue there was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff (in whose name the suit had been revived by scire facias before the trial) for the sum of $574 17. And the plaintiffs in error now seek to reverse the judgment upon the following grounds which they have assigned as error to wit: That the testimony of William C. Miller, a witness examined in behalf of the plaintiff in the action below, was not admissible by the law of the land, for that the said witness was interested in the said cause and the event thereof, as appears by the record and proceedings of said cause, and by the testimony made a part of said record. And also there is error in this, that the judgment aforesaid by the record aforesaid appears to have been given for the said John C. McGehee, Administrator of John Miller, against Darius Williams and John A. Craig Merchants, &c., whereas by the laws of the land the said judgment ought to have been given for the said Darius Williams and John A. Craig against the said John C. McGehee, Administrator as aforesaid.

The whole question depends upon the fact whether the record shows that the said William C. Miller was so situated that he would either gain or loose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment in this case, or that the record will be legal evidence for or against him in some other action. It must be a certain, present, vested interest, and not remote or contingent. If the interest is of a doubtful nature it goes to the credit of the witness and not to his competency. Being always presumed to be competent, the burden of proof is on the objecting party to sustain his exception to the competency, and if he fails satisfactorily to establish it, witness must be sworn. 1 Greenleaf's Ev. 458.

Having premised thus much, we proceed to examine the question presented, and to test it by the record.

The deposition of William C. Miller was taken by the plaintiff in the Court below and offered in evidence at the trial, when it was objected to by the Attorney for the defendant, but his objection was overruled and the deposition was permitted to go to the jury; to which the defendant excepted and the deposition is set out in a bill of exceptions which constitutes a part of the record in this case and proves in substance, that in the year 1838 he was agent of the said John Miller and also one Elizabeth Miller. That his power from John Miller was both by parol and in writing. That John Miller was the agent of Elizabeth Miller and being his (John Miller's) acknowledg-

63 ed agent, he (William C. Miller) acted for both and his agency was always admitted. That he settled accounts, made payments and performed like services for both John Miller and Elizabeth Miller.—That on the 12th day of March, 1838, he settled accounts for both John Miller and Elizabeth Miller with the defendants. That he on that day gave to Darius Williams a check for $550 on the Union Bank of Florida being the supposed amount of his account against John Miller and Elizabeth Miller. That he gave the check to Darius Williams in a room he occupied at Brown's Hotel in Tallahassee. That there was no one present but Darius Williams and himself. That when he gave the check to Darius Williams at Tallahassee he had not the two accounts with him, but had the amount (as well as the witness could recollect) on a list, and he proposed when witness next went to Monticello to have them made out and the surplus or deficiency of the check for the supposed amount settled at the same time. Shortly afterwards the two accounts were as well as he (witness) recollects receipted and on his (witness,) return to Tallahassee they were left with other papers and never afterwards could be found. That he witness never had the least business transaction with Darius Williams at any time on his own account. That he never sold a check to the defendant or any one else in his life. That some time after the date of the check his brother John Miller asked him why he had not paid Darius Williams and that he stated to his brother that he had. That his brother then said Darius Williams demanded payment of him for both of the accounts and he had settled them. That the witness afterwards called on Darius Williams knowing there was an error in the business and on reference to his cash book found the amount of the check properly debited, but no credits carried to accounts of John and Elizabeth Miller. On his cross examination he was asked the direct question "are you or not interested in the event of this suit," to which he answered I do not believe myself to be legally interested in the suit. Again he was asked "are you not responsible for costs, attorney's fees, or any of the expenses connected with these suits." To which he answered the suit was brought in my brother's name; since his death I understood that the Administrator of his estate had refused to become responsible for attorney's fees or any incidental expenses. I have therefore for the benefit of the estate of John Miller assumed the expenses, although I do not consider myself legally bound for them. The witness was shown the check and recognized it. It is as follows.

Tallahassee, March 13th, 1838.

64 $550. Cashier of the Union Bank of Florida pay to D. Williams & Co. or bearer Five Hundred and fifty dollars.

In pencil (at Cr. D. Williams & Co.) W. C. MILLER.

William Budd, a witness introduced by the plaintiff to explain the testimony of William C. Miller, testified that he was Clerk of the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida for Jefferson county, at the time of the institution of this suit and at the death of the original plaintiff. That after the issuing of the scire facias to revive said suit William C. Miller the witness verbally stated that he would pay the expenses of the suit, meaning the costs of the court as witness understood, but said William C. Miller did not enter into any written agreement. There was ill feeling between said William C. Miller and the Administrator of John Miller, and said William C. Miller said he heard that said Administrator had refused to become responsible for the costs. But this was after the suit had been revived in the name of the administrator and after costs had been incurred. The plaintiff's attorneys without objection and with consent of defendant's attorney then stated as evidence before the court, that William C. Miller had entered into no engagement with them to pay atorney's fees or any other expenses and was not bound for any part. The deposition of Henry L. Rutgers was also offered by the plaintiff's counsel, which was read to the jury and proves in substance that he had known the parties for at least seven years; that he was paying and receiving teller of the Union Bank of Florida in the month of March, 1838. That Darius Williams & Co., had an account with that Bank before and after that date, that on the 13th day of March, 1838, Darius Williams & Co. deposited a check in bank to their credit for five hundred and fifty dollars. "Check D. Williams & Co., $550," in my own hand writing (said the witness) is the form of the entry. That on the same day a check of $550 was debited to the account of William C. Miller, and a similar amount was credited to the defendants. The entry in the Ledger is "W. C. Miller, March 13th, 1838, by cash $550" and in Walter Veitch's hand writing. Said Veitch is dead. The form of the entry in the cash book of the bank is "D. Williams & Co. 13th March, 1838, credited by $550," and on the same day W. C. Miller debited with $550 all in the same hand writing of Walter Veitch the book keeper of the Bank since deceased. There is no other of like amount of that date.

The plaintiff's counsel then gave in evidence the admission of the 65 defendant that John Miller's account of $332 23-100 was paid to said defendants on the 19th of February, 1838, said account was paid by John Miller in person.

The defendant by his counsel to sustain the issue on his part then offered Dr. John G. Pettus who deposed and said—that in the Spring of 1838 he carried from Monticello to Tallahassee a sum of money, it was $500 to be deposited in the Union Bank of Florida in favor of Darius Williams & Co. That said money was handed to him in Monticello by Darius Williams the defendant. That he left Monticello on one day and on the next he deposited said money in said Bank and then returned to Monticello on the same day of making said deposite. That he left Darius Wiliams in Monticello and on his return saw him still at Monticello; it was in the Spring; it was about March; he says he never carried down money but once for said Wiliams; it was about $500; it was not as late as May; the sum was $500.

Defendants counsel then offered William Budd who deposed and said that he knew Gabriel Rouquie—he was dead—he was a clerk for Darius Williams & Co. Knew his hand writing. Defendants counsel then showed said witness a book of accounts of said Darius Williams & Co. and an entry in the same thus "1838, March 12, Union Bank deposits sent by Dr. Pettus, $550." Witness stated it was the hand writing of the said Gabriel Rouquie. Witness further said he had been a merchant. It was not usual to make such entries of deposites of cash.

Defendants counsel then offered and read the deposition of Henry L. Rutgers in which he testified (in substance) that he was well acquainted with Walter Veitch during his life. He held the office of book keeper in the Union Bank of Florida. He is dead. That he (witness) is well acquainted with said Veitch's hand writing and that the entry in the annexed Bank Book marked A., of the 13th March, 1838, is in the hand writing of said Veitch. This entry is on page 9, and is as follows: "March 13th, 1838, cash $550." That the Bank Book referred to is the regular pass book of the defendants with the Union Bank. That the pass books are generally in the hands of the depositors. When a deposite is made if the book is handed to the Teller he makes the entry; if not, when the book is written up or balanced the book keeper makes the entry from the books of the bank. I do not think (said the witness) that the entries were always made on the pass book at the time of depositing, for on page five you will perceive that the entries ran thus: 66 April, May, March and April, 1837, which show conclusively that the entries were not always made in the pass book at the time of depositing but afterwards when the bank book was written up or balanced. The witness said further that there was no other entry on the books of the bank on the 13th March, 1838, to the credit of defendants.

The defendants then offered and read the entry in pass book A above referred to in said deposition thus "1838, March 13th, cash $550." The defendants counsel then offered the admission in relation to the two accounts referred to by William C. Miller in his deposition, one for $332 20-100 and the other $181.13. That the former was paid in February, 1838, and the latter in July of the same year. Here the evidence closed and we deem it proper to say that we have made this full statement of it, not so much because we deemed it necessary to a decision of the questions presented for our consideration as for the satisfaction of the parties and especially of the plaintiffs in error and their counsel who brought this case up and so zealously and ably argued it here, and because he assumed the position in argument though he has not assigned it as error: "If we admit the testimony of William C. Miller it proves that the witness' own money and not that of the plaintiff's was paid to the defendants, and in a sum different from the accounts of John and Elizabeth Miller, and that to enable the plaintiff to recover he must prove that it was his own money that was paid."

It seemed proper therefore that we should set out the evidence very much at length in order that by a comparison of the whole it might be seen whether that is the correct view of the matter or not; for notwiithstanding it might seem from the testimony of William C. Miller himself that the money paid was his own, yet that might be explained by other parts of the testimony and the money shown to be that of his principles (John and Elizabeth Miller.) And here we may be permitted to remark, "en passant," that if the money was his own, he shows himself in regard to it a most disinterested witness, as he comes to testify most strongly against his own interest, and it can hardly be supposed that if the money had been his own he would thus without objection have yielded all claims to it in favor of his brother's estate, and it is difficult too to account for the question by John Miller to the witness, "Why he had not paid Darius Williams," but upon the supposition that he (the witness) had funds of Darius Williams and John A. Craig, vs. John C. McGehee, Administrator.

67 John Miller in his hands wherewith to pay his accounts due Williams. And if it had been otherwise, and William C. Miller paid his own money, it would have been quite natural that some explanation should have taken place between them on the subject when William C. Miller told his brother that he had paid the account of Williams against him. Had it been clearly and conclusively shown by undoubted and unrebutted proof that the money paid to the defendants was the money of the witness William C. Miller, it would perhaps have been our duty to reverse this judgment for that cause, although it was not assigned for error, for the rule of law upon this subject as stated by counsel for the plaintiff's in error, seems to be well sustained by authority. Moore vs. Pyrke, 11 East. Reps. 52. Archbold's Nisi Prius, 186. Bradshaw vs. Bradshaw, 11 Law Journal, 5.

The count for money paid cannot be maintained, (said Parke, J., Power vs. Butcher, 10 B. & C., 310,) without proving actual payment.

But it has not been thus shown; and in regard to this question, as well as of all others that arise out of the discrepancies and seeming contradictions in the testimony, it is sufficient to observe, that they were matters peculiarly proper for the consideration and decision of the jury to whom they were submitted, and whose verdict upon them should not be lightly disturbed by this court.

We proceed, therefore, to the errors assigned, or rather the error.

The only question presented by the assignment of errors for our consideration, to-wit: was the witness, William C. Miller, when he testified in the cause interested therein, or in the event thereof? being embraced in the first error assigned.

It is contended that the plaintiff had refused to conduct the suit and that in consequence thereof the witness had assumed the payment of the costs, but it does not appear that he had entered into any specific engagement with any one, or made any stipulation by which he was legally bound to pay them. There is no proof that he had spoken to any body on the subject except William Budd the Clerk of the court and he does not say that William C. Miller made any direct or express promise even to him, to pay them. His language is 'William C. Miller the witness stated verbally that he would pay the expenses of the suit meaning the costs of the court as he understood.' This does not import any specific engagement. If any such had been made with Mr. Budd it is presumable that he would have 68 understood the terms of it more definitely. Nor is there any evidence that the plaintiff had refused to conduct the suit, on the contrary the evidence appears to show pretty clearly that he was prosecuting it. Mr. Budd states that the suit had been revived and costs incurred before the statement was made by William C. Miller that he would pay the expenses and the record shows that he continued to prosecute it. The statement of the witness Miller to Mr. Budd seems therefore to have been made under a misapprehension of the facts in relation to that matter, and the attorneys for the plaintiff state expressly that he, William C. Miller, entered into no engagement with them to pay attorney's fees or any other expenses, and was not bound for any part. And it must be recollected that upon his cross examination he was expressly asked "are you not interested in the event of this suit," and that he answered "I do not believe myself to be legally interested in the suit." In reply to another question however he said "I have for the benefit of the estate of John Miller assumed the expenses although I do not consider myself legally bound for them."[2] He was evidently referring to what he had said in the hearing of Mr. Budd, for he states almost word for word what Mr. Budd testified that he had said upon that occasion. That he took the correct view of his legal rights so far as they are disclosed by the record in relation to this matter we have no doubt, and if any obligation rested upon him to pay, it was a mere honorary or moral one which did not render him incompetent, since the court can never know whether the obligation thus set up as a ground of incompetency has any real existence in the mind of the witness. Bent vs. Baker, 42 Law Lib. page, 99. 4 Sergent & Rawle, 226. Gilpin vs. Vincent, 9 John. 220. Moore vs. Hitchcock, 4 Wendell, 297. Such an obligation is in general of a nature so uncertain and variable, that it cannot safely be recognized in courts of justice as a motive for conduct, and besides where the sense of honor is so strong and binding as to influence a witness against his interest, it must be unnecessary to reject him, as the same principle which would induce him to pay the costs would oblige him in giving his evidence, to speak only the truth. 1 Phillip's Ev. 54.

The tendency of the present age, is to allow objections to be taken rather to the credibility than to the competency, and competency is always presumed until the contrary is established. 2 Stevens, Nisi Pr. 1727. The ends of justice are most effectually attained by a full and complete investigation of the subject in dispute, and unless the objection to the witness is strictly a legal objection he 69 will be admitted to give evidence. 1 Phillip's Ev. 54. It is not an objection to the competency of a witness that he has wishes or a strong bias on the subject matter of the suit, or that he expects some benefit from the result of the trial. 1 Phill. Ev. 47. Stewart vs. Kip., 5 John. Reps. 256. Such circumstances may influence his mind and affect his credibility, they are therefore open to observation and ought to be carefully weighed by the jury, who are to determine what dependence they can place upon his testimony, but they will not render him incompetent. Miles vs. O'Hara, 1 Sergeant and Rawle 32. Boulder vs. Herbert, 17 Sergeant & Rawle, 312.—Griswold vs. Ledwick, 1 Wendell 126. So far therefore as regards any liability to the payment of costs in this case arising from the supposed asumption of, or agreement by the witness, William C. Miller, to pay them, there is nothing to affect his competency.

But it is insisted by the attorney for the plaintiff in error on the argument of this cause that if William C. Miller had the money of his principal and paid it, a recovery in this case would entitle him to a credit, with his principal, but he was equally entitled in that case to the credit without such recovery. It was the payment of the money that entitled him to the credit and not the recovery.

It was also suggested that if he paid his own money a recovery in this suit would also entitle him to such credit, to which (if he paid it on the request of John Miller) the same answer may be given, but if he paid it voluntarily without such request he would not have any legal claim on John Miller or his estate for the amount, for one man cannot thus make another his debtor against his will or without his consent. Stokes vs. Lewis, 1 Term Rep. 20. 1 Saund. Reps. 264, n. Per Lord Kenyon, Exall vs. Partridge, 8 Term Reps., 310.—Cummings vs. Forrester, 1 Maule and Sel. 500. "No man can by a voluntary payment of the debt of another make himself that mans creditor and recover from him the amount of the debt so paid."—Lord Kenyon, Chief Justice, Child vs. Morley, 8 Term Rep., 613. Lightfoot vs. Creed, 8 Taunt. 268, (4 Eng. C. L. 100.)

But with respect to both these matters it is proper to remark that this transaction occurred in 1838 more than seven years before the deposition of the said Wiliam C. Miller above mentioned was taken, and that if he ever had any claim upon or right to a credit with the said John Miller, or if said John Miller had any claim on him on account of the money alleged by the witness, William C. Miller, to have been paid to the defendants in this case, such claims were barred 7 by the statute of limitation at the expiration of five years from the time when the payment was made, and consequently the interest of the witness at the time when his deposition was taken was not that certain, present, vested interest, which we have seen is necssary to render a witness incompetent, but had by lapse of time become remote, contingent, and of a doubtful nature—an interest which goes to the credit of the witness, and not to his competency. 1 Greenleaf's Evidence 458. Dudley vs. Balles, 24 Wendell's Reps., 357 to 370 (and authorities there cited,) Cutter vs. Rathburn, 3 Hill's N. Y. Reps. 577 to 281. Even if it were doubtful upon the cases say the Court in 24 Wendell 371, and in 3 Hill 581, we ought to decide in favor of the competency.

And besides if money has been overpaid by a servant or agent or paid by mistake, he is a competent witness for his principal in an action to recover it back. 1 Phillip's Ev. 129—130. Martin vs. Howell, 1 Strange 647. Baker vs. Macrae, 3 Camp. 144. United States Bank vs. Stearnes, 15 Wendell 314. Franklin Bank vs. Freeman, 16 Pick. 528, 529, 534. 2 John. Reps. 189. 1 John C. 408.

It is (said the Court in the case of Stafford Bank vs. Cornell, 1 N. Hamp. Rep., 192,) the constant practice to admit agents to be witnesses for their principals without a release although their evidence may tend to discharge themselves.

Again it has been contended that "Wm. C. Miller's testimony if admitted was overbalanced by the testimony of Pettus, the entry of Rouquie, the pass books, the evidence of John Miller in paying the account of Elizabeth Miller after being informed of the pretended payment of Wm. C. Miller, and by the inconsistency of Miller's testimony with the circumstances arising in the case and his improbable explanation of the loss of the accounts and receipts." All these we repeat were matters for the jury to whom they were submitted, and are not matters proper for the investigation and determination of this court, and we could not determine them without invading the undeniable and exclusive prerogative of the jury, viz: The right of deciding on all matters of fact as to which contradictory evidence may be adduced. 7 Harr. and John. 294.

Upon a full and thorough examination of the record and proceedings in this case, we are of opinion that they contain no error.

The judgment of the Court below is therefore affirmed.

Per curiam.

DARIUS WILLIAMS AND JOHN A. CRAIG, vs. ELIZABETH MILLER.

Error to the Jefferson Circuit Court.

Per Curiam:—This case depends to a certain extent upon the same principles involved in the case of Darius Williams and John A. Craig vs. John C. McGehee, administrator, &c., of John Miller deceased, which has just now been decided. It was argued and submitted together with that case, and it was understood would share the same fate.

The judgment of the court below is therefore affirmed.

JOHN DOE, ON DEMISE OF FLORENTIO COMMYNS, ET AL., vs. WILLIAM K. LATIMER, TENANT, &C.

Where a concession of land in 1817 by the Spanish authorities of West Florida was made "subject to the conditions prescribed in the regulations of 17th July, 1799"—and the decree of concession concluded with an order "that the land be surveyed and marked by the surveyor, to be submitted to the superior authority—costs to be taxed"—and no further steps appeared to have been taken to comply with the conditions or to complete the grant, anterior to the cession of the Floridas by Spain to the United States—Held, that such concession is not evidence of title.

A government or individual who makes a grant of land upon a condition precedent, may waive or dispense with a compliance therewith, so long as it, or he holds the revision; but when it, or he conveys that reversionary interest, the right to do so ceases.

A grant of land, by the description of "the tract of land at the point of the Flag Staff," and without any further designation, to give a place of beginning for a survey, is void, for being so uncertain that locality cannot be given to the land.

Writ of Error to Escambia Circuit Court.

The case is stated in the opinion of the court.

72 Anderson, for plaintiff in error:

The evidence proposed to be offered to the jury, and which the court below ruled out, was opposed upon the following grounds:

1. The incapacity of Masot, the Governor of West Florida, to make a valid grant.

To this objection it is replied, that the Supreme Court of the U. S. have decided in the cases of Sanlard, (4 Peters Rep.) Arredondo, (6 Peters Rep.,) Clark (8 Peters Rep.,) Mitchell, 9 (Peters Rep.,) and others, that upon the production of a grant the presumption of law arises that there was full authority to make it, unless the contrary be shown. By the comity of nations the tribunals of all countries are to presume that every public officer of a foreign government acts within the legitimate sphere of his duty till the contrary be shown.

In the absence of the Intendant, the Governor was the highest officer.

Intendant Cabannos left the country in 1815, and there was no officer of that grade in West Florida afterwards. The grant in question was made in 1817. The authority quoted from 8th Peters is not applicable to the then condition of West Florida. As proof of this, see testimony of Caro as to 81 grants made by Gov. Masot, having been confirmed by the U. S. Commissioners.

Grants made by the Governors of East Florida in the absence of higher authority, acknowledged as sufficient. U. S. vs. Perchman, 7 Peters. U. S. vs. Fernandez, 10 Peters. U. S. vs. Lequi, 10 P. R. U. S. vs. Chaires, 10 Peters. U. S. vs. Leton, 10 Peters.

2. The evidence was opposed on the ground that the grant wanted finality, and was only preliminary to a complete title.

This objection is met by the terms of the grant itself. Governor Masot says: "The 800 arpens of land are hereby granted to the said Francisco Rocheblave," &c. The word hereby imports that the act then done by the Governor conveyed a consummate title.

See the evidence of Caro as to similar grants, and the cases above cited as to similar grants in East Florida.

3. The evidence was opposed on the ground that the grant wanted sufficient certainty.

The tract of land in question is designated in the papers as "The tract commonly known by (as) the Point of the Flag Staff." It might have been made sufficiently certain by other evidence, if the 73 rejected evidence had gone to the jury as a foundation. The lessors might have proved possession in their ancestors. Though 800 arpens are sued for, and the whole might not have been recovered for want of a survey. The plaintiff in ejectment might recover a part of what is described in his declaration.

Lessee of Patton vs. Cooper, 1 Cook's Rep., 133. The right of possession to the point of the Flag Staff, is distinct from the right of possession to 800 arpens of land—the former needed no survey to be rendered certain. It was error to deprive the plaintiff of the additional evidence.

4. It is objected in the arguments of defendant's counsel, that there was no evidence of a compliance with the regulations of Morales.

It is only necessary to reply to this, that the question does not arise upon the exceptions, it was a question for the jury.

5. It is objected lastly that the evidence of Rocheblave's title was not evidence of the title of the lessors.

It is not pretended that it was in itself—it was offered as a link in the chain. Francisco Rocheblave was the ancestor of the lessors as would have been proved to the jury, had not the plaintiff been arrested in making out his case by the court in rejecting the foundation of his title.

Yonge, for defendant in error:

I. That the court properly ruled out the answer of Caro to question as stated in the first exception, as well for the reason there stated to wit: That it was not the best evidence of which the case in its nature was susceptible, (Greenleaf's Evidence, 93,) as for the further reason that it was immaterial to the issue, if nothing did appear upon the records of his office that showed that the Spanish Authorities did not require the performance of conditions of land grants, that fact was not material to the issue. And it was immaterial for two reasons. First. The absence of such record would not prove that they did not require performance of such conditions, for there was no reason that the records of his office, should show anything about it. And secondly, it was immaterial, because if the Spanish Authorities chose in their munificence to dispense with the performance of conditions of such grants. it was as a boon to the grantee. The United States by their treaty with Spain contracted that "all 74 grants of land made before the 24th January, 1818, by his Catholic Majesty or by his lawful authorities in said territories ceded by his Majesty, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of them to the same extent, that the same grants would be valid, if the territories had remained under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty." It is clear that this and all conditional grants would not have been valid under the dominion of his Catholic Majesty, until the conditions had been performed or dispensed with, and the United States did not agree to dispense with conditions.

II. In ruling that the paper writing purporting to be a grant from Governor Masot to Rocheblave, should not be permitted to go to the jury as evidence of title, the court decided rightly for the following reasons:

1st. That the grant, if grant it be, is void for uncertainty. 4 Bacon's Abridgement, Title Grant.

It is essential to the validity of a grant, that the thing granted be so described as to be capable of being distinguished from other things of the same kind, or be capable of being ascertained by extraneous testimony. Buyck et al., vs. U. S., 15th Peters, 223, 224, 225. O'Hara's case, 15th Peters, 281, 282, 283. Delespine's case, 15th Peters, 319.

The sheriff would not know what lands to deliver into the possession of the plaintiff, should he recover judgment and obtain his writ of possession.

III. The paper purporting to be a grant, is not a grant that conveys any legal title, but is only a preliminary step towards procuring a final and complete title. See Regulations of Morales, 2 White 235, Art. 4, 15, 16, & 18.

"The word grant may comprehend both the incipient and complete title." U. S. vs. Clarke, 8th Peters, 450.

IV. The power of granting lands was not vested in the Governor of West Florida at the time this grant was made, but in the Intendant. United States vs. Clarke, 8th Peters, 451, & 452.

V. The grant is void, for the reason that the conditions which attached to it, by the operation of the regulations of Morales, under which it was made, have not been shown to have been complied with. Buyck's Case, 15 Peters, 222. O'Harra's case, 15 Peters, 281, 282.

VI. Grant void for want of survey. U. S. vs. Miranda, 16th Peters, 156.

VII. The title claimed is at best but an equitable one, and though it presents such a case as the court established for the purpose of adjudicating land claims growing out of Spanish grants might possibly recognize, still there is shown no legal title, and ejectment cannot be sustained on an equitable title. Swayze and wife vs. Burke et al., 12 Peters, 23.

VIII. No derangement of the title from the grantee to the lessor of plaintiff.

"Person who is supposed to have demised the premises must be shown to have had a legal power to demise." 12 Johns., 185.

Douglas, Chief Justice, delivered the following:

This is an action of ejectment, instituted by the plaintiffs in the Circuit Court of Escambia county, against William K. Latimer, tenant in possession, to recover a tract of land claimed under a concession alleged to have been made by Masot, Governor pro tem of the Province of West Florida, to one Francisco Rocheblave, on the 25th day of November, 1817. The declaration, notice, consent, rule, and plea, (upon which issue was joined,) are in the usual form. At the last November term of that court, the cause came on for trial, and the issue was submitted to a jury, who returned a verdict for the defendant, upon which verdict a judgment was duly entered, upon which this writ of error is prosecuted.

The following bill of exceptions is set out in the record, upon which all the errors complained of in this case are assigned, viz:

Be it remembered, that, on the trial of this case of John Doe, on the demise of Florentio T. Commyns vs. William K. Latimer, the plaintiffs offered in evidence of their title to the premises in controversy a paper writing, of which the following was proved to be a true translation, to wit:

PETITION.

To His Excellency, the Governor and sub-delegate of Royal Finance:

Francisco Rocheblave, an inhibitant of this town, with due respect, says: that being desirous to make an establishment, and knowing that the tract of land commonly known by the point of the Flag Staff is vacant, he humbly entreats your Excellency that you have the goodness to grant him eight hundred arpens in 76 the place described above, a favor which he hopes to receive from the equity of your Excellency.

[Signed] FRANCISCO ROCHEBLAVE.

Pensacola, November 13th, 1817.

DECREE.

Pensacola, November 24, 1817.

Let the surveyor General report whether the lands prayed for by the petitioner are vacant, and of the Royal Domain, and if being such, let this pass to the view of the Seignor Fiscal of Royal Finance.

[Signed.] MASOT.
[Countersigned.] JOSE CEVALLOS.

SURVEYOR'S REPORT.

To His Excellency, the Governor and sub-delegate:

The tract of land prayed for by the petitioner at the point of the Flag Staff is vacant, and there is no difficulty that it should be granted to him—nevertheless, your Excellency will decide as you may think proper.

[Signed.] PEDRO REGGIO.

Pensacola, November 23d, 1817.

FISCAL'S OPINION.

The Fiscal of Royal Treasury, having seen the petition of Francisco Rocheblave, praying for eight hundred arpens of land at the place indicated, and for the purpose expressed by him, the same being vacant, according to the report of the Surveyor, Pedro Reggio, says that your Excellency may, if you think proper, grant him the tract of land of eight hundred arpens in the spot designated, the Fiscal considering him provided with sufficient means for the undertaking as it required, remaining subject to the conditions prescribed in the regulations of 17th July, 1799, and that he shall not alien it to any foreigner, conformable to justice which he asked.

[Signed.] MANUEL ARMIREZ.

Pensacola, November 24, 1817.

NOTIFICATION.

On the same day we made it known to Francisco Rocheblave, which we certify.

On the same month and year, before Jose Masot, Governor pro tem., for the Province of West Florida, and sub-delegate of Royal 77
Treasury in the same, personally appeared Francisco Rocheblave, for the purpose of taking the oath required by the preceding Fiscal's opinion, and having done so in a legal manner, said that the tract of land which he solicits he wants for himself—that no foreigner has any share in his solicitation, and less will he alienate it to any such persons. He declares that the above statement is the truth under the oath he has taken and signed it with his honor, and we the assistant witnesses, to which we certify.

DECREE OF CONCESSION.

Pensacola, 25*th November*, 1817.

In consequence of the report of the Surveyor appointed, that the land solicited by the petitioner is vacant, and of the Royal Domain, he having also taken the oath required by his Honor the Fiscal of Royal Treasury, the eight hundred arpens of land are hereby granted to the said Francisco Rocheblave in the spot designated. Let them be surveyed and marked out by the Surveyor, to be submitted to the superior authority. Costs to be taxed.

[Signed,] MASOT,
DOMINGO LAUSA,
JOSE CEVALLOS.

Jose E. Caro was then sworn, and said that he was well acquainted with the hand-writing of Masot, Governor, and sub-delegate of Royal Finance of West Florida, whose name is affixed to said paper writing, and of Manuel Armirez, Fiscal of the Royal Treasury, and of Cevallos and Lausa, witnesses of assistance, having often seen them write, and that he believes the signatures of the same to be genuine; but that he is not acquainted with the hand-writing of Pedro Reggio, Deputy Surveyor, never having seen him write, but that he has seen his name affixed to a great number of grants, afterwards approved by the United States Land Commissioners, and that this signature resembles all the others, and he therefore believes this to be his genuine signature. Deponent further says that Intendant Morales left in 1813, and that Cobannos was appointed in his stead, who also left here in 1815, after which time there was no officer here answering to that of Intendant. That the power to sell lots was in 1813 vested in the Cabildo, and that 78
Governor Masot made some eighty grants of land similar in form to the grant above set forth; that, at the time this grant is dated, there was no Intendant, but there was one in Havana, who ratified and confirmed two grants made by Masot for large grants of land—one of 7,000 arpens, and one for 3,500. Pedro Reggio was Deputy Surveyor, and received his appointment from the principal surveyor, who resided in Havana; that, when Morales was here, in him was vested the sole power of granting land, and this grant is in the same form with the others made by Masot.

The plaintiff further asked said witness if it was customary after 1813 for the Spanish Government to grant complete title to lands, without requiring proof of the performance of conditions of cultivation and habitation? The witness answered that there was nothing in the records of his office, that shewed that the Spanish authorities in a single instance required compliance with the conditions.

The court ruled out this answer, on the ground that the record must be produced, it being the highest evidence, to which decision the plaintiff excepts.

The court decided that the above paper writing should not be permitted to go to the jury as evidence of title, to which decision the plaintiff also excepts, and prays the court to sign and seal this bill of exceptions, which is accordingly done.

The following are the errors assigned:

First. When the plaintiff on the trial of said cause asked the witness, Joseph E. Caro, if it was customary after 1813 for the Spanish Government to grant complete titles to lands, without requiring proof of performance of conditions of cultivation and habitation; and the said witness answered, that there was nothing in the records of his office that showed that the Spanish authorities in a single instance required compliance with the conditions. The court ruled out the answer, on the ground that the record must be produced, being the highest evidence.

Second. When the plaintiff offered as evidence of title of the lessor to the premises in controversy a paper writing, of which a true translation is set forth in said plaintiff's bill of exceptions, and proved the same by the witness, Joseph E. Caro, as set forth in said bill of exceptions, the said court decided that the said paper writing should not be permitted to go to the jury.

In regard to the first error assigned, it may be remarked, that both the question to, and the answer of the witness, appear to be wholly immaterial. There is nothing in the record to show that any application was made after the year 1813, to the Spanish authorities in the province of West Florida, by any one holding a conditional concession for a real or complete title, or that the question in any way arose whether a title would be granted without a compliance with the conditions or not, nor does it appear that the witness, Mr. Caro, kept an office in which, if there was any record evidence that the Spanish authorities had required the performance of such conditions, such evidence might be supposed to exist. Had it been shewn, however, that Mr. Caro was keeper of the Public Archives, and had charge of the records and documents left by the Spanish Government on the transfer of the province to the United States, which we think likely (from the shape of the question put to him by the plaintiff) was the fact, still the answer (which by-the-by was not at all responsive to the question) is wholly immaterial, because the question to be settled is not whether it is customary for the Spanish authorities in West Florida, after the year 1813, to require proof of cultivation and habitation before granting complete titles to land, but whether such proof was required by the laws, royal orders and regulations in force in the Province after that time on this subject.

That a government or an individual, who makes a grant of land upon a condition precedent, may waive or dispense with a compliance therewith, and convey a full, absolute and complete title without a performance of it, so long as he holds the reversion, and the interest of no one else can be in anywise prejudiced by such conveyance cannot be doubted. But when he conveys that reversionary interest to a third persons, his right to do ceases.

Here the Spanish Government had by the treaty of cession between it and the United States of the 22d of February, 1819, transferred its whole and entire interest in the public domain in the Floridas, including all such reversionary interests, to the latter. See U. S. Statutes at Large, 258. And their interests, it is apprehended, are governed by laws, ordinances and regulations referred to. The Spanish authorities of the Province of West Florida, may have had very good reasons, (or such as they may have deemed good,) for relaxing the rule or dispensing with a compliance with such conditions in individual instances, or indeed including a general class of claims which might not apply to this, and if they did, would not affect the legal question. They may have dispensed with a compliance with the conditions, because the grantee had been unfortunate, or perhaps by some act of Providence may have been rendered unable to perform them, or because after the concession was made, the grantee had rendered some important services to the Government. Governor Kindelan relaxed the rule requiring performance of such conditions in East Florida in 1815, on account of Indian hostilities, so far as to grant absolute titles to settlers who had actually built houses and improved their lands, although the ten years settlement (then required by the regulations of Governor White,) was not complete.—2 White's New Rec., 288. See White's regulations as to occupation and cultivation.

The relaxation of the rule by the Spanish authorities in certain cases for special reasons, would not and could not affect the general rule prescribed by the laws, ordinances, and regulations then in force.

In the case of the United States vs. Kingsley, 12 Peters Rep., 486, it was strongly urged in behalf of the claimant, that no instance was known of lands so decreed having reverted to the class of public lands, for the non-performance of the conditions. This is like the negative testimony offered in the case before us. Here no proof of any such current of cases appears, or is shewn to have been offered, and after the year 1815, the Intendant, the superior authority to whom the process verbal was to be sent, and who alone it would seem had the right to dispense with performance of the conditions upon which a grant was made, did not, as we are informed by the testimony of Mr. Caro, reside in the Province.

The power to grant lands was in October, 1798, reconferred on the Intendant (from whom it seems to have been for a time withdrawn,) so far as respected Louisiana and West Florida, but this order does not extend to East Florida. There it remained with the Governor. The United States vs. Clark, 8 Peters, 152. And nothing is shewn or even suggested to take this case out of that rule.—Whether therefore the court erred or not in ruling out this answer of the witness, Mr. Caro, it does not vary the case of the plaintiffs. They have sustained no injury by its rejection, and where a party has sustained no injury by the rejection of admissible testimony, he cannot avail himself of the mistake to reverse the judgment.—Smith vs. Ruecastle, 2 Halsted's Rep., 357. Overby vs. Paine, 3. J. J. Marsh, 717. Bosley vs. Chesapeake In. Co., 3 Gill and John., 450.

We proceed therefore to the discussion of the second error assigned, 81 which we think cannot be sustained for several reasons. The document the rejection of which is assigned for error, is called a Grant, which may comprehend both the incipient and the complete title.—The greater number of those in Florida appear to have been of the first description. Many of them contained conditions, on the performance of which the right to demand a complete title depended. The United States vs. Clark, 8 Peters, 450. The one now under consideration is of this description. It purports to have been made by Masot Governor pro tem, of West Florida, and sub delegate, &c., on the 25th day of November, 1817. At that time the regulations of Morales were in full force, and were the laws of the Province of West Florida on the subject of the granting of land. Ibidem. The first article of these regulations provided that to each newly-arrived family (a chaque famille nouvelle) who are possessed of the necessary qualifications to be admitted among the number of cultivators of these Provinces, and who have obtained permission of the Government to establish themselves on a place which they may have chosen, there shall be granted, for once, if it is on the bank of the Mississippi, four, six or eight arpens in front on the river, by the ordinary depth of forty arpens, and if it is in any other place, the quantity which they shall be adjudged capable to cultivate, and which shall be deemed necessary for pasture of his beasts, in proportion, according to the number of which his family is composed understanding that the concession is never to exceed eight hundred arpens. 2 White's New Rec., 234.

The report of the Fiscal in the case now before us, considering the petitioner provided with sufficient means for the undertaking required, appears to have been made with an especial view to this, and to the 4th article, and the quantity of land in this concession is we see extended to the maximum allowed to be granted.

The fourth article of the regulations provides that "the new settlers who have obtained lands shall be equally obliged to clear and put into cultivation in the precise time of three years all the front of their concessions of the depth of at least two arpens in the penalty of having the lands granted remitted to the domain, if that condition was not complied with. 2 White's New Rec., 234, 235. In this case no proof whatever appears of a compliance with these conditions.

There were three classes of grants made in the Floridas. First, absolute grants in consideration of services already performed, which were made by the Governors in special cases, either in virtue 82 of special power recognized by the laws of the Indies (2 White's New Rec. 38, 40, 52) or by the authority given in particular decrees coming directly or indirectly from the sovereign, as in the case of grants conferred upon Ygnacie Salens, Don Manuel Paulin and Don Juan Perchaman by Governor Estrado of East Florida pursuant to a Royal order March 29th, 1815. 2 White's New Rec. 280. Second. Grants in consideration of services to be performed, and deemed specially important, for the improvement of the province. These do not seem to have grown out of any law or Royal order, but were not unfrequent for some years before the cession of Florida to the United States. Ibid. 286, 289, 290. Third. But the greater number of cases was that of gratuitous grants in moderate quantities for purposes of actual occupation and cultivation. To this class is applicable the general system of Spanish land law, which existed in Florida and Louisiana, and the regulations embraced under it are as clear and distinct as those of the laws of the United States. It is true the grants were gratuitous but the performance of the conditions annexed by that law, was a consideration as explicit as the payment required by our laws.

The United States vs. Wiggins, Arguendo, 14 Peters, 340. The regulations in regard to these grants are first found in the laws of the Indies promulgated by the King of Spain in 1682. By these laws grants were distributed by the Governors to settlers, on condition that they should take actual possession of the lands granted in three months and build upon and cultivate them, and after four years of such occupation they were entitled to hold the lands in absolute property. White's New Rec. 48, 50, 51. The incipient grant called a concession, was deposited in the office of the Governor's Secretary, but on proof of the necessary occupation and cultivation the seller received an absolute grant or (as it was called) a Real title (a titulo de propriedad) which was recorded in the office of the Escribano or Notary of the Province. Ibid, 282.

The quantity to be given to each settler was not prescribed by the laws of the Indies, but the Governors were directed to graduate it and it was different in different provinces. These regulations were subsequently recognized by the King of Spain in his Royal orders of 1735, 1754 and 1768. Ibid, 62, 64 & 71. The United States vs. Clarke, 8 Peters 450. And in the latter it is declared that, "where any shall not apply themselves in a proper manner to improve the

John Doe, on Demise of Florentio Commyns, et al., vs. W. K. Latimer, &c.

83 lands allotted to them the same shall be taken from them (which I do said the King without mercy) and granted to others who will fulfil the conditions."

In the case of the United States vs. Wiggins above cited, the grant was for three hundred acres which she asked the Governor to grant her on the eastern side of the pond of St. George, as she had five children and five slaves with herself. The decree of the Governor is in the following words, viz: "The tract which the interested party solicits is granted to her without prejudice to a third party and for the security thereof let a certified copy of this instance and decree be issued to her from the secretary's office.

[Signed,] ESTRADO."

This grant it will be perceived is (like the one now under consideration,) without any express condition as to occupancy and cultivation upon the face of it, but it was made when the regulations of Governor White were in force in East Florida, which required the grantee to take possession of, and cultivate the land within six months from the date of the concession, and to continue to occupy and cultivate them for ten years to acquire the right to an absolute title. And Mr. Justice Catron who delivered the opinion of the court in that case after discussing the question as to the validity of the title paper (a certificate of Aguilar, Secretary of the Government, at the time when it bears date) says: "The next question is, does the concession convey with it the conditions imposed by law on those having lands given them? By the regulations of Governor White published in 1803, it was provided that all concessions without time specified, shall be void, if the grantees do not appear to take possession of them within the term of six months. In the concession to Mrs. Wiggins, no time is specified for the settlement, and the Government of the United States (said the court) may take advantage of the non performance of the conditions prescribed by law if the 8th article of the treaty with Spain does not provide for the omission. It stipulates that grants of land made before the 24th day of January, 1818, shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands, to the same extent, that the same grants would be valid if the Territories had remained under the dominion of Spain." Ibid. 349, (and see 8 United States statutes at large 258.)

"That perfect titles (continued the court) made by Spain before the 24th day of January, 1818, within the ceded Territory are in-84 trinsically valid and exempt from the provisions of the 8th article, is the established doctrine of this court, and needs no sanction from the legislative or judicial departments of this country.

"But there were at the date of the treaty, very many claims whose validity depended upon the performance of conditions in consideration of which the concessions had been made and which must have been performed before Spain was bound to perfect the titles.—That a Spanish concession carrying on the face of it a condition the performance of which is the consideration for the ultimate perfect title is void unless the condition has been performed in the time prescribed by the ordinances of Spain, was determined by this court after the most mature consideration, in the case of the United States vs. Kingsley, 12 Peters 476 to 479 which is the leading decision upon the imperfect titles called Mill Grants, and which has been followed by all others coming within the principles, there, with so much accuracy, laid down."

The concession to Mrs. Wiggins, said Mr. Justice Catron, carrying with it the conditions incident to settlement rights, by the ordinances and usages of Spain, a brief notice in addition to what has already been said will be taken of the regulations and ordinances, and after referring to the treaty and to an ordinance published by Governor Coppinger of East Florida, on the 25th of November, 1818. 2 White's New, Rec. 282, 282. The United States vs. Kingsley, 1 Peters, 481, he proceeds: "From the ordinance it appears that concessions made to foreigners for large or small portions of land, conveying their documents with them (which shall be certificates issued by the Secretary) without having cultivated or even seen the country granted to them, such concessions are of no value or effect, and should be considered as not made, because the abandonment has been voluntary, and that they have failed in complying with the conditions prescribed for the encouragement of population," and therefore there is no reason why they should not revert to the class of public lands making null titles of cession which were made to them.

This is an adjudication of one of the highest tribunals, Executive, Legislative and Judicial, of the Government under which these grants were made,—one posessing ample power over, and master of the subject and has been followed by the highest judicial tribunal of our Country in the case which we have just now cited. In that case the court, after a most full and thorough investigation and discussion of the merits of the claim of the appellee, concluded by say- 85 ing: "Ten years had been the time required for cultivation and occupation; this rule was not rigidly adhered to, but the titles were perfected in some instance where valuable improvements had been made, and the occupation had been short of ten years, the Governor taking into consideration the disturbed state of the country.—These exceptions were abatements of the general rule requiring ten years cultivation and occupation. As Mrs. Wiggins never cultivated or occupied the land claimed, she took no interest under the rule, or any exception made to it, and it is free from doubt that had Spain continued to govern the country no title could have been made to her, nor can any be claimed of the United States as successors to the rights of Spain."

We have availed ourselves very fully of this case because it was most thoroughly and elaborately discussed and examined; is a leading case as to this class of grants, and is we think a direct authority as to the concession under consideration. The decree in that case was made upon a concession which in all its essential features is precisely analogous to that of Rocheblave. It is in point too, upon the position assumed, that exceptions in the practice of the Spanish authorities as to particular grants, did not establish a rule for others, and is, we think, upon the whole decisive of this case upon the points we have been discussing. The concession to Rocheblave was made with express reference to Morales' regulations which bear date 17th July, 1799. See 2 White's New Rec., 244.

The Fiscal in his opinion said "your Excellency may if you think proper grant him the tract of land of 800 arpens in the spot he designates remaining subject to the conditions prescribed in the regulations of 17th July, 1799;" evidently referring to those of Morales there being no other of that date. The only difference therefore between the two concessions appears to be, that the grant to Mrs. Wiggins was to be void and held as though not made, if she did not appear to take possession and cultivate within the term of six months and Rocheblave was "obliged to clear and put in cultivation in the precise term of Three Years, all the front of his concession of the depth of at least two arpens on the penalty of having the lands granted remitted to the domain if this condition was not complied with." We have seen the effect of her non compliance, viz: that she took no title under her concession. He did not comply and the lands granted to him were remitted by operation of law, to the public domain.

But there was another condition or requirement in the concession 86 to Rocheblave to be complied with, before the grantee could claim an absolute or real title. The concession itself upon its face required that the lands, the 800 arpens, should be measured and marked out by the surveyor, to be submitted to the Superior Authority, the same it is presumed of which the witness Mr. Caro speaks when he says, "that at the time this grant is dated there was no Intendant, but there was one at Havana who ratified and confirmed two grants made by Macot," from which it is (we think) fairly to be inferred that after the survey and demarkation was made the whole matter was to be submitted to the superior authority, for its sanction, and every one at all acquainted with the practice of the Spanish provincial governments in relation to these matters is aware that it was the business of the grantee to see that his survey was made and to pay the "costs to be taxed," and generally they were pretty heavy. Hence the reason probably why so many tracts remained unsurveyed. The surveys were made by the public surveyors, but it was the duty of the grantee to attend and point out the lands he had selected, and if such were not the general rule, it is the one that seems to have been prescribed by Masot in this case, and the concession being so vague the survey and demarkation was necessary to sever these lands from the public domain, as that was not done, they remained a part of it and were at the cession transferred to the United States. This is shewn by the case of the United States vs. Forbes, 15 Peters 178, 183, and the United States vs. Miranda, 16 Peters, 160, where the case of Forbes is cited and commented on. Forbes in his petition for the land after describing it said "the survey of which I will produce as soon as the tranquility of the province enables me," &c.

And in adjudicating upon that grant the Supreme Court of the United States laid much stress upon the circumstances that he had failed to do so. The concession or grant (for these terms as used in regard to Spanish titles in Florida are synonymous) to John Forbes said the court, was for 10,000 acres in the district or bank of the river Nassau, with an order that the concession should serve him as "a title in form," and it was the duty of the party, said the Governor in the concession, to produce the plat and demarkation in the proper time. This is no more than the order in the concession to Rocheblave. No survey of the land granted was ever made in Forbes' case. "The duty imposed upon him (say the court) to produce the plat and demarkation in the proper time was never performed." This grant was rejected because it calls were two indefinite; a difficulty which the survey and demarkation would have avoided. In the case of the United States vs. Miranda (before referred to) 16 Peters, 160, the court say: "Courts of justice can only adjudge what has been granted, and declare that the lands granted by the lawful authorities of Spain are separated from the public domain. The grant now sought to be confirmed (said the court) was not so separated by survey, or any such distinctive call, as will admit of survey." And here it may not be amiss to remark that the words, shall serve him as "a title in form" in the grant to Forbes are at least equivalent to the word "hereby" in the concession to Rocheblave, which it is insisted conveyed "a consummate title," yet they were not understood by the Supreme Court as conveying any thing more than the incipient title, nor were they considered as relieving Forbes from the duty and necessity of procuring and submitting the survey.

The Court in the case of Miranda refer to the undertaking of Forbes above mentioned to produce a plat and demarkations and his failure to do so, and say, "this was a condition he assumed upon himself. The execution and return of the survey could only sever the land granted from the public domain. No particular land having been severed from the public domain by John Forbes his was the familiar case of one having a claim to a large section of country unlocated, &c. In such a case the government has ever been deemed to hold the fee unaffected by a vested equitable interest, until the location was made according to the law of the particular country."

In grants of land with uncertain designations, to be made in a large district of country they must have been severed from the public domain by a survey, or be void for want of identity. The same doctrine was held in the case of the United States vs. O'Hara, 15 Peters 275. The United States vs. Delespine, 15 Peters, 317.—Buyck vs. the United States, 15 Peters, 215, and the United States vs. Lawton et al., 5 Howard's S. C. Peps. 10.

Indeed the settled doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States in respect to these Florida grants is, that grants of land embracing a wide extent of country, or within a large area of natural or artificial boundaries and which lands were not surveyed before the 24th of January 1818, and which are without such designation as will give a place of beginning for a survey, are not lands withdrawn
88 from the mass of vacant lands ceded to the United States in the Floridas, "and are void as well on that account as for being so uncertain that locality cannot be given to them." The United States vs. Miranda, 16 Peters, 160, 161.

The court most fully concurs with the Supreme Court of the United States in that opinion and considers this grant as it presents itself for their consideration, as one of that description. Rocheblave in his petition to the Governor for the land says "being desirous to make an establishment, and knowing that the tract of land commonly known by the point of the Flag Staff is vacant, &c. Here then is the description, "the tract of land commonly known by the Flag Staff." The surveyor in his report speaks of it as "the tract of land at the point of the Flag Staff." Neither of these descriptions convey any very definite idea or fix any definite point for the commencement of a survey. It seems quite probable from the description of the tract given by the grantee and they surveyor, that it had obtained the name of "the tract of land by or at the point of the Flag Staff." But what was the extent of the tract whether only 800, or whether 8000, or 8,000,000 arpens, or how it was situated, what were its boundaries, whether there was ever a flag staff upon it, or in the region of it or not, or whether there is or is not any specific starting point for a survey upon it or not, is not shewn by the grant itself, nor do the pleadings or evidence in the record inform us. It must be borne in mind that this is an action of ejectment in which the plaintiff's if they recover at all, must recover upon the strength of their own title, and not upon the weakness of that of the defendant. Runnington on ejectment, page 15. McHenry on Ejectment, page 115. Tillinghast's Adams on Ejectment, page 32.—Hodsden vs. Staple, 2 Term Rep., 684. Doe on the Demise of Crowe vs. Boldware 5 Term Rep. 110. Doe on the Demise of Haldane and Urry vs. Harvey, 4 Burrows Rep. 2487. Walker vs. Carlter. Addison's Rep., 390. 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 152.—2 Greenleaf's Evidence, page 266, Sec. 231. The plaintiffs must shew a paramount legal title in themselves or they cannnot recover. Swayze and wife vs Burke, 12 Peters, 12, 23.

And the defendant may set up an outstanding title in a third person as a defence, Lane vs. Simms Lessee, 9 Wheaton's Reps., 515. Runnington on Ejectment, 15. McHenry on Ejectment, 115.

All concessions or incipient Spanish grants were made without injury to a third persons. Sometimes it was so expressed in the concessions, but if it was not so expressed the exception was implied by 89 law. In the case of the United States vs. Heirs of F. M. Arrendondo and others, 13 Peters, 134, the court says. "If upon the survey it shall be found to interfere with previous grants to third parties the concession must be lessened in quantity according to the extent of the rights of such third parties."

Suppose then that this grant had been permitted to go to the jury as evidence of title and the lands called for by it, had been covered by older valid grants, it is not perceived how the defendant could have availed himself of that fact in his defence. It would seem that his right to do so would have been defeated by the vagueness of this concession; a reason sufficient of itself for its exclusion.

It is alleged, however, on behalf of the plaintiff, that this grant "might have been made sufficiently certain by other evidence, if the rejected evidence had gone to the jury as a foundation."

It is also insisted that the objection that, "there was no evidence of a compliance with the regulations of Morales," is a question "that does not arise upon the exceptions, but was a question for the jury."

This, however, as the matter is presented to us, we think a misapprehension. It would have been a question for the jury had evidence of such compliance been given in the court below. But this court cannot intend that there was any other evidence than that stated in the bill, and every bill must be considered as presenting a distinct case, which if defective in any material point, cannot be supplied by intendment. Dunlap vs. Monroe, 7 Cranch, 270.

If parol evidence to explain a deed be excepted to, the bill must state the evidence, so that the court above can decide whether it was admissible or not. Gateman vs. Burrows, 3 Call, 194. (King vs. Kenny, 4 Ham. 79. McDougal vs. Flemming, Ibid, 388. I United States Digest, 415, No. 96.) The court will not presume facts that do not appear on the bill. Jackson vs. Bellow, 2 Porter's Rep. 29. Cravens vs. Grant. 4 Monr., 126. Where parol evidence is excluded which might be proper when connected with a record, the bill of exceptions should state that such record was offered, otherwise it will be presumed that the parol evidence alone was offered. McDowell vs. Curwell, 4 Rand., 317.

In this case the concession being excluded, which according to the position assumed, might have been proper with parol evidence to show a compliance with the conditions prescribed by Morales' regulations, and to define the location (if it could be defined,) the bill of 90 exceptions should have shewn that such evidence was given or offered to be given. And where evidence not admissible in itself, but which might have become so by being connected with other evidence, is rejected by the court, and a bill of exceptions filed, the bill ought to state that such other evidence was offered, otherwise it will not be presumed. Courtenay vs. Commonwealth, 5 Rand., 666.

In this case it is not pretended that the grant was in itself evidence but that it was offered as a link in the chain. It ought therefore to have been shewn by the bill of exceptions that the evidence to supply the other links in the chain was offered. There is no difference (in effect) between a statement in a bill of exceptions, that certain facts were proved, and that evidence was offered of them. Reggin vs. Petapsco In. Co., 7 Harr. and John., 279.

The regulations of Morales which profess to be made, "That all persons who wish to obtain lands may know how to ask for them, and on what conditions lands can be granted," 2 White's New Rec., 234, go on to provide, Art. 15, page 238, that all concessions shall be given in the name of the King by the General Intendant of the Province, and directs that a survey shall be made, &c. And a process verbal, specifying the manner, &c. And in article 16 directs that the process verbal with a certified copy of the same shall be sent to the Intendant to the end that on the orignal there be delivered by the consent of the King's Attorney General, the necessary title paper, to which was to be annexed the certified copy of the process verbal. And if nothing further appeared this itself would shew that until all this was done, the right of the grantee was inchoate and imperfect, and that the legal title remained in the Government.

But in article 18, Morales says: "Experience proves that a great number of those who have asked for lands, think themselves the legal owners of it; those who have obtained the first decree by which the surveyor is ordered to measure and put them in possession, others after the survey has been made, have neglected to ask the title of the property, and such like abuses continuing for a longer time will augment the confusion and disorder which necessarily results.

"We declare that no one of those who have obtained the said decrees notwithstanding, in virtue of them the survey has taken place, and that they have been put in possession, can be regarded as owners of the land, until their real titles are delivered completed 91 with all the formalities before recited." Rocheblave had no survey, and never so far as the record shews, was ever put in possession of these lands. It is very evident, therefore, that under the Spanish Government he was not the owner of this tract of land, and we are not aware of any principle by which his right to it can have acquired any additional strength by the cession and transfer of the Floridas to the United States.

We are therefore clearly of the opinion that this concession is not evidence of title, and that it was properly ruled out by the Court below.

Hitherto we have said nothing in regard to the power of Governor Masot to make these incipient grants of land. It was not necessary to the decision of this case that we should question his general power to do so. But it may not be improper for us to remark that if this grant is to be understood (as the counsel for the claimants seem to understand it,) as embracing the land on which the flag stood, and that was a flag staff used by the Government for Naval, Military or Commercial purposes, we do most strongly question whether the making it by Governor Masot would ever have been sanctioned by the superior authorities to whom the survey and the process verbal were (as we have seen) to be submitted and from whom the title paper was to come.

Upon full and careful examination of this case, we are of opinion that there is no error in the record and proceedings of the Court below and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

Per Totam Curiam.

92 ADMINISTRATOR AND ADMINISTRATRIX OF JOHN SMITH vs. JOHN C. POYTHRESS AND OTHERS.

Where notes had been given by a husband for materials and merchandise, used and employed for the benefit of the separate estate of his wife, and for her support and maintenance, and judgments had been recovered on the notes against the husband, and executions had been returned "no property found." Held, on bill filed for that purpose by these judgment creditors, that the separate estate of the wife was liable in equity for the payment of these claims.

Had the husband paid these demands, he would have been entitled to be re-imbursed out of the separate estate, and the creditors are entitled in equity to the same equity, the husband being insolvent.

APPEAL from Jackson Circuit Court.

Woodward, for Appellants.

Yonge, for Appellees.

LANCASTER, Justice.

This case comes from Jackson Circuit Court, and is a Bill in Chancery of the administrator and administratrix of John Smith, deceased, to make the settled, separate estate of Mary E. Cheeseborough, wife of William B. Cheeseborough, liable for the payment of debts contracted by William B. Cheeseborough, who was acting agent on said estate for his said wife, for supply and improvement of said estate, and which contracts were for the comfort, accommodation, and advantage of his wife, the said Mary E. Cheeseborough, and made with her assent and sanction. The debts were contracted, one with John R. Chapman, for lumber and plank appropriated in the erection of a dwelling house, carriage house, negro houses, gin house, stables, &c., on the said separate estate of his said wife, amounting to the sum of $647 69-100; and another for goods, wares, and merchandise for the benefit of his said wife, the said Mary, and for the support and maintenance of her said separate estate, with one Washington Chapman for the sum of $126 11-100. William B. Cheeseborough gave his separate notes for these two demands, which came regularly to the intestate of the complainants by assignment. Suits were brought upon them, judgment obtainerd, execution issued against the said Wm. B. Cheeseborough, and a return had 9 thereon of "no property found."

To this bill the defendants demurred and allege as ground of demurrer want of equity in the bill; that, admitting the facts in the bill as true, the parties had taken Mr. Wm. B. Cheeseborough's notes in payment, upon which suit had been brought; that, having contracted with the agent, and given him credit, they cannot hold the principal bound.

It is alleged in the bill that the lumber bought of John R. Chapman was applied in the construction of a dwelling and other houses on the trust estate, and enhanced its comfort and permanent value; that the goods bought were for the support and maintenance of said estate; that the supplies were furnished with the assent and sanction of the cestui que trust. It may be true in general, in commercial transactions, that where one deals with the trusts the agent, he cannot hold the principal bound. But where an estate depends on equity for its existence it should do equity.

In this case, the cestui que trust knows of these contracts, when made assents to and sanctions them. Her trust estate has the advantage of the one in permanent improvements and repairs, in the other of support and subsistence. She herself has the benefit of the services of her husband, who is insolvent, by appropriating his whole time and attention to her business. She is rich—he is worth nothing. She receives and enjoys the benefits of these contracts, and is now willing to evade their responsibility. Permits her husband (who she knows to be insolvent) to liquidate these demands with his own notes, and coolly says to the complainants you have elected the agent as your debtor, make what you can out of him. To tolerate such a proceeding would (it seems to the Court) assist husband and wife in cases where she has a separate estate to defraud and deceive. Let it not be said, that because the husband is bound for the support and maintenance of the wife, therefore such contracts are made by him properly for that purpose, and her estate is not responsible for them. Howsoever true it may be that the husband is bound to support and maintain his wife as a general rule, cases like the present will, as they must, form exceptions: but in any event, they can furnish no ground to justify or defend fraud. A poor husband is not bound to support his rich wife by cheating his neighbor, and she will not be permitted to aid in the deception, enjoy and thrive by the fruits of it, and disclaim all liability. If the husband had been able, and paid these demands, he would in equity be entitled to have 9 them refunded to him from the proceeds and profits of the wife's equitable estate. 7th Paige, Ch. R., 13.

With equal equity the complainants may set up the same demand against the same estate. The property was bought for the trust estate, is mainly in permanent fixtures on it, and has not been paid for. Cater vs. Eveleigh, 4 Des. So. Ca. E. R. 20, and 1 McCord C. R. 369.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court, that the appeal be sustained, the judgment and decree below be reversed, the demurrer be overruled, and that the Appellees answer the bill in the Court below.

JAMES M. GILCHRIST, JUDGE, &C., vs. OSCAR FILYAU AND WIFE.

An action of debt cannot be sustained in this State against the heir upon the bond of the ancestor although the heir be expressly named.

Error to Gadsden Circuit Court.

This was an action of debt against Filyau and his wife, the latter being heir at law of W. D. Harrison, who had become security on the guardian bond of R. L. Harrison, guardian of Edward Mashburn, a minor. The plaintiff alleged as a breach of condition of the bond, that Robert L. Harrison, the guardian, had been removed from the office, and had failed to pay over and deliver to his successor the moneys and property received by him as guardian, &c Defendants pleaded "non damnificatus," and plaintiff demurred. The Court overruled the demurrer and gave judgment for defendants.

To reverse this judgment, the plaintiff took a writ of error, and assigned for error in this Court—"that the Court below erred in overruling the demurrer of the plaintiff to the plea of the defendants."

Thompson, for Plaintiff in Error.

Carmack, for Defendant in Error.

HAWKINS, Justice:

The pleadings in the this case raise the question, can an action of debt be sustained in this State by a creditor against the heir, upon the bond of his ancestor, the heir being expressly named.

If the solution of this question is to depend solely on the common law of England without reference to our statutes, the response would clearly be in the affirmative, for the principle is too well defined and settled to require comment or the sanction of authority. By that law the obligee of a bond could sue the heir, if expressly named, or the executor at his election, and have execution of the land descended to the heir, and this action being allowed against the heir no benefit could accrue to the obligee, unless he had execution of the lands descended to the heir. If the heir was not named in the bond he was not chargeable "for by the common law only the goods and chattels of the debtor and the annual profits of the land itself, were liable to execution for debt or damages, because these being the security the creditor depended upon, they were liable in the hands of his representative or executor, as well as in the hands of the debtor himself, and hence it was, that the executor was bound to answer the debt of the testator so far as he had chattels or essets, though he was not named in the contract; but the land was not liable to execution, because it was preserved from the personal contracts and engagements of the tenant, that he might be the better able to answer the feudal duties to the lord, and therefore the land not being originally liable to the demand in the hands of the obligor, must be much less in the hands of the heir, who was not comprehended in the contract." 3 Bacon's Ab., 458-9, (F.)

In England if a man died seized in fee, the descent goes to his eldest son, and the lands are not assets in the hands of the administrator for the payment of debts. By the laws of Florida there is no such thing as primogeniture, the lands descends in parcenary, and is expressly declared assets in the hands of the administrator or executor, and after the exhaustion of the personal assets may be sold to pay debts due by the estate, besides being liable with personal property to an execution existing upon any judgment against such executor or administrator. Thompson's Digest, 202, 203.

Here we see all distinctions known to the English law between the real and personal estate, as to their being assets in the hands of 96 the executor or administrator entirely done away, subject to some modifications to be noticed hereafter. This distinction being once established, the same rights, duties, and liabilities, as to both would seem to be the necessary result and consequence. We will proceed further and point out some other of the alterations of the common law as created by our statutes. With us bond debts are of no higher dignity than simple contract debts. "All promissory notes and other instruments of writing, not under seal, being declared to have the same force and effect, as bonds and instruments under seal." Thomp. Digest, 331.

By the law of England the title to the personal property, of the intestate devolves upon the administrator, and he can sue for, and recover it against the heir, the law throwing the duty upon him of paying the debts, the personal property being assets for that purpose. The statutes of Florida give a more general and comprehensive power to the executor or administrator by extending and enlarging the fund with which the debts are to be paid. The statute of 1841, declares that, "it shall be lawful for any administrator of any deceased intestate or the executor of any deceased testator who has not power by the will of the testator, to sell real estate for the purpose of paying debts, or to make more equal distribution among the heirs, devisees, or legatees, to file a petition in the Circuit Court of the county in which letters of Administration or letters testamentary, have been granted, setting forth that the personal estate of his interestate or testator, (as he case may be,) is not sufficient for the payment of the debts of such intestate or testator, or that the real estate of such testator or intestate cannot be equally, fairly, and beneficially, divided among the heirs or devisees of such intestate or testator, without the sale of the real estate," &c. The statute then points out what proceedings shall be had upon his petition before a sale of the real estate is ordered or decreed by the court.

The law of 1833 (Thompson's Dig. 202) declares that "real estate shall be considered assets in the hands of the executor or administrator, and after the personal assets are exhausted may be sold under an order or decree of the Judge of Probate or officer discharging the functions of Ordinary or Judge of Probate. It is provided in this statute that no sale of real estate shall be made to any greater extent, than shall be necessary to supply the deficinecy of personal assets for the payment of the just and lawful debts of the deceased.

James M. Gilchrist, Judge, &c., vs. Oscar Filyau and Wife.

We cannot see as contended, that the act of 1833 is repealed by 97 the act of 1841 further than changing the mode by which the executor or administrator is enabled to sell the real estate for the payment of debts where there is a deficiency of personal assets. On the contrary we think the law of 1841 is a virtual affirmance of that part of the law of 1833 which asserts that the lands shall be assets, and we think that its provisions are even more extensive by enabling the administrator or executor to sell real estate to make more equal distribution among the heirs or devisees.

The object of the law of 1841 is clearly to guard more effectually the rights of the heirs by presribing a process better calculated to produce the result than had existed by the law of 1833. The Judge of the Circuit Court is substituted in lieu of the Judge of Probate, and an issue is created for the purpose of better ascertaining the necessity of a sale of the real estate, and by making all persons interested in the lands parties to the issue their rights are necessarily more cautiously guarded. With these views we must consider the acts of 1833 and 1841 in pari materia and the former only so far repealed as conflicts with the latter upon the principle of leges posterioris priori abrogant.

By our statute of descent it is declared whenever any person having title to real estate of inheritance, shall die intestate as to such estate, it shall descend in parcenary to the male and female kindred. Thomp. Dig. 188. The rule of the common law in relation to descents is thereby clearly abrogated and annulled, and we have already seen that it is in direct conflict with our statues. Although by our statutes of descents the fee is clearly in the heir so that the inheritance may remain unbroken yet it is so cast upon him subject to the debts of the intestate and I might add the dower of the widow. If the lands are assets they must carry with them the incidents of assets, and when the law declares them to be such the power to render them available necessarily follows as an incident.

The rents and profits of the lands constitute a fund for the payment of creditors, and as they must be our laws look to the executor or administrator for payment of their demands how could that fund be made available unless the estate from which it springs be rendered amenable for the debts? And the law points out the mode by which it is to be accomplished. The rents and profits are incident to the land, and it is obvious that the law intended that the whole estate should be subject to the payment of debts.

By the sixth section of the law of 1828, it is enacted that "all 98 debts and demands of whatsoever nature against the estate of any testator or intestate, not exhibited within the said two years, (that is, from the time of granting the letters testamentary or letter of administration,) shall forever afterwards be barred." To this is appended a proviso, that the executor or administrator shall make advertisement for four weeks, giving "notice to all creditors, legatees, and persons entitled to distribution, that their claims and demands will be barred at the expiration of the period aforesaid, unless exhibited within the same—saving, however, to married women, infants, persons of unsound mind, imprisoned, or beyond the limits of the United States, in the military or naval service thereof during war, the said term of two years after their respective disabilities shall be removed, to exhibit their respective demands to said executors or administrators." Thomp. Dig., 206, sec. 6.

This statute, like all statutes of limitation, must be regarded as one of repose and specifying a period after which litigation shall cease. Its terms embrace "all debts and demands of whatsoever nature," specially or otherwise, and we have already seen that bond and simple contracts are placed upon the same footing.

It is asked, how by any possibility can this statute have the operation intended, if a bond creditor were permitted to come forward after the lapse of time embraced in the statute for the presentment of demands, and still render the lands liable in the hands of the heir. If so, the intention of the law would be frustrated, and it would cease to be a statute of limitations.

It may be said that the saving clause in it, allowing two years for the exhibition of demands after the removal of disabilities which might exist as to feme coverts, infants and others, would have the effect of prolonging the settlement of estates, and thereby defeat the object of the statute. Not so—because the law declares that no legacy or distribution shall be required of any executor or administrator until the expiration of six months from the taking out letters, &c., nor shall the executors or administrators be compelled to pay legacies or make distribution until bond and security be given by the person entitled to the same, to refund a due proportion of any debts or demands which may afterwards appear against the estate, and all cost which may be awarded on the same.

The Executor or Administrator if he has availed himself of the security provided by law in his behalf may have recourse to it for the payment of the debts or demands presented, or at least regard it as a means of reimbursing himself in case he pays the debt or demand. The bond and security may be regarded as a substitute for the fund parted with in the way of legacy or distribution, and are expressly provided for the refunding a due proportion of any debt or demand which may afterwards appear against the estate. If the land distributed could be followed in the hands of the heir, such a permission would be superfluous, and we think it clear, that the demand must be made to the executor or administrator.

Pursuing the propositions of counsel, suppose the present action maintainable, the result would be that the specialty creditor would obtain an undue advantage over the simple contract creditor, he being obliged to bring his action against the executor, and we have seen that our law places them upon the same footing in every respect. Besides it would be equally injurious to the heir, for by the law of England if he pays off the bond debt creditors to the value of the land, he may plead such payment against subsequent suits and then retain the land, but by our laws it would still be subject to the simple contract creditor as assets in the hands of the executor.

If the common law remedy against the heir is restored by the act of 1841, and the lands are not assets in the lands of the administrator or executor, the remedy of the simple contract creditor is lost against the land, which would go to the heir discharged of the simple contract debts, and the order of the payment of debts as prescribed by our statute would be done away and abolished.—Thomp. Dig. 205, Sec. 2.

It cannot be said we think, that owing to the views we have taken the remedies of the bond creitors are affected, because he is compelled to sue the administrator or executor, for inasmuch as lands are assets by our law in their hands, so long as there are any, subject to the debts of the testator or intestate, the plea of plene administravit could not be pleaded, and if it was so pleaded, it could be rebutted by showing that there were lands of which the testator or intestate died seized, which might be the subject of sale. Lands may be deemed assets sub modo, or conditional assets as contended for, but still they come within the purview of the term assets, which is defined to be property in the hands of the administrator or executor, that is sufficient to make him chargeable to a creditor, legatee or party in distribution so far as such property extends. Williams on Executors, 1011.

It is clearly the duty of the executor or administrator, in case there should be a failure of personal assets, to make application for the sale of lands in the mode pointed out by law. It is not a matter with him of mere discetion. The power given is one to be exercised, and if not so exercised the plea of plene administravit cannot avail him, and upon a proper case made out before the Circuit Court it equally has no discretion to refuse the order or decree of sale.

We find a case in the first volume of Stewarts Alabama Reports strongly in point with the case at bar. In that case there had been judgment rendered against the administrator, and it was decided that lands descended could not by scire facias against the heirs, be made liable to execution. The Chief Justice who delivered the opinion of the Court remarks "In England, if a judgment had been recovered against the ancestor, the lands which were liable to execution in his lifetime may be made liable after his death by scire facias against the heirs and terre tenants. Our Statute of 1812 gives to judgments and decrees a lien on lands, tenements, &c., and directs that the clerk shall frame the execution accordingly. But for debts, &c., for which judgment has not been obtained against the ancestor, the lands cannot be made liable to execution by judgment against the personal representative. Our statutes have pointed out another mode for subjecting the lands to the payment of debts. If the personal estate be insufficient the executor or administrator shall make his report accordingly, and the land shall be sold by order of the Court. This course does not abridge the rights of creditors, for as the administrator cannot have fully administered if on a deficiency of personal estate he fails to make his report as required so that the lands may be resorted to, the remedy is more ample that at common law." The statute here alluded to by the Court is one precisely like that of 1841 with the exception that in Florida the Judge of the Circuit Court is substituted for the Judge of Probate. Indeed we believe our statute is copied from the Alabama statute, and here is a direct adjudication upon it, sustaining us in the views we have taken.

Deeming upon a due consideration of the subject, that the common law remedy in favor of the bond creditor against the heir is annulled by our statutes, we are of opinion that the judgment of the Court below should be affirmed. Per Curiam.

BRADFORD, EXECUTOR, OF READ, ET AL., vs. MARVIN & MARTIN.

A cause in Chancery cannot be brought to this court by Writ of Error.

Error to St. John's Circuit Court.

Motion to dismiss the writ on the ground that the cause (being in Chancery) may be brought to this court by appeal only.

Forward & Fairbanks, for the Motion.

J. & L. Branch, Contra.

BALTZELL, Justice:

This case is brought here by writ of error, and a motion is made to dismiss it on the ground that a case in Chancery may be brought to this court by appeal only.

By the common law, a suit at law, after judgment, may be removed by writ of error only to this court, whilst by the practice in cases in Chancery obtaining according to the course of the civil law, an appeal is the appropriate remedy for removing a suit in Chancery after Decree. Ward vs. Gregory, 7 Peters, 453. The statute law has so far made an alteration as to allow Appeals in common law cases, but we are not aware of any provision extending the writ of error to cases in Chancery. The statute in reference to Appeals and writs of error declared that "the writ of error shall issue as a matter of right," obviously leaving the writ as it then was by law and making a reference necessary to the common law to determine the character of the cases to which it was applicable. Other clauses of the statute support the conclusion that the writ was considered as inapplicable to cases in Chancery, thus the form of the bond in case of supersedeas is for "the due prosecution of the suit in error; and in case of the affirmance of the judgment, to pay the defendant in error the condemnation and costs," The tenth section provides that "writs of error on judgment in civil actions shall be sued out within two years from the date of said judgments."

This view is still further confirmed by the act of 11th February, 1832, entitled an act to amend an act to regulate proceedings in Chancery, which declares that a party plaintiff or defendant may appeal from a decree at any time within two years, and for a supersedeas upon an order of one of the judges, thus extending the former law providing that appeal should be taken in term time, or within ten days thereafter. Duval, 108, 138.

We are then of opinion that the writ of error may not be used as a process to remove a case in chancery to this court, and for this reason the writ must be dismissed.

FLINT RIVER STEAM BOAT COMPANY, vs. ROBERTS, ALLEN & CO.

Where judgment had been rendered under the peculiar provisions of the second section of an act of the General Assembly approved January 4, 1847, entitled "An act given a lien to steam boat men and others navigating the Bay and River of Apalachicola," upon the affidavit of the plaintiff, without notice to the defendants or appearance by them and without any declaration filed or assessment of damages by a jury:—Held that such judgment must be reversed notwithstanding the statute does not expressly require either a summons, appearance by or notice to defendant, or a declaration or a jury trial.

Where consequences in violation of common reason, common right and the principles of common justice arise even collaterally out of a statute, it is void protanto.

The statute above referred to is in violation of the declaration of our Constitution, "that the right of trial by jury shall forever remain inviolate," and is null and void.

Writ of Error to Franklin Circuit Court.

The facts of the case precede the opinion delivered by the Chief Justice.

W. G. Davis, for plaintiff in error, contended:

That the Judge who granted the order on which the judgment was entered, did not possess any right to exercise jurisdiction as a Judge of the Circuit Court, in the county of Franklin, on the day on which he made the order. The Constitution has given power to the Legislature to pass laws requiring the Judges to alternate. The power so given has been exercised by the Legislature by act, which if adhered to compels them to preside in turn, in each and every Circuit of the State. The act not only affirmatively requires them to officiate as the Judge of each Circuit once in two years, but expressly negatives the exercise of judicial functions by the same judge in the same Circuit oftener than once in two years.—The terms used "shall not preside," are broad and comprehensive. In the present case the Judge of the Middle Circuit, according to these views, had no right under the alternating system to preside in Franklin at the time he gave the order for judgment.

The affidavit on which the order was issued was made by an agent, and this constitutes another ground for reversal. The statute being adverse to the common law, every person seeking the benefit of its provisions should be held to pursue the strict letter of the act.

The next and last objection to which I will ask the attention of the court is that the law itself is unconstitutional.

It is unconstitutional inasmuch as it infringes that provision of the Constitution of the U. States which provides that "in trials at common law where the amount in controversy exceeds twenty dollars the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate." The amount in controversy exceeded twenty dollars and the remedy for the recovery of the demand necessarily must be by the course of the common law. In other words the subject matter of the controversy was within common law jurisdiction.

Such being the nature of the right to be enforced, it only remains to enquire whether the remedy provided by the Legislature, and under which the proceedings were had, does or not preserve the right of trial by jury inviolate.

The act authorizes the party claiming against a boat for supplies —to have judgment by an ex parte demand supported by affidavit.—There is no trial at all either by jury or otherwise—nor has the party an opportunity of being heard in his defense. The proceedings under the statute are similar to those by the civil law where a party is condemned for contumacy for not appearing after summons, &c. The difference in the proceedings are that in the cases under the statute no summons of any kind is served. Now it must be evident that where the party is condemned to pay a demand by an ex parte proceeding, the right of trial by jury is altogether unavailable to him. The remedy provided by which the defendant may have the judgment opened it is true, does secure a 4 jury trial, but it prescribes terms and conditions hard to be complied with, unusual in the course of the common law, and calculated to hinder and prevent a defendant from obtaining the benefit of a jury trial.

The law requires that the defendant shall do all that a defendant in Equity is required to do, that he shall by affidavit admit or deny the whole debt or some part, and if a part is admitted that such part shall be paid ere he be permitted to contest the remainder, and that e shall give bond to respond to the final judgment. Now it may happen that the owner of a boat is unacquainted with the facts relating to the demands, and he may be scrupulous as to the denial of the validity of a demand of which he knows nothing. He may not be able to give security. It is evident that all the requisitions of the statute impose conditions unknown to the common law, and that they are calculated to render the attainment of the right of jury trial less easy and more difficult. Whatever delays, hinders or obstructs a party in the pursuit or enjoyment of a right, may be truly said to violate such right. In order to a correct determination of what was meant by the clause of the Constitution referred to, let us refer to the trial by jury as it existed at the time of its adoption, and such as we find it was at that time, such must it continue to be considered, and in order to obey the spirit of the Constitution must be preserved to the defendant undiminished and unaltered from its pristine state, when the Federal Government was created. In all cases where the Constitution refers to rights and remedies without specifically defining in what consists the particular right, or what is the nature of the remedy, it has been decided by the Supreme Court that reference must be had to the common law as it stood at the adoption of the Constitution, to determine any question that arises on such subject. Now it may be fairly argued that whenever the mode of proceeding in trials at common law is so altered as to postpone the trial by jury to a time subsequent to the rendition of the judgment and the seizure of the defendants property, that such a course of law, being entirely different and opposite to the common law method of proceeding, is a violation of the common law, and if a violation of the law which secures a right to a party, it is a violation of that right. Any law it has been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, which, in prescribing the remedy on contracts, so acts as to obstruct the party in pursuit of his right to recover on a contract, and renders it "hardly worth pursuing," is a law "violating the obligation of contracts." 105
Now as a carollary to such proposition of constitutional law, may we not assert that a law which materially alters—varies the mode of trial by jury, and which imposes new, greater and hard conditions, as a pre-requisite to its enjoyment, violates the right which the Constitution declared should remain forever inviolate. Certainly the conclusion is fair and legitimate and the premises and the reasoning are analagous and parallel. The Legislature may alter so as to increase, but it cannot alter so as to diminish the right. Whenever in human affairs a right which an individual member of society is so interfered with as to hinder and obstruct him in the enjoyment of the benefits which flow from its uninterrupted possession, it is said to be violated. Whenever an object of art, a monument raised to commemorate the great deeds of some departed hero is shorn of its fair proportions by the rude hands of man, it is said to be violated. Such examples of the acceptation among men in which the word is used, are cited to sustain the positions assumed, that inasmuch as the act in question hinders and obstructs a man in the employment of the right of trial by jury, such as it was when the Constitution secured it to him, and whereas by the provisions of the act, such right has been marred in its beauty of form and "curtailed of its fair proportions," has been narrowed and confined in its limits, the act itself must be considered as operating to violate the right.

The law in question also violates that provision of the Constitution of the United States which declares that a citizen shall not be leprived of his property except by due course of law.

The meaning of the Constitution was that the property of a man should not be taken away except by the verdict of a jury and judgment of a court and after a trial by law. It was intended to prevent confiscation and seizures by arbitrary authority, or by private hands, under pretence of doing summary justice. It therefore provides that the due course of law shall be followed. It inhibits the passage of a law giving an extraordinary and particular remedy to a particular individual or to a particular class of men.

The due course of law meant was the course which was pursued at the time the Constitution was adopted, subject to such alterations and modifications (as might be effected by the Legislature,) not inconsistent with the true spirit of the common law, the great original head and source of all the law known to the Constitution, or meant 106 to be defined by that instrument under the nomen generalis.—LAW.

I contend that the Constitution by the provision last quoted meant to prohibit the passage of a law to give any particular person or persons particular remedies by means of which they could obtain possession of the property of another, which proceeding should be different in its spirit and in its operation, from the usual and existing "course of law," which should be required of other citizens, and contrary to that spirit and course of the common law designated by the terms employed in the section of the Constitution last quoted.

All particular and partial Legislation might be safely declared to be in violation of the spirit of the Constitution of our State, and that of the United States; but certainly such Legislation is so, which gives to one man or set of men rights not to be enjoyed by others, and rights which if enjoyed by all must be possessed and used at the expense of, and by means of, the curtailing of the rights of others. Such is the character of the act in question—it permits one set of men to proceed in a summary manner to enforce a right, whilst other men are held to the pursuit of their rights in the slow, yet steady, and sure method known to the common law, and derived from it, but simplified and perfected by the statutes of the State.

For all these reasons I contend that the act in question is unconstitutional, in violation of the express requirements of that instrument, and in violation ofthe spirit of it. To conform to the spirit of that Constitution the remedy should be analogous to the common law remedies. The tribunal which decides upon the right, should proceed acording to the distinguishing and characterizing forms, of common law courts. The party defendant should be summoned in person or by attachment of his property, and be allowed "a day in court," to be heard by himself or by attorney in his defence, he should have the right to examine the witnesses produced against him, and to produce witnesses in his own behalf, and the trial of the issues of fact should be submitted to a jury, and not decided by the Judge on the testimony of the plaintiff alone. Any other mode of proceeding (by means of which a man's property is seized, and taken out of his possession,) not being in accordance (substantially) with the requisites and characteristics before enumerated, is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution and foreign to our institutions of Government; unworthy to be practiced among a free people, where equality in all things is asserted as a fundamental principle of the 107 compact of Government, and in violation of the provision which requires the observance of all cases of the "due course of law."

Carmack & Baker for Defendants in Error.

In this case there are five grounds of Error assigned. We will notice them in detail:

1. It is alleged that the Judge of the Middle District granted the Fiat. And that it should have been granted by the Judge of the Western District.

To this we reply that the application may be made before "any Judge of the Circuit Court in any county in which said boat may lie." Act 1846, Thomp. Dig. 413, Sec. 2.

2. It is said that the demand of payment was made by an agent of plaintiff instead of the plaintiff in person and that the affidavit was made by an agent.

To this we reply—that having been done by an agent, they were in contemplation of law done by the principal.

3. It is alleged that there was no summons, or jury trial, or notice to the defendants, or declaration.

To this we reply that the act requires none and where the difficulty of knowing who the owners of steam boats are is considered, it would have been unreasonable in the Legislature to have required any notice to the defendants—none is required by the attachment law and none here.

The act does not require a declaration. If the defendants desire a jury trial—the act gives it to them upon their application to have it, and the act in the meantime arrests the proceedings under the Execution.

Instead of taking these proceedings in this case, the defendant waived it by giving a bond for the delivery of the boat on the day of sale.

4. The proceeding is contrary to the course of the Common Law.

To this we answer, this is no valid objection. All equity proceedings; Atachment laws; Tax sales; Admiralty cases, and summary proceedings generally, are contrary to the course of the Common Law.

5. The Record and proceedings are unconstitutional in this—they violated the 5th and 7th articles of the Constitution. See amendments.

108 To this we answer that these articles are intended solely as limitations on the exercise of power by the Government of the United States, and are not applicable to the legislation of the States. DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This case came up by writ of error from a judgment rendered by a Judge of the Circuit Court at Chambers at Apalachicola, in Franklin county, on the fifth day of June, A. D. 1847, under the peculiar provisions of the second section of an act of the General Assembly of this State, "approved January 4th, 1847," Thompson's Digest, 414, which provides that "whenever any captain, pilot, engineer, first or second mate, fireman, deck hand, merchant, builder, material man, or any other person employed in, or for materials, goods, or supplies furnished any steamboat, lighter or other water craft navigating or running on the Apalachicola river, and bay of Apalachicola, shall have any claim for services rendered on board the same, or for provisions stores, or work and labor done, shall be desirous of collecting the same upon the said debt becoming due and refusal to pay the same upon demand made, he, she, or they may upon application to any judge of the Circuit Court in any county in which said steamboat, lighter or other water craft, may then lie, upon the same arriving at the landing, port, or place of destination to which the same had been freighted, make affidavit before the said Judge, of the amount due him, her, or them, for any labor, services or supplies by him, her or them, done and performed, or provisions or stores furnished said steamboat, or other water craft, and specify the name thereof. Whereupon the said Judge shall grant an order to the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the county where the proceedings shall have been commenced requiring said clerk to enter up judgment upon said affidavit in favor of said applicant for the amount sworn to be due; and it shall be the duty of said clerk to issue instanter an execution therefor against the owner or owners of 109 said steamboat, lighter, or other water craft, to be directed to the Sheriff of the County, whose duty it shall be forthwith to levy said execution upon the said steamboat, or other water craft, and advertise and sell the same under the same rules and regulations as govern Sheriff's sales in other cases. Provided, the said demand exceeds the sum of fifty dollars." (If said sum shall be for fifty dollars or less, then, and in that case the application shall be made to a Justice of the Peace, &c. Ibid.)

An affidavit was made before said Judge by Luther D. Roberts, agent claiming for Roberts, Allen & Co., the sum of six hundred and fifty-seven 60-100 dollars, for iron work and material furnished said Flint River Steamboat Company, to and for the use of said steamboat. Whereupon the said Judge entered the following order: "At Chambers, June 5th, 1847, upon reading the foregoing petition and affidavit annexed, it is ordered that the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Franklin county, do enter up judgment in favor of Roberts, Allen & Co., in the sum of six hundred and fifty-seven 60-100 dollars, ($657 60-100,) amount sworn to against 'The Flint River Steamboat Company,' owners of steamboat Magnolia. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this day and year above written." This order officially signed by said Judge, was on the same day presented by the plaintiff to the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Franklin County for the entry of judgment as therein prescribed, and in pursuance thereof the said clerk entered up judgment as follows, viz: "It is therefore considered by the court that the plaintiffs recover against the said defendants the sum of six hundred and fifty-seven dollars and sixty cents, together with their costs by them in this behalf expended." And upon the same day an execution issued on this judgment which was levied on the said steamboat Magnolia. The steamboat was replevied until the first Monday in December, 1847, that being the first regular sale day after the said steamboat was replevied as aforesaid.

The plaintiff has assigned five several errors but we will only consider the third which we deem decisive of the case, and which is as follows, to wit:

"There was no summons issued and served, nor was there any evidence to show that defendant had any notice of the institution of this suit, nor was there any declaration filed, or any assessment of 110 damages by a jury."

The defendants in error contend that the statute above quoted does not expressly require either a summons, appearance by, or notice to the defendant, declaration or a jury trial. This is true but the defendant must have notice either actual or constructive, or no valid judgment can be entered against him. Hollingsworth vs. Barbour et al., 4 Peters, 470. Jones vs. Smith, 3 N. Hamp., 108. Hart vs. Huckins, 6 Mass. 399. Arnold vs. Tourtelot, 13 Pick., 172. Heathorn vs. Hulin, 3 J. J. Marshal, 432. Morris vs. Parker, 3 Littel, 368. Stayel vs. Westcott, 3 Day 349.

Statutes authorizing proceedings in derogation of the common law for the recovery of debts, generally provide specially, that notice of the institution thereof be given to the defendant. It has been said that our attachment law requires no notice. It is true that it requires no notice before the seizure of the property, but it expressly requires that notice of the institution of the suit shall be personally served upon the defendant, or shall be published for three months in some newspaper of the district, and if there be no newspaper, then a written advertisement in some public place. This notice by advertisement or writing is what the books call constructive notice, and our attachment law further provides that "the court upon satisfactory proof of the service of such notice, and upon the finding of a jury of inquest may award judgment. It also requires a declaration and other pleadings." Thompson's Digest, 359, No. 1. Duval's Comp., 388, Sec. 14. It also provides that no attachment shall issue until the party applying therefor, his agent, or attorney, shall enter into bond with at least two good and sufficient securities, payable to the defendants, in at least double the debt or sum demanded, conditioned to pay all costs and damages the defendant may sustain in consequence of improperly suing out said attachment.—Thompson's Digest, 388, No. 4. Duval, 391, Sec. 10. Thus strictly guarded are the rights of defendants under our attachment law. The act upon which this proceeding is founded contains no such safeguards for the defendants, and does not therefore commend itself to favorable consideration. In this case it is not pretended that there was any actual notice, or indeed any other notice, but the advertisement of the sale of the steamboat by the Sheriff. It was suggested (though apparently not relied on,) that the defendant had notice by this advertisement, but this was after judgment and besides is not notice to the defendant to appear and defend his rights, but is only notice to purchasers. Constructive notice can only exist in cases coming fairly within the provisions of the statutes authorizing courts to make orders of publication, and providing that the publication when made, shall authorize the courts to enter a judgment or decree. Hollingsworth vs. Barbour, et al., 4 Peters Rep., 466. Chief Justice Marshal in the case of Meads vs. Deputy Marsh., &c., 1 Brock, 388, held that "it is a principle of natural justice which courts are never at liberty to dispense with unless under the mandate of positive law that 'no man shall be condemned unheard, or without an opportunity of being heard.'" The statute under which this proceeding was commenced contains no such mandate. Although it does not expressly require, it does not prohibit the giving of notice, and if it is so framed that notice cannot consistently with its requirements be given, it may well deserve consideration whether it is not null and void, as being against the plain and obvious principles of common right. In Falconer vs. Montgomery and others, 4 Dall. 233, the court said: "The plainest dictates of natural justice must prescribe to every tribunal the law, that 'no man shall be condemned unheard.' It is not merely an abstract rule, or positive right, but it is the result of long experience, and of a wise attention to the feelings and disposition of human nature." And in the case of the Commonwealth vs. the inhabitants of Cambridge, 4 Mass., 627, it was held to be "an essential principle of natural justice that every man have an opportunity to be heard in a court of law upon every question involving his rights or interests before he is affected by any judicial decision of the question.—In the case of Commissioners of Highways vs. Clow and others, 15 John. 537 to 539, the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas was reversed because the decision of the Commissioners had been reversed on an "ex parte" hearing without notice to them, although by the statute under which the proceedings took place no notice was by its terms required to be given. And in Corlies vs. Corlies, 8 Vermont 387 to 389, the same principle is maintained.

Hart vs. Huckins, 6 Mass. 400, was an action of entry sur disseisin, the process was served by a constable, who was only authorized by statute to serve process in personal actions; judgment was rendered by a Justice of the Peace which was carried up to the Common Pleas where it was affirmed, but the Supreme Court reversed it, on the ground that it being a real action, the constable had no au-12 thority to serve the process, and consequently the tenant had no legal notice, and ought not to have been called, and that the judgment rendered on his supposed default was erroneous, and in reversing the Judgment the court said: "no court is authorized to render a judgment or decree against any one, or his estate, until after due notice by service of process to appear and defend." And Hollingsworth vs. Barbour, et al., above cited, 4 Peters, 472. Denning vs. Corwin, 11 Wendell's Rep. 651 and Campbell and others vs. Brown, 6 Howard's Reps. 111, were reversed because the defendants had no notice, either actual or constructive.

With these authorities before us so directly in point and so conclusive, we should be (we think) fully justified in reversing this judgment, were there no other objection interposed than the want of notice. But on account of the extraordinary character of this statute, we have deemed it to be our duty to notice its provisions further. It is to be observed that the judgment is required to be entered upon the affidavit of the claimant alone; the execution to issue forthwith directed (if the judgment is in the Circuit Court,) to the sheriff, if in a Justices Court, to a constable, and in either case it is made the duty of the officer forthwith to levy said execution upon the Steam Boat, or other water craft. No discretion is left with the officer; he must levy on and advertise and sell the steam boat or other water craft (unless the defendant should perchance happen to hear of the proceedings, and put in a defence under the onerous conditions imposed by the fourth section of the act) notwithstanding there might be an abundance of other property of the defendants within his reach (or even on board such steam boat or other water craft) to satisfy the execution. We see therefore that a steam boat of great value, might be seized by virtue of an execution for a debt of five dollars (or even a less sum) by a constable, or for any sum over fifty dollars by a sheriff and detained until the next sale day, and then unless replevied must absolutely be sold, notwithstanding the whole cargo of such steam boat might be the property of the defendants, and consist as it naturally would of articles capable of being separated, so that the officer would have no difficulty in levying on property in proportion to the amount of the debt claimed.

Such a state of things would we think be against common reason, common right and the principles of common justice. And in the case of Ham vs. McClaws, 1 Bay's Reps. 93, it was held that "statutes passed against common right, and common reason are null and void, so far as they are calculated to operate against these 113 principles. "If consequences, or those manifestly against common reason arise collaterally out of a statute, it is void pro tanto." 1 Harper, 101, cited in 3 United States Digest, 482, No. 4.

But the more serious objection to this statute is, its interference with the right of trial by jury. Under this statute a judgment may be entered up for any sum upon an open account and even without an exhibition of the account or any other voucher, upon the affidavit (as we have seen) of the plaintiff himself, without, too, even the verdict of a jury.

The right of trial by jury, says Judge Story, is justly dear to the American people. It has always been an object of deep interest and solicitude, and every encroachment upon it has been watched with great jealousy. 3 Story's Comm., 638, 639, Sec. 1760. "In Magna Charta it is more than once insisted on, as the principal bulwark of our liberties, but especially in chap. 29, by which it is provided: That no freemen shall be hurt in either his person or property ("nisi per legale judicium parium suorum vel per legem terrae") unless by lawful judgment of his peers or equals, or by the law of the land. A privilege," says Blackstone, "couched in almost the same words with that of Emperor Conrad two hundred years before. And it was ever esteemed in all countries a privilege of the highest and most beneficial nature." 3 Black. Comm. 271, Chap. 23. Chapter 29 of Magna Charta is in force in this State by virtue of the act of Nov. 6th, 1829, adopting the common law and statute laws of England, &c. Thompson's Digest, 21, Sec. 2. Duval's Comp. 357—and article 17 of the schedule and ordinance of the Constitution of this State containing this latter act amongst others in force. The Constitution, Thompson's Digest page 2, Sec. 3, declares that "the right of trial by jury shall forever remain inviolate." The act of the General Assembly under consideration has been passed since the Constitution went into operation, and the question arises therefore whether it is not in violation of the provisions of that instrument. At the time when the Constitution was adopted and when it first became operative it is very certain that the plaintiff below could not have recovered this judgment without "a trial by jury," and the act under which it was rendered wholly dispenses with a jury and expressly authorizes the Judge or Justice of the Peace (as we have seen) to render the judgment not only without a jury, but upon the affidavit of the plaintiff alone and without 114 notice to the defendant.

The Constitution says "the right of trial by jury shall forever remain inviolate," that is (as is very evident) the right shall (in all cases in which it was enjoyed when the Constitution became binding and obligatory) continue unchanged. It shall "remain inviolate." This term does not merely imply that the right of jury trial shall not be abolished or wholly denied, but that it shall not be impaired. The word inviolate is defined by approved Lexicographers to mean unhurt, uninjured, unpolluted, unbroken. Inviolate says Webster is derived from the latin word "inviolatus" which is defined by Ainsworth to mean, not corrupted, immaculate, unhurt, "untouched." From the plain and obvious meaning of these words, therefore, we conclude that the General Assembly has no power to impair, abridge, or in any degree restrict the right of trial by jury as it existed when the Constitution went into operation. It will not we think be for a moment contended that the right of trial by jury is not by this act greatly impaired, abridged and restricted. Although it is not totally denied to the defendant, yet under this act he can only have a jury trial when after judgment he may happen to obtain information of the pendency of the proceedings before the sale takes place, and then only upon condition that he swears that he does not owe the whole or some part thereof, and even then only as to the part which he swears he does not owe. Another condition is interposed by the act to the enjoyment of this Constitutional right with which it might in many cases be difficult, if not utterly impossible for the defendant to comply, viz: he must give bond with good security, residing in the county where such proceedings may be had, to the plaintiff in double the amount claimed conditioned for the payment of the eventual condemnation money and all costs thereon, an amount let it be recollected sustained only by the affidavit of the plaintiff on which the judgment is in the first instance entered and execution issued and levied.

Now it is very manifest that if the General Assembly may in the first instance dispense with "the right of trial by jury" altogether, and in the second interpose these two novel not to say dangerous and oppressive conditions, it may interpose others indefinitely. If the right in question may be denied in one kind of cases, or only allowed upon onerous conditions, it may in all cases. If it may in 115 civil cases it may in criminal cases and even where the life of the accused may depend upon the issue.

Therefore the wisdom of that clause of the Constitution which prohibits "the right of trial by jury" from being injured or even "touched" is very apparent. This act allows judgment to be entered up for any amount (no matter how much or how complicated the accounts on which the claim may be based) without any other proof than the affidavit of the claimant himself, and in this case it was actually so entered (or rather upon the affidavit of an agent) without pleadings, without notice without appearanee by the defendant and without a jury.

The court feel the importance of the sacred trust confided to them, of preserving the Constitution of the State unimpaired, and at the same time the delicate duty it imposes of declaring null and void any act of the General Assembly believed to be subversive of any of its provisions.

When however it is remembered with what jealous and scrupulous regard "the right of trial by jury" has ever been cherished and preserved by our Anglo Saxon ancestors, and by the Fathers of the revolution of 1776, a regard transmitted to us their descendants not only with unabated attachment, but if possible with increased interest and regard—a Magna Charta shielding every one in the enjoyment of life liberty and property: When these things are borne in mind and a Legislative act in its terms abridges this hallowed right, or its provisions are subversive of the principles of natural justice and against common reason and common right, the duty of the court though unpleasant and even painful, is too obvious to be doubted or denied. Such an one is the act entitled "an act giving a lien to steam boat men and others, navigating the Bay and River of Apalachicola," approved January 4th, 1847, and we are compelled to consider it to be against the letter and spirit of the Constitution of this State, unsuited to answer reasonably, rightly or justly the purposes for which it was enacted, and that it is consequently

The judgment must therefore be and the same is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below with directions to dismiss this suit.

116 PHILIP FRASER AND WIFE vs. CHARLES WILLEY.

Where this Court is equally divided in opinion, judgment must be entered affirming the judgment of the Court below.

Where there is such division, the justices are not required to file their opinions in writing before judgment is pronounced.

The statute providing that the justices shall file their opinions "in all cases decided in said (this) Court before judgment pronounced" is only directory.

Motion to vacate the judgment heretofore entered in this cause in this court. The grounds of the motion are stated in the opinion.

Fraser, for the Motion.

HAWKINS, Justice:

This case was argued upon its merits at the last term of this court and submitted to it for its decision and the court being equally divided judgment of affirmance was entered and the plaintiff in error now seeks to vacate that judgment and reinstate the case upon the following grounds to wit: First, That the court being equally divided in opinion, no judgment could be entered affirming the judgment of the court below. Second, that the justices of the Supreme Court did not file their opinions in writing in this case before judgment was pronounced.

These are important questions touching the practice of this court, neither of which have before occurred in this State. Upon a very full examination of them however, they seem to present very little difficulty.

The general rule is that he who makes a motion to reverse a judgment, and takes nothing by it, is to be considered as denied, otherwise the consequence might be that the record would be here forever, and to give effect to that denial, a judgment of affirmance ought to be given. Bridge vs. Johnson, 5 Wendell 374. In the case of Iveson vs. Moore, 1 Salkeld 17, the concluding part of the case is this: The court being thus divided and there being a former rule to stay judgment, no judgment could be entered, but et per curiam if the court had been divided on the first motion the plaintiff might have entered judgment, but now this rule must stand or be discharged, and discharged it cannot be, because the court are equally divided upon one of the former motions in arrest of judgment a rule was made that judgment should be arrested, and now the court being divided the plaintiff could not have the rule discharged nor have judgment. But if on the former motion the court had been divided judgment would have been entered for the plaintiff. These cases are therefore authority in favor of the correctness of the judgment in this case. In the Exchequer Chamber it is the practice upon a division to affirm the judgment. Deighton vs. Greenville.

In 1 Ld. Raymond 495, in a note the reporter says: "In this case 117

And so is the practice in the House of Lords, 1 Shower 36.—Cruise on Fines 222, Irish Edition 118. 2 Tidds' Pr. 1236. A similar decision was made in the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Ireland, in the case of Warburton vs. Loveland and Ivie in 1828. 1 Hudson and Brooks, Reps. 725. The same practice has obtained in the Supreme Court of the United States. See the United States vs. Worrell, 2 Dall. 388. 11 Wheaton Reps. 59.

The judgment of the court below must be presumed to be right until the court of dernier resort has decided otherwise. Bridge vs. Johnson, 5 Wendell, 372. 3 Tidds Pr. 1178. The same rule obtains in Maryland. 5 Harr. and Johnson, 284.

It is a principle of the common law that when a motion is made in a Court of Justice and the Judges are equally divided on the question, the mover takes nothing by his motion. Foot vs. Tracey, 1 John. Reps. 54. Iveson vs. Moore, 1 Salk. 17. Chapman vs. Lamphere, 3 Mod. 156. 1 Shower 46, in note.

As to the second point, that the court was bound in compliance with the statute to file written opinions even in case of a divided court, we have come to the conclusion that it is not requisite or necessary and that it was not the intention of the Legislature that we should do so. The statute is in these words, "The Justices of the Supreme Court shall file their opinions in all cases decided in said court, before judgment is pronounced, which shall be entered of record in the case."

The objects which the Legislature had in view in declaring that the decisions of this court should be in writing, and afterwards printed in the shape of reports appear to be these, that the citizens of the State should have the benefit of the adjudications of their highest legal tribunal, upon all questions or cases brought before it. The decisions of these questions involving as they inevitably must the rights of persons and property, including frequently the interpretation of statutes, becoming in fact rules of action to nearly or 118 quite the same extent as the statutes themselves, the importance of their promulgation must be at once apparent and readily appreciated. It seems clear, that the opinions of the justices as a Court are to be written and if there should not be a majority of the court agreeing on one side of the question, there can be no decision. There must be something decided before the statute applies and if the court is divided can there be in the nature of things a decision? The Lexicographers tell us that the term "decided," implies "decision, something that is unequivocal, that puts an end to doubt." Suppose the court stand opposed two to two, are there any doubts removed, is not the case left in the same situation in which it came up, leaving the questions of law involved in it as open questions and subject to future adjudication. Can the opinion of the court be cited as authority in any future controversy? Certainly not, because there is a perfect mathematical balance with no preponderance on either side.

It may be said that there is a sub modo decision, inasmuch as there is a judgment of the court, but at most it would appear a decision by operation of law, and not by the court, a majority being necessary to produce that result. Nor can we invoke the decision of the judge at nisi prius to be thrown in one scale or the other. The cause comes up to be tried de novo, with the facts already ascertained, the counsel better and more maturely prepared than in the court below, and is to be decided by a tribunal possessing all the advantages of an Appellate Court. The intention of the Legislature seems to have been to obtain the reasons which have guided and actuated the court in coming to a decision, rather than those which might have operated to produce division and disagreement. Even if we are wrong in this view of the matter, not having filed written opinions in this case, would not affect the validity of the judgment, for the statute is only directory. Statutes directing the mode of proceeding by public officers, are advisory and not essential to the validity of the proceedings themselves unless it be so expressed. 8 Vermont, R. 280. Corless vs. Corless, ib. 390. People vs. Allen, 6 Wendell 480. Pond vs. Negus, 3 Mass. 230.

Of course we have regarded the question as a purely legal one, having naught to do with inquiries based upon any supposed expediency. With these views, we are of opinion that the motion must be denied. Per Curiam.

BALTZELL, Justice, dissenting:

The decision of the court in this case is that there is no obligation to deliver opinions where there is an affirmance of the judgment through an equal division of the justices. In this I do not concur, conceiving that the law is imperative, and extends to and embraces both in its letter and spirit all cases disposed of. Its language is the justices "shall deliver opinions in all cases decided."

The court, however, says although there was a judgment there was no decision, and therefore the statute is inapplicable. I find no such distinction in any elementary work of the law, in any book of reports, nor in any statute nor is a citation of any such given by the court. They say Lexicographers "tell us that the term decided implies decision, something that is unequivocal, that puts an end to doubt." Admitting this, does it prove that judgment is different from decision, or are we to infer that judgment implies indecision, something that is equivocal, or that creates a doubt. A more extended reference to the same authority would have found the word decision defined to be 'determination, as of a question or doubt, final judgment or opinion in a case which has been under deliberation, discussion.'

Nor is this view of the court as we apprehend sustained by the text books. 1 Black. Com. 69.

Nor by the language of this court itself on repeated occasions—Miller, &c. vs. Hoc. "this case must be governed by the decision of the court in the preceding case as in the one just decided, the judgment is therefore reversed." 1 Flor., 197.

In Beatty vs. Ross, the Chief Justice decided the case and his decision being sustained the judgment is confirmed, &c., Ibid. 210.

In Archer vs. Duval's administrator by the common law judgment followed the decision on a demurrer as matter of course, &c. Ibid 203, 204, 207.

Nor by that of other courts.

The Supreme Court of the U. S. uses the two words as follows: "A judgment concludes the subject in which it is rendered and pronounces the law of the case, it puts an end to all enquiries by deciding it." 3 Peters, 204.

"The decision of a Court of Record is conclusive, and whether 20 its decision be correct or not its judgment, until reversed is binding on every other court." 1 Peters, 340.

Whilst the words are used indiscriminately, in correct legal acceptation the judgment may be regarded as the formal expression of the decision spread out on the record by the clerk.

Nor is the distinction maintained in the various statutes referring to the final action of our courts.

Thus in the second section of the law of the first State Legislatures organizing the Supreme Court of the State we find these words together: "The acts of the Governor and Council now in force, and providing for regulating appeals from the judgments, or decrees, or decisions of the Superior Courts of the Territory to the Court of Appeals or writs of error for the review of decisions of said Superior Courts shall as far as applicable be in full force, and be deemed to apply to said Supreme Court."

In the 14th section of the same law "That all cases now pending in said Court of Appeals shall be transferred to said Supreme Court, and tried and decided therein and thereby. Laws of 1845. p. 13.

It is under this section the court took jurisdiction of the case under consideration, and from it derived their power over it. If the case is not decided this part of their duty would seem yet to remain.

The provision for the delivery of opinions is in this same statute. The sixth section of the law regulating the mode of suing out writs of error, and prosecuting appeals has this provision "That the said Court of Appeals may order the record of the judgment with their decision and determination thereon in writing duly certified to be remitted to the said Superior Court and the said decision and determination shall be carried into execution by the officers of the said court or the said Court of Appeals may award execution to carry into effect its decisions and determination." Duval, 109.

Now we can scarcely imagine authority more direct and express—the decision is to be remitted—the decision carried into effect. If the court has sent their mandate without a decision the law would seem not to have been complied with.

Again the opinion asserts that "although there was a judgment it was by operation of law and not by the court." Here there is no reference to authority, and the question occurs if not made by the court, who or what other power is there that can rightfully, under the Constitution and laws of the State make it? All judgments are 121 by operation of law, but can the law operate to make a judgment in the absence of, or without a Court?

Philip Fraser and Wife, vs. Charles Willey.

"The record however, does not in my judgment, sustain the allegation that the judgment was without a Court.

PHILIP FRAZER and WIFE, adm'rs, &c., vs. CHARLES WILEY. } January Term, 1847.

Present Hon. THOS DOUGLAS, Chief Justice, Hon. THOS. BALTZELL, Hon. GEO. S. HAWKINS, Hon. GEO. W. MACRAE, Justices.

This day came the parties by their attorneys, and the transcript of the record of the judgment aforesaid being seen and inspected, and said parties being fully heard by counsel, and the court being equally divided in opinion, it is considered by the court that the said judgment be affirmed," &c.

The question is asked as not admitting of any doubt, "Is not the case left in the same situation in which it came up leaving the questions of law involved in it as open questions, and subject to future adjudications?" Can it be the design to say, that the case is open in the Circuit Court, and to be tried there again? This would seem to be the fair inference, for the Supreme Court had refused to take farther action of it, by declaring the judgment of the former term valid We have, however, thought this scarcely possible. If yet subject to future adjudication, it must be by the Supreme Court; and if so, the question arises, why was the motion of the plaintiff to reinstate his case overruled?

Again, it is said that the opinion of the Court in such a case is not authority. With due deference this question is more appropriate for the tribunal before which the decision may hereafter be quoted. Courts do not usually attach to their opinions when delivered the estimate to be placed upon them, nor pledge themselves in advance to recognize or reject any case as authority. But why is this case not authority? As the judgment of the Circuit Court, expressing the law of the case, until reversed it is authority—when that judgment is affirmed by the Supreme Court is there a diminution of its authority? The Judge of the Circuit Court declared the law of the case, the Supreme Court affirm the judgment, thereby giving the sanction of that tribunal to the law as declared by the Court below.

A reversal obviously would have destroyed the authority of the case; but that an affirmance has this effect, is to confound and ut 122 terly annihilate the meaning and sense of terms. This would be to place the Court in the contradictory position of maintaining by their judgment the right of one of the parties under the law which by the qualification attached to their opinion they maintain that he is not entitled to—in other words affirm the case as to the parties, but reverse it as authority for other cases and this upon the ground that he "Court stands opposed two to two—or is divided and in such case it is said there is a perfect mathematical balance with no preponderance on either side." With due deference we cannot admit the propriety of this language, we do not admit that a Court can be divided. By law a majority of the judges is sufficient to transact business and the agreement of more than half of these will be sufficient to decide a case although this majority may be less than half the number of the judges, thus in a judicial body of twelve, seven present would be a quorum and four concurring as to a case would render the judgment though in fact constituting only one third of the judges. In a body consisting of five judges a quorum consists of three and two of these concurring render the judgment of the Court. In Legislative assemblies this is also the case. In the instances of the judicial bodies above stated the four in the one case and two in the other constitute the court, in the Legislature the majority of the quorum constitute the Legislature and this by operation of law. A concurrence of a sufficient number of judges to do business, to give judgments to decide cases then constitutes the Court and in case of concurrence with them although there may be disagreement or division amongst the judges there is no division of the Court. This is the law of its organization.

A similar law prevails in the structure and organization of Appellate Courts, and Courts of Error of the last resort, where there is an equal division of the judges. In such cases by the settled rule the judges in favor of affirmance constitute the Court, there is then by operation of law an affirmance of the judgment, a declaration by the Court that the judgment of the Court below is right and must be carried into execution. Such is the case in the House of Lords in England, Court of Errors of New York—of Maryland. In this Court also as announced in the present case and repeated again in the case of Williams and Moseley the same law prevails. In cases depending in other Courts it is a principle "where the judges are divided the mover takes nothing by his motion, there is no judgment," the invari-123 able practice of the Court of Kings Bench and of the Common Pleas being not to give judgment in case of a division of opinion of the judges." 1 Strange, 383.

With due deference, by not attending to this distinction the mistake has been committed of saying when the court is divided "the principles of law are not settled, the question is not decided," &c.,—"the case only is settled, not the law in this court." With great propriety this language may be applied to cases of division in the Kings Bench and Common Pleas where there is no judgment. Can it however apply where there is decision and a judgment rendered?

These positions as to the law not being settled, the question not decided, but only the particular case, &c., are so opposed to the principals and mode of action by which courts profess to govern as to be irreconcilable with reason and propriety. According to Blackstone "judgment is the conclusion that naturally and regularly follows from the premises of law and fact, &c., which judgment or conclusion depends not therefore on the arbitrary caprice of the judge but on the settled and invariable principles of justice." 3 Black. 396.

"It is the sentence of the law pronounced by the court upon the matter contained in the record." 3 Black. 395. "A court when it constructs a judgment forms it of certain materials which are law, these materials the court does not make and so far the judgment is not creative of law. These materials consist of the divers laws within the realm, of maxims, principals, rules, intendment and reason of the common law, report books, records and other authorities of law." Ram on Jud. 2.

If these materials are rejected in the decision of a case what substitute is to take their place? Can they give a judgment without their use, indeed rejecting them by their own admission? Is not this the giving of a judgment which is not law and therefore reversing the sense and meaning of the term? Is it not substituting the mere dixit of the judge in place of a decision based upon the settled and invariable principles of justice? Can there be a law or rule of action applicable to two parties and their rights which is not applicable to all parties and all rights of the same kind?

I will not be understood as contending that a decision of this kind is of the highest or best authority. My position is that it is authority lessened in weight by the fact that it was rendered by a 124 divided court. Ram on Judgments in speaking of "the circumstances which may lessen the value of authority," specifies cases "where the court was equally divided or were not unanimous in opinion," p. 183.

A higher authority is to be found in a case decided by the Supreme Court of Vermont and taken from Washburn's Digest. "It must be a very clear case and one unsusceptible of doubt which would lead the Supreme Court to disturb a question which had been settled in previous years even though that decision were given by a court divided in opinion." State vs. Bosworth, 13 Verm. 402. I insist then that there has been a decision of this case by this court and of the questions and principles of law involved in it—that it is absolute and valid as if concurred in by all the Judges—that it is the law of the case and of all other cases similarly situated until like all other authority it can be assailed by showing that it was not law.

If the case was decided the statute is applicable unless although within its letter it is not within the spirit of its provision. Nor is there a reason why an opinion should not be delivered in the case of a divided court. This involves an enquiry into the reason of judges delivering opinions at all in any case. This is given by the judges both in England and America in language of this character.

In England said Lord Kenyon it has long since been held to be the great duty of every court of justice to administer justice as well as they can between the litigating parties—another and not less material duty is to satisfy those parties that the whole case has been examined and considered. 6 T. R. 408.

Next to doing right the great object in the administration of public justice should be to give public satisfacton. 3 Black. 391.

The expressed reason of a judgment is an important ingredient in it, the reason of a resolution is more to be considered than the resolution itself. Ram 21.

Next to doing justice said Chancellor Dessassure, in a sentiment quoted with approbation by the Supreme Court of South Carolina, the greatest consolation of judges, is so to administer that justice as to satisfy the parties that the merits of their causes have been fully bought, well considered and impartially decided. 1 Hill Ch. 453.

In a recent case decided in the Court of Exchequer one of the judges said although Ld. Lyndhurst has in a great degree anticipated the judgment which I intended to deliver, the parties to the 125 cause are entitled to be satisfied by knowing the opinion of each judge and the grounds on which it is founded. Ram on Judgment, 20.

"It is not only a justice due to the public and the parties," said Lord Mansfield, "to weigh well the grounds and reasons of the judgment, but it is of great consequence to explain them with accuracy and precision in open Court, especially if the question be of a general tendency, that the law of the land may be certain and known."

It is this course of these courts that has obtained for them the tribute of the most distinguished of the jurists of America. Every person well acquainted with the contents of the English Reports must have been struck with the unbending integrity and lofty morals with which the Courts were inspired. I do not know where we could resort among all the volumes of human composition to find more constant, more tranquil and more sublime manifestations of the intrepidity of conscious rectitude. If we were to go back to the Iron times of the Tudors and follow judicial history down from the first page in Dyer, to the last page of the last reporter, we should find the higher Courts of civil judicature generally and with rare exceptions, presenting the image of the sanctity of a temple where truth and justice seem to be enthroned and personified in their decrees." 1 Kent. Com., 496.

Nor have the American Courts been wanting in this respect having earned a like deserved distinction. Did those judges however content themselves with discussion and the delivering of opinions in cases only when they were all agreed? By no means, their noblest triumphs were earned, their greatest efforts made in cases of disagreement, in cases of doubt where the highest stretch of ingenuity and talent were required to attain and develope the truth. It is there indeed discussion, debate and effort are required and wanted. "All opinions, yea errors known, read and collected," says an eminent writer, "are of main service and assistance towards the speedy attainment of what is truest. Truth arises from the collision, and from hence springs liberty which is a security from the effect of reasoning." We do not require a beacon when the channel is deep and free from impediment.

Supposing that we are mistaken in the opinion that the case was decided, that there was a Court to give judgment and that it is not open to future adjudication, we ask then if the parties even in a case so situated have not rights and the public to be satisfied how 126 and why a judgment has been so rendered?

it right in the opinion that the two judges constitute the Court does not a singular responsibility devolve upon those thus assuming the high and solemn duties of this exalted tribunal to explain satisfactorily and conclusively a judgment which they assert in opposition to the respectable authority of two of their brethren. It does seem to us in proportion to the delicacy of that position is it a duty on their part clearly and beyond all question to vindicate and sustain the propriety of their judgment.

Clear in the opinion that the construction given is against the letter as well as the spirit of the law there are other reasons no less cogent in my view against it founded in the very organization of the Court itself. This is the highest judicial tribunal of the land it is of the last resort except in very few instances, it undertakes to administer the law according to the course of the most enlightened Courts in this country and in England. They all in their action for centuries past in England and since the time of their organization in this country as we have seen, have been distinguished for the discussion, the careful and attentive examination and consideration of questions and principles. Their records are a proud monument in their favor of an adherence to truth and right and principle maintained over the occasional ascendancy of error and mistake. To their honor and glory be it spoken, there has been no ipse dixit of the judges, no mere mandate as the order or command from an executive officer; such is not and it is to be hoped never may be the mode of action of the Courts in this country. They have sustained themselves and can ever only sustain themselves by basing their decisions upon justice and right and explaining to the citizen the grounds and reasons of their decision. The opinions of the Court are the only means of communicating with the people, their protection against perversion of facts and law—against misrepresentation, against error and mistake, they are important alike to the judges, to the parties and to the people and any omission, restriction or abridgement of the duty is calculated to be alike injurious to them all.

Caleb H. Blood vs. Richard A. Shine.

Everything is to be presumed and every reasonable intendment made in favor of an award.

Where arbitrators agree on some of the facts, but differ with respect to others not connected with the first, there seems to be no good reason why the umpire, if he thinks proper, may not take those points on which the arbitrators agree to be as they report them, provided a re-examination is not required by the submission, or by either of the parties before he makes his award.

An award of payment of a specific sum is sufficient without directing a release from the party to whom it is to be paid.

Though an award should not in terms decide all the matters submitted to the arbitrators, yet if the thing awarded necessarily includes the other things mentioned in the submission it is sufficient.

When an award does not fix the time of payment of the sum awarded, the money is payable immediately.

Error to Leon Circuit Court where this case was tried before Judge Baltzell.

Archer, for Plaintiff in Error:

The Court erred in refusing to admit the award in evidence and in deciding that it was void upon its face.

The award of the umpire Argyle is a valid award. He adopted the statement of accounts made and agreed to by the arbitrators, and proceeded to decide the other items about which the arbitrators disagreed. Having added both the sums together, he awards the total amount to the plaintiff. This the umpire had a right to do, and had he done otherwise he would have deviated from the usual practice in such cases. See Harman vs. Arthur, 1 Baily, 81.

"When the arbitrators have agreed on some facts, but differ with respect to others unconnected with the first, there seems to be no good reason why the umpire, if he thinks proper, may not take those points on which the arbitrators agree to be as they report them."—By the adoption of their conclusion they become his decision. See Kyd on Award, 102. 4 Term Rep., 589. 5 Barn. & Adolphus, 488. Watson on Arbitration & Award, 64. 1 Tomlin Law Dict. 144. Bates vs. Cook, 9 B. & C. 407.

128 The umpire may thus decide the whole controversy. At all events no objection to the award can be made on account of adopting the partial decision of the arbitrators, unless taken before award made, which was not done in this case.

As to the form of the award in this case, it is unobjectionable.—It is plain, intelligible, and to the point, and is in much better form than it would have been if the meaning of the umpire had been attempted to be expressed in technical legal language not understood by him. As now expressed, no doubt exists as to the amount awarded, and that was the object to be attained.

The Courts favor this mode of settling differences, and do not scrutinize the form of the proceedings of a Court of arbitrators. Their common sense and practical judgment may safely be relied on to obtain a just settlement of differences submitted to them. So it appears what is the decision made by such Court between the parties it matters not what is the form. Everything is presumed in favor of an award made like this under a bond of submission, and not under the order of a Court (where the Court may and does require some attention to form) and the award is good if expressed in the form of an opinion. 4 Phillips Ev. 80.

As to the appointment by arbitrators of J. W. Argyle as umpire, it is made in accordance with the bond. But if it were not, the parties having acquiesced in the appointment would be bound by his award. The parties cannot appear before an umpire, submit their evidence, have a full hearing and after award made, object to his appointment. 4 Phillip's Ev. 80. Watson vs. Trower, 1 Ryan & Moody, 18.

Hagner, for Defendant in Error:

Before entering into investigation of errors assigned, I wish to lay down some principles applicable to the form of the submission in this case.

1st. I say that the scope of power and authority of the umpire is regulated by the submission, and is in this case as broad as that to the arbitrators originally. Parties may submit to umpire all matters, or only such as arbitrators differ upon. Billing's law of awards 106. 1 Comyns Dig. p. 678 at top.

Here the power to the umpire is co-extensive with that to arbitrators.

Caleb H. Blood, vs. Richard A. Shine.

The Umpire designed by the parties was an umpire to be ap- 129 pointed of and concerning the premises, and to be the umpire between Blood & Shine. When appointed to take place of arbitrators. Watson on awards 56—63. 2 Dallas Rep., 271.

The umpire as well as arbitrators is the Judge of the parties and he ought to be appointed according to the submission and the powers there designed should be entrusted to him. Billings law of awards, 112.

Here in the case at bar what was his appointment? He is appointed umpire between the arbitrators as they disagreed on two items, and power only over that disagreement is given to him. Such was his commission, this commission was void 112.—and all actions under it of course null. Billing's law of awards Kyd on awards 101, and cases cited p. 103. Tollit vs. Sanders, 9 Price 612, and case from year books 30 Hen. 6, cited by the Judges of Exchequer. Willis Rep. 268. Tarker vs. Kearny, 2 Barnard 317. 6 Harr. and John. 406. 4 Dallas Rep. 232.

Now if there was no appointment of an umpire according to the submission clearly the appointment made was a nullity, and it matters not if he did arbitrate on the whole causes of difference. Unless duly appointed to take charge of the whole, his action was void for the excess and as he could be appointed here but as umpire of and concerning the premises, not having been so appointed, his award was void. Void in its inception, it cannot be sustained by evidence aliunde. Watson on awards 115. For this reason we hold there was no error in the judgment.

The counsel for plaintiff in error insists that the courts are more lenient to awards under submission bonds than where made rules of court. Now the very reverse is the case. Courts will not on motion, where awards are rules of Court, set aside awards but leave parties to their action on the award. Watson on awards 155. 2 Dow. and Ry. 222, and also 2 B. & C. 170.

If I am right in my view of the commission here given to Argyle it is a matter of small moment to inquire whether he did adopt that the arbitrators had done. He had no such power, he was to decide the difference between the arbitrators themselves; he never was the umpire between the parties nor was he umpire of and concerning the premises in the bond mentioned.

How idle then the attempt to sustain his action by evidence aliunde.

But the counsel insist that the umpire may take those points de- 130 cided by the arbitrators and incorporate them with his own. The cases I have cited contradict this. 1 Baily South Carolina Rep. 81, is however cited to sustain it. By reference to it Judge Colcock it will be perceived sustains it by Mr. Kyd's opinion p. 102 and that other case Hall vs. Lawrence, 4 T. R. 589.

See in what low esteem this case is held, 4 Dallas Reports before cited.

Yet giving 4 T. R. 589 full power, it was in a case of rule of court, where as I have shown the courts are disinclined to set aside awards on motion, and all the court did was to refuse to set aside on motion.

Mr. Kyd's opinion is not sustained by either English or American authorities.

Again the award set up is void, neither expressly nor impliedly awarding a release. 1 Saunders Reports 327 [a] note 2.

The declaration is defective. In the award set up no time is fixed for the payment of the money awarded, it is then payable on demand. Now in such case it is very clear, a special demand must be alleged and the general averment "although often requested," &c., will not suffice. 1 Saunders Rep. 33. Kyd on awards p. 295.

The award is not final, it does not make an end and determination of all matters contained in the submission. Watson on awards 126.

It is not mutual; all things are here awarded to be performed by one party without such being in satisfaction of the matters in controversy. Watson on awards 131.

By reason of the nullity of the award it is plain that Shine cannot have the advantage intended him, as a recompense or consideration for that which he is to do to the other party Blood. He has no release, even if he pay. The award for this reason is void in the whole. Watson, p. 136, 2 Saunders 293 n.

Douglas, Chief Justice, delivered the following opinion:

This is an action of debt upon an arbitration bond by which the parties agreed to submit to the arbitrament and award of certain persons therein named, all and all manner of actions, cause or causes of action, bills, bonds, agreements, deeds, accounts, quarrels, controversies and demands whatsoever at any time or times theretofore,

131 had, made, brought, prosecuted, done, suffered, committed or depending, by or between the said parties or either of them, of and concerning a partnership in a certain brick yard and the profits and losses thereof, and also any and all other demands, controversies, debts and transactions whatsoever. The arbitrators to make their award on or before the sixth day of May (then) next ensuing; but if the arbitrators did not make their award on or before that day then the said abitrators (were) to appoint and umpire between the parties, &c. The arbitrators took upon themselves the burden of the arbitration and as appears investigated the transactions and accounts between the parties; stated an account and struck a balance for $1181 76 in favor of C. H. Blood, when they disagreed and appointed an umpire. In relation to which disagreement—appointment of an umpire and action of the umpire, the following entry appears as is shewn by the bill of exceptions which constitutes a part of the record in this case, next after the statement of the balance above mentioned, viz: "We the arbitrators disagree respecting C. H. Blood's account of $434 32-100 and R. A. Shine's offset of $125 and we name John W. Argyle as umpire." This is signed and sealed by all the arbitrators, dated Tallahassee, May 4th, 1844, and is succeeded by the following entry, to wit: "The umpire appointed by the arbitrators of the unsettled accounts of R. A. Shine and C. H. Blood and referred to him for settlement as per statement of the arbitrators annexed, reports the said accounts adjusted and stated as follows:

R. A. Shine, To C. H. Blood,	Dr.
To Balance as stated by the arbitrators on the 6th day of May 1844, annexed	$1181 76
To amount of C. H. Blood's account	434 32
	$1616 08
Cr.
By Territorial Certificate signed Robert Armstrong, considered spurious	125 00
	$1491 08

This amount, one thousand four hundred and ninety one 8-100 dollars reported to the credit of and awarded to C. H. Blood.

December 7th, 1844. (Signed) John W. Argyle, umpire."

At the trial of the cause in the court below this award was of-132 fered in evidence by the plaintiff, and was ruled out by the court on the ground that it was void and incapable of being sustained by proof aliunde. No other evidence being offered on either side the jury rendered a verdict for the defendant upon which judgment was entered and the plaintiff in error now seeks to reverse that judgment on the following grounds which he has assigned as error, viz:

First, The court erred in sustaining objections to the introduction of the paper writing offered in evidence by the plaintiff mentioned in the bill of exceptions.

Second, the court erred in deciding that said paper writing was void and incapable of being sustained by evidence aliunde.

Third, The court erred in giving judgment for the defendant.

In ruling out the paper writing we think the court erred. We do not perceive on what ground it can with propriety be declared void. It is contended on behalf of the defendant in error, that the umpire was not appointed of and concerning the premises, but it will be observed that the arbitrators in making the appointment, very properly abstained from attempting to limit his powers which they had no authority to do. They said "we name John W. Argyle as umpire." His appointment being general, his authority is to be sought for in the arbitration bond on which this suit is founded. It was therefore, precisely what the parties thought proper to make it. In the case of Tollit vs. Saunders, 9 Price's Exchequer Reports, 612, cited (and much relied upon) by the Attorney for the defendant in error, the arbitrators disagreed and appointed an umpire, not generally as here, not to decide between the parties, but to decide between themselves. and the court, in declaring the appointment invalid, puts its decision expressly upon that ground.

Again, it is said that the umpire adopted what the arbitrators had done, and made that a part of his award. It is true he states the same balance which the arbitrators stated. It does not however appear but that he examined the testimony and came to the same conclusion to which they had come, as to the just and correct balance. But it is insisted that he did not re-examine the testimony and that his award is for that reason null and void. Neither of these objections appear upon the face of the award, nor is there any proof in the record to sustain them. And every thing is to be presumed and every reasonable intendment made in favor of an award. Archer vs. Williamson, 2 Harr. & Gill, 67. Richards vs. Brockenbrough, 1 Rand. 449. Karthans vs. Ferrer, et al., 1 Peters, 222 133
Coupland vs. Anderson, 2 Call 106. Fryching Canal vs. Frye 5 Greenl. Rep. 67.

But if the fact were as urged that the umpire did not take the account as the arbitrators stated it in their report of the matter and incorporate it into his own, we see no reasonable objection to it. The Court of Appeals of South Carolina in the case of Executors of Finney vs. Miller, 1 Baileys Law Reps. 81, 82, held that "where arbitrators had agreed on the facts and only differ on a single point either with respect to the law arising on those facts, or as to the extent of the recompense to be made by one party or the other, or even where they agree on some facts, but differ with respect to others unconnected with the first (which is the case before us) there seems to be no good reason why the umpire if he thinks proper, may not take those points on which the arbitrators agreed to be as they report them."

The nature of their duty (said that Court) is to make a final decision upon the whole subject in dispute, where the arbitrators cannot do it, and by adopting their opinion as far as they agree and incorporating it with his own on the other part, he effectually makes the final determination. This case was cited and the principles which it maintains were sustained in the case of Lipsey vs. Hughes, 2 Bailey's Law Rep. 113, in which Mr. Justice O'Neal confirming the instructions to the Jury by Mr. Justice Gantt at Union Fall Term, 1830, said that the umpire may award upon the report of the arbitrators without re-examining the witnesses, unless he is directed to do so by the submission, or it is afterwards required of him by one or the other of the parties before he makes his award. (Harper and Johnson, Justices, concurred.) And this is in accordance with Hall vs. Lawrence, 4 Term Reps. 589, where the Court refused to set aside the award of an umpire because he received the evidence from the arbitrators, without examining the witnesses, he not having been required to re-examine them before the making of his award, and with the reasoning of Mr. Kyd in his able work on Awards page 102. Saulbury vs. Hodson, 2 Burr. 1474. 1 Black Rep. 463.

In this case there was no such requisition upon the umpire by the submission or either of the parties, and we fully agree with the learned Judge who pronounced the opinion of the Court in the case of Executors of Finny vs. Miller when he says. "If the parties are suffered to lie by, and after the award is made to avail themselves 13 of these technical objections, you utterly destroy this admiral domestic forum."

It was further objected that this award is not mutual, that no release is awarded to Shine, &c. In regard to this we cannot do better than to adopt the language of Mr. Justice Trimble in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Karthans vs. Ferrer, et al., 1 Peters Reps. 230.

It is deemed (he says) a sufficient answer to the objection of want of mutuality in the award, to remark, that great stress was laid in the early cases upon the mutuality of an award, but at present it is by no means considered necessary that each party should be directed to do or not to do any particular thing. Cald. on Arbi., 113. Two had submitted to an award; nothing was awarded to one party, but that all actions should cease. The Court held it a good award. Harris vs. Knight, 1 Levintz, 58. In Palmers case, 12 Mod. 234, one party was directed to pay money to the other, without any directions being given to the latter any way. Again it was awarded that A. should pay B. 40 shillings for trespass, Freeman 204. These respective awards were held unimpeachable. In McKinstry vs. Solomons, 2 John. 57 and 13 John. 27 an award of payment of a specific sum is held final and sufficient without directing a release from the party to whom it was paid. And so in Byers vs. Van Denson, 5 Wendell 268.

Again, it is objected that the award does not embrace all the matters submitted, but it seems to embrace all the matters shown to have been in controversy and indeed in effect to settle all. In Smith vs. Demarest, 3 Halstead 195, it was held that though an award should not in terms decide all the matters submitted to the arbitrators, yet if the thing awarded necessarily includes the other things and matters mentioned in the submission it is sufficient. And in Jackson ex dem. Van Alen and Van Alen vs. Ambler, 14 John. 96, that although an award must decide on all the questions contained in the submission, yet it must appear that the points not decided upon were actually in controversy between the parties. Now it does not appear in this case that there was any matter in controversy submitted that was not decided; and "unless they were brought forward they were not to be decided." Jackson vs. Van Alen, 14 John. 107. Nor is it to be intended unless it be shown. Smith vs. Demarest, 3 Halst. 198.

It is to be presumed that the parties brought all the matters in controversy between them before the arbitrators, and all the matters brought before them were decided. In Copeland vs. Anderson, 2 Call's Reps. 100 the court held that if cross suits be referred by the parties, a single award that one of them is indebted to the other in a balance of account, is sufficient to settle the whole controversy. But it is said the award does not fix the time of payment and that therefore a special request to pay was necessary. But when the award does not fix the day of payment the money is payable immediately. Inlay vs. Wykoof, 1 Southard 132. (cited in 1 United States Digest page 214—No. 370) and this in accordance with the general principles of the law on this subject. The case of Brett vs. Ming, Florida Reps. 454 and authorities there cited fully recognize and sustain these principles. We are aware that upon some of these points different views have been entertained and conflicting decisions made. That being the case we must adopt those which seem to us to be most in conformity with reason and justice and most conducive to the general good.

The Judgment of the court below must be and the same is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Per curiam.

136 ISAAC W MITCHELL, vs. FREDERICK R. COTTEN, EXECUTOR OF JOHN W. COTTEN.

Where plaintiff's demurrer to defendants plea was overruled, and the judgment was respondeat ouster and the plaintiff afterwards filed a replication to the plea, the demurrer is waived thereby, and the plaintiff cannot assign for error that the court erred in overruling the demurrer.

In an action by the payee against a security on the note, the principal may be examined as a witness for defendant to prove that the note was given upon usurious considerations.

Where a note not tainted with usury has been given up and cancelled on being made the consideration of a usurious contract or note, and the usury in the latter has been established, the note cancelled may be recovered upon, as well against a surety as the principal, under the common counts.

Writ of Error to Leon Circuit Court, where this cause had been tried before Judge Baltzell.

The facts fully appear in the opinion of the Chief Justice.

Brockenbrough & Thompson, for Plaintiff in Error.

Randall & Hagner, for Defendant in Error.

DOUGLAS, Chief Justice:

This is an action of assumpsit instituted by the plaintiff in error in the Leon Circuit Court against the defendant in error as executor, &c., of John W. Cotten, deceased, to recover the sum (alleged to be) due upon a promissory note, of which the following is a copy, viz:

"On or before the first day of January next, we or either of us, promise to pay to Isaac W. Mitchell, or order, fifteen thousand nine hundred and fifty-five dollars, with ten per cent. interest from date, for value received this 2d January, 1841.

[Signed] H. DOGGETT,
J. W. COTTEN."

The declaration contains a count upon the note, the common money counts, and a count on an account stated. The defendant plead:

First, The general issue.

Second, That he did not make the note. 137

Third, Want of consideration.

Fourth, Judgment recovered by Mitchell against Doggett on the note.

Fifth and Sixth, That John W. Cotten executed the note as surety of Doggett, and that Mitchell and Doggett entered into a secret agreement, concealed from J. W. Cotten, by which Doggett was to pay a greater rate of interest than was expressed in the note.

And the 6th plea alleges that the rate of interest expressed was ten per cent. and by said secret agreement Doggett was to pay two and an half per cent. more, and that Doggett gave to Mitchell his separate note for the two and an half per cent. bearing even date with the note sued on, amounting to the sum of $398 87, payable on or before the first of January 1842, for such excess of interest over and above that secured by the note sued on.

Seventh, That John W. Cotten executed the note sued on as surety of said Henry Doggett, and that after the making of said note to wit, on the 5th day of January, 1844, the plaintiff agreed with the said Henry Doggett, without the consent or knowledge of the said John W. Cotten, and for, and in consideration of, the making and delivery by the said Doggett of his promissory note dated the 5th day of January, 1844, payable one day after date to said Mitchell (the plaintiff) or bearer, at Tallahassee, promising to pay $6,676 64, for value received with ten per cent. interest from the first of said month, which note the plaintiff received to give further day of payment during the space of one year to wit, during the year 1844.

The Eighth. Is in substance the same as the seventh only alleging the contract and agreement for further time to have been made after the note sued on was overdue, and that the consideration was paid in hand.

The Ninth, Raises the same question as the eighth.

The Tenth, Non assumpsit except as to the sum of $6676 64, and as to that sum payment.

To the plea of non assumpsit the defendant annexed a notice of special matter to be given in evidence embracing in substance the same matter as embraced in the several special pleas, setting out the charge of usury somewhat more fully and specifically, and alleging divers usurious contracts

To the 4th and 5th pleas the plaintiff demurred, and his demur- 138
rers were sustained. Upon the other pleas issues were respectively joined. It appears by the bill of exceptions which constitutes a part of the record in this case that the cause came on to be tried upon the issues joined between the parties and a jury of good and lawful men were empanneled and the plaintiff introduced the note mentioned in the declaration with the following endorsement thereon, viz: "Received the interest on the within note up to the first day of January, 1840, from the fifth day of February, 1844," and there rested his case.

The defendant then read in evidence the deposition of Henry Doggett, (one of the parties to said note) who proved in substance that the real bargain between Mitchell and himself, at the time of making the note, was that Mitchell was to receive for the loan of the said money 12 1-2 per cent. That he made and delivered to said Mitchell his promissory note for the sum of $398 87, that the consideration thereof was two and a half per cent. additional interest on the note for which Cotten was surety. That he gave to Isaac W. Mitchell his promissory note dated 5th January, 1844, payable one day after date for $6,676 64 bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent, and he thinks exhibit C. a copy. That the consideration of said note was interest on the note for which Cotten was surety as the following statement, which is copied from a statement in Mitchell's hand writing, will show:

2 1-2c

398 87, and interest on do. at 12 1-2 per cent compounded to the 1st of January 1844, 507 06, interest to 1st January, 1842, at ten per cent 1,595 50.

Interest to January, 1843:	1,755 05
	438 75
	449 73
Interest to 1st January, 1844:	1,930 56
	$6,676 65

That the amount of interest secured to be paid to Isaac W. Mitchell is $6,676 65, which is evidenced by his note for the amount dated 5th January, 1844.

That at the making of said note of $15,955 00, there was a contract made by Mitchell and himself, that he, Doggett, over and above the interest mentioned in the note, should pay to Mitchell the further rate of 2 1-2 per cent additional interest. That no money has been actually paid for the said interest, but is secured to be paid by his note of 6,676 65, before referred to.

On his cross examination he further proved that himself and J. W. Cotten, on or about the 1st of January, 1839, gave a note for $13,186 00 to Isaac W. Mitchell, that J. W. Cotten was equally bound with him, but as surety; the consideration of $13,186 00 was the indebtedness of witness to one Flake for land. There was no usury in said note of $13,186 00 or in the note to Flake. That note was taken up by substituting the note of $15,955. J. W. Cotten signed both notes and was bound with witness as surety—both notes expressed, on the face of them, to carry ten per cent interest. The usury he says began when he executed the note for $15,955, with Cotten as surety and his note for $398 87. This note was for usury, the excess of interest for the forbearance of the large note.

The defendant then offered Lawrence O'B. Branch as a witness who testified as follows, to wit: that the original papers filed, marked A. B. C. D. E. F. G. H. were original papers placed in his hands by H. Doggett. The paper marked D. witness believes contains the genuine signature of H. Doggett across said paper; that he likewise believes the signature on the paper A. to be Doggett's signature, so also the signature on papers B. he believes to be the remains of the signature of said Doggett and John W. Cotten, that he is acquainted with their hand writing, &c.

The defendant then offered George K. Walker and Charles G. English as witnesses to prove certain papers marked C. D. E. F. G. H. I. none of which are deemed very material to the present enquiry except the following, viz:

[D.] On or before the first day of January next, we or either of us promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell, or order, thirteen thousand one hundred and eighty-six dollars, for value received, with ten per cent interest from date, the 1st January, 1839. [The words "Paid—H. Doggett," written across the face.]

[E.] On or before the first day of January next, I promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell, or order, three hundred and ninety-eight dollars and eighty-seven cents for value received this 2nd day of January, 1841.

One day after date, I promise to pay Isaac W. Mitchell or bearer, at Tallahassee, six thousand six hundred and seventy-six dollars and 140 sixty-four cents for value received, with ten per cent interest from the first of the present month, this fifth day of January, 1844.

[Signed.] H. Doggett, [seal.]

Which the witnesses testify are in the hand writing, in words and figures, of the plaintiff except the signatures.

James H. T. Lorimer was also introduced to prove the papers marked A. and B.

Are in the hand writing of one Doctor Flake; he said he had seen Flake write, and believed the papers were in his hand writing—he further said he heard Flake say he intended to sell two notes to plaintiff, and afterward heard Mitchell say he had bought them. He once had a conversation with plaintiff in which he stated that whatever may be said as to the small note he (plaintiff) held against Doggett, no one could say there was any usury in the large one. The small note, Mr. Lorimer understood, was for interest on the large one. Defendant then offered said papers marked A. B. C. D. E. F. G. H. and I., as evidencce, which plaintiff's counsel objected to, but were overruled.

Plaintiff then gave in evidence the following letter of John W. Cotten proving first the hand writing by Jacob Elliott a lawful and competent witness.

Cotton Land, near Tallahassee, Florida, 25th Nov., 1844.

Dr. Mitchell, Dear Sir:—I write to ask the favor of you to do me the kindness to inform me as early as convenient the amount 14 of Col. Harry Doggett's indebtedness to you for which I am his security. Please let me know the amount principal and interest, either up to the 1st next month, or 1st day of January. It is now near eight years since I became Col. Doggett's security for this money, and it has been some years since I signed the note you now hold, and I learn he has not paid the first cent on it since I signed it last with him. I think it is time he was paying it. I have been his security and waited patiently for him to pay you, till I begin to think patience is no longer a virtue. If a man of Col. Doggett's estate cannot pay a debt of that amount in eight years it is hard to tell how long a time it would require. He is now good I expect and I say to you that unless Col. Doggett give you other security to satisfy you and release me, I wish you to proceed forthwith to make your money out of Col. Doggett's estate. I have no wish to have Col. D. pushed, and my permitting the note to run so long is I think satisfactory proof of that fact. But one thing is certain, I must have my name off that note if I can get it off. I would be very glad to see you. It is but little out of your way to come to my Cabin on your way from Thomasville to Tallahassee. Come and spend a night with me or longer time. I would be much pleased to see you at my house and we could go and see Col. Doggett, who resides within 3 miles of me, and I think some satisfactory arrangement might be made. I have no doubt he could give you other names fully as good, or better than mine. You were so kind as to tell me in the last conversation we had upon this subject, that when ever I desired it you would proceed to collect your debt, and I now say, that unless Col. Doggett will make some arrangement satisfactory to you, by which the present note you hold can be destroyed, and I relieved from all responsibility by his paying or renewing the note with other securities, I shall certainly wish you to proceed as quick as possible to collect your money from Col. Doggett, for I acknowledge to you I am somewhat uneasy about it. I have a wife and three children dependent on me who have stronger claims than any other person on me, and with good fortune and health, I have no fear but I can always support them comfortably and decently, and I do not wish them brought to penury and want by my imprudence, nor by having to pay other persons debts. I believe him to be an honest and honorable man and willing to pay his debts and if so he can do it for he has about 225 negroes, 3000 to 4000 acres of as fine land as any in the country with a large quantity of stock, 1

&c., besides the present crop, which I suppose will be 600 bales (or more) cotton and some corn to sell. But notwithstanding all this I think you will agree with me that eight years is long enough to be security to any one man for the same debt, and more particularly, when the debt is constantly growing larger. I owe but little myself and am anxious to be relieved from any responsibility for the debts of others, for 'tis about as much as I can do these times to make a decent competency by industry and prudence, without having others to work for. An early answer will greatly oblige, dear sir, Very respectfully yours most ob't

J. W. COTTEN.

Tallahassee, Flor., Dec. 3. Paid 10.

He then gave in evidence the original præcipe ordering suit vs. Doggett & Cotten (which abated against Cotten by his death) to prove the date of the commencement of said suit, to wit: "Isaac W. Mitchell vs. Henry Doggett and John W. Cotten. Action of trespass on the case upon promises. Damages $32,000. Issue writ returnable to next term, January 7th, 1845.

BROCKENBROUGH, P. Q.

To Clerk of Leon Superior Court."

N. P. B., D. C."

No further or other testimony was introduced on either side and the cause having been fully argued, the court instructed the jury as follows, to wit: "That the plaintiff did not ask a recovery upon the special count on the note, having conceded that he could not recover thereon, but had sought to recover upon the money counts. Conceding that the plaintiff could not recover against the defendant on the note as security to Henry Doggett, the court had no difficulty in charging the jury that he could not recover on the money counts. The contract declared upon was manifestly a contract of suretyship, admitted by the parties in the pleadings in the case and to which evidence has been adduced on both sides as well by the plaintiff as the defendant. In such case any concealment from the surety, any withholding from him of the material part of the principal contract would render the engagement of suretyship a nullity. It was void.

Isaac W. Mitchell, vs. Frederic R. Cotten, Executor of John W. Cotten.

There was no valid contract whatever. Now if the contract of 3 suretyship is gone what remains against Cotten. He bought no land of Mitchell nor of Flake. He borrowed no money but was surety only of Doggett. His contract is a contract of suretyship and nothing else. If his liability is not fixed on that, he is altogether discharged. The plaintiff cannot fall back on the old note, for that was given up and cancelled, that note was extinguished and it is here produced as the property of Doggett in whose possession it is. Cotten cannot be held bound for any original consideration, because it is shown that he was always surety. No consideration moved between Mitchell and the defendant. He became Doggett's surety because of his friendly feelings for Doggett. In this view the existence or non-existence of usury on the note sued on, has nothing to do with the defence set up, except so far as the contract as known to Cotten may have been changed in that respect between Doggett and Mitchell, and if the jury believe such change was made without the knowledge or consent of Cotten, then the law declares the contract of suretyship void and the plaintiff cannot recover on the note, and not recovering on the note, he cannot recover on the money counts.

The Plaintiff's counsel then moved the court to instruct the jury as follows, to wit:

First, That the plaintiff may recover the consideration given for any usurious note or security on the money counts, provided there is no usury in the consideration itself.

Second, If it is conceded here or proved or believed by the jury from the evidence that the note of the 1st January, 1839, contained no usury and was a valid contract in all respects and was the consideration of the subsequent usurious contract,, there is no law to prevent the recovery of that debt of 1839, or any portion thereof under the money counts.

Third, That our statute only avoids the interest on a usurious contract and has nothing to do with interest or principal of a prior contract between the same parties, though such contract may be used as the consideration for a usurious contract.

Fourth, The interest of an original valid contract is no more affected by a subsequent usurious contract than the principal, and the latter is not affected.

Fifth, Two joint and several makers of a negotiable promissory note, are both principals and stand upon the same footing towards a 4 bona fide holder, and the law presumes him bona fide until the reverse be shown.

Sixth, The party setting up fraud, concealment, or giving time without consent of surety, or other matter in discharge of surety, must prove his allegations in discharge of himself.

Seventh, If the party surety had proved any different contract for interest on the last note than appeared upon the face of the instrument signed by the party, and the principal was to pay 2 1-2 or more per cent more than the surety was bound for, and such arrangement was concealed from the surety, yet that would not prevent the plaintiff from recovering on the original consideration.

Eighth, That both Cotten being bound in the first instance and the giving of the note with the usurious premium being a subsequent and distinct transaction although the note declared on or any part thereof might be void, the pre-existing debt may be recovered on the money counts.

Ninth, That if the jury are satisfied that 12 1-2 per cent was taken or agreed to be taken by Mitchell and a new note taken which included all interest for which Cotten was then bound and this was endorsed on Cotten's note this was for the advantage of Cotten and he is responsible on the note.

Tenth, By our law if the jury find usury they can only deduct interest from the time usury commences.

Eleventh, That when a party recovers on the money counts it is upon the original consideration, not the old notes or cancelled notes, or any other evidence of debt or securities, but the debt itself due precisely as if no note had ever been given; and where two or more are jointly, validly bound, the law implies that the consideration passed to both of them.

All and singular of which several instructions from one to eleven inclusive the court refused to give; and thereupon instructed the jury "that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover," to which several overrulings as hereinbefore set forth, and refusal to give the instructions prayed, and the instructions given, the plaintiff by his Counsel excepted, and prayed that this his bill of exceptions might be signed and sealed by the court which was done.

The jury returned a verdict for the defendant upon which judgment was entered, and the plaintiff in error now seeks to reverse that judgment upon the following grounds to wit:

First, The Court erred in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to 145 the defendants sixth plea.

Second, The Court erred in admitting the testimony of Henry Doggett taken under commission (being his answers to 8th, 9th, 12th, 14th and 15th interrogatories) to be read in evidence to the jury against the objections of the plaintiff.

Third, The Court below erred in the instructions given by the Judge to the jury.

Fourth, The Court below erred in the refusal of the Judge to instruct the jury as prayed by the plaintiff's counsel.

As to the first error assigned, viz: That the Court erred in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendants sixth plea, it is sufficient to observe, that the judgment upon said demurrer was respondent ouster, and that the plaintiff (as appears by the record) answered over by filing his replication to that plea and thereby waived the demurrer thereto. On overruling a demurrer if the demurrant resorts to ulterior pleadings on the same point the demurrer is waived: Burdet vs. Burdet, 2 A. K. Marsh, 143. Morrison vs. Morrison, 3 Stewart's Reps. 144. Breese, 19.

The same doctrine was maintained by this court in the case of Mitchell vs. Executor of Chaires at the present term. A decision overruling a demurrer cannot be revised, if afterward it is withdrawn and issue joined to the country. Acre vs. Ross, 3 Stewart, 288. Trigg vs. Shields, Hardin 168. A plaintiff cannot demur and reply to the plea, Riley and another vs. Harkness, 2 Blackf. 34. Harris vs. Weaver, 1 Blackf. 77 (and authorities there cited) Stephens on Pl. 296.

The second error assigned, viz: That the court erred in admitting the testimony of Henry Doggett, &c., is attended with more difficulty. This objection arises under the provisions of the 4th Section of the act of February 12th, 1833, "regulating the rate of interest," Duval's Comp. 79. Thompson's Digest, 235, No. 5, which declares "that in all cases whatsoever, whenever any suit or, action shall be brought in any court of record in this State, touching or concerning any usurious bond, specialty, promise or agreement, the borrower or party to any such usurious bond, specialty, promise or agreement, from whom such higher rate of interest is or shall be taken, shall be a good and sufficient witness to give evidence of such offence. Provided, that if any person against whom such evidence is offered to be given, will deny upon oath to be administered in open court, the truth of what such witness offers 146 to swear against him, then such evidence shall not be admitted." Of the reason which induced the Legislature to make this provision we are not advised. No preamble is annexed to inform us. It probably grew out of the distressing conflict of opinion as to the competency of parties to written instruments when called as witnesses for the defendant. In Walton vs. Shelly, 1 Term Reps. 300, it was laid down by Lord Mansfield as a general rule of evidence that a party shall not be received as a witness for the purpose of invalidating an instrument to which he had set his hand, and although this case was (in Jordaine vs. Lashbrooke, 7 Term Reps. 601,) only ten years after its promulgation, entirely overruled by Lord Kenyon at the head of the court by which, under the influence of Lord Mansfield, it had been originally pronounced, it has been followed by the Supreme Court of the United States and the courts of several of the States, while it has been laid aside or never recognized as law in a large majority of the States of the Union, as appears by authorities collected in the notes to the case of Bent against Baker, 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 87, 88, and 1 Greenleaf's Evidence, 430, in note.

The rule laid down in Walton and Shelly is broad enough to comprehend all instruments of writing of whatsoever description, yet except so far as it may be comprised in the common law doctrine of estoppel, it has been every where decided to apply only to those instruments negotiable in their character. Pleasants vs. Pemberton, 2 Dall. 196. Morris vs. Shippen, 2 Binney 165. McFerror vs. Powers, 1 Sergt. and Rawle 107. Bragg vs. Phoenix In. Company, 3 Wash. C. C. Reps. 5. Loker vs. Haynes, 11 Mass. 498.

And in order that the rule should take effect, the instrument must not only be negotiable but actually have been negotiated. 1 Green. Ev. 430, Sec. 385. 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 87, 88. If the suit be between the original parties, a witness may give evidence tending to invalidate a bill or note on which the action is brought, although his name is thereunto affixed, and thus one of the two joint makers of a promissory note is a competent witness for the other to all intents, in a suit on the note wherein the payee is plaintiff. Fox vs. Whiting, 16 Mass. 120. This suit having been brought by the payee both of the note of 1839 and that of the second day of January 1841, and neither of them having been negotiated, it is evident that the witness would have been competent upon general principles

Isaac W. Mitchell, vs. Frederic R. Cotten, Executor of John W. Cotten.

147 under the restrictions imposed by the courts which have adopted the rule of Walton vs. Shelly, and being thus competent the question occurs does the Statute narrow the rule as to the admission of the testimony. That the reason before referred to may have had weight with the Legislature in the enactment of this provision we have no doubt. We think however that the intention was not to abridge but to enlarge the rule of evidence so as to let in the testimony of a party to the suit, if he were the borrower or party to the usurious bond, &c.

To him the Statute gives a privilege not conferred by the Common law. But in order to avail himself of it he must come into open court and "offer to swear," and then if the person against whom such evidenee is offered to be given, will there deny upon oath the truth of what such witness offers to swear against him, then such evidence shall not be admitted. The terms "the witness offers to swear," "evidence offered to be given," import a voluntary swearing by one who cannot be compelled to testify, and while the Statute confers upon a party to the suit this privilege when he happens to be a party to the usurious bond, &c., we cannot suppose that the Legislature intended to abridge the common law right of a party to the suit, to the testimony of a witness who is not a party to the suit, but who may have been a party to such usurious bond, &c., or to prevent the defendant in such a case from availing himself of the statutory mode of taking his testimony by deposition.

On the contrary, we think the act is intended to prevent such testimony from being excluded. The provisions of the second section of the act seem to favor this construction, and any other would involve the absurdity that while the Statute expressly extends the rule so as to admit the testimony of a party to the suit in his own behalf, when the party against whom such tesimony may be offered will not on oath deny what such witness offers to swear, it would narrow the rule so as to put it effectually in the power of the party to shut out the testimony of a witness otherwise in all respects competent, by thus denying what his antagonist might offer to prove by him. We are of opinion therefore that there was no error in admitting the testimony of Doggett. At all events the plaintiff has no cause to complain. He had the full benefit of a cross examination and besides, it does not appear that he was in court ready (if the witness had been there) to deny on oath the testimony he gave.

The plaintiff at the trial of the cause in the court below abandoned 148 the first count of his declaration which (as we have seen) was upon the note of the 2nd of January, 1841, and sought to recover only the original consideration, and the first and most important question presented for our consideration is whether he is entitled to recover at all. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that his contract was that of surety only, and that he was absolutely discharged by the agreement of the 2nd of January, 1841, above set forth, and that if he was not discharged by that agreement, there was no consideration moving from the plaintiff to him. That the original consideration of the contract was the price of land bought by Doggett of Flake, and the plaintiff having abandoned the note set out in the first count of his declaration cannot recover. The position that Cotten was surety is fully sustained by the pleadings and proofs in the case. But it does not we think follow that he was therefore discharged.

The rule undoubtedly is that a surety is not to be held beyond the precise terms of his contract. That the creditor has no right to increase his risk without his consent. But in Tudor vs. Goodloe, 1 B. Monroe's Rep. 324 as cited in 2 Vez. Jun. 540 in note by Charles Sumner, it was held that "a promise by the principal to pay usurious interest in future for forbearance (the precise case before us) is void and does not operate to exonerate a surety;" and this is in accordance with general principles. The drawer of a bill of exchange is as much a surety as the endorser of a promissory note. Arundle Bank vs. Gable, Chitty on Bills, 239 note, was an action by the endorsee against the drawer of a bill. The defence was that when the bill became due the acceptor applied to the holder for time and this was granted on condition that the interest should be allowed him. The plaintiff had a verdict and a motion for new trial was denied. The court said that as no fresh security was taken from the acceptor, the agreement to wait without consideration did not discharge the drawer because the acceptor might notwithstanding such agreement be sued at any moment and the understanding that interest should be paid by the acceptor makes no difference. Ch. Justice Best in the case of Philpot vs. Briant, 4 Bing. Reps. 717 vouches for the correctness of the case of the Arundle Bank vs. Gable, and very distinctly reiterates the same principle. Philpot was holder of a bill of exchange and brought his action against the drawer who defended on the ground that time had been given to the defendant's executrix without the knowledge or consent of the drawer. The holder promised to delay a reasonable time provided the interest was paid, and pursuant to this agreement interest was paid out of 1 the private income of the acceptor's executrix. Still it was held in that case that the drawer who was declared to have the character of surety was not discharged by the delay. And to the same effect is the case of Fulton and Matthews vs. Wedge, 15 John. Reps. 433. Where a security which is given on a loan of money is void at its creation, no subsequent agreement of the borrower to pay usurious interest or premium for the further forbearance of the loan, will invalidate the original security. But the subsequent usurious premium will be void. Crane vs. Hubbell, 7 Paige's Reps. 413. Mitchell vs. Doggett, 1 Florida Reps. 374, 376, 377.

Where a note not tainted with usury has been given up and cancelled on being made the consideration of a usurious contract or note, which latter has been avoided as usurious: Held that the note cancelled on the consideration of this may be recovered upon under the common counts. Edgdell vs. Stanford, 6 Vermont Reps. 551. This is upon the ground that the latter contract is void and therefore does not supercede the former. So where a note is given in renewal of a former note and a premium or interest above seven per cent is exacted for the renewal (the Supreme Court of New York held that) the note was usurious and void, although a separate note (as in this case) was given for the premium, but that the old note was not thereby affected or destroyed. Swartwout vs. Payne, 19 Johns. Reps. 294.

The principle to be extracted from these cases is, that the usurious contract being utterly void, does not extinguish or affect the original valid contract. In other words that a non entity cannot extinguish an entity, and the case of Robinson vs. Bland, 2 Burrow 1077 is founded on the same principle. That was a suit on a bill of exchange, the consideration of which was partly money lost at play and partly money lent to play with. The former being a gaming debt was void. The latter not. Part of the consideration for which the bill was given being void, the whole bill was declared void, but the plaintiff was allowed to recover for the money lent. And the same doctrine is laid down by Burge on Surety where he treats of novation at page 167. He says "There must be two valid subsisting obligations, the one to be extinguished, and the other to be substituted for it. Hence if at the time of the new obligation, the former constituted no debt, or if on the other hand, the new obligation was void there was no novation." The effect of novation is that the prior obligation together with its accessions and privileges 1 is destroyed, but novation will not take place if the second obligation be void. Ibidem 171. It is contended on behalf of the defendant in error that the contract in this case (although void as to Cotten) was valid as to Doggett, for say his counsel, recovery has been had upon it, alluding doubtless to the case of Mitchell vs. Doggett before referred to. In that case, however, the precise point we have been here discussing was not presented, but on reference to that case it will be found that the declaration (as in this case) contained a special count upon the note and the usual money counts. 1 Florida Reps. 365. And at page 375 the court said that the note of 1839 was clearly upon a good and valid consideration, and if that note had been sued on we are not prepared to say but it would have remained unaffected by any subsequent usurious contract. And at page 377 the court cited with approbation and italicized the following remarks of Judge Spencer in the case of Swartwout vs. Payne above cited. "But it is equally certain that if on receiving the new security a new rate of interest above seven per cent was received for forbearance, the new securities are void by the statute, and in this view it is immaterial whether the illegal interest was reserved and made payable by a distinct note or was incorporated into one note. They are considered as one assurance, are all void into whatsoever hands they may come." "The note (said Judge Spencer) being a nullity according to the case of Markle vs. Hatfield, 2 John. 455, the plaintiff had a right to sue on the original contract." Thus indicating very clearly the views it entertained of the state of the contract, and of the rights of the plaintiff in regard to it. We cannot recognize the distinction taken for the defendant in error that the new contract was void as to the surety, and valid as to the principal, but consider them both as standing on the same ground in relation to that matter.

If the new contract was good as to Doggett it could only have been so for the original consideration and any interest that may have accrued thereon before the usurious contract was made, and if good to that extent against Doggett, it was to the same extent good against Cotten. We therefore proceed to enquire whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action upon the original consideration of that contract; and upon this point we should deem the case of Mitchell vs. Doggett before cited, as conclusive, but for some objections which have been presented in this case, which were not presented in that. And one is, that there was no consideration moving from Mitchell to Cotten. As to this we remark, that the words, "for value received" in the note of 1839 (as well as in that of 1841, both of which were) offered in evidence, import a consideration. Mandeville vs. Welsh, 5 Wheat. 277, 4 Peter's Cond. Reps. 645, and authorities there cited. But besides this the evidence in the case shows that the notes of Doggett and Cotten to Flake transferred to Mitchell, were given up by the latter and cancelled, and the note of 1839, for $13,185 (which was valid,) was substituted for them—a transaction which we think was a good consideration to both Doggett and Cotten. The extended credit given was surely a valid consideration to Doggett the principal, and whatsoever is a good consideration to support the promise to the prmcipal, will sustain the promise to the surety. Hughes vs. Wheeler, 8 Cowen, 83. Pritchell et al, vs. the People, 1 Gilman Rep. 530. Leonard vs. Vredenburg, 8 John. 29. The United States vs. Linn, 15 Peters 290. In this last case the court say: "There was no necessity for any consideration passing directly between the plaintiffs and the sureties. The consideration which supported the contract of Linn (the principal) support that of his sureties."

"The whole being one entire and original contract and not collateral on the part of the sureties, the consideration received by Linn was sufficient to support the contract on the part of his sureties." And 8 John. Reps. 37. Cro. Eliz. 137 and 3 Burr. 1886 are cited. Here the undertaking of the surety was direct not collateral.—Much stress was laid by the Counsel for the defendant in error, at the argument of this case, upon the fact that the note of $13,186 was given up when those of the 2d of January, 1841, were taken by the plaintiff. It is said that it was cancelled, destroyed, and that the plaintiff cannot now rely upon it. But in Olcott vs. Rathburn, 5 Wendell 492, the court held that "the mere giving up a note is no satisfaction of it. It is not an act which of itself affects the validity of the note. It seems (continued the court) from the case of Russell vs. Hackley, 6 Term Rep. 12, that it was the common practice in London to give up a bill of exchange upon receiving a check on a Bank therefor, and it does not appear objectionable so far as the acceptor is concerned. The maker of a promissory note stands in the relation of an acceptor of a bill of exchange. There can be no doubt that a note thus parted with is given up under the expectation that the check will prove to be a satisfaction, but this does not settle the question."

When a creditor receives a note or check for his debt, he expects confidently that the note or check will turn out to be a satisfaction of his demand, yet if such note or check is dishonored he may sue on the original debt, and is not concluded by his receipt, and 1 Cowen 290, 9 John. R. 310 are cited. The endorsee of a note may in New York recover on the common money counts in an action against the maker, although the evidence shows no money transaction between them, but the plaintiff is suing as the mere agent of the party in interest. Olcott vs. Rathburn, 5 Wendell 490. And in Massachusetts it is held that an endorsee of a note may maintain an action for money had and received against the maker, though the maker signed it merely for the accommodation of the payee and receive neither money or any other consideration for signing it.—Cole vs. Cushing, 8 Pick. 48.

Another objection yet remains to be noticed. It is that the original notes to Flake were for land and therefore the plaintiff cannot recover in this case on the common counts. But the notes to Flake, it seems evident, were intended to be and were extinguished by the transaction above mentioned, and the note of 1839 is the consideration of that of 2nd January, 1841, which proved to be tainted with usury. The consideration is clearly shown by Cotten's letter set out in the record. If however, land is to be deemed the consideration of the note of 1839, because it was the consideration of the Flake notes, (but we do not so deem it) still there are not wanting authorities which go far to show that the plaintiff may recover on the common counts. In the case of Dearborn, Treasurer, &c., vs. Parks, 5 Greenl. Reps. 81, it was held that "where one undertakes to pay the debt of another and by the same act also to pay his own debt, which was the motive of the promise, this is not such an undertaking to pay the debt of another as is within the statute of frauds, and therefore it is not necessary that it should be in writing, and though the consideration of such promise was land, yet the party to whom the debt was to be paid may recover the amount in an action for money had and received." This must have been upon the principle that the price of the land was money in the hands of the purchaser and the court in that case said, "If the defendant did not actually receive money, he received that for which he agreed to pay a certain sum of money, part of which was appropriated in 153 his hands to pay the plaintiff, and Floyd vs. Day, 3 Mass. Reps. 403, and Randall vs. Rich, 11 Mass. Reps. 498 are in point. In the last case (which was assumpsit for money had and received) the court say "although land is taken, it is taken at money's worth and the debt which might have been exacted in money at all events, has been discharged. This is sufficient to support this doctrine." But Mitchell bought of Flake the notes of Doggett and Cotten (and in the absence of proof to the contrary must be presumed to have paid money for them) after which he gave up to Doggett these notes of Doggett and Cotten, and took therefor a new note signed by both, given them further time within which to pay. May not this be considered in substance and effect as a loan of the money to Doggett, or as money had and received by him to the use of the plaintiff for the payment of which Cotten was surety? Doggett it is to be presumed understood it as a loan. In his answer to the 8th interrogatory he says: "The real bargain between Mitchell and myself at the time of making said note (the note of $15,955,) was that Mitchell was to receive for the loan of said money 12 1-2 per cent," and if Doggett at this time understood the arrangement as a loan of money it may reasonably be suposed that the parties so understood the matter when the note for $13,186 was made. It is worthy of remark here, that there is nothing in the record to show that at the time of this transaction Mitchell knew that Cotten was a mere surety on and not a principal in these notes, or that he (Mitchell) was ever informed that the notes to Flake were given for the price of land bought by Doggett. The consideration to Doggett (is as we have seen) a sufficient consideration to Cotten. Mitchell again gives up this last note to Doggett and takes a note signed by both Doggett and Cotten which was proved to be usurious. Is there any reason in justice or equity why he should not recover the original consideration (so far as it is not affected by the usury) under the common counts? We think not and that the law does not forbid it. In Clark vs. Martin, 2 Lord Raym. 758, Holt, Ch. Justice, expressed his disapprobation of declaring on promissory notes before the statute (of Ann) as if they were within the custom of merchants and assigned as a reason "beause there was so easy a method as to declare upon a general indebitatus assumpsit for money lent." The same he says is laid down in 12 Mod. 380, and 1 Burr, 1525.—Lord Mansfield says: "I do not find it any where disputed that an action upon an indebitatus assumpsit generally for money lent may 154
be brought on a note payable to one or order," and it was so holden in Smith vs. Kendall, 6 Term Reps. 123. The notes to Flake which were taken up when the note of 1839 was given were negotiable. In Beardsley vs. Root, 11 John. 523, Van Ness, Justice, in delivering opinion of the court remarks that the general rule indisputably is that money had and received cannot be supported unless the defendant has actually received money. It has however (he says) been held in the English Courts that taking negotiable paper is equivalent to a receipt of money and although we have never sanctioned that doctrine by any express decision yet in the case of Cummings vs. Hackley, 8 John. 206, the court seem to intimate their approbation of it. And on reference to that case we find it sustains him as to the action of the Supreme Court of New York. And Pickerel vs. Banks, 13 East. 20, and Fox vs. Cutworth, 4 Bing. 179, sustain him as to the English Courts. Tatlock vs. Harris, 3 Term Reps. 174, was an action by the endorsee of a bill payable to a fictitious payee against the acceptor who was also one of the drawers. The declaration contained counts for money paid and money had and received. It appeared upon the evidence that the defendant was indebted to one of the endorsers, and sent him this bill for which he was credited in account, and that the plaintiff paid that endorser the value of the bill, and upon demurrer to evidence the court held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under the counts for money paid, and money had and received, and he had judgment accordingly. And Vere vs. Lewis, Ibid. 182, was a similar action to that of Tatlock vs. Harris, except that the defendant was not one of the drawers and there was no evidence that he received any value for the bill. In neither of these cases had the defendant actually received any money of the plaintiffs and a numerous class of cases involving the same principle might be cited, but these are deemed sufficient.

In the case of Hughes vs. Wheeler, 8 Cowen Reps. 81, 84, the question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover under the common counts the amount of the original note, for which the note declared on (and which was proved to be usurious) was given. The objection made to the recovery was that the note itself having been destroyed by the parties did not exist and could not be used as evidence of money had and received by the defendant and the evidence showing that it was given for the debt of a third person, there was no cause of action against the defendant prior to and independent of the giving of the note (the precise objection made to such recovery in this case.) But the Court said "the destruction of the note was a matter of no importance. The note on which the suit was brought having proved to be usurious, the plaintiff resorted, as he had a right to do, to the consideration of the note so far as it was not affected by the usury. What was that consideration. It was the old note which was not attempted to be impeached, but which on the contrary was shown to have been given for a legal consideration and a premium of five dollars for forbearance. That a promissory note is evidence of money had and received by the maker from the payee and may be used as such upon the money counts is admitted. It is then in principle the common case of an action for money had and received, &c., supported by proof of a promissory note which is shown to have been destroyed by accident or misapprehension. which does not amount to a legal satisfaction of it."

Another objection to the recovery of the plaintiff on the common counts (in that case) was that the old note was not given for a pecuniary consideration, and the defendant below had offered to show that the note was given for the debt of a third person, which debt was not for money, but for land sold by the plaintiff to him. The evidence was excluded and the objection overruled. On error brought, Sutherland, Justice, thought in this the Court erred, but Savage, Chief Justice, and Woodworth, Justice, held the note to be conclusive, and the judgment was affirmed. This case is directly in point in many respects. The note (as in the case under consideration) had been given up and cancelled. The note taken in its place proved to be usurious. The note given up and destroyed was given for the debt of a third person, which debt was for land. Here the debt was Doggett's and originally for land, and Cotten was Doggett's surety, not only on the last note, but on the notes to Flake, and the note of 1839 was submitted for the Flake notes.

We fully recognize the rule asserted by Lord Ellenborough cited by counsel for the defendant in error, that "the contract of a surety is strictissime juris,' and that he cannot be held beyond the precise terms of his agreement, as laid down by the authorities generally. Nor has the case of Wells vs. Girling, 8 Taunton, 737, cited on behalf of defendant in error in which it was held by the Court of Common Pleas in England "that an action cannot be supported upon the money counts, against one of the makers of a promissory note who signed it as a surety for the other maker." escaped our attention, but finding the principles it asserts opposed by a number of American cases decided by Courts for whose opinions we have the highest respect, we doubt its correctness. And moreover the Court in that case based its decision mainly upon the fact that the proofs showed that "there was no antecedent debt." Had it been otherwise (as in the case at bar) we believe from the language used by Chief Justice Dallas in that case, the decision would have been different. We therefore see no reason why, in this case, the surety should not be held according to the precise terms of his agreement (except so far as the usury may effect his liability to pay interest) and we hold him no further. On the contrary we declare the contract, by which it was attempted to hold even his principal further, in that regard null and void. If the views that we have taken of this case be correct (and from the best consideration that we have been able to give it, we believe them to be so,) the Judge erred in his instructions to the jury that "plaintiff could not recover on the money counts," that "there was no valid contract whatever—that the plaintiff cannot fall back on the old note—that the existence or non existence of usury on the note sued on has nothing to do with the defence set up, except so far as the contract as known to Cotten may have been changed in that respect between Doggett and Mitchell—that the plaintiff cannot resort to the money counts, and that he is not entitled to recover," and in refusing to give the first, sixth, eighth, and tenth instructions as prayed by the counsel for the plaintiff, and the seventh so far as it asked the Court to instruct the jury that the plaintiff could recover the original consideration.—And the judgment must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

But inasmuch as it very clearly appears, from the testimony in the case, as disclosed by the bill of exceptions, that on the second day of January, A. D., 1841, an agreement was entered into by and between the plaintiff in error, (who was also plaintiff below) and the said Doggett, by which the latter engaged to pay interest at the rate of two and one half per cent beyond the then legal rate of interest for the forbearance of the debt of $15,955 in the first count of the declaration mentioned, the contract was consequently, from that time tainted with usury, and the interest on the same is thereby rendered entirely void, according to the principles decided and settled in the case of Mitchell against Doggett at the last term (before cited) which we have again examined and with which we are well satisfied. And consequently the defendant cannot be charged with any interest since the said second day of January, A. D., 1841. For notwithstanding the plaintiff at the trial of this cause in the court below abandoned the first count of his declaration, and rested his case upon the common counts, yet the usurious note being there, in bold relief staring us in the face, and the evidence in the case most conclusively proving the usurious contract upon which it was made and delivered to the plaintiff, we cannot lose sight of or disregard it, or place him in a better condition in regard to the defendant, whose testator was only a surety than that in which he was placed at the past term in his suit against Doggett the principal, for the amount of this same identical debt, except so far as the proof us to the time of the commencement of the usury in this case may differ from the testimony in that case in relation to this matter. To do so would put it in the power of a party at all times by getting a surety to his usurious contract to avoid the statute to the extent at least of the legal rate of interest.

The fourth section of the act above cited "regulating interest," Thompson's Digest 235, No. 4. Duval's Comp. 79, sec. 2, provides "That when any note, notes, bond or bonds, shall be upon or on account of any usurious contract, the interest on the same shall be void and the obligor or obligors forever exonerated from the payment of the same." It is not the usurious interest merely, but the entire interest which may have accrued after the date of the usurious contract from the payment of which the obligor is exonerated.—Now Cotten was a party to this note of $15,955 on which the usurious interest was (by the agreement between the plaintiff (Mitchell) and Doggett) to be paid. He was one of the obligors. The usurious interest it is true, was secured by a separate note which was not signed by Cotten, but was signed by Doggett, and it has already been decided in the case of Mitchell vs. Doggett that they are one assurance. This $15,955 includes the $13,186 the sum secured to be paid by the note of 1839; and the usurious interest was to be paid on the whole sum. The interest on the whole was therefore void by this usurious agreement, from the time when the usury by that agreement commenced, which Doggett expressly says was on the 2d of January, 1841. But this is not all. The 7th section of the same act made it the duty of the Judges of the Superior Courts to charge the Grand Juries of their respective counties, &c., to present all and every person who should violate the provisions of this act, &c., and on every presentment it was made the duty of the District Attorney to prosecute the party presented, for the amount of interest by this act forfeited, either in an action of debt in the name of the Territory, or upon information filed, and these duties now devolve upon the Judges and Solicitors of the respective counties of this State. To render judgment for the interest therefore would be to enable the plaintiff to recover money forfeited to the State upon a penal statute, and for the recovery of which it would seem to be the duty of the Judge of the proper Circuit, to charge the Grand Jury to present him. The act of 14th March, 1844, sec. 2, pamphlet laws, page 53, amending that act is equally penal and very forcibly illustrates the settled policy of the State on this subject. See Thompson's Digest, page 234, 235, No. 2. With the statutory provision before us we feel ourselves precluded from allowing more to be recovered (in such a case as this) than the amount of the original debt that may be proved with legal interest thereon up to the time when the usurious contract was made.

We have looked into the other instructions asked by the plaintiff below and deem it proper to say that the second appears too broad. It should have excepted all the interest since the said second day of January, 1841. The third and fourth seem to be objectionable for similar reasons. The fifth was calculated to mislead the jury who from the testimony in the case were the proper judges of the question (if it were at all material) whether Cotten was a surety or a principal. The ninth and eleventh (with the exception of the last clause of the latter which might with propriety have been given) seem to embrace only abstract propositions with which the jury had nothing to do.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded to the court below for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Per Curiam.

David Brown, vs. Joseph F. C. Harley.

David Brown, vs. Joseph F. C. Harley.

A scire facias to revive a judgment is not an original but a judicial writ, founded on some matter of record to enforce execution of it, and properly speaking it is only the continuation of an action.

In scire facias upon judgment a declaration is not necessary.

It is a presumption of law that every thing done in a Court of record is regularly done, unless the contrary appear upon appeal or writ of error.

In scrie facias before the Circuit Courts of the State to revive a judgment rendered in a Superior Court of the Territory, a suggestion to the Superior Court in these words 'and now in behalf of the said Joseph F. C. Harley it hath been understood in the said court that although the judgment thereof is given, yet execution for, &c., remains to be made, &c., furnishes no warrant or authority for any proceedings in the Circuit Court.

The judgment in this case being for a specific sum in damages as prayed in the writ and for cost is erroneous. The judgment should have been "Let execution issue according to the force and effect of the judgment aforesaid by default of D. B. defendant."

Writ of Error to Leon Circuit Court.

The action below was by scire facias, to revive a judgment rendered in the late Leon Superior (Territorial) Court on 21st November, 1842, in favor of Joseph F. C. Harley, and against David Brown, for $1,483. The scire facias is in these words:

"THE STATE OF FLORIDA,

To the Sheriff of Leon county—Greeting:

Whereas at a Superior Court of the Middle District of the Territory of Florida for the county of Leon, begun and held at the Court House in the City of Tallahassee, on Monday the 14th day of November, 1842, and continued till and after Monday the 21st November, 1842, a certain Joseph F. C. Harley, on the said 21st November, 1842, by the consideration of said court, recovered against one David Brown a judgment for the sum of fourteen hundred and eighty-three dollars, the damages which the said Joseph F. C. Harley had sustained by occasion of the non-performance of certain promises and assumptions by the said David Brown to the said Joseph F. C. Harley lately made, and his costs by him about his suit in that behalf expended, as appears of record. And now on behalf of the said Joseph F. C. Harley, it hath been understood 60 in the said court, that although the judgment thereof is given, yet execution for the damages and costs aforesaid still remains to be made for him—wherefore the said Joseph F. C. Harley hath besought that a proper remedy be granted in this behalf. You are, therefore, hereby commanded that you make known to the said David Brown, that he be and appear before the Circuit Court of the Middle Circuit of the State of Florida for Leon county, at the Court House in the City of Tallahassee, on the fourth Monday of the present month—that is to say, on the 27th day of April, A. D. 1846, to show, if he hath or can say any thing for himself, why the said Joseph F. C. Harley ought not to have his execution against him for the damages and costs aforesaid, according to the force and effect of the recovery aforesaid, if he, the said David Brown, shall think fit; and further to do and receive what the said court shall then and there consider concerning him in this behalf, and have then and there this writ. Witness," &c.

This writ was served, and at the appearance term, (May, 1846,) the defendant moved the court for a rule upon the plaintiff to file a declaration in this case, on or before the first day of the next term; and upon default, that the action be dismissed, according to the Rules and Practice of the court. This rule was refused, the scire facias being deemed a sufficient declaration in practice, if the plaintiff wished to rely upon it as such.

At the November term, 1846, (the defendant having filed no plea,) the following judgment was rendered: "This day came the plaintiff by his attorneys, and the defendant having filed no plea herein, and having been duly warned and not appearing, on motion of the plaintiff by his attorneys, it is considered by the court, that the said plaintiff may have execution against the defendant for fourteen hundred and eighty three dollars, the damages and the costs in the writ aforesaid specified; and, also, that the plaintiff recover against the said defendant his costs, by him expended in suing forth and prosecuting this writ, and the said defendant in mercy, &c."

To reverse this judgment, the defendant prosecuted his writ of error in this court, upon the following assignment of errors:

I. That the court erred in refusing to require the plaintiff Joseph F. C. Harley to file a declaration in scire facias in this case, as is shown in bill of exceptions.

II. That the court erred in requiring defendant to plead to the 161 writ of scire facias as a declaration.

III. That the court erred in giving Judgment for plaintiff below upon the said writ of scire facias, because the said writ of scire facias is altogether irregular and insufficient in this:—

1st. That said scire facias doth not allege that the judgment set forth was regularly rendered.

2nd. That said scire facias doth not allege that suggestion hath been made to Leon Circuit Court, which issued said writ, that execution remains to be made, but alleges that suggestion of that fact hath been made to Leon Superior Court—which suggestion to Leon Superior Court could not be legal ground for issuing the writ from Leon Circuit Court, nor warrant the issuing of such writ of scire facias, nor make the same legal and valid.

3rd. That it doth not appear by said scire facias that Leon Circuit Court had any rightful power to issue said writ—for it is not shown, nor suggested, either that said Leon Circuit Court rendered said judgment, or that the record of said judgment now remains in the court which issued said writ of scire facias.

IV. That the court erred in ordering execution to issue, it not appearing to said Leon Circuit Court of record that no execution hath issued on said judgment.

V. That the said writ doth not show authority or power in Leon Circuit Court to issue execution.

VI. That in the judgment rendered on the 13th day of November, 1846, 'that the said plaintiff may have execution against the defendant for fourteen hundred and eighty-three dollars, the damages and the costs in the writ aforesaid specified,' &c., is erroneous. The said executions not being awarded "according to the full force and effect of the recovery" in said writ mentioned, but awarded for damages as of the date of 13th Nov., 1846.

VII. That the plaintiff was not entitled to cost, and there is error in said judgment in awarding; also, "that the plaintiff re-"cover against the said defendant his costs by him expended in "suing forth and prosecuting this writ."

Randall & Hagner, for Plaintiff in Error:

The defendant in error sued out of Leon Circuit Court a writ of scire facias quare executionem non against plaintiff in error. At the return of the writ, the defendant below insisted that the plaintiff 162 in this action should file a declaration according to the rules and practice of the court, or else at second term the suit should stand dismissed. 15 and 16 Rules adopted by the Supreme Court, January 1846.

Also sec. 20, Judiciary act, 94 of Duval's.

The court refused to require a declaration, but on the contrary required defendant to plead to the writ as a declaration.

We assign this as error.

Scire facias is considered at law an action in the nature of a new original. 2 Saunders Rep., 71, note 4. 6 Johnston's Rep., 106. 9 Connecticut Rep., 392.

It may be released by a release of all actions. Co. Litt. 290.

Scire facias to revive a judgment after a year and a day. 2 Saunder's Rep., 72d, and note 3.

In England the plaintiff files his declaration in scire facias of whatever character as in any other action. 2 Tidd's Prac., 1129. 2 Saunder's Rep., 72, n. 2 Chitty Arch. Pract., 835. See Tidd's Appendix of Forms—Declaration in scire facias to have execution. Issue and judgment thereon p. 515.

Our laws have made no alteration whatever in this respect.—Scire facias is an action here in Florida just as in England.

In New York they made a change by express statute. See 18 Wendell, p. 526.

By 2 Revised Stat., of N. Y., 579, the plaintiff may require the defendant to plead to writ of scire facias. In Virginia a practice has grown up to dispense with such declaration. See Robinson's Prac., 584.

"By the Virginia practice the declaration is dispensed with."

We submit that no such practice obtains in Florida, and no Legislative action has wrought a change. A declaration should have been filed in this action as in all others according to the rules of court.

Courts may rescind their rules, or may in establishing them reserve the exercise of discretion for particular cases; but a rule without such qualification must be applied to all cases that fall within it until it is rescinded. Thompson vs. Hatch, 3 Pick., 512. Wall vs. Wall, 2 Har. and Gill, 79.

But suppose the court not to have erred in dispensing with a declaration, was there not error in the judgment rendered by default?

David Brown, vs. Joseph F. C. Harley.

163 We insist that this writ of scire facias is not sufficient whereon to ground the judgment.

A writ of scire facias to revive a judgment can only issue from the court having the record on which it was founded; and the writ itself embody every requisite to the exercise of the power asked for. 2 Tidd's Prac., 1105. 1 Ld. Raymond's Reps. 216. 2 Saunder's Rep. 72, n.

Also 23 Pickering, 110. 2 Pennington, 529. 7 Mass., 340.—9 Mass., 520.

Here the writ does not only not state the record to be within the court to which he applies, but even the suggestion on which the proceeding is founded is made in another court, to wit, Leon Superior Court.

Scire facias is granted partly upon a record and partly upon suggestion, without which no proceeding could be had upon the record. 2 Institutes, 470. 8 Bacon's Abrid., 598.

Now the suggestion made here was made in Leon Superior Court—so declared—and surely that suggestion there, cannot warrant a proceeding in another tribunal, to whom no such requisite information is declared to have been given.

It did not appear to the court that no declaration had issued, nor does the writ show any authority in the court to award execution of the judgment.

Again it is a principle as well established in practice as it is consonant to reason, that the judgment must be that execution be had of the original judgment to which nothing can be added. This is the prayer and it is answered "fiat"—let it be done.

The authorities are clear: 8 Bacon's Abrid., 627. 1 Pennington's Rep., 73. 2 Pennington's Rep., 529. Tidd's Appendix, 515—576, sec. 146.

Now the damages awarded here are in the nature of a new judgment, as of the date of 13th Nov., 1846.

Again, costs are awarded to the plaintiff. By reason of his own laches he had failed to sue out execution, and on the principle of "vol unti non fit injuria," the common law allowed no costs in such a case. The Stat. 8 and 9, W. 3, Ch. 11, Sec. 3, gave costs to plaintiff, obtaining judgment on an award of execution after plea pleaded, or demurrer joined thereon."

But cost were not allowed in England on default until 3 and 4
164 William 4th, (1833-4) Ch. 42. See 2 Chitty's Arch. Prac., 835. 2 Tidd's Prac., 1132.

Scire facias is not amendable; but the proper way is for the plaintiff to move to quash it. 1 Hiller vs. Frost, 1 Str. Rep., 405. Impey's Prac., 528.

Long & Walker, for Defendant in Error.

LANCASTER, Justice, delivered the following opinion:

This case comes by writ of error from Leon Circuit Court. It is a scire facias to revive a judgment rendered by the Superior Court of Leon county in the year 1842.

The first error assigned alleges that the court erred in refusing to require the plaintiff Jos. F. C. Harley to file a declaration in this case, as appears by the bill of exceptions.

It appears by the record, that on calling the case on the appearance docket the defendant by his attorney moved the Court for a rule on the plaintiff to file a declaration in this case on or before the first day of the next succeeding term, and upon default of such declaration filed that the suit shall be dismissed according to the rules and practice of the court. Which rule was refused, scire facias being deemed a sufficient declaration in practice if plaintiff chose to rely upon it as such. The same to be pleaded or demurred to as a regular declaration. To which opinion and ruling of the court defendant excepted, which was signed, sealed and made part of the record.

The rule of the court referred to in the defendant's motion for a declaration is in the words following "all declarations must be filed on or before the first day of the term, and if not filed by the first day of the term thereafter, the suit shall be dismissed." This rule can only have reference to the cases where, by the statute, declarations are required to be filed. The act of Assembly which bears on the question is as follows: "In all actions brought to any of the Circuit Courts of this State, whether the same be commenced by original process against the person or against the estate of the defendant, it shall be the duty of the plaintiff or his attorney to file with the clerk his declaration on or before the first day of the term to which his action is made returnable," &c. Tho. Dig. 330, sec. 1 The case then in which a declaration is required by the statute is in actions commenced by original process against the person or es- 1
tate of the defendant. Original process against the person is declared to be a capias or summons ad respondendum. Act. Nov. 23, 1828. Tho. Dig. 321, sec. 1. Against the estate, is provided by attachment. Act Feb. 15th, 1834. Tho. Dig. 367, sec. 1. In all actions therefore brought by summons against the person, or attachment against the estate, the plaintiff is required to file a declaration by the statutes, and the rule of the court must be construed with reference to the statutes in the use of the terms "all declarations."

This is a case of scire facias to revive a judgment and is not an original but a judicial writ, founded on some matter of record, to enforce execution of it, and properly speaking is only the continuation of an action. A step leading to the execution of a judgment tion of an action. A step leading to the execution of a judgment already obtained and enforcing the original demand for which the action was brought. It creates nothing anew, but may be said to reanimate that which before had existence, but whose vital powers and faculties are as it were suspended, and without its salutary interference would be lost. 2 Sellon's Prac. 187—8. Yet it may properly be called to action because a release of all actions, or executions is a good plea in bar to scire facias. 2 Sellon Prac. 187. Nevertheless it is not an original process. The statute does not absolutely require a declaration in scire facias to revive a judgment. It is therefore mere matter of practice whether it should be required or not. In England as well as in many of the States of the Union, the custom of declaring on scire facias is believed to exist. In Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and some other States, the practice appears to be to plead to the writ. No evil attends this practice, every defence which could be made by way of plea, or demurrer to a declaration may also be made to the writ, and unless it contains all the allegations and averments necessary to a valid declaration will be held bad on demurrer. The practice is convenient, because it waives the necessity of a formal declaration and prevents repetition on the record. The form of a declaration in scire facias on judgment is nothing more than a repetition of the writ, with a prayer for execution. The writ cites the defendant to shew cause why execution shall not issue. It may be considered substantially in the nature of a prayer for execution. 2 Sellon's p. 51. No practice has yet been established by the Supreme Court, and it is understood it has differed in the various Circuits. It is thought under the considerations hereinbefore expressed that in scire facias upon judgment a declaration is not necessary, and not required by law, and 1 that the court did not err in refusing to grant a rule on plaintiff for a declaration as moved by defendants attorney.

The second error assigned is: The court erred in requiring the defendant to plead to the writ of scire facias as a declaration.

For the reasons before set forth this assignment of error is considered by the court not well taken, and is overruled.

The 3d error assigned alleges the writ of scire facias to be altogether irregular and insufficient, because, firstly, it does not allege the judgment set forth was regularly rendered. Secondly, that the writ of scire facias doth not allege that suggestion hath been made to Leon Circuit Court that execution remains to be made, but alleges the suggestion of that fact hath been made to Leon Superior Court, which cannot be legal ground to warrant the issuing the writ from Leon Circuit Court, nor make the same legal and valid. And thirdly, it doth not appear by the writ of scire facias that Leon Circuit Court had any rightful power to issue said writ, for it is not shewn or suggested that Leon Circuit Court either rendered the judgment, or that the record of said judgment now remains in said Circuit Court from which the writ issued.

As to the first ground set forth in third assignment of error it is stated in the writ "at a Superior Court of the Middle district of Florida, for the county of Leon, begun and held at the Court House in the city of Tallahassee on Monday the 14th day of November, 1842, and continued till and after Monday the 21st November, 1842, a certain Joseph F. C. Harley on the said 21st November, 1842, by the consideration of said court recovered against one David Brown a judgment for," &c.

The existence of the Superior Courts under the Territorial Government of Florida, their powers as courts of general jurisdiction, and the transfer of all causes civil and criminal pending in the Superior Courts to the Circuit Courts, for the counties in which such cases may be so pending, together with all papers connected therewith or relating thereto, are parts of the legal and judicial history of the country of which the courts will take notice, as well also as the authority vested in the Circuit Courts, to proceed in all such causes. The Superior Court which rendered the judgment was a court of record of general jurisdiction. It is alleged in the writ as before set forth that the plaintiff by the consideration of said court, recovered against the defendant a judgment, &c. It is a presumption of law, that everything done in a court of record of general jurisdiction, is rightly and regularly done, unless the contrary appear upon appeal or writ of error, the allegation that judgment was regularly rendered is unnecessary.

The second ground of objection set forth in the third assignment of errors appears to have more weight. After reciting the judgment given in the Superior Court the writ of scire facias goes on further to state "and now on behalf of the said Joseph F. C. Harley it hath been understood in the said court that although the judgment thereof is given, yet execution for, &c., remains to be made, &c."

To what court is suggestion made, that execution remains to be made of the judgment? Most clearly to Leon Superior Court—a court having no existence at the time the suggestion was made, which could then issue no writ whatever, and a suggestion, too, which could furnish no warrant or authority for any proceeding in the Circuit Court. If a declaration had been filed in this case, and had alleged a suggestion to the Superior Court, that execution remained to be made, it would be bad on demurrer, because such a suggestion would not authorize the Circuit Court to order execution. It might be amended by the writ if there was any thing to amend by, but in this case the writ is as bad as the declaration would be. The judgment (rendered in this case) was by default. It was incumbent on the plaintiff to proceed on a valid writ. A majority of the court think the writ is defective.

The judgment is not a judgment for execution, but for a specific sum in damages as prayed in the writ, and for costs also in this proceeding. This is clearly error.

The judgment should have been, "Let execution issue, according to the force, form, and effect of the judgment aforesaid, by default of the said D. B., defendant." 2 Sellon's Practice, 50.

The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed, and the writ dismissed without prejudice to any future action of the plaintiff on his original judgment.

8 BALTZELL, Justice, dissenting:

The objection which has occasioned the reversal of the judgment and dismissal of the writ in this case is to the words 'the said court' which are construed to mean the Superior Court. The precedent in Chitty will be found to be as follows: And now on behalf of the said A. B. in our said court before us, we have been informed, &c.' The variance would seem to be in the use of the word the for our, whilst the substitution of the latter in the writ would have obviated the difficulty.

We are at a loss, however, for the rule that confines the construction of an instrument to one word or a part of a sentence. The cardinal rule for construing all instruments is that the whole is to be viewed and compared in all its parts, so that every part of it may be made consistent and effectual. In case of difficulty in the construction, there certainly is greater reason for rejecting a word as repugnant and insensible, than for a disregard of the remainder of the sentence, or of the writing. In the case under consideration there would be no unusual stretch in construing the words "the said" to refer to the Circuit Courts even if Superior had been the antecedent. Courts are not tied down to the grammar of sentences or writings as to their construction, but will control even the literal terms, if they contravene the main purpose and object. One of the rules is that a construction is to be avoided which will defeat the instrument —ut res magis valent quam pereat. So also a construction which is against reason, is to be avoided. Now the Superior Court is admitted not to have been in existence, so that there could have been no thought of application to it any more than if the name of a dead man had been used.

But looking to the entire sentence we submit, with deference, that every difficulty is avoided. After the quotation of the court "yet execution for the damages still remains to be made," &c., it continues, "wherefore the said Harley hath besought that a proper remedy be granted in this behalf."

Of whom was this asked—to whom was the application made? Most clearly the Circuit Court as the very writ itself shews in commanding the party to appear in the Circuit Court and shew cause, &c.

Admitting that there was a mistake as alleged, the inquiry arises was it material, the Court say it was, and that a demurrer would lie for such defect. We do not so understand the law. It is a suggestion, not an allegation that is complained of, a suggestion to the wrong court. Now we propose to show that this suggestion was not necessary, and that the allegation 'that execution still remains' was sufficient without it to sustain the writ. 169

David Brown, vs. Joseph F. C. Harley.

"A writ of scire facias to revive a judgment, may issue of course at any time within seven years from the date of the judgment without application to the court." Tidd's Prac., 1156.

A scire facias on a judgment after a year and a day states the judgment recovered by plaintiff, and the court in which it was obtained. It then states that although judgment be thereupon given yet execution of the debt, &c., still remains to be made. 2 Tidd. 1157.

The test is whether plaintiff would be required to prove the suggestion, or defendant could put it in issue or controvert it. Most clearly not. It was then matter not of substance but of form, and might be rejected as surplusage. 1 Chitty, 232.

Whilst we think the decision clearly against general principles we hold it to be against statutory provisions also. Referring to the record we find the proecipe to this effect.

"JOSEPH F. C. HARLEY, vs. DAVID BROWN, } In Leon Circuit Court.

The Clerk will isue a scire facias to revive the judgment which was rendered in the above case on the 21st of Nov., 1842, dated April 4, 1846."

It was not then the fault of the plaintiff that the word the was put in place of our in the writ, or that a mistake was made. Now the Supreme Court has held in the case of the Union Bank of Florida, vs. Edwards, the English statutes of Jeofails in force. 1 Florida Rep., 153.

One of these provides that "no process shall be annulled or discontinued for the misprison of the Clerks in writing one syllable, or letter, or word too much or too little, but as soon as the mistake is perceived it shall be amended in due form. And the justice before whom the record is made, or shall be depending by way of error, or otherwise, may amend the same as well after as before judgment in the same manner as they might have done by the above statute, before judgment."

"So the court may amend whatever to them seemeth to be the misprison of the Clerks in any record, process, word, plea, warrant or at- 170 torney, writ, panel, or return, which may for the time be before them so that no judgment shall be reversed by reason of such misprison." 8 H. 6, C. 12. 9 H. 5, C. 4. 2 Arch. Prac., 1115.

"The courts have power of amending a scire facias for any misprison of the Clerks by Stat. 8 H. 6, C. 12, already mentioned, that statute expressly including writs." 2 Arch. Prac., 1133.

"Although the omissions, variances and defects, by 16 and 17 Car. are required to be amended, the benefit of the act is attained by the court overlooking the exception." 2 Tidd, 960. 2 Strange, 1011.

But again the ordinary process for the commencement of a suit is by way of summons to answer in an action on the case of trespass, &c. Now although this gives him not the slightest information of the nature of the charge against him, it has yet been held sufficient by the courts for centuries. Can it be that greater precision, more definite allegation is required at the end, after a party has obtained his judgment for leave to issue his execution? There is no reason indeed why on mere motion and notice to the defendant a plaintiff should not have this permission without putting him to the expense of a new suit and a requisition of strictly formal allegations and suggestions.

The course of the courts of the present day everywhere (and such has been hitherto that of this court,) has been to relax and to discountenance objections of mere form. In this case the defendant appeared by attorney, and took a rule on the plaintiff to file a declaration, this shews that he was not misled by the suggestion of the wrong court, this of itself was sufficient to cover any defect of the writ. Nor is there a pretext that he has any defence or valid objection to the application.

For these reasons I hold that the judgment of the Circuit Court should have been affirmed, and have to express my regret that a suitor after two years of fruitless toil and effort to get leave from the court to have execution in a case of admitted right on a judgment, without any fault of his, with all the expense of this court, and the court below, has his suit dismissed, and is to be subjected to the expense, trouble and delay, of another suit before he obtains his rights.

171 JOHN G. CAMP vs. W. D. MOSELEY, AND MARTHA ANN MANLY, AND HIRAM MANLY, IN RIGHT OF HIS WIFE, ADMINISTRATORS AND ADMINISTRATRIX, de bonis non, OF SAMUEL PARKHILL, DECEASED.

The officer will be protected in the execution of process emanating from a court of general jurisdiction, provided that it appears on the face of the process that the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter. The officer in such case need not show that there is a judgment, but may justify under the writ alone.

Where the subject matter of the suit is within the jurisdiction of the court, but the want of jurisdiction is as the person or place, unless the want jurisdiction appear on the process to the officer who executes it, he is not a trespasser—contrary, when the subject matter is not within the jurisdiction of the court.

The technicalities incident to estoppels are graudually giving way to considerations of reason and practical utility, and the courts at the present day seem disposed to give force and efficacy to a doctrine which is based upon principles of justice and the purest morality.

Where one was present when a levy is made by the officer, and did not deny the right of the officer to make such levy, but furnished a list of property to be levied on, attended the sale and took an active part assisting the officer, advised bystanders to bid, and disapproved the forbidding of the sale by another: Held—that, although it appeared that such conduct was not fraudulently or willfully intended to deceive the officer, the party so conducting himself is estopped from afterwards alleging that the officer was a trespasser.

The acts and admissions of one of several administrators, which amount to an estoppel against him, bind the whole.

The effect of an estopped, whether legal or equitable, is the exclusion of evidence, and its existence must always be a question of law for the court, and not of fact for the jury.

Writ of Error to Leon Circuit Court.

William D. Moseley and Martha Ann Manly, administrator and administratrix de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, and Hiram Manly, in right of his wife, (said Martha,) administrator de bonis non, at the Spring Term (1846) of Leon Circuit Court, instituted an action of trespass against John G. Camp, for seizing a large number (180) of slaves.

The declaration alleged the slaves to be the property of the plain-172 tiffs in their representative character—that they were seized and taken by defendant and by him detained for a long time, and that thereby the plaintiffs were hindered and prevented from cultivating and keeping in preservation three several plantations, and were deprived of the use and benefit of the slaves, and were prevented from enjoying the profits, benefits, and advantages of their labor and services, and were put to great expense in regaining the possession of the slaves. The plaintiffs laid their damages at $50,000.

The defendant pleaded "not guilty," with privilege (by consent) to give in evidence under that plea the process on which he relied for justification.

At the trial of Jabez B. Bull, Richard A. Shine, and David C. Wilson, three of the jurors so summoned as aforesaid good and lawful men were objected to by the plaintiffs' attorneys, for cause then and there shown, to wit: that the said Bull and the said Wilson were stockholders and directors in the Union Bank of Florida; and the said Shine was objected to for cause, viz: that the said Shine was a purchaser at the sale of the property of Parkhill's estate, seized and sold under an execution issued in the suit of the Union Bank of Florida vs. Parkhill's administrators, which execution was in the hands of and sale made by John G. Camp, Marshal of Middle Florida, and under which defendant justified the alleged trespass. These objections to the said jurors on behalf of the plaintiffs by their attorneys were sustained by the court, to which decision and ruling of the court the defendant by his counsel excepted.

The plaintiffs offered Benjamin W. Gause a witness, who proved that he was appraiser of the property of the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, and appraised these negroes at the instance of plaintiffs in the fall of 1844, or spring of 1845, and the negroes afterwards went into the possession of plaintiffs. Before the sale by the Marshal a part of the negroes were hired by plaintiffs to witness, and were delivered up to the Marshal, who informed him that he took them by a precept of the court—estimates the value of the hires at $20 each—knows of sale by Marshal and here the plaintiffs rested their case.

The defendant then offered in evidence a certain execution issued from the late Superior Court of Leon county, Territory of Florida, at the suit of the Union Bank vs. Hiram Manly and Martha Ann

Manly, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, which said 173 writ of fi. fa. is in the words of and figures following, to wit:

THE TERRITORY OF FLORIDA,

To all and singular the Marshals of said Territory—GREETING:

We command you that of the goods and chattels, slaves, lands, and tenements of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in the hands of Martha Ann Manly, late Parkhill, and Hiram Manly, in right of his wife, said Martha Ann, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, remaining to be administered, you cause to be made the sum of ninety-four thousand one hundred and eighty-two dollars and twenty-two cents, its debt, and also twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and eighty two dollars and sixty-five cents, its interest and damages, making together the sum of one hundred and twenty-two thousand one hundred and sixty-four dollars and eighty-seven cents, which the Union Bank of Florida lately, on the first day of March, 1845, recovered in our Superior Court for the County of Leon, in the Middle District, as well for its debt as its damages occasioned by the detention of said debt, and likewise the sum of seven dollars eighty-two cents, which to the said Union Bank of Florida in the same court was adjudged for its costs by it in that behalf expanded, together with lawful interest on said damages from the rendition of said judgment till paid, and the costs of this writ, and of your proceedings hereon, and that you have the said sums of money before the Judge of our said Court at Tallahassee, when satisfied, to render the said Union Bank of Florida the sums aforesaid; and have then and there this writ.

Witness, Richard T. Birchett, Clerk of our said Court, (Seal of Court.) at Tallahassee aforesaid, this 20th day of March, A. D., 1845, and of the Independence of the United States the sixty-ninth year.

R. T. BIRCHETT, Clerk.

JOHN G. CAMP, Marshal.

To the introduction of which evidence the plaintiffs objected, on the ground that they were strangers to it, and required the original entry and record of judgment to accompany it; which objection, on argument had, was sustained by the court, and the defendant required to produce in evidence the said judgment; to which ruling of the court the defendant, by his counsel, excepted. The defendant then offered in evidence other executions, which were in the hands of the Marshal at the time of the trespass complained of, and upon which like proceedings were had as on the one of the Union Bank vs. Parkhill's administrators, already given in evidence. The pleadings and proceedings in these cases were admitted by the parties to be similar to those in the case in which the above execution issued.

The defendant then proved by Wm. G. Ponder, a competent witness, that he was present at the sale of the Parkhill slaves, under the executions of the Union Bank and others, in the Spring of 1845. Moseley was present at the sale, and advised witness to purchase. Something being said as to title, Moseley said there would be no difficulty, he thought the title good; said that he had hired a certain negro, and that he thought he would suit witness. Witness stated that the general opinion was, that all difficulty arising out of litigation about the Parkhill estate was at an end; that the judgment was legal, and there was no good objection to the sale of the property.

The defendant also proved by William Bloxham, a competent witness, that he was present at the sale of the slaves. Had a conversation with Moseley the last night after the sale. Went with James T. Archer, Esq., to the room of Moseley. Archer said he was going to write to New Orleans to have the negroes sent there stopped. Witness told Moseley what Archer said about stopping the negroes, and Moseley said he would have nothing to do with it; that he would not let them use his name. Moseley was at the sale; was acting there; objected to only one negro woman being sold; and she was replevied. Moseley bid at the sale for that negro, and run her up. When Colonel Gamble bid for any negroes, Manly asked witness to bid against him. Witness on cross examination, stated that Moseley observed, that the negro woman was replevied; that a friend of his had wanted her, and he would make somebody pay for her, and he run her up to $800. All the negroes were not sold on the first day. This negro was sold after several others.—Witness got to the ground as Mr. Thompson got off the cotton bale. Moseley was there with a paper taking down the prices and names. As Col. Gamble had bid very often, people declined to bid. Moseley said to witness that was too little, and added, "Mr. Bloxham bid upon the negroes." Witness did so and made them bring $1500 more.

The defendant also proved by Otis Fairbanks, a competent witness, that he was present at the sale of the Parkhill slaves, in May, 1845. The negroes were selling low. Witness was on one side of of a cotton bale and Moseley on the other. Moseley said, "bid, I don't want the negroes sacrificed," and said he would be glad when they were off his hands. Cross examined, stated that Moseley did not call his name, his eyes passed around, and what he said was general to the whole crowd. There were many persons present.—The remark of Moseley was in a common conversational tone. Witness bid for one or two of the negroes, but none were knocked down to him. Heard Mr. Archer forbid the sale as illegal; cannot state all the words he used; heard but one sentence; don't recollect on whose behalf he acted, but knew he was counsel for the estate.—Moseley was there. After he said, "bid, I don't want them sacrificed," the negroes sold better. Did not see Gov. Moseley there 6 when Archer made the announcement. Being re-examined, stated that, on reflection, he was satisfied that Moseley was present when Archer forbade the sale. He, (Moseley,) disapprobated Archer's act, and said he had better let them go; they never could go at a better time.

The defendant then proved by John G. Gamble, a competent witness, that he was present at a part of the sale; was not there when the first negroes were sold; saw Gov. Moseley there, had conversation with him on that day, and on the second day of sale. Gov. Moseley divided and arranged the negroes in lots; advised people to bid; said it was a good sale; he was glad of it; said his reason for separating the families, (which was contrary to the wish of witness) was, that he was determined to make them bring as much as possible; said the sale was good, and he wanted to get rid of the business. Witness heard no dissent, none whatever, to the acts of the Marshal; no objection on the ground of illegality of sale; was not there when Mr. Archer dissented. Gov. Moseley did aid the Marshal in the sale. He divided the negroes; called them up in succession as they were sold. Moseley had a list; witness also had one; we were constantly conferring; Moseley designated the lots in which they should be sold; was present at the sale of negro Ellen; is uncertain whether it was on the first or second day. Moseley objected to the sale of Ellen, stating he had intended she should be replevied; that was the ground of his objection. All the negroes were mortgaged; two hundred for the stock debt; forty odd were mortgaged to secure accommodation paper; saw Manly at the sale; had no intercourse with him. Witness bid at the sale for negroes; did so as agent for Mr. Minetzhazen, by whom he was authorized to buy one hundred negroes for him; bought for him ninety.

The defendant proved by John George Anderson, a competent witness, that he was present at the sale; but he proposed to the Marshal, Major Camp, to give a certain sum for a family of negroes. Camp referred witness to Gov. Moseley, who on application replied that the negroes must be sold separately. The Marshal refused to take the responsibility of putting them up together, without the consent of Moseley, who declined acceding to request of witness.

The defendant proved by Thomas H. Hagner, a competent witness, that R. T. Birchet was Clerk of Leon Superior Court, and John G. Camp, Marshal of Middle Florida, at the time the execution of the Union Bank, vs. Parkhill's administrators, issued 177 That the list given in evidence, and referred to in the endorsement on the execution was the same identical one by which the negros were sold by the Marshal, and the said list is admitted to be the one furnished the Marshal by Gov. Moseley.

The defendant then proved by Dr. John G. Gamble, a competent witness, that he was present at the sale of the Parkhill negroes, was there at the commencement, heard Mr. Archer forbid the sale on the ground that Mrs. Manly had not relinquished her dower in the slaves. L. A. Thompson, Esq., got up and said that had been adjudicated in the highest Court of the Territory, and that the sale was legal. M. A. Long and L. A. Thompson, competent witnesses, both depose that Mr. Archer forbade the sale only on behalf of the widow, as she claimed a right of dower in the slaves. The defendant then proved by R. T. Birchett that he was present at the sale, saw Moseley, Camp and Col. Gamble standing together conferring as to the sale, and as to putting the negroes up in parcels. Witness said he was Clerk of the Superior Court of Leon county, and that Mr. Archer filed a bill for dower on the morning of the sale, in behalf of Mrs. Manly and said he did not expect the court to grant it.—The defendant here closed his case.

The plaintiff then offered in evidence the record of the revocation of the letters of Martha Ann Manly as administratrix of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in Leon County Court, dated the 18th March, 1844, in words and figures following, to wit:

At a Superior Court for the County of Leon, continued and held at the Court House in the City of Tallahassee, on Monday the 18th day of March, A. D. 1844, present the Honorable Samuel J. Douglas, Judge. In the matter of the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased:

On an appeal from an order of the County Court of Leon County revoking the administration of Martha Ann Manly, late Martha Ann Parkhill:

This cause coming on to be heard anew upon the merits, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that Henry Bond, Richard K. Call, George K. Walker and Benjamin W. Gause, the securities upon the official bond of the said Martha, are insufficient: It is therefore ordered that the judgment and decree of the County Court be affirmed, and that the letters of administration heretofore granted to the said Martha be and remain revoked, annulled and set aside. It is further ordered that John G. Camp, Esq., Marshal of the District of Middle Florida, do take the property of the said estate of Samuel Parkhill in his possession to remain there until the further or- 178 der and direction of the court.

To which the defendant by his counsel objected on the ground that defendant was no party to the proceeding then and there had, and that it was not proper testimony to be taken into consideration by the jury in maintainance of the issues joined on the part of plaintiff, but the court overruled the objection, and permitted the said record and evidence to be read to the jury, to which decision and ruling of the court, the defendant by his counsel excepted.

And said plaintiffs also offered in evidence the record of the 21st of March, 1844, appointing said John G. Gamble, Receiver, which record is in the words and figures following, to wit:

At a Superior Court for Leon County, continued and held at the Court House in the City of Tallahassee, on Thursday, the 21st day of March, A. D., 1844, present the Honorable Samuel J. Douglas, Judge: In re, Estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased:

Ordered that John G. Gamble, Esq., of the County of Leon, be, and he is hereby appointed receiver of the Estate of Samuel Parkhill, late of Leon county, deceased, not administered by the late administratrix, until the County Court of Leon County shall appoint an administrator de bonis non, upon said John G. Gamble's entering into bond with two or more sufficient securities, in the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as such Receiver, and to obey the orders of this court in that behalf, said bond to be approved by this court, and it is further ordered, that upon the approval of said bond by the Judge of this court, the Marshal of this District be and he is hereby ordered and directed to deliver the possession of all the estate real and personal now in his custody, unto the said John G. Gamble, as Receiver as aforesaid and take his receipts therefor returning the same with his accounts and charges to this court to be audited as this court shall direct.

To the reading of both of which records that of the 18th of March, 1844, and that of the 21st March, 1844, the defendant by his counsel severally objected on the ground that it was not proper testimony to be read or to be taken into consideration by the jury in maintenance of the issue joined on the part of the plaintiff, but the court overruled the said several objections and permitted the said records of the 18th of March, 1844, and the 21st of March, 1844, to be read to the jury, to which decision and ruling of the court the defendant by his counsel excepted.

179 The plaintiffs further offered in evidence the written pleadings in the cause in which the Union Bank of Florida was plaintiff and Hiram Manly and Martha Ann Manly, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, were defendants, to which the defendant by his counsel objected as improper evidence to be read to the jury, or to be taken into consideration by them in maintainance of the issues joined by the plaintiffs, but the court overruled the objection and permitted the said pleadings to be read to the jury, to which decision and ruling of the court the defendant by his counsel excepted.

The plaintiffs then offered in evidence the record of the reversal of the judgment in the suit of the Union Bank of Florida plaintiff, and Hiram Manly and Martha Ann Manly, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, defendants on which judgment the execution offered in evidence by the defendant, was issued, to which the defendant by his counsel objected: 1st, because he was not a party thereto; 2d, because the reversal of the said judgment by the Supreme Court was subsequent to the trespass complained of; and lastly, because it was not proper testimony to be read to, or taken into consideration by the jury in maintainance of the issues joined on the part of the plaintiff; but the court overruled the objection and permitted the said record to be read to the jury, to which decision and ruling of the court the defendant by his counsel excepted.

The plaintiffs then offered in evidence a bill in Chancery, filed 10th April, 1845, [and praying an injunction against the sale, with the endorsement of a refusal by the court to grant the prayer,] in which William D. Moseley and his securities on his official bond, as administrator de bonis non, of said Parkhill, deceased, were complainants, and John G. Camp, the defendant, in this action, and others, were defendants, to which the defendant by his counsel objected, unless it was also shewn that subpœna had issued and was served on this defendant, and also because it was not proper testimony to be read to, or considered by the jury in maintenance of the issues joined by the plaintiffs in this action; but the court overruled the objection and permitted the said bill to be read to the jury, at which decision and ruling of the court the defendant by his counsel excepted.

The plaintiffs then offered in evidence the stock mortgages given by Samuel Parkhill in his life time to the Union Bank of Florida to show that the slaves levied on were mortgaged to said Bank, that the mortgages were not yet due, that the administrators of 180 Parkhill as representatives of the Estate, were trustees for the bondholders and general creditors, and entitled to the possession of the negro slaves levied on and sold, until the mortgages should fall due, and that the said mortgages were on record and notice to all the world, and that under the charter of the Unon Bank the property thus mortgaged could not be sold. To this evidence the defendant by his counsel objected, as not proper to be read or to be taken into consideration by the jury, in maintenance of the issues joined on the part of the plaintiffs, but the court overruled the objection, and permitted the same to go to the jury; to which decision and ruling of the court the defendant by his counsel excepted.

The defendant to rebut this evidence on the part of the plaintiffs, offered John G. Gamble a competent witness, who proved that the mortgages were given for stock subscribed for, by Samuel Parkhill in his life time; that the note sued on, and in judgment, was for money borrowed on the pledge of that stock; that the note given by said Parkhill for the money so borrowed, called a stock note, was overdue and the interest thereon for a long time unpaid, and was unpaid up to the time of suit instituted and judgment recovered; at the time of the sale the Unon Bank of Florida had deposited with the Clerk of Leon Superior Court by order of the Judge thereof, Territorial bonds in amount equal to the amount and sum for which the slaves were originally mortgaged, subject to the order of the Governor of Florida.

The plaintiffs then offered James T. Archer as a witness, who said he would hardly venture to speak with certainty, of what took place at the sale in May 1845, after what had been testified on the other side. But from the following facts he believes he did forbid the sale as illegal.

When the judgment under which the sale was made was rendered against the original administrators, there was a large number of suits pending at the same time. Witness as attorney for the estate deemed the judgment invalid and void and having it in view to contest proceedings under it, he suggested that all the suits should be placed in judgment by agreement on like pleadings and subject to all exceptions. This was acquiesced in as the record will show. After the levy witness in furtherance of his views presented the bill (referred to as filed 10th April, 1845,) in behalf of Moseley and his sureties, praying an injunction against the plaintiffs in execution and the Marshall. The application was refused. Afterwards on the morning of the sale the witness presented a bill in open court in 181

behalf of Mrs. Manly stating her dower interest in the slaves and praying an injunction against the sale of that interest. Witness stated at the time of this last application, that this bill raised the same question as the one previously presented, that he did not expect the order to be granted, but that he made the application, that purchasers might know that their titles would be disputed.

Immediately after this witness wrote in the marshals office a written protest against the sale and handed it to Manly to read before the bystanders. Manly said witness had better make it himself.—Witness did undertake this duty. He was somewhat excited.—Knows he did object to the sale on the point of dower, and believes from his previous course, views and intentions that he stated and gave notice that the sale was illegal and that purchasers would bid at their peril.

Witness recollects that Mr. Thompson referred to the decision of the Court of Appeals and guaranteed the sale to be valid; according to the best of his recollection Governor Moseley was not present when he forbid the sale; does not recollect whether he did order subpœna on the bill shewn in evidence. In reference to conversation between Moseley and Bloxham and witness, he told Bloxham that he understood he had purchased some of the negroes, and that he (witness) would pursue them; is satisfied that the Governor never did in his presence say "his name should not be used in the proceeding against these negroes;" knows but few of the negroes; knows that plaintiffs have not got them.

This was all the testimony offered.

After argument of counsel on both sides, the court delivered to the jury the following charge and instructions, viz: The letters of administration to Manly and wife having been revoked, the court had no power to give any judgment binding on the estate. The judgment set up in this case was a nullity. That though it is the general rule, that the officer executing process issued from a court of general jurisdiction is not bound to enquire into the regularity of the proceedings, and may justify under the execution, yet the exception arises in this case from the fact of the personal knowledge of the Marshal proved, that he knew and had notice that Manly and wife were not the administrators, and this prevents him from justifying under the execution. Yet conceding that he might justify under the execution, if he had taken the property of the defendants to the execution, does that justify him in levying upon 182 property of the estate of Samuel Parkhill, in the hands of the administrators de bonis non, the plaintiffs in this action? The court thinks it does not. He was not commanded to disturb property in their hands. It is contended that the Marshal should have been informed by plaintiffs if their property became mingled with that of the defendants in execution. The court thinks this case cannot arise. If the Sheriff takes the goods of the wrong party, even though he have the same name, he is liable; it is the duty of the officer to ascertain the truth

In reference to the admissions of Moseley and Manly, the court admitted the evidence in all its extent, for benet of defendant. The question, however, arises, as to the effect, weight and sufficiency of this evidence. The act complained of is a trespass; if Moseley or these parties did any thing to induce the Marshal to commit this trespass, to lead him to make this levy, (for that is the trespass,) the plaintiffs could not complain. Did the Marshal go there to make the levy under this process, or did he do it at the instance of Moseley? But again, if a trespass was committed by the levy, the question is, have they waived it on the day of sale or previously? Was the delivery of the list a waiver? The position of the parties is to be considered. They might have given embarrassment to the officer, or not being able to resist, they might give him facility to complete the act. It is for the jury to inquire, if this would be a waiver of the trespass. Now as to the proceedings on the day of sale. Whether this sale was then assented to, would appears to be a question more specially for the purchasers. Were the plaintiffs bound to embarrass that proceeding? If you think they waived the trespass, it is for you to determine; if so, you would find for the defendant. If, however, the remarks made were mere statements, not to mislead Camp, not to induce him to act, then it is no waiver.—This is a question for you. The court then read to the jury the law as laid down by Judge Baldwin, Sedwick on Dam. p. 550, taken from 1 Bald. 138, as to the rule of damages in trespass, and added as the effect of the law, that the jury should put the plaintiffs where they stood as near as possible, not taking into consideration the value of the property, for which plaintiffs do not contend, but only the injury.

The Judge here closed his charge, and the defendant, by his counsel, asked the following instructions to the jury:

183 1. That where the Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter it is sufficient to justify the officer executing its process, and the officer is not bound to examine into the validity of its proceedings, or the regularity of its process.

2. That if the subject matter of the suit is within the jurisdiction of a Court of general jurisdiction, but there is a want of jurisdiction as to the person, the officer who executes process in such suit is not a trespasser, unless the want of jurisdiction appears by such process.

3. That where the Court has jurisdiction of the cause, and the process is regular on its face, the officer who levies the same is justified in such levy.

Mem.—The instructions numbered 1, 2, 3, were given by the Court as the general rule, with the qualification, that in this case the defendant, having been a party to these proceedings, must be held cognizant of the irregularity of the process.

4. That the plaintiff in the suit on which this execution issued being the mortgagee of the slaves levied on, the Marshal who proceeded at the request of the said mortgagee in whom the legal title was, is no trespasser for the levy and seizure under said execution.

5. If the jury shall believe from the evidence that William D. Moseley, one of the plaintiffs in this action, aided the Marshal, by giving him information, furnishing a list to enable said Marshal to make the levy, by assisting said Marshal on the day of sale, by encouraging persons to bid for and purchase the slaves levied on, then the said Moseley is estopped by said acts from setting up this trespass, and cannot maintain this action.

6. If the jury shall believe, from the evidence, that William D. Moseley neglected to forbid the sale of the slaves levied on, that he failed to warn the Marshal that he had levied on property to which he, Moseley, had a claim and right of possession, then such silence must be looked on as an acquiescence by said Moseley, in the acts of the officer, and he is thereby estopped and precluded from maintaining this action.

7. That a valid judgment binding the estate of a decedent may be rendered against an executor sued as administrator, or vice versa, unless the difference of official character be pleaded in abatement, and that when rendered against an administrator as such who is in fact executor, or against a defendant executor who is in fact administrator, yet that the judgment in either case is valid against the estate, it is binding on the estate, and may be satisfied out of it.

184 8. That if under any state of things a proceeding under execution on the judgment rendered was allowable, the Court, would assume that such a state of things did exist for the officers protection, or at least he should not be required to judge whether it did or not.

Which said instructions, numbers 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, the Court refused to give to the jury, which refusal of the Court, and to the qualification of the 1, 2 and 3 instructions prayed, and to the several points herein before excepted to, and to the charge of the Court, and the points therein ruled, the defendant by his counsel excepts, and prays this his bill of exceptions may be sealed and signed by the Judge, and made a part of the record.

THOMAS BALTZELL, [SEAL.]
Judge.

The Plaintiff in Error now seeks to reverse the judgment below upon the following assignment of errors.

1. The Court below erred in sustaining the objections to Jabez B. Bull, Richard A. Shine, and David C. Wilson, as proper, lawful, and qualified jurors to sit in this case in the Court below.

2. The Court erred in refusing to permit the execution of the Union Bank vs. Hiram Manly and Martha Ann Manly, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, to be read to the Jury, unless accompanied with the original entry and record of judgment.

3. In permitting the plaintiffs in the Court below to read in evidence to the jury the records of the 18th March, 1844, and the 21st March, 1844.

4. In permitting the plaintiffs to read as evidence to the jury the written pleadings in the cause in which the Union Bank of Florida was plaintiff, and Hiram Manly and Martha Ann Manly, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, were defendants, and in overruling the defendants objection to the introduction of said written pleadings as proper evidence.

5. In permitting the plaintiffs to read as evidence to the Jury the record of the reversal by the Supreme Court of Florida, of the judgment in the suit of the Union Bank of Florida, plaintiff, and Hiram Manly and Martha Ann Manly, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, defendants, and in overruling the objections to the introduction of said evidence.

6. In permitting the plaintiffs in the Court below to read in evidence to the Jury the Bill in Chancery filed 10th May, 1845, and in overruling the defendant's objection to the introduction of said Bill in 185
Chancery as evidence in the case.

7. In permitting the plaintiffs to read in evidence to the jury the mortgages executed by Samuel Parkhill in his lifetime, to the Union Bank of Florida, and in overruling the defendant's objection to the introduction of said mortgages as evidence in this case.

8. The court erred in its charge to the Jury in arguing and deciding the facts, which it is alone the province and duty of the jury to determine.

9. In refusing the 1, 2, and 3 instructions as prayed by the defendant's counsel, and in adding to the said instruction the qualification as set forth in the memorandum.

10. In refusing the 4th Instruction asked for by defendan's counsel.

11. In refusing the 5th Instruction prayed for by defendant's counsel.

12. In refusing the 6th Instruction prayed for by defendant's counsel.

13. In refusing the 7th Instruction asked for by defendant's counsel.

14. In refusing the 8th Instruction asked for by defendant's counsel.

Douglas & Hogue, for Plaintiff in Error.

I. Under the first error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

1. That he was entitled to a jury selected, summoned, and returned, according to law; and only such objections could be made and sustained to individual jurors as are recognized by the common law or the statute laws of Florida.

2. That the objections made to the jurors, Bull, Shine, and Wilson are not such as the common law, or the statute laws of Florida recognize; vide Thomp. Dig., 344. 3 Black. Com., Marginal page 362.

3. Infamy and interest are the only objections at common law that the court can decide upon. If the objection be to the favor it must be tried by triers.

4. It is no answer to the objection to say the defendant in the court below had a jury and a fair trial. The law secures to the parties a jury selected and empanneled after certain rules and formalities, 186 and the best guarantee for fairness and impartiality is to observe the provisions and requisitions of the law and it is error to depart from them. 2 Va. cases, 307.

5. Any departure from the mode pointed out and prescribed by law, for the selection and empanneling of a jury, leaves the matter entirely at the discretion of the court, and is a virtual repeal of the law and the Constitution.

II. Under the 2d error assigned the plaintiff's counsel contend:—

1. That the execution under and by virtue of which the Marshal made the levy in this case, having issued from a court of general jurisdiction, he was not bound to look into the validity of the judgment, or the regularity of the proceedings. He might justify under his writ, and was not required to show an unreversed judgment.—Barker vs. Braham and Norwood, 3 Wilson Rep. 375—345. Gott vs. Mitchel, 7 Blackford Rep. 270. 5 Hayward 142. 1 Carr. and Payne, 7. 10 John. Rep. 138. 7 Law Lib. 53.

2. If it is replied that the administrators de bonis non are strangers and therefore it is necessary to show a judgment, it is answered:—1. That the privity which exists between general administrators and administrators de bonis non, precludes the idea of their being strangers. 8 Cowen 339—343. 2. To entitle them to the benefit of this argument, they must at the time of the levy, have been wholly estranged from the estate. Granwell vs. Sibley, Levintz part 2, page 190. 3. That all suits against administrators and executors are virtually proceedings against the estate of their intestate or testator to be administered. The estate is a fund designated by law for the payment of debts, and a judgment binds the estate until reversed, the decedent if alive could not complain if his property was taken on an erroneous judgment, and there is no good reason known to the law why his personal representative should be in a better condition. Parker vs. Amys, Lev. 26. 1 Kelly's Rep. 82.

3. Manly and wife cannot set up this defence as the judgment was against them in their representative characters, and the decision of the court overruling their plea of discharge in the former suit, was error of the court for which the Marshal cannot be made responsible. 10 Peters 476. 6 Peters S. C. Rep. 16, 17.

4. Moseley having united with Manly and wife (against whom the execution was regular) can have no better claim to maintain this action than his co-plaintiffs.

187 III. Under the third error assigned the plaintiffs counsel will contend:—

1. That the records of the 18th and 21st of March, 1844, which were given in evidence on the trial below were res inter alias acto the Marshal only acting as the custodian of the Court until a proper and fit person could be appointed as the representative of the estate.

2. Any knowledge he might thus obtain of the situation of the parties, he could not set up in opposition to the mandate of his writ.

3. Notwithstanding their dismissal from the estate, they may have been remitted to their former rights or have retained for the purpose of satisfying this very demand. 7 Blackford 290. 3 Wilson 345, 370.

IV. Under the fourth error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

1. That the written pleadings in the case were res inter alias actor, the officer was not bound to enquire into the regularity of the proceedings, he was only bound to look to the mandate of the writ. 9 Peters Rep., 624. 3 Wilson Rep., 345, 376. 7 Blackford Rep. 270.

2. If the officer is required to judge of the regularity of the proceedings, to pass upon the ruling, and the decisions of the Court; the effect will be to make the officer an Appellate Court, and the Supreme Court will be in no better condition in this respect than the inferior Courts, and their decrees might have to undergo the like scrutiny;—nothing is better settled than where an officer is required to judge he is not liable for an error of judgment.

V. Under the fifth error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

1. That the proceedings had in the Supreme Court in relation to the reversal of the judgment of the Union Bank vs. Parkhill's administrators were res inter alias actor.

2. That the reversal of the judgment was subsequent to the acts of the Marshal complained of as a trespass, and that said subsequent reversal does not render void those acts which were done under it while it remained unreversed. Ives vs. Lucas, 1 Carr. and Payne 7. 7 Blackford's Rep. 270. 3 Wilson's Rep., 345, 376 6 Peters S. C. Reps. 16, 17.

VI. Under the sixth error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

188 1. That the filing of the Bill in Chancery, by Moseley and his securities was no notice to the Marshal unless service of usbpœna was also proved.

2. That if the Marshal had notice of the filing of the bill, and the refusal of the Court to grant the injunction, it was an additional reason why he should proceed with the levy.

3. That the evidence was no tendency to prove the trespass, which was the issue joined, and was therefore improperly received by the Court upon the trial in the Court below. Its effect was to embarrass the jury.

VII. Under the seventh error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

1. That the stock note being due, and the interest thereon remaining unpaid, the slaves mortgaged were liable to seizure and sale under a judgment and execution on said stock note.

2. That a failure to pay up the interest and renew the stock note was a forfeiture of the mortgage and a breach of its conditions as contemplated by the charter of the Bank, and the receiving the mortgages in evidence to prove the Marshal a trespasser by levying on mortgaged property was error, vide the opinion of the Court of Appeals in the case of the Bank vs. Brown, and the Bank vs. Chapman.

VIII. Under the eighth error assigned the Plaintiff's counsel refers to the opinion of the Court below as set forth in the bill of exceptions.

IX. Under the ninth error assigned the Plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

1. That the nstructions numbered 1, 2, and 3, should have been given by the Court below as prayed by the defendant's counsel.

2. That the qualification added to them by the Court was not such as the law recognizes.

3. That the only distinction made by the law is in those cases in which the execution issues from a Court of limited jurisdiction, and when from a Court of general jurisdiction.

4. That the qualification set forth in the memorandum, did not apply as the Marshal was no party to the proceedings, and to test which he could not maintain an appeal or writ of error to reverse them. On these points see Jacques vs. Cesar, 2 Saund. Rep., 101, (y) note 2. 15 John. Rep., 155. 12 John. Rep. 267. 3 Wilson Rep., 345, 376. 2 Wilson Rep., 384. 7 Blackford Rep., 270. 5 Wend.

X. Under the tenth error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

That the mortgages having become forfeited by the non-payment of interest, and the failure to renew the stock bond, the mortgagee was entitled to enter and take possession of the slaves, and the Marshal who took possession of the slaves by virtue of an execution in favor of the mortgagee, and with consent of said mortgagee, was no trespasser, see the case of Hawkins and Philips decided at the last term of the Supreme Court.

XI. Under the eleventh error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

1. That the acts of Moseley on the day of sale, and previous to the levy, as disclosed by the bill of exceptions taken on the trial, operates as an estoppel "in pais," and precludes his setting up the acts of the Marshal as a trespasser.

2. That if Moseley be, as it is contended he was, a stranger to the proceedings under the execution, then his acts renders him a joint trespasser with Camp, and he cannot maintain this action. 3 Wilson, 377.

3. The acts of Moseley ratified the acts of Camp, his assent thereto was equivalent to a command to commit them. 2 Saund. Plea and Ev., Marginal page 865. 1 Forb. Eq. Book 1, Ch. 3, sec. 4. Story's Eq., page 387, note 4. 19 Wend. 557. Smith's Leading Cases on Estoppel "in pais," 554. 2 Murphy's Rep., 6.

XII. Under the twelfth error assigned the plaintiff's counsel will contend:—

1. That the failure of Moseley to forbid the sale of the slaves levied on by the Marshal, to warn the Marshal that he had levied on property to which he, Moseley, had a claim and right of possession, operates as an estoppel "in pais," and he cannot maintain this action.

2. That a levy on the property of an intestate in the hands of his representative is unlike a levy on the property of a stranger. The judgment in the former case is against the estate, and to be satisfied out of it. It is a seizure and sale of A's property to pay A's debt. In the case of a stranger it is applying his property to pay the debt of another. 5 New Hamp., 364. 1 do. 87. 3 Hara. Dig., 6115. 1 19
Term Rep., 475.

3. That the powers and rights of co-administrators over the estate of their intestate being like that of co-executors, one may release or discharge a debt against the express dissent of the other. So also may the property of the intestate be taken if found in the hands of either to satisfy a debt of the estate. In this case the judgment was against two of the co-administrators, and it was no trespass to take the property if found in the hands of either administrator.—The execution was regular as to Manly and wife, they therefore cannot maintain this action. Moseley by his acts is estopped and he cannot maintain it. 1 Wendell, 583. 1 McCord, 492. Toller on Executors, 408. 11 John. Rep., 22.

XIII. Under the thirteenth error assigned the plaintiff's counsel refers the court to Parker vs. Amys, Levintz 261. Granville vs. Sibley, Levintz, part 11, page 190.
two dollars and sixty-five cents its interest and damages, making to-will contend:—

1. That the Marshal had no right to decide whether the judgment was rendered against Manly and wife on their old grant of administration, or as administrators de bonis non. That as a valid judgment might have been rendered, and one binding on the estate, had they been sued as administrators, without the joinder of Moseley or the description "de bonis non," it is sufficient for his protection, and he is not required to judge whether such a state of things did exist or not. 5 Wendell, 170. Levintz 261. The case of the Marshalsea Coke's Rep., part 10. 9 John. Rep., 229. 10 John. Rep. 138.

Lastly. It may be contended that the Supreme Court of Florida has already decided this judgment to be void, an utter nullity. To which we answer:

1. That it was not necessary to the decision of the cause before the court.

2. That the parties themselves did not elect so to consider it, otherwise they would have moved to vacate it in the court below, that being the appropriate remedy to set aside a void judgment.

3. That a judgment may be absolutely void as to the parties to the action, yet not so in regard to the acts of the officer done under it, as in the cases in 7 Blackford and 3 Wilson. In these cases the court say, "though there be no judgment the officer is protected by his writ." In the case of Simms and Wise vs. Slacum, the Sup.

191 Ct. U. S. say, "that a judgment obtained by fraud will protect the officer for acts performed under it, though not the parties." 1 Cond. Sp. Ct. Rep., 541.

HAWKINS, J., delivered the following opinion:

The administrator de bonis non of Parkhill brought this action of trespass vi et armis in the Court below against Camp for seizing, taking, and leading away divers negro slaves, a hundred and eighty in number, the property of the said administrators. They allege in their declaration, besides the trespass, that these slaves were detained and kept by Camp for a long time, whereby great damage accrued to the plaintiff by the deprivation of their services, &c.—The defendant, Camp, pleaded the general issue, and justified himself for the alleged trespass, contending that he had taken the negroes by virtue and force of an execution issued from the late Superior Court of Leon County, at the suit of the Union Bank vs. Hiram Manly and wife, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased.

The plaintiff proved by B. W. Gause, that he, Gause, had acted as appraiser of the property of the estate of Parkhill, and had appraised the negroes taken by Camp at the instance of the plaintiffs in 1844 or 1845, and that the negroes afterwards went into possession of plaintiff. Before the sale by the Marshal Camp, a part of the negroes were hired to witness by plaintiffs, and were delivered up to Camp, who informed him that he took them by a precept of the Court. Here the plaintiffs rested their cause, and the defendant offered in evidence the execution before referred to, which is in the words following:

"THE TERRITORY OF FLORIDA,

To all and singular the Marshals of said Territory—GREETING:

We command you that of the goods and chattels, slaves, lands and tenements of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in the hands of Martha Ann Manly late Parkhill, and Hiram Manly in right of his wife said Martha Ann, administrators of Samuel Parkhill deceased, remaining to be administered, you cause to be made the sum of ninety-four thousand one hundred and eighty-two dollars and twenty-two cents its debt and also twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and eighty-two dollars and sixty-five cents its interest and damages, making together, the sum of one hundred and twenty-two thousand, one hun-
192 dred and sixty-four dollars and eighty-seven cents, which the Union Bank of Florida, lately on the first day of March, 1845, recovered in our Superior Court for the County of Leon in the Middle District, as well for its debt as its damages, occasioned by the detention of said debt, and likewise the sum of seven dollars eighty-two cents, which to the said Union Bank of Florida, in the same Court adjudged for its costs by it in that behalf expended, together with lawful interest in said damages from the rendition of said judgment till paid, and the costs of this writ, and of your proceedings hereon, and that you have the said sums of money before the Judge of our said Court at Tallahassee, when satisfied to render the said Union Bank of Florida the sums aforesaid, and have then and there this writ. Witness, Richard T. Birchett, Clerk, &c."

Upon this writ, Camp endorsed his levy on the negroes alleged by the plaintiff to have been so tortiously taken. The introduction of this writ was objected to by the plaintiffs on the ground that they were strangers to it, and required the original entry and record of judgment to accompany it. The objection was sustained by the Court. Other executions were then offered in evidence, which were in the hands of Camp, the Marshal, at the time of the trespass complained of, and upon which like proceedings were had as on the one already set out. The pleadings and proceedings in these cases were the same, by consent of counsel.

Without intending to discuss all the errors assigned, we will simply take up those which we may deem decisive of the case.

First, therefore, was it requisite and necessary that the record of the judgment upon which the execution issued should have been produced by Camp? Upon a review of the authorities, we are of opinion that the production of the writ merely was sufficient. There are several cases strongly in point as to this question, and we proceed to notice them, premising that they carry with them so high and cogent authority as to remove all doubts as to the correctness of our decision. There is a case in 5th Burrows, 2,631, which assumes the negative of this proposition, but we prefer being guided by the reason and authority of decisions to which our attention has been called, and which we now cite.

In Parsons vs. Loyd, 3 Wilson, R. 345, we find the law broadly laid down by Lord C. J. DeGrey, who substantially remarks: Parsons the plaintiff was illegally imprisoned under color of a writ sued out against him, which is a mere nullity; he has been unlawfully injured, and must have a remedy; but he has none against the 193 officer, who is not to exercise his judgment touching the validity of the process in point of law; but is obliged to obey the command of the courts of Westminister, or rather Superior Courts having general jurisdiction, and he may justify, under the writ, although it be void. But when the courts has no jurisdiction of the cause, the whole is coram non judice. And he further says an action would lie against the party suing out such void writ. Citing 1 Levintz 95. 1 Siderfine 272. On page 376, in the same book (Wilson R.) it is further laid down by C. J. De Grey, that a Sheriff or his officer may justify themselves by pleading the writ only, because that is sufficient for their excuse, although there be no judgment on record to support or warrant such writ. But if a stranger interposes and sets the Sheriff to do an execution, he must take care to find a record that warrants the writ and must plead it. So must the party himself at whose suit an execution is made. No trespass is excused but what is inevitable.

Justice Peak in the case of Ives vs. Lucas and Thompson, 1 C. & P., 7, holds the following language: "As long as a judgment exists, it protects those who seize property under execution issued under it. And if the judgment is set aside no action lies against the Sheriff for anything done under it, while it remained in existence.—And he further said that the setting aside the judgment did not make the Sheriff's acts void by relation.

In Buller's Nisi Prius, pages 82 and 83, it is declared that when the subject matter of the suit is within the jurisdiction of the court but the want of jurisdiction is as to the person or place, unless the want of jurisdiction appear on the process to the officer who executes it, he is not a trespasser; contrary, when the subject matter is not within its jurisdiction.

The same doctrine is held in Savacool vs. Boughton, 5 Wendell 170. Judge Marcy says: "Where the court issuing the process has general jurisdiction, and the process is regular on its face, the officer is not, though the party may be affected by an irregularity in the proceedings. Where a judgment is vacated for an irregularity the party is liable for the acts done under it; but the officer has a protection of his regular writ." Citing 1 Lev. 95. 1 Sid. 272. 1 Stange, 509.

The case just cited was decided upon the following facts as set forth in the pleadings. The plaintiff declared in trespass for assault, battery, and false imprisonment. The defendant pleaded a 194 justification, that he was a constable, by virtue of an execution issued by a Justice of the Peace, on a judgment rendered against the plaintiff, that he arrested the plaintiff and committed him to jail. The plaintiff replied precludi non because previous to the rendition of the judgment set forth by the defendant, the Justice who rendered the same did not issue any process for the appearance of him, the plaintiff, in the suit in which judgment was rendered, that the judgment by confession was not entered by the Justice with authority of the plaintiff, nor did the parties in the suit appear before the Justice and join issue pursuant to the provisions of the $50 act. To this replication the defendant demurred, and the plaintiff joined in the demurrer.

Here we see that no service of process was effected upon the party; but because the court, although one of limited jurisdiction, had jurisdiction of the subject matter, the officer who executed the process under the judgment, was held justified. And the court cites by way of sustaining its decision the very language hereinbefore set forth, as quoted from page 83 of Buller's Nisi Prius.

The case of Goft vs. Mitchell, 7 Blackford, 270, confirms this doctrine of holding the officer harmless, and extends it to a case where the Sheriff even had notice of the irregularity of the process. The court say: "The writ was legal upon its face, and shewed jurisdiction in the Justice. The law is that a writ having these characteristics, however irregularly issued even though there be no judgment on which to found it, is a justification to the officer acting under it. Nor did the notice given to the defendant before he completed the execution of the writ, affect his authority. He was not bound to look beyond his process. Had he seen fit to assume the responsibility of judging for himself, whether the circumstances under which the writ issued would have excused him for not obeying it, he might have done so, and perhaps the excuse would have been sufficient. But he was not bound to run the hazard."

There might be many other cases cited to shew the soundness of the proposition we have asserted; but will conclude the citations after referring to 546 Comyns Digest, vol. 6, 5th American ed.: "If the defendant justifies by judicial process out of a Superior Court it is sufficient to allege the judgment, writ of ca. sa. and warrant thereon to the officer. And the officer himself need not allege the judgment, only the writ and warrant." 3 Lev. 20. 1 Salk 109.—

John G. Camp, vs. W. D. Moseley and others.

195 See also 10 John., 138. 10 Coke, 76, case of the Marshalsea, 10 Peters U. S. Rep., 476. 6 Peters, 17. 1 Levintz 95. Ib. 173.

From these authorities it would seem there is a distinction taken as to the protection afforded a party and the officer executing the process of the court, the one being supposed to act in accordance with his volition and consequently amenable for acts done voluntarily, the other from a coercion arising from, and incident to the mandate of the writ of process directed to him. The Sheriff is a ministerial officer, and no action should lie against him merely in discharge of his duty, unless he exceed that duty when he becomes liable as a party. He is protected in the execution of process emanating from a court of general jurisdiction, provided there appears on the face of the process that the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter (5 Wendell 170,) nor was it for Camp to decide whether the judgment rendered against Manly and wife, administrators, was erroneous or void, regular or irregular. The judicial power of a Sheriff in this country is still less than in England, and his duty is obedience to the process of the court.

This principle is illustrated in 6 Harrison and Johnson 301. The action was trespass against the Sheriff. Property was attached by him, under writs from the creditors of M. No person appeared to defend the suit, the property was condemned, fieri facias issued and sale. R. had notice of the service of the attachment, and at the time of service had notified the Sheriff of his claim to the property attached, and brought his action of trespass against the Sheriff. The court held that the Sheriff was not responsible for a tort which as a public officer he is bound to perform—that he acted in obedience to the mandate of the law, and it would be strange if the law whose mandate he obeyed should make him responsible for such obedience—that the party in this case had notice of the attachment and had a right to appear in court, and move to quash it. Indeed so far is this doctrine of protection to the officer carried that in 1 Levintz 95, we find that even after judgment vacated, the officer is excused for executing the writ, and in 3 Cranch 300, it is laid down by Judge Marshal that a judgment obtained by fraud will protect the officer for acts done under it, though not the parties.

It must be conceded we think that the writ in this case was legal on its face, shewing jurisdiction of the court as to the subject matter of the suit, issued from a court of general jurisdiction at a proper time and returnable in accordance with law, and it would be 196 going too far to adjudge that the Sheriff should be held responsible for any error of the court, which rendered the judgment under which execution issued. Nor can we well perceive how the Sheriff was a party to the proceedings had in the court, in the case of the Union Bank and the administrators of Parkhill. It is true that a Bill in Chancery is introduced in the bill of exceptions, in which bill Camp is one of the defendants, but there is no evidence that Camp had legal notice of the filing of the bill for an injunction. And supposing he had and the injunction was refused, could he not with propriety have taken the action of the court as his guide and regarded it pro tanto as another judicial decision, as to the regularity and legality of the judgment rendered against the administrators of Parkhill. So too with the order of the court, that the property of the estate of Parkhill be taken possession of by Camp, and that the letters of administration granted to Martha Manly be revoked. All this took place before the judgment rendered against Manly and Wife as general administrators, and though Camp may have had notice, still it would be inequitable and impolitic to have required Camp to look behind the judgment, and to hold him responsible for what was the error of the court. These proceedings too were collaterally drawn in question in the court below, and in the case of Tolmer vs. Thompson, 2 Peters 163, the court say: That proceedings brought before a court collaterally, "are by no means subject to all the exceptions which might be taken on a direct appeal. They well may be considered judicial proceedings; they were commenced in a court of justice, carried on under the supervising power of the court, and to receive its final ratification. The general and well settled rule of law in such cases is, that when the proceedings are collaterally drawn in question and it appears on the face of them, that the subject matter was within the jurisdiction of the court they are voidable only. The errors and irregularities if any exist, are to be corrected by some direct proceedings either before the same court to set them aside, or in an appellate court. If there is a total want of jurisdiction, the proceedings are void and a mere nullity, and confer no right and afford no justification, and may be rejected when collaterally drawn in question."

In Voorhees vs. the Bank of the United States, 10 Pet. 474, the court say: "If the validity of a sale under its process, can be questioned for any irregularity preceding the judgment, the court which assumes such power places itself in the position of that which rendered it, and deprives it of all power of regulating its own practice 197 or modes of proceedings in the progress of a cause to judgment."

The next question arising for the consideration of the Court is, should the plaintiff in the Court below have been estopped from a recovery against Camp, owing to the admissions and conduct of Moseley one of the parties. It is not the intention of the Court to go any length into the doctrine of estoppel in pais, which has been so ably and learnedly argued in this and another case at bar during the term, but simply to advert to some of its general principles. We find while other classes of estoppels have not received much or great favor from the Courts those in pais have been much extended and received a liberal, enlarged and we might add an enlightened construction. The technicalities incident to estoppels are gradually giving way to considerations of reason and practical utility, and the Courts of the present day seem disposed to give force and efficacy to a doctrine which is based upon principles of justice and the purest morality.

In the case of the Welland Canal Company vs. Hathaway, 8 Wendell, 483, Judge Nelson remarks that the acts and admissions of a party operate against him in the nature of estoppel "when in good conscience and honest dealing he ought not to be permitted to gainsay them." In Stevens vs. Baird, 9 Cowen, 274, the Constable had an execution against Benedict, and Stephens pointed out to the officer a quantity of lumber, one-fifth of which he said belonged to Benedict. On the levy being made, a receipt for the property was made by Stephens, which was afterwards sold under the execution, Baird becoming the purchaser, Stephens standing by at the sale and giving no notice of his claim to the whole property. In a suit between Stephens and a purchaser it was held that Stephens was estopped from denying that Benedict owned one-fifth part of the lumber.

In Gregg vs. Wells, (10 Ad. and Ellis, 90,) it was held that if the owner of the goods stand by and voluntarily allow another to treat them as his own by which means a third person is induced to purchase them bona fide the former cannot recover them from the purchaser. Lord Denman said in this case: "A party who negligently or culpably stands by and allows another to contract on the faith and understanding of a fact which he can contradict, cannot afterwards dispute that fact in an action against the person whom he has assisted in deceiving." "The party is only concluded against shewing the truth, or asserting his legal rights when that would have the effect of doing a wrong through his means to some third 198 person." Hill Rep., 225.

Admissions arising from demeanor and conduct are conclusive against the party, where he has received a benefit therefrom or prejudiced another. 2 Saunders Pl. and Ev., 55. Mr. Starkie in his work on Evidence, vol. 2, 37, uses this language: "In general admissions may be presumed not only from the declarations of a party, but even from his acquiescence or silence, as for instance, when the existence of a debt or a particular right has been asserted in the presence of a party, and he has not contradicted it, such acquiescence and silence will amount prima facie to an admission of a debt or right. So an acquiescence and endurance where acts are done by another which if wrongfully done are encroachments and call for resistance and opposition, are evidence of a tacit admission that such acts could not be legally resisted."

Now what has been the conduct of Moseley in relation to the alleged trespass of Camp. The evidence shews that when he, Camp, proceeded to make the levy under the excution, a list of the negroes was furnished him by Moseley. There was no denial on his part as to the right of Camp to levy. There was indeed more than mere "acquiescence or silence," the furnishing the list was an affirmative act, and not merely negative—it enabled Camp to carry out the levy in thus virtually designating the slaves to be levied upon. He stands negligently by and there is a degree of negligence amounting to culpability, and allows the Marshal to make the levy, so far as appears by the testimony without protest or dissent.

It is not contended that the conduct of Moseley was fraudulent or wilfully intended to deceive Camp, but still we must in accordance with the principles laid down, ask if it was such as to produce erroneous impressions on the mind of Camp, as to his future movements in relation to the levy. There is no claim put in for the negroes by virtue of our statutes, and at the sale Moseley took an active part, assisting the Marshal, and made no dissent to the sale; but advised people to bid, and when the sale was forbade by Archer he disapprobated the act, and it appears too that the Marshal acted in accordance with the views of Moseley as to the details of the sale. Taking his whole conduct together, his acts, admissions, and declarations at the sale, it is very evident they are clearly inconsistent and at variance with the claims he now asserts. It is true the 199 levy was the trespass if any was committed, and no claim was asserted at the time; but there is direct connivance—the possession of the negroes by Camp was a continuing trespass and acquiesced in by Moseley. Ought he not now to be estopped from gainsaying his admissions, and when too he stood negligently by and allowed a person to do an act which he might not have done had he received any indication that he would be held legally responsible for that act? We think he should be, and that Camp should not be amenable as a trespasser.

The effect of an estoppel, whether legal or equitable, is the exclusion of evidence, and its existence must always be a question of law for the court, and not of fact for the jury. 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 469, citing Lewis vs. Carstair, 5 Watts and Sergeant, 209, and we therefore think the court erred in leaving the admissions of Moseley to the jury.

It is contended that even allowing the admissions of Moseley they cannot affect the rights of his co-administrator and administratrix. But if there are several administrators they are regarded in the light of an individual person. "They have a joint and entire interest in the effects of the intestate, which is incapable of being divided, and in case of death such interest shall vest in the survivor without any new grant from the court." 1 Williams on Executors, 591. Acts done by one of several executors or administrators relating to the delivery, sale or release of the testator's or intestate's goods are the acts of all. Wheeler vs. Wheeler, 9 Cowen, 34.—So two or three executors or administrators may compromise a claim and release a debtor to the estate without the concurrence and contrary to the express wish of the other. Murray vs. Blatchford, 1 Wendell, 583. There was formerly a distinction as to the acts and powers of administrators and executors, on the ground that the executor derived his authority from the act of the deceased, while the administrator derived his from the Ordinary, his appointment being considered in the light of an office. But these distinctions have been overruled, and now joint administrators stand upon the same footing as executors, 407 Toller on Ex. 1 McCord, 492.—We deem it unnecessary to proceed further in the consideration of the case either as to the instructions given or those refused, being satisfied that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

200 WYLIE BLEWITT, ADMINISTRATOR OF ARABELLA BLEWITT, DECEASED, vs. JAMES NICHOLSON AND WILLIAM N. AVERITT, EXECUTORS OF MALCOLM NICHOLSON, DECEASED..

A grant of administration in this State to the husband by virtue of his marital rights upon the estate of the wife, she being a non-resident at the time of her death, and dying in another State, but entitled to effects and property in this State, is valid under our laws.

Appeal from a Decree in Chancery rendered in Gadsden.

Carmack & Baker, for Appellant.

Thompson & Dupont, for Appellee.

HAWKINS, J.:

There was a bill filed in the court below by Blewitt, appellant, the administrator of his deceased wife, to recover property alleged to belong to her in the hands of the executor of her father Malcolm Nicholson.

The bill states that the said Malcom Nicholson died, leaving a will dated 18th November, 1838, and of which James Nicholson and William N. Averitt, were appointed executors, and to whom letters testamentary were duly granted. That in the year 1844, Blewitt (the appellant and complainant) intermarried with Arabella the daughter of the said testator, and that after the death of her father she removed to the State of Georgia where she resided up to the time of her death, which occurred in December, 1844.

That on 8th January, 1845, letters of administration were granted to the complainant Blewitt by the Judge of the County Court of Gadsden county, and that Arabella, together with the other children of the said Malcim Nicholson, and his widow, were devisees under the will of the said Malcolm, by which they were entitled to an equal share of the real and personal estate remaining in the hands of the said executors after the deduction of the specific legacies, and that these portions with the exceptions of such assets as have been handed over to Mary, the wife of said Malcolm, were in the hands of said executors and within the jurisdiction of the court. The bill charges that the complainant as administrator of his wife had made demand upon the said executors, requiring of them a specific per- 201 formance of the trust under the will of Malcolm Nicholson, requiring them to set apart and deliver to him the complainant, as administrator, the portion and share his late wife had been entitled to in the estate, but that they refused to do so.

It is admitted in the answer that Malcolm Nicholson died and left a will and that it was admitted to Probate as alleged in the bill, and that the respondents James Nicholson and W. N. Averitt duly qualified as executors, that Arabella, the late wife of complainant was one of the children of said Malcom Nicholson, and a beneficiary under his will. That sometime after the death of her father she went to the State of Georgia with a view of visiting her mother, who had removed to that State, and that while upon this visit she intermarried with the complainant, and for anything that the defendants knew to the contrary, continued to reside with him as his wife up to the time of her decease, which occurred about the time mentioned in the bill of complaint. That no partition or apportionment of the estate of her father had been made to her prior to her death, nor has any been made to any of the children up to the (then) present period. Without denying the grant of letters of administration to complainant, the defendants in substance contend, that if Arabella the wife of complainant, was at the time of her decease a citizen of the State of Georgia and died within its limits, then that the alleged grant of letters of administration to complainant was null and void, and conferred no right upon complainant to maintain his bill of complaint as administrator in right of his late wife, the said grant being in derogation of the Laws of the State.

To this answer there is a general replication.

It will be seen upon this statement of the pleadings thus succinctly made, that the following proposition is brought directly before the court for its decision.

Is a grant of administration valid by our law when made to the husband by virtue of his marital rights upon the estate of the wife, she being a non-resident at the time of her death and dying in another State, but entitled to property and effects within the limits of the State of Florida.

The negative of this proposition is assumed by the counsel for the appellee and it is contended that the grant of administration to Blewitt is void, because the court which made it was one of limited jurisdiction, a creature of the statutes, and if not embraced within these statutes, the act of the court in making the grant was a nul- 202 lity, and that the Judge of the County Court of Gadsden has transcended his powers in making the grant for the above reasons. There can be no doubt as asserted, that a court of limited jurisdiction must strictly pursue the authority conferred by the power creating it, and that when its jurisdiction is defined, any act transcending the limits or boundaries of that jurisdiction is void. It is proper too that these courts should be kept and restrained within the jurisdiction delegated to them. They resemble special agents, possessing certain specific powers, but when these are not exceeded their decisions are as conclusive (until reversed by an appellate and superior tribunal,) and carry with them the same force as courts of general jurisdiction.

It would of course be exceedingly improper to clothe these limited tribunals with constructive powers, or such as are not literally or virtually given them; but at the same time we must be careful not to deprive them by a too rigid or refined construction of that authority which is requisite and necessary to carry out the end and purpose of their creation, or is incident to grant of power specifically or generally conferred.

While admitting the correctness of the proposition of the counsel for the appellee in the abstract, we are compelled to deny its application to the case at bar.

It is very true as alleged, that our statutes in relation to the granting of letters of administration do not expressly or totidem verbis provide for the case of a person dying beyond the limits of the State, or who was a non-resident at the time of his death, and who may have been entitled to goods, chattels or lands within this State. This may or may not have been a casus omissus, though it no doubt was; but we think the enquiry unimportant, as we deem all cases of the nature above alluded to, fully provided for and embraced in the grant of jurisdiction to the Judges of the County Courts under our Territorial Government.

By the eighth section of the act, passed February 17th, 1833, it was enacted, that the Judge of each County Court, "shall have power either in open court or in vacation, to take the probate of wills, grant and revoke letters, testamentary, and letters of administration, appoint and displace guardians of infants, orphans, idiots, lunatics, and persons non compos mentis, and to make all necessary orders for issuing of process and notices. The letters testamentary or of ad-

203 ministration so granted by the said Judge shall be issued by the Clerk and bear teste in the name of said Judge. That said Judge shall also have power to order sale and distribution in all cases according to laws of estates, testate or intestate, and shall have and exercise general powers as a Judge of Probate," Duval's Comp., 276. By the 4th section of the law of 1828, it is enacted "That it shall be the duty of the County Courts, in the several Counties in this Territory in term time, and of the Judge of said Courts in vacation, to take proofs of all last wills and testaments, and to grant probates, letters testamentary, and letters of administration, with or without any will annexed, and to do and perform all matters and things enjoined on said Courts, or the Judges thereof in vacation, to the estates of deceased persons." Duval Comp., 168.

Let us cast an eye to the jurisdiction of the courts of ordinary in England, and we will find a strong similitude to those of the late Judges of the County Courts. In ancient times, by the English law, when a man died without making disposition of such of his goods as were testable, the King as parens patriae used to seize the goods of the intestate to the intent that they should be peserved for the burial of the dead, the payment of debts, and the advancement of the family. This prerogative of the King was exercised for some time by his own minister of Justice, and probably in the County Courts, besides being delegated as a franchise to many lords of manors and others who possess this right of granting administration by prescription.

This same power was afterwards granted to the prelates, who on account of their superior sanctity were conceived capable of disposing of the property most for the spiritual benefit of the deceased. The goods of the intestate being thus vested in the ordinary, as trustee, to dispose of them for pious uses, the clergy took to themselves the residue of the deceased's estate, after the partes rationalibus of the wife and children had been deducted, without even paying his lawful debts.

To remedy this, the statute of Westm. 2, (13 Ed. 1st, C. 19,) was passed, declaring that the ordinary should be bound to pay the debts of the intestate, as far as his goods extended. Still however, the residue after the payment of debts remained with the ordinary, and as a remedy for this evil the statute of 31st Edward 3, was passed providing that the ordinary should depute the next and most lawful friends of the deceased intestate to administer his goods, to demand 204 and recover as Executors the debts due the intestate, and to be accountable to the ordinaries as executors were. The administrators were the officers of the ordinary, appointed by him in pursuance of this statute, and their title and authority were derived from the ecclesiastical Judge by grants which are usually denominated letters of administration. 1 Williams on Ex., 236-7-8. Toller on Ex., 56. 2 Black. Com., 495.

In giving this brief sketch of the rise and history of administration, we are not to be understood as asserting that the ecclesiastical law as such is in force in Florida by virtue of any of our statutes, which have adopted the common law of England, and statutes of a general nature down to the 4th of July, 1776; but so far as "the law prevailing in the ecclesiastical courts on the subject of wills, executors, and administrators, was by various English statutes, and by recognition in the English Courts, part of the law of England," it would follow that it was embraced by our statutes. Preface to Swinburn on wills—cited by a member of this court on page 380, of 1st Florida Reports. There is certainly a strong analogy between the powers, duties and jurisdiction of an ordinary of England, and those conferred upon the Judges of the County Courts under the Territorial regime, and now appertaining to the Judges of Probate of the State. It is true that these grants of power are derived from different sources—in England all judicial power emanating from the Crown—in our Country from the people conferring it through their constitutions and statutes. This analogy as to the jurisdiction of these tribunals being established there would seem to be as much propriety in following the decisions of the ecclesiastical courts of England when applicable to the subject matter in dispute, and when not conflicting with our statutes, as those of her courts of common law.

We cannot see that there is any valid objection to the granting of letters of administration by the Judge of the County Court of Gadsden County to the complainant Blewitt. The non-residence of his wife at the time of her death is not such a disability as to prevent the granting administration. The case of Griffith vs. Griffith, Sayer 83, cited on page 188 of 1st Williams on Executors, decides and sustains this principle. "This was an action of debt by an administrator, and it appeared by the declaration, that her letters had been granted by the Bishop of Bristol; the defendant pleaded that the deceased died upon the high seas, out of the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Bristol, and that the letters of administration were therefore 205 void." Upon demurrer the letters were holden good, and Lee, C. J., said that the right of granting letters of administration is not founded upon the dying of an intestate within a diocese; but upon his leaving goods there." Soo too it is laid down in the same work (285, 1st Williams on Ex.:) "If the intestate was domcilied in a foreign Country, within the kings dominions out of England, and left assets in this Country, administration must be taken out here, as well as in the County of domicile." And in the case of Scarth vs. the Bishop of London, 1 Hagg., 625, Sir John Nicoll held that though there were some dicta to the effect that the bishop had no jurisdiction where the party does not die within his diocese, and that his death within the diocese is essentially necessary to found his jurisdiction, yet such authorities were not sufficiently clear to induce the court to overturn the established practice."

These and other cases which might be cited, establish the principle that the question of jurisdiction as to the granting administration is made to depend on the locality of the property at the time of the death of the intestate, when it occurs beyond the limits of the State, and that the grant in such a case is not null or void, but good and valid.

While our statutes are silent as to the granting of administration when the death occurs beyond the limits of the State, and only provide in such cases for the Probate of wills, still there is no restriction prohibiting such administration, and we have already given our opinion that this omission is cured by the general grant of power to the Judges of the County Courts. The words "the Judge shall have and exercise general powers as Judge of Probate," seem clearly to confer a plenary and general jurisdiction upon the subject of administration. The statute provides that if a person die out of the Territory (State) without property therein, but with debts due to such person by persons living in the Territory, letters testamentary or of administration, may be granted for the collection of such debts. We cannot think that the Legislature after the passage of such a law ever intended that administration should be refused in cases where there was property real and personal to be administered. It is contended however that there was design in the Legislature in not thus providing for this case, because we have a statute enabling executors and administrators who shall produce probate of wills or letters of administration authenticated under the act of Congress of 1790, shall be authorized to maintain actions in 206 the several courts of the territory, under the same rules and regulations as other plaintiffs. Duval 105. Thomp. Dig. 349. But this law was passed in 1829, a year after the law directing the granting of probate and administration, and we are informed too, that this law was passed in the first place, many years anterior to 1828, the time of its re-enactment. It is very possible that the law of 1829, was passed to remedy the omission of the law of 1828 and to a certain extent may be said to do so, but still it takes away no jurisdiction previously conferred upon the County Judge. But we think the better opinion is that the intention of the Legislatue in passing the law of 1829 was for another purpose. "It is the general doctrine of the common law (says Judge Story) recognized both in England and in this country, that no suit can be brought or maintained by any executor or administrator, or against any administrator or executor in his official capacity in the courts of any other country except that from which he derives his authority to act in virtue of the probate and letters testamentary or the letters of administration therein granted him. But if he desires to maintain any suit in any foreign country, he must obtain new letters of administration and give new security according to the general rules of law prescribed in that country before the suit is brought." Story conflict of Laws, 421-2. We think therefore that for the purpose of obviating this necessity of taking out new or ancillary letters of administration, that the law of 1829 was passed, enabling foreign executors or administrators to maintain suits directly upon complying with the requisitions of the statute.

Nor can we deem the administration granted in this case void because made to a non-resident. The statutes have not made non-residence a disqualification, and it is expressly declared, that "letters of administration shall be granted to the representatives of the intestate who apply for the same, preferring first the husband or wife."—Thompson Dig. 196. By the law of England it is no incapacity to be an administrator that the next of kin is an alien. 295 Williams on Executors. Comyns Dig., Administrator B. 6.

The letters of administration granted to complainant stand unrevoked and in full force, and unless a clear case is made out of want of jurisdiction in the officer granting them, we cannot disturb them, but must presume that all the doings of the Judge in the prem-

WILLIAM G. PONDER, APPELLANT, vs. WM. D. MOSELEY, MARTHA ANN MANLY, AND HIRAM MANLY de jure uxoris, ADMINISTRATORS. de bonis non OF SAMUEL PARKHILL DECEASED, APPELLEES.

To authorize the assertion that a judgment is void it must have emanated from a court of limited jurisdiction not acting within its legitimate prerogative or from a court of general jurisdiction where the parties are not actually or by legal construction before the court and subject to its jurisdiction.

Judgments of court of general jurisdiction are not considered under any circumstances as mere nullities, but as records importing absolute verity, and of binding efficacy until reversed by a competent appellate tribunal. They are voidable, not void.

The title of a purchaser at a sale under execution issued from a court of general jurisdiction, is not affected by a subsequent reversal of the judgment on which the execution was based.

B. a creditor sued M. and M. administrators of the debtor. The defendants pleaded in bar. Afterwards the letters of M. and M. were revoked; and subsequently M. and M. and another were appointed administrators de bonis non. M. and M. pleaded their dismissal in bar quis darrien continuance. The plaintiff replied the re-appointment of M. and M. The defendants rejoined that although reappointed with another as administrators de bonis non, a judgment had been recovered against them in their new character sufficient to cover the assets in their hands. The plaintiff then demurred, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff against M. and M. as administrators. Execution was issued to be levied of the goods of P., the intestate, in the hands of M. and M. as administrators. Under this execution the officer levied on the property of P., the intestate, in the hands of the administrators, de bonis non, and a sale was made. After the sale M. and M. sued out a writ of error from the Supreme Court, and the judgment was reversed. Held that the purchaser at this sale acquired a good title.

The doctrine of estoppel in pais laid down in Cotten vs. Williams, and Camp vs. Parkhill's administrators decided at this term, approved.

Appeal from Leon Circuit Court.

208 The appellees as administrators de bonis non, instituted an action of detinue against the appellant in Leon Circuit Court to recover sundry slaves in the possession of defendant below, alleged to be the property of Samuel Parkhill, deceased.

The declaration contains two counts in usual form—one alleging a delivery by plaintiffs and a detention after demand—the other a finding by defendant and a like detention.

The defendant pleaded three pleas:

1. Non detinet.
2. That the slaves were not the property of plaintiffs.
3. That plaintiffs were not lawfully possessed of the negro slaves.

Upon these the plaintiffs joined issue.

The plaintiffs to maintain the issues joined on their part, offered the following evidence and testimony.

First, It was admitted by defendant's counsel that the plaintiffs were administrators and administratrix of the estate of Samuel Parkhill left unadministered, as set forth and stated in the declaration filed herein.

The said plaintiff then introduced Thomas Brown, who being duly sworn as a witness, deposed as follows: Being shewn three paper writings, says they are appraisements of the slaves of plaintiffs intestate.

Witness was one of the appraisers to appraise the slaves of Intestate's estate; saw the slaves in these papers enumerated, exhibited as the property of said estate, on the plantation of the plaintiff's intestate. They were then in possession of one of the plaintiffs as administratrix of intestate. Does not know what became of these slaves, except from having occasionally seen some of them since. There was one slave named Juba there exhibited, appraised at three hundred and fifty dollars; another Caroline, at five hundred and fifty dollars; another Jane, at two hundred and fifty dollars; another Frank, at two hundred and fifty dollars; another Margaret, at two hundred dollars—this last slave was named in another and late inventory; another slave Albert, appraised at one hundred and fifty dollars; another, Anderson, at one hundred dollars; another Pleasant, at fifty dollars. Thinks slaves have advanced in value since that time twenty-five per centum. Does not know that he has ever seen the above named slaves since. Knows nothing personally of any sale of these slaves.

Cross examined.—Says he does not know that the slaves above 209 named are the same that are now claimed from defendant.

The said plaintiffs then offered in evidence the record, and pleading and entry of the judgment in favor of the Union Bank of Florida, against Manly and wife, administrators of Parkhill the execution issued thereon, the levy and return, or report of the sale of the slaves levied on by John G. Camp, Marshal of Middle District of Florida, to wit:

At a Superior Court for the county of Leon, continued and held at the Court House in the city of Tallahassee, on Saturday, the 1st day of March, A. D. 1845, Present, the Honorable SAMUEL J. DOUGLAS, Judge.

Union Bank of Florida, Plaintiff,
vs.
Martha Ann Manly, late Parkhill, and Hiram Manly, in right of his wife Martha Ann, adm'rs of Samuel Parkhill, dec'd, Defendants. } In debt.

This day came the parties by their attorneys, and the plaintiff by his attorney, filed his special demurrer to the defendant's rejoinder to the plaintiff's replication filed herein to the defendant's amended plea puis darrien continuance filed by leave of the Court on the 24th February last, in which demurrer the defendants joined.—Whereupon the matters of law arising upon the plaintiffs' demurrer to the said rejoinder being argued, it seems to the court here, that the said rejoinder, and the matters and things therein alleged, are not sufficient in law to bar or preclude the plaintiff from having and maintaining its action aforesaid against the said defendants, therefore it is considered by the court that the said plaintiff recover against the said defendant the sum of $94,182 22-100 parcel of the debt in the declaration mentioned, and the sum of $27,982 65-100 its damages, making together the sum of one hundred and twenty-two thousand one hundred and sixty-four dollars and eighty-seven cents, and its costs by it about its suit in this behalf expended, to be levied of the goods and chattels, slaves, lands and tenements of the said intestate, Samuel Parkhill, dec'd, in the hands of the defendants to be administered, and the said defendants in mercy, &c.

THE TERRITORY OF FLORIDA,

To all and singular the Marshals of said Territory—GREETING:

We command you, that of the goods and chattels, slaves, lands tenements of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in the hands of Martha Ann Manly, late Parkhill, and Hiram Manly, in right of his wife 210 said Martha Ann, administrator of Samuel Parkhill, dec'd, remaining to be administered, you cause to be made the sum of ninety-four thousand one hundred and eighty-two dollars and twenty-two cents, its debt, and also twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and eighty-two dollars and sixty-five cents, its interest and damages, making together the sum of one hundred and twenty-two thousand one hundred and sixty-four dollars and eighty-seven cents, which the Union Bank of Florida lately, on the first day of March, 1845, recovered in our Superior Court of the county of Leon, in the Middle District, as well for its debt as its damages occasioned by the detention of said debt, and likewise the sum of seven dollars and eighty-two cents, which to the said Union Bank of Florida, in the same court adjudged for its costs by it in that behalf expended, together with lawful interest on said damages from the rendition of said judgment till paid, and the costs of this writ and of your proceedings hereon, and that you have the said sums of money before the Judge of our said court at Tallahassee, when satisfied, to render the said Union Bank of Florida the sums aforesaid, and have then and there this writ. Witness Richard T. Birchett, Clerk of our said court, at Tallahassee aforesaid, this 20th day of March, A. D., 1845, and of the Independence of the United States the sixty-ninth year.

[SEAL.] R. T. BIRCHETT, Clerk.

This execution was levied on certain slaves of the estate, and at the sale the defendant purchased the slaves mentioned in the declaration.

Defendant by his counsel objected to the introduction thereof as evidence before the jury, but the court overruled the objection, and thereupon the same were read to the jury and the defendant by his counsel excepted.

The said plaintiff then offered in evidence two paper writings purporting to be bills of sale by John G. Camp, M., to defendant of certain slaves named in the declaration, which said writings had been obtained from defendant by notice and rule as prescribed by statute.

Know all men by these presents, that whereas, by virtue of several executions issued out of the Clerk's office of the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida, for Leon County, wherein the Union Bank of Florida and others are plaintiffs, and the administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, are defendants, I did, as Mar-

211 shal of said District levy upon the hereinafter described negro slave Caroline as the property of the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, to satisfy said writ; and whereas, the said negro slave was by me this day exposed for sale at public auction, according to the statutes in such case made and provided, and sold to William G. Ponder for five hundred and thirty-five dollars, being the highest sum bid for the same; Now know ye, That I, John G. Camp, Marshal of said District, by virtue of the said writs of execution, and by force of the statutes in such case made and provided, in consideration of the said sum of five hundred and thirty-five dollars, to me in hand paid by William G. Ponder, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have granted, bargained, sold and transferred, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell and transfer to the said William G. Ponder, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns forever, the negro slave named Caroline, and all the right and interest which the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, had in or to the said named negro, to have and to hold the said negro unto the said William G. Ponder, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, as fully as I, the said John G. Camp, as Marshall as aforesaid, under the authority aforesaid might or ought to convey and sell the same. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal this fifth day of May, Anno Domini, 1845, and of the Independence of the United States the sixty-ninth year.

JOHN G. CAMP, [L. S.]
Marshal.

Know all men by these presents, That whereas by virtue of sundry executions issued out of the Clerk's office of the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida for Leon County, wherein the Union Bank of Florida and others are plaintiffs, and the administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, are defendants, I did, as Marshal of said District, levy upon the hereinafter described negro slaves, to wit: Juba, Jane, Frank, Margaret, Albert, Anderson, Pleasant, as the property of the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, to satisfy said writ; and whereas, the said negro slaves were by me this day exposed for sale at public auction, according to the statutes in such case made and provided, and sold to William G. Ponder for fifteen hundred dollars, being the highest sum bid for the same: Now know ye, That I, John G. Camp, Marshal of said district, by virtue of the said writs of execution, and by force of the statutes in such case made and provided, in consideration of the said sum of fifteen 212 hundred dollars to me in hand paid by William G. Ponder, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged have granted, bargained, sold and transferred, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell and transfer to the said William G. Ponder, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns forever, said negroes named as above, and all the rights and interest which the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, had in or to the said named negroes, to have and to hold the said negroes unto the said William G. Ponder, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns as fully as I, the said John G. Camp, as Marshal as aforesaid, under the authority aforesaid, might or ought to convey and sell the same. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal this sixth day of May, Anno Domini, 1845, and of the Independence of the United States the sixty-ninth year.

JOHN G. CAMP, [L. S.]
Marshal.

The said Plaintiffs then offered to read in evidence the entry of the Judgment of the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida upon an appeal from an order of the County Court of Leon County removing Mrs. Martha A. Manly from the office of administratrix of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, to wit:

At a Superior Court for Leon County continued and held at the Court House in the City of Tallahassee, on Monday the 18th day of March, A. D. 1844: Present the Honorable Samuel J. Douglass, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of Samuel Parkhill, dec'd. } On an appeal from an order of the County Court of Leon County revoking the administration of Martha Ann Manly late Martha Ann Parkhill.

This cause coming on to be heard anew upon the merits, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that Henry Bond, Richard K. Call, George K. Walker and Benjamin W. Gause, the securities upon the official bond of said Martha, are insufficient: It is therefore ordered that the judgment and decree of the County Court be affirmed and that the letters of administration heretofore granted to the said Martha be and remain revoked, annulled and set aside. It is further ordered that John G. Camp, Esq., Marshal of the District of Middle Florida, do take the property of the said estate of Samuel Parkhill in his possession to remain there till the further order and direction of this court.

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

To the introduction of which defendant by his counsel objected, 213 but the court overruled the objection, and allowed the evidence to go to the jury, and defendant by his counsel excepted.

The said plaintiff then proved that the term, "sundry executions issued out of the Clerk's office," as stated in the bills of sale referred to and given in evidence were the following:

Execution No.	3278	in favor of	C. B. Bioren.
"	"	3279	"	George B. Pease.
"	"	3280	"	Ann Davidson.
"	"	3281	"	R. T. Birchett, assignee.

"	"	3284	"	P. Philips.
"	"	3285	"	Moore and Monford.
"	"	3286	"	William Fisher.

All against Hiram Manly and Martha Ann Manly, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased.

It was admitted by defendant's counsel that these were executions issued on the same day, and on judgments rendered at the same term, and on the same pleadings as the case of the Union Bank against Manly and wife, administrators of S. Parkhill.

The said plaintiff also introduced and read to the jury the mandate of the Supreme Court, reversing the judgment rendered in the Superior Court at the suit of the Union Bank of Florida against Martha Ann Manly and Hiram Manly, administrators of the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, and the entry of this court thereon dismissing said suit.

The said plaintiffs then offered to introduce in evidence the original deeds of mortgage executed by Samuel Parkhill in his life time to the Union Bank of Florida, (nine in number,) to secure his shares of stock in said Bank, with the view of proving that the slaves in suit were embraced in said mortgages, &c., &c., to the introduction of which evidence the defendant by his counsel objected, but the court overruled the objection and the defendant excepted to the decision, and thereupon, an abstract of the said mortgages which it was agreed should stand in lieu of said original deeds, was given in evidence to the jury, to wit:

Union Bank of Florida, 15 July, 1847.

C. G. ENGLISH,
Sol. U. B.

And the said plaintiffs here rested their cause.

The defendant by his counsel then submitted his defence to the jury, and offered as an admission agreed upon by the counsel on both sides the following statements:

"It was agreed and considered as admitted that one of the slaves purchased by Ponder applied to the plaintiff Moseley before the sale to purchase her, because she had a husband owned by Ponder, who resided in the neighborhood; Moseley said he was unable to purchase, and recommended the slave to apply to Ponder to purchase her. Accordingly the slave went over to Ponder's place, and 217 afterwards Ponder came to the Court House, and after the conversation alluded to by Ponder in his testimony in Camp's case, the negro was bid off by Ponder."

The following testimony of Ponder in Camp's case to be considered as part of the admission, to wit:

"William G. Ponder stated he was present at the sale of the Parkhill slaves under executions of Union Bank and others, in the Spring of 1845. He further stated that Moseley was present at the sale, and advised him (the witness) to purchase. Some suggestions being made as to the title, Moseley said there would be no difficulty—said he had hired the negro, and that it would suit the witness—said he thought there would be no difficulty about the property. Being cross-examined, and in answer to a question from plaintiff's counsel, said the general impression was, that all the difficulty about the property had been done away—it was supposed that the judgment was legal, and had a right to sell the property."

Also called William Bloxham, who, being duly sworn, said he was present at the sale of Parkhill's slaves made by Marshal Camp. Messrs. Manly and Moseley were present. Col. Gamble, President of the Union Bank, was bidding for slaves for Meinetzhagen, and was buying without competition, when Manly asked witness to bid against him. Witness did so, and caused the slaves bought by Col. Gamble to bring about fifteen hundred dollars more than they would have done. Moseley was present directing the sale, and arranging them in lots to be sold; for one slave, Ellen, he bid, and run her up to a large price, stating that she was to be replevied, and to be bought for Mrs. Brockenbrough. To the sale of this slave he objected, but to the sale of none others; he had a book with a list of the slaves in his hand, and stated he was desirous to keep the slaves in the little mortgage from being then sold. Was present at a conversation between Plaintiff, Moseley, and Archer, when the latter observed that he intended to stop the negroes bought at the sale, and which the purchasers intended to send for sale to New Orleans. Witness then took Plaintiff Moseley aside and stated to him that a friend of witness had bought some negroes at the sale and intended to send them for sale to New Orleans, and witness wished to know the intention of Moseley so as to advise his friend. Moseley then said that he would not lend his name to any interference with the sale, that he had felt greatly relieved thereby. When witness came up to the sale, Mr. Thompson was concluding an address to the 218 people saying that the sale was good and valid.

Cross examined, said he did not hear the sale forbid by Archer.—The place of conversation above alluded to, was in Fisher's tavern The remarks of Moseley above narrated, occurred only between witness and Moseley, and apart from Archer; at that time the slaves alluded to were near town on their way to be embarked; with respect to Manly's suggestion to witness to bid, witness had on his own mere motion bid before, but in bidding against Gamble, witness bid beyond the value under an assurance that Gamble would bid more, and with a view to increase the credit of Parkhill's estate. Ponder was not present at the conversation between Moseley and witness. Does not know whether Ponder was present when Many urged witness to bid. Witness bid off two negroes at the request of a friend, so stating at the time to the Marshal. Knows Juba and Caroline, two of the slaves named in Ponder's bill of sale, but not their present value. Cannot state the value of the hire of the slaves. Juba, for an old woman, was a good hand, and was worth from forty to seventy dollars per year; Caroline about eighty dollars, the price fluctuating and generally low. A female slave of thirteen years would hire for about thirty dollars; a girl of eleven and a boy of ten would be worth about their victuals and clothes. The witness bid for several slaves and all for Dorsey. Thinks the slaves altogether, and those bought by defendant, sold high, and for as much as they would have brought since. Witness has been sued for the negroes bought for Dorsey.

Also called John G. Gamble, who being duly sworn deposed—was present at the sale of the slaves by the Marshal in 1845, and took part in it. Moseley, the plaintiff in this suit, stood beside the witness, and took an active part in the sale. Moseley kept memoranda of the sales, divided the slaves into families and lots to have them sold. Moseley professed his entire satisfaction at the sale, stating that he was pleased to have the business closed. Ponder was present and bought at the ale. Moseley urged the bidding. The Marshal counselled during the course of the sale with Moseley, and sold under his instructions. By Moseley's directions the slaves were so divided as to bring the largest price. Thinks Moseley bid for Ellen, and run her up to eight hundred dollars or more, avowing that he bid for Mr. Brockenbrough. Moseley expressed to witness his satisfaction that the sale was made, as he wished to get rid of the concern.

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

219 Cross examined, says he did not hear the sale forbid by Mr. Archer. Has heard Ponder say he bought slaves at the advice of Moseley. In the year 1834 the witness borrowed money from Ponder to unable him to go to Europe to negotiate the bonds of the Territory of Florida. This was before the Bank went into operation. Did not then or since explain the nature of the charter of the Union Bank to the defendant.

Also, called John G. Anderson, who being duly sworn said, was present at the sale spoken of on the first day, saw the plaintiffs Moseley and Manly present at the sale. Manly kept a list; Moseley also kept a list, and directed the sale. Witness, acting for another person, applied to have a family put up in one lot; the Marshal declined without Moseley's concurrence; Moseley refused, and required the slaves to be put up separately, that they might bring more money, and they were thus sold. Heard Moseley bid more than once at the sale, and take the general direction of the sale.—Heard all that Archer said. He got on a bale of cotton, and stated that the widow's dower had not been allowed, and for that reason, he forbid the sale.

Also called David D. Young, who being duly sworn, said, was present at the sale alluded to, heard, on the occasion of one of the slaves being offered, and not being run up, the plaintiff Moseley say, "bid up, bid up gentlemen, the property is not bringing half its price. The title will be good." After that the property sold better. This declaration was made to the crowd around. Many persons were present.

Cross examined, said, the declaration was made in a loud tone to those around, and might be heard at the distance of ten paces.—Heard Mr. Archer say, that so far as he represented the widow, he forbid the sale.

Also called Edward Houstoun, who being duly sworn said, he was present at the sale, and saw there the plaintiffs Moseley and Manly. Moseley assisted at the sale in pointing out and stating the qualities of the slaves. Manly had a list also. Did not hear Moseley bid, or advise others to bid. Heard Mr. Archer state that he claimed a title for Mrs. Manly's dower. Heard Mr. Thompson in reply say that the right of dower had been adjudicated and decided against, and that the title was good.

Also called Medicus A. Long, who being duly sworn said, was present several times at the sale for short periods, and at the begin-220 ning Mr. Archer got up and forbade the sale in the right of the widow and in her behalf; that she claimed dower, and they must purchase subject to her title. He spoke in a loud tone to the crowd.—Moseley was present with a list of the slaves, directing the sale, calling up and naming the slaves, and the order and manner of the sale. Heard the instance stated by Mr. Anderson.

Also called Otis Fairbanks, who being duly sworn, said he was present at the sale. A few minutes before the sale, Governor Moseley stood on the steps. As the first slave was put on the stand, Mr. Archer rose and forbid the sale on account and behalf of the widow. Mr. Thompson replied, and asserted the sale was valid. On Archer's forbidding the sale Gov. Moseley by his manner and exclamation, expressed disapprobation, saying the sale had better go on, they could not be sold at a better time. After that heard Moseley say, "bid, bid, I do not wish the negroes to go for nothing." This remark seemed to be induced by the fact that just then some slaves had sold low; after it was made they sold better. Only saw Manly present and keeping a list of the sales.

Also called Leslie A. Thompson, who being duly sworn, said, that he was present at the sale. Before any slave was sold, Mr. Archer rose and said that on the part of the widow, he gave notice that the widow had not had her dower assigned, and that all who purchased would do so at their peril subject to the widow's dower. Witness rose to reply, and stated that a claim similar to Mrs. Manly's had been decided against, and that the title was good against her claim. Did not see Governor Moseley until the bidding commenced. Saw Moseley bid for two slaves at least; heard him say to one of the crowd, when a negro was bid off, you have made a bargain; to another he spoke and encouraged him to bid; heard him object to a family being sold entire, and at his suggestion they were sold singly.

Cross examined.—Saw Governor Moseley on the ground before the first slave was bid off. Did not hear Mr. Archer say one word about any other claim than the widow's dower,—nothing about the claim of the administrators de bonis non. Witness in his reply did not state anything about the Union Bank of Florida, its mortgages or interest. Did not see Manly do, or hear him say anything. Did not then notice Mr. Ponder. Witness did not before or since this suit hear him say anything about the Union Bank of Florida, mortgages, &c., &c. Went to the sale on the part of the attorney of the Bank, and with no purpose of making any statement until he 221 heard Mr. Archer's statement.

Defendant having here rested his cause, the plaintiffs offered to read in evidence a bill filed on the Equity side of the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida, in which William D. Moseley and his sureties were complainants praying relief, &c., to wit:

To the Honorable Samuel J. Douglas, Judge of the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida, in and for the county of Leon, in Chancery sitting: The bill of complaint of William D. Moseley, William Doggett, Green Chaires, Henry Doggett, Alexander Moseley, and William P. Moseley, respectfully represents, That complainant William D. Moseley, on or about the 23d April, 1844, was duly qualified administrator de bonis non jointly with Martha Ann Manly of the Estate of Samuel Parkhill deceased, left unadministered by the said Martha Ann Manly, late Martha Ann Parkhill, the former administratrix. That said Co-Complainants were and are the sureties on the bond of said administrators de bonis non, but were never the securities of said Martha Ann in the original administration, that a large number of slaves, all of about the value of seventy-five thousand dollars, left unadministered by said Martha, came to the possession of said William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non as aforesaid, as will appear by reference to the inventory and appraisements thereof returned by said William D. Moseley to the County Court of Leon county, and signed by him and him alone, a certified copy of which will be produced, if necessary, at the trial of this cause. That on the 4th January, 1845, a judgment was rendered in Leon Superior Court against said administrators de bonis non, at the suit of the Union Bank of Florida, for upwards of seventy thousand dollars, to be levied of the goods and chattels, slaves, lands and tenements of said Samuel, deceased, in the hands of said administrators de bonis non, that said judgment remains of force against said Moseley, as administrator de bonis non, not satisfied or reversed as will appear by reference to the record of the proceedings therein in said court, under the statute of the Territory authorizing the foreclosing of mortgages at common law.—That the judgment aforesaid is the only judgment recovered against said administrators de bonis non, and that said William D. Moseley since the rendition of the same, has retained until a few days past, the property of said estate, in said inventory mentioned, to satisfy said judgment in case the same be affirmed in the appeal now pending in the Court of Appeals. That said complainant Moseley has 222 hired out the slaves of said estate for the present year to divers persons for a large sum of money, to wit: Seven thousand dollars, and upon notes secured to be paid at the end of the year. That since the rendition of said judgment and since the hiring aforesaid, the said Union Bank of Florida, John C. Monford and Kidder M. Moore, Executors of William Turner, deceased, William Fisher, Pierpont Philips, Richard T. Birchett, assignee, Ann Davidson, Richard C. Saunders, George B. Pease, Charles B. Bioren, Lot Porter, Thomas R. McClintock, have severally obtained judgments, as complainants are informed, in Leon Superior Court, on the law side thereof, for various and large sums of money against the said Martha Ann Manly and Hiram Manly, her husband, as administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, by virtue of the original administration by said Martha; that said judgment creditors have sued out executions against said Manly and wife, as administrators, "to be levied of the goods and chattels, slaves, lands and tenements of the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in their hands as administrators, to be administered. That these complainants are not parties to said judgments, or sureties for said Martha, on her original administration, and are advised that they are in no wise liable for, or bound to pay said judgments or executions, and that they are in no wise responsible for any mal-administration, defaults, failures or devastavits of said Hiram and Martha, or either of them, in the management and administration of the estate of said Samuel, under the original administration. Nevertheless, these complainants expressly aver and now shew unto your Honor that the judgment creditors of Manly and wife above named, and John G. Camp, Marshal of the said Middle District, have proceeded under said executions to levy the same upon the estate of said Samuel in the hands of complainant William D. Moseley, as administrator de bonis non, retained to satisfy the judgment against him, and did in fact on Monday the 31st March, 1845, levy the same upon divers of said slaves then in the actual possession of the hirers of said slaves, and that they have advertised the said slaves to be sold on the first Monday in May next, to satisfy said judgments and executions against Manly and wife; and these complainants further represent that said William D. Moseley and said other administrators de bonis non, have not since the administration by said Moseley committed any waste or devastavit of the effects of said estate, but that said William D. Moseley being in possession of said

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

223 estate, was proceeding to administer the same according to law, and to pay the judgment of the 4th January, 1845, recovered against him, if the same should be affirmed.

That unless the judgment creditors of Manly and wife, and the Marshal John G. Camp, Esq., are enjoined and restrained from proceedings so oppressive to said William D. Moseley and his said securities, and unless the said estate is protected in the hands of said William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non, on the faith of which the Judgment of the 4th January, 1845, was rendered, these complainants will be compelled in effect to pay the debts of Manly and wife, for which they are in no wise bound; will be left without any assets to pay the judgment of 4th January, 1845, and will be compelled without waste or devastavit, default, or mal-administration on the part of the administrators de bonis non, for whom alone they are sureties, to pay out of their individual means the said judgment of the 4th January, 1845, in case the same is affirmed. All of which actings, doings and pretences, on the part of said judgment creditors, and said John G. Camp, are contrary to equity and good conscience, and tend to the manifest wrong, injury, and oppression of these complainants. In tender consideration whereof, and inasmuch as complainants are remediless in the premises, except in equity, where matters of this nature are properly cognizable and relievable. To the end, therefore, that the said Union Bank of Florida, Kidder M. Moore and John C. Montford, William Fisher, Pierpont Philips, Richard T. Birchett, Ann Davidson, Richard A. Saunders, Geo. B. Pease, Charles B. Bioren, Lot Porter, and Thomas R. McClintock, may, severally and respectively, under oath, full, true, direct, and perfect answer make, to all and singular the matters above set forth, and that as fully and particularly as if the same were here repeated, and they and every of them distinctly interrogated thereto; and that the said defendants above named and each of them, their and each of their agents and deputies, be perpetuallly enjoined, inhibited, and restrained from levying upon, selling, retaining, taking away, or otherwise interfering with said slaves or either of them, levied upon and advertised for sale, under and by virtue of said executions against said Manly and wife, as administrator and administratrix of the estate of Samuel Parkhill, under the original administration. That said defendants above named, and said John G. Camp, be decreed to re-deliver said slaves levied upon and advertised for sale to the several persons from whose ac-224 tual possession they were taken, or to said William D. Moseley, or that such other and further relief be had in the premises, as to this Honorable Court shall seem meet and proper in the premises. May it please your honor, &c.

ARCHER,
Sol. for Complainants.

William D. Moseley being sworn, saith, that the matters of fact contained in the foregoing bill, as far as they are stated from his own knowledge, are true, and as to those matters stated upon information derived from others, he believes to be true.

W. D. MOSELEY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 4th April, A. D., 1845.

SAM'L J. DOUGLAS. Judge.

Let the bill be filed—the injunction is denied.

S. J. DOUGLAS, Judge.

To the admission of which in evidence the said defendant by his counsel objected, but the court overruled the objection, and allowed the said bill to be read in evidence to the jury, to which decision of the court the defendant by his counsel excepted.

Also called Francis H. Flagg, who being duly sworn, said he was present at the beginning of the sale alluded to; heard Mr. Archer's protest. Mr. Archer protested against it as being irregular or illegal, and besides that, the widow had not her dower.

Cross examined, said, does not recollect that he said that while it was irregular or illegal, he used the terms, "besides that" the widow's dower had not been assigned. He did not express any other particular cause of irregularity. Mr. Thompson in reply said, that the question of, or the right of dower in the widow had been decided, and the title was good. Did not go there for the purpose of bidding.

Also called Justus R. Fortune, who being duly sworn, said, he was present at the sale; heard either Judge Manly or Mr. Archer make an objection to the sale—he does not know which.—Cannot say whether he went there to bid or not; he did in fact bid off one old negro man, but did not take possession of him; gave him up to Gov. Call.

Also called John Daffin, who being duly sworn, said he was present at the sale, and heard Mr. Archer get up and object to the sale and he thinks, but cannot certainly say, that the sale was illegal, as the widow had not her dower assigned her. Cross examined, thinks he heard the word illegal, and that the widow had not her 225 dower.

Also called James T. Archer, who being duly sworn, said, witness by a bill had made an application to the court on the morning of the sale for dower for the widow. Did not press it, as the same point had been decided adversely, but wished it filed as notice.—Witness wrote a notice for Manly to make, but Manly hesitated, and then witness rose, (not on a cotton bale,) and in an excited and audible voice declared that the sale was illegal, and that the widow had a claim for dower, and all persons would purchase at their peril. Witness was much excited, and does not profess to state precisely what he did say. Mr. Thompson rose then, and equally excited, declared the sale legal, &c. Witness then went on to explain his understanding as to the effect and illegality of the judgments at and ever since the time they were rendered, and he came to the sale with all those impressions on his mind, and but for the testimony of the defendant's witnesses, this witness would never have doubted that he gave utterance to those sentiments.

Cross examined, admits he was excited and agitated when he made the statement. Since the filing the bill before mentioned knows of no other action by plaintiff, Moseley, to stop the sale.

Defendant then called Doctor John G. Gamble, Jr., who being duly sworn, said, was present when Mr. Archer got up, was near him. He said in terms that the widow had not released her dower, and persons were notified of the fact, and would purchase at their peril. Mr. Thompson arose, and said in reply, that the question had been settled against the claim of dower, and the title was good.

Both parties here closed their evidence.

And the cause having been fully argued by counsel on both sides, his Honor the Judge instructed the jury as follows, to wit:

1. The judgment and execution under which the slaves were sold are wholly void, and gave no authority, and no right of property passed by the sale.

2. That the judgment and execution being against administrators who had been removed from office, it is the same as if there had been no judgment nor execution.

3. That defendant must be regarded as having purchased with knowledge of the title, is affected with notice of the illegality of the sale, and stands in the position of the Union Bank, the plaintiff, in the sale, and of the administrators who had been removed, getting their title, and no other. Unless the jury shall be satisfied that the 226 administrators of Parkhill, at the time of the sale, wilfully, deliberately, and of their own free accord and consent, agreed to waive the objections to the sale, and to affirm its validity, and that purchases were mainly made on the faith of such conduct, action or admission, and not relying on the legality of the sale, or if the jury are satisfied that Ponder would have purchased without reference to any statement or conduct of the administrators at the sale, then there is no bar to the recovery of plaintiffs.

4. That if they are of opinion there was fraud on the part of the plaintiff, or a disposition to entrap, or mislead, or deceive purchasers in their action and conduct, they must find for defendant.

5. That if they find that such advice and conduct proceeded from one administrator, and not from both, that this not to be regarded as conclusive, but that the action of that administrator shall be preferred which is most favorable to the estate

6. That if they are satisfied that this admission and conduct were the effect and result of the party's convictions as to the obedience due to the decision of the court after the applications made by the party to arrest the judgment, and the sale by the officer, under the impression that the court had rightly decided, that such action and such conduct will not estop the parties from asserting their rights and interests, on discovering that the court was wrong, and the judgment and sale a nullity. That a defendant is bound to respect the decision of the constituted authorities, and this obedience, and a conduct and action consistent therewith, is not to be taken as the free act of the party, to estop him from asserting the truth afterwards.

7. That if the jury are of opinion that the action and conduct of administrators proceeded from a desire not to obstruct or thwart the action of the court, or from a disposition to prevent the injury that would arise from a sale of the negroes at a reduced price, in case the judgment and execution might turn out to be valid, and with no disposition to entrap purchasers then that such action and conduct are not wilful, and do not estop plaintiff from recovery.

8. That after the applications to the court by Moseley to arrest the sale, and in opposition to the judgment and execution, it was not the duty of the administrator, Moseley, to give notice or protest at the sale, or to take any part—that, as to the judgment, execution and sale, he must be considered as having been adjudicated 227 as no representative, or a discredited representative, and his action afterwards must be regarded as that of an individual, and not to affect the estate.

And thereupon the said defendant prayed the Court to instruct the jury in his behalf as follows, to wit:

I. That if the jury believe from the evidence that the slaves sued for went into the possession of the defendant, with the consent of the said plaintiffs, or either of them, express or implied, then that such bailment implies an agreement by defendant to redeliver upon request, and that no action can be maintained, except after demand and refusal by defendant to re-deliver.

II. That there having been no evidence whatever of a demand on defendant before suit brought for the return of this property, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover.

III. That the plaintiffs in this action being strangers to the judgments on which the executions in evidence issued, and under which the sale by the marshal was made, are not allowed in this action as against this defendant, a purchaser at such sale, to set up that such judgment was and is void, nor to impeach the same collaterally.

IV. That to support the title of a purchaser at marshal's sale as against the defendants in execution, it is enough that he shows a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, and that a sale was made by virtue of an execution of the kind the statute prescribes; and to support the title of such purchaser as against the plaintiffs in this action, or strangers to that judgment upon the allegation of title in such plaintiffs, then that a sale of the property by such marshal, in the presence of such alleged owners, without objection on their part, estops the plaintiffs from impeaching the transaction on the ground of their better title.

V. That, if the jury believe from the evidence that William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non of Sam. Parkhill, deceased, one of the plaintiffs, had sole possession of the negroes in controversy before the time when defendant became possessed of them, then that even if the slaves had been wrongfully taken by defendant out of his possession, the said Moseley could bring an action alone and in his individual name for the slaves, and that the said Moseley cannot defeat any defence of defendant against him alone, and in his individual capacity by joining his co-administrators and suing jointly as administrators.

VI. That if the jury believe from the evidence that the negroes
228 in controversy were offered at public sale in May, 1845, and that on that occasion the said plaintiffs, or either of them, knowing their title, stood by and did not forbid the sale, and that defendant thereupon purchased the negroes under the supposition that the title was good, then that the party so standing by and being silent will be bound by the sale, and is estopped from asserting the title in himself.

VII. That if the jury believe from the evidence that plaintiffs or either of them stood by and saw the property now sued for, sold to the defendant at public sale, as the property of another under an erroneous opinion of title, without making known their title, then that plaintiffs will not be permitted afterwards to exercise their legal rights against such defendant.

VIII. That if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs or either of them have made admissions and declarations which are clearly inconsistent with the claims they now propose to set up —that the defendant acted on the admissions and declarations so made, and that defendant will be injured by allowing the truth of such admissions and declarations to be disproved, then that the plaintiffs are estopped from setting up an adverse title.

IX. That if the jury believe from the evidence that William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, one of the plaintiffs in this action did heretofore and before the said sale shown in evidence, send one of the slaves in controversy to the defendant, making known to him that said slave was about to be sold recommending him to purchase such slave at the time and place where the sale afterwards took place, that he Moseley would buy the slave but for lack of means, that by reason of such recommendations and suggestions Ponder attended the sale, that at such sale upon suggestion made about the title, Moseley said there would be no difficulty, that at said sale Moseley was present giving a sanction to the sale, aiding in its execution, encouraging bidders, both by declaring values and qualities of slaves, as also by bidding for slaves himself, and that defendant purchased the slaves he bid off on the faith of such acts, understanding that he was getting a good and valid title to the slaves, then the said Moseley is estopped from setting up title in himself against said defendant and plaintiffs cannot recover.

X. That the relations which exist between the Union Bank of Florida and the estate of Parkhill have nothing to do with this suit, nor are the bond holders parties to this action, nor do these things enter into the decisions of the issues in this case.

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

XI. That if the jury believe from the evidence that before and at 229
the time of the sale shown of the slaves in controversy, said Moseley the plaintiff well knew said sale was to be made under an execution which is now shown to have had no power to touch the property in question, and that yet notwithstanding Moseley allowed the sale to proceed without claiming the property as his own as administrator de bonis non, but declared the title proposed to be sold by the Marshal good, and that there would be no difficulty, then that such conduct of said Moseley as administrator de bonis non, was and is, as against the defendant a purchaser at said sale an adoption by Moseley administrator de bonis non, of that sale as his own, and estops him from setting up that no title passed by said sale. That such alienation is equal in effect to an original conveyance.

XII. That if the jury believe from the evidence that Moseley, one of the plaintiffs, bid for property sold at sale by the Marshal, then that such act was an encouragement to all persons present to bid at said sale, and precludes him from denying its legality.

XIII. That if the jury believe from the evidence that the declarations of Moseley, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, on the day of the sale were made to the bystanders after the manner of one having authority and control, and directing the sale, then the jury have a right to consider the said sale as made by him in his character of administrator de bonis non, and that a good title passed to the purchaser which he cannot gainsay or resist.

XIV. That even if the plaintiffs and defendant are equally innocent, then that the rule is, that if one of two innocent parties is to suffer, he is to suffer whose first action and conduct causes the mischief, and that the purchasers at this sale are not to lose their money and their slaves, if the loss would fall upon them, either by the culpable negligence of Moseley or by his omission to assert an adversary title at a time when he knew the same.

All which said instructions the said court refused to give to the jury, but in reference to the tenth prayer for instruction, instructed and charged the jury:—

That the property in question could not be sold under execution by the Union Bank of Florida, except as a Trustee for the Bondholder, and that Ponder is not a purchaser without notice: That until the expiration of the time limited to the mortgage, the Bank cannot sell the slaves under a judgment at law for a debt of its own.

To all of which said several rulings, decisions and judgments of the 230 said court during the trial of this cause, to the instructions given to the jury and to the refusal of the said court to instruct the jury as prayed by defendant, the said defendant excepts and forasmuch as the said matters excepted to do not appear upon the records of said court, tenders this his bill of exceptions, and prays that the same may be signed, sealed, and made a part of the record.

Hagner, for Appellant:

1st. What must a purchaser at sale of Marshal show to protect his title?

1st. An against defendant in execution.

It is enough that he shows a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, and that a sale was made by virtue of an execution of the kind the statute prescribes.

Acts of estoppel. 1st. Standing by and giving a sort of sanction to the sale.

6 Adol. & Ellis, 474.

In that case Lord Denham uses this language:

"But the rule of law is clear, that, when one by his words or conduct, wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time; and the plaintiff in this case might have parted with his interest in the property, by verbal gift or sale, without any of the formalities, which throw technical obstacles in the way of legal evidence. And we think his conduct in standing by and giving a kind of sanction to the proceedings under the execution, was a fact of such a nature, that the opinion of the jury, &c., ought to have been taken, whether he had not, in point of fact, ceased to be the owner."

And the same Judge, in the case of Gregg vs. Wells, 10 Adolph. & Ellis, 90, says:

"Picard vs. Sears was in my mind at the time of the trial, and the principle in that case may be stated even more broadly, than it is there laid down. A party who negligently or culpably stands by, and allows another to contract, on the faith and understanding of a fact which he can contradict, cannot afterwards dispute that fact, in the action against the person whom he has himself assisted in deceiving."

To the same effect are the following cases:

2 Devereux's Rep., 179. 9 Cowen, 275. 19 Wendell, 563.—1 Fonblanque's Equity, ch. 3, sec. 9, p. 163.

2d. They were silent when they ought to have spoken, and will not be allowed to speak now.

3d. The active agency and participation in the sale by the plaintiffs in this action:

232 6 Adol. & Ellis, 475. 9 Barn. & Cress., 577. 3 Barn. & Adolph., 313. 10 Adolph. & Ellis, 90. 1 Barn. & Adol., p. 142. 9 Cowen, 275. 4 Metcalf, 381. 21 Maine, 130. 2 Murphey's Rep., 6. 3 Hill's Rep., 215.

In same case, Bronson, J., dissenting upon his view of the facts, declares the law of estoppel by admissions.

1st. The admissions must be clearly inconsistent with the evidence proposed, or title to be set up.

1d. That the other party acted on that admission.

2d. Injury, if allowed now to disprove. And the judge lays down as the sum and substance of the whole "The facts and admissions operate against him in the nature of estoppel, when in good conscience and honest dealing, he ought not to be permitted to gainsay them."

We are content with this exposition of the law.

On the same head:—

7 H. & J., 337. 1 H. & McH., 146. 8 Yerger, 388. 4 Munford, 129. 4 Paige, C. Rep., 94.

Under 3d head, of active agency and participation in my brief advert to record and facts:

It is shown—1st. That the plaintiffs were not only not forbidding the sale, but taking the active charge, management and control.

2d. When bidding was chilled by the effect of Archer's announcement, Moseley said "bid—I don't want the negroes sacrificed—I will be glad when they are off my hands." After this, says the witness, the negroes sold better.

3d. The statement by Moseley to the parties, on their objections to title, by assurance "that all was well," was of itself an open declaration of the strongest kind—an admission calculated to remove any impression, if such had before existed, that the sale would be disputed.

4th. Manly's act in encouraging the sale, by having Bloxham act as a bye-bidder, is a gross fraud, if this sale can now be set aside.

5th. The declarations by Moseley that the titles were good encouraging bidders, addressed to the by-standers, was calculated to have effect, and is proved to have had distinct effect, on the general sales; and because every defendant is entitled to the benefit of such declaration, according to the rule laid down by Lord Denman. If, indeed the mere standing by and giving a sort of sanction by that act 233 alone to the proceedings, is declared by Lord Denman to be an act of such a nature, from which the jury can infer that the plaintiffs had ceased to be owners—how much more potent is Moseley's bidding for the property?—does it not utterly repel the idea of then existing title in himself? The bystanders were entitled to put faith in his conduct—and doing so, men were deceived and induced to alter their previous position, to part with their money, and instead become owners of these negroes—and now great mischief and injustice would be caused by permitting the plaintiffs to withdraw from the position they then assumed.

6th. These slaves were knocked off to the purchasers, in the presence of Moseley and Manly, before they had paid their money. Had they spoken out then, and claimed title, these defendants might have refused to complete the purchase. They were silent when they ought to have spoken, they will not be allowed to speak now. But they were cognizant of the transaction, and did nothing to prevent it.

II. Are the plaintiffs in this action strangers, or were they parties or privies to the former judgment of the Bank?.

The plaintiffs, however, would fain anticipate such an inquiry, and insist that that judgment was and is absolutely void. Now, was that judgment void and a mere nullity?

First, It was the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction—the parties sued were yet before the court—the subject-matter was also within the jurisdiction—the parties plead in bar of the action.

5 Cranch, 185. 6 Peters, 16-17. 3 Cranch, 306. 2 Peters, 163. 10 Wheaton, 192. 10 Peters, 468.

Second, The judgment was reversed mainly because two pleas remained open, undecided. The Supreme Court plainly regarded the judgment as erroneous merely.

1 Florida Reports, 110, and this was the correct view. Viner's Abridgement, (Judgment G. A.,) contains the following strong case:

If praecipe quod reddat is brought against my father, who dies pending the suit, and I enter as heir, and after judgment is given against my Father, and the Defendant enters, I shall not have assize, for the judgment against a dead person is not void, but error, quod nota.

Thus, then, if the old administrators had been "actually," instead of "civiliter" mortua, their death would only have rendered the 234 judgment erroneous, or voidable, and not void.

If not a void judgment, but conclusive until reversed, on parties and privies, then the question recurs, are these plaintiffs STRANGERS TO THAT JUDGMENT?

Manly ex ux. were parties to the suit—duly served with process as administrators. They plead in bar amongst other pleas, their discharge—it is replied to, and on demurrer to rejoinder, judgment was given for plaintiff.

When plea pleaded, Manly and wife were administrators de bonis non. This was shown in the pleadings, and is as well as if in proof. Judgment against them, therefore, was good, until reversed. 1 Levintz, 261. 2 Levintz, 190. 1 Lord Ray., 63. Comberback, 220. Lord Raymond, 265.

Two of these plaintiffs then were parties—the third privy in estate. 1 Flor. Rep., 110. Cro. Car., 167. 8 Cowen Rep., 343

The property seized and sold was the property of the estate.

III. But be the judgment in favor of the Bank void, an utter nullity, to which these plaintiffs were neither parties nor privies, how do they stand in relation to the judgments and executions against Manly and wife, administrators of Parkhill, deceased.

These judgments are unreversed and are irreversable—and being so cannot be declared a nullity by any authority of law. 10 Peters, 473.

The sales were made under these executions and judgments as well as that of the Union Bank.

We have thus established, we believe, that the purchasers at these sales show enough to bar a recovery; they show valid judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction, and that sales were made by virtue of executions of the kind the statute prescribes.

If, on the other hand, these plaintiffs are regarded as strangers, whose property was sold on that occasion, they are estopped from impeaching the sale on the ground of better title.

IV. As to specific errors assigned.

1. The introduction of revocation of letters.

2. The introduction of mortagages of Union Bank.

3. The introduction of Bill in Chancery against no party, praying process against no one.

These were all "res inter alios acta."—The Bill in Chancery is relied on by the Judge in his 6th. charge. The instructions of the Judge are erroneous. In argument we will advert to them.

235 The instructions prayed by defendant below should have been given.

The 1st and 2d instructions asked require reference to authorities We are satisfied they can be upheld. The counts here are two.—One on special bailment—the other on supposed finding. The second count can only be sustained upon proof of possession obtained wrongfully without pretence of bailment. 4 Bos. and Puller, 145.

In the case at bar, the possession was with the consent of the plaintiffs, either express or implied. The proof, then, being of bailment, recovery must be on the first count, or not at all. 4 Bos. & Pul., 351. Buller's N. P., p. 139. 1 Chitty's Plead., 141.

In actions of detinue, the detainer is the gist of the action, and upon general principles, where there is no certain debt or obligation due, but a mere collateral engagement or duty, the plaintiff must lay a foundation for his action in a special demand. 1 Saunders, 32 n. 6 Comyn's Digest, Tit. Plead., c. 69, 73, pp. 84 & 85. 5 Term Rep.,, 409. Buller's N. P., 151. 1 Chitty's Plead., 362-3. Lowes on Assumpsit, pages 232, 236, 288, 241.

In the case of Bemers vs. Howard's Ex'rs, Taylor's Rep., 149, (1 Iredell's Dig., 146,) it is said, "on a promise to deliver goods, a demand before action is indispensably necessary." 5 Hill, 37.

Also p. 143 to same point. Story on Bailment, p. 82, sec. 107. We cite also—24 Wendell. 203. 6 B. & C., 464.

The plaintiff must have a right to the immediate possession of the thing detained—if returnable on demand, he has no such right until demand refused. Archbold N. P., 287, 290, 292, 295. 2 Tucker's Commen., p. 81. 2 Mumford's Rep., 122. 2 Stephens N. P., p. 1313. 2 Selwyn's N. P., 543.

The 3d and 4th instructions have been already presented in argument.

On the 5th we recur to evidence of sole possession of Moseley in the record, the inventories and appraisement, and the bill of complaint of Moseley.

A full right of action was in Moseley alone, (1 Williams on Ex'rs 653, note c. and authorities,) and we insist he cannot defeat any defence by joining co-plaintiffs in this suit.

See this attempted in 5th instruction of judge, and his refusal to grant all those instructions looking to Moseley's sole action.

VI, VII, and VIII require no further illustration.

Under the 9th instruction arises a view of the case we think perfectly fatal to recovery of plaintiffs.

236 Was there not a valid sale of the negroes made by William D. Moseley, administrator de bonis non?. He had full power over the estate. 1 Monroe, 96. Ram. on Assets, 608, N. E., and authorities, 4 D. & E., 632. 2 Vesey, 267. 1 Atkyn's, 463. 2 Bingham, 177. 1 Will. on Ex'rs, (670, N. E.) 1 Lomax on Ex'rs 344. 1 McCord's Rep. 492. 1 Wendell's Rep., 583.

Only exception is where there is collusion between the purchaser, or mortgagee, and the personal representative.

2 Williams on Ex'rs 672, (N. E.) co-executors regarded as one person. 2 Williams Executors, 683, (N. E.)

Antiquated distinction between administrators and executors in respect of their full authority, done away. 1 Wendell's Rep., 583.

The 11th and 12th instructions present same points of view with that last considered.

The 10th would seem a self evident proposition, yet the very converse has been assumed by the court below.

The 14th instruction was properly applicable, and ought to have been given. Had it alone been given, plaintiffs never could, as they never ought, to have recovered.

Archer, for Appellee:

The introduction of the record, containing the order of dismissal of Mrs. Manly as administratrix, was pertinent to the issues, because it contained evidence to show that the judgment subsequent to the revocation was void, and that the sale was consequently also void.

The mortgages executed by Parkhill to the Union Bank, when he became a stockholder, to secure his subscription, were also properly received in evidence, as they embraced the slaves in question, and were of record in Leon. So long as these mortgages were outstanding, the property was not subject to sale under execution at law.

The bill praying an injunction on behalf of Moseley and his securities, was properly received in explanation of Moseley's conduct at the sale. It showed that he had exhausted his remedies before the Superior Court, before the supposed acquiescence was given—and that he did not, except as a necessity, yield his claims to the property.

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

The 1st and 2d instructions given by the court were correct, as 237 upon the facts exhibited by the record the judgment and execution were void, and as a consequence no title passed to the purchaser. Griffith vs. Fraser. 3 Pet. Cond. S. C. Rep. 1.

The other instructions mostly depend upon the doctrine of estoppel in pais. The rule governing estoppels of this character, as given by Lord Denman, and adopted by our Supreme Court, in Cotten vs. Williams, 1 Fla. Rep., 54, is this:—"Where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the later a different state of things as existing at the same time." The following requisites, therefore, are necessary to constitute an estoppel of this character: 1. The subject-matter of the belief induced must be a state of things—facts, and not opinions.—Polk's lessee vs. Robertson, 1 Tenn., 463. Craig vs. Baker, Hardin Rep. 281.

2. The party to be estopped must not only cause the other to believe in a state of facts, but he must wilfully do it. That is to say, he himself must not be deceived—there must be imposition.—Moore vs. Hitchcock, 4 Wend., 292. Ibid., 480. 5 Pick., 452. 2 Conn., 467. 10 Alab., 278, citing 2 Baily, 581.

3. The party claiming the estoppel must have acted upon the statements of the other party, and altered his position. He must not be informed of the facts from any source—he must have been deceived, and must have acted upon the deception differently from the action he would have taken had he not been deceived.

4. The party to be estopped must be seeking to establish a different state of facts as existing at the same time. That is to say he must be seeking to contradict himself as to facts, which the law will not permit him to do. He must be seeking to recover upon his own falsity.

It requires a combination of all these requisites to make up an estoppel of this kind—and if the facts of this case show a failure of either, the appellees are not estopped. A reference to the facts without any comment on them, will be sufficient to convince us that not one of these requisites can exist in this case.

The instructions given by the court, when tested by these principles, will be found scarcely to give the appellees the full benefit of the doctrine of estoppel, as applicable to the facts of this case.

As to the first and 2d instructions refused, there was a wrongful 238 and tortuous taking of these slaves by the officer—and where this is the case no previous demand is necessary to maintain detinue.

As to the 3d and 4th instructions refused, the court did not err, if we are correct in the position that the judgment is void, by reason of being rendered after the dismissal of Mrs. Manly, and while her successors in office represented the intestate. See Griffith vs. Fraser, above cited. Taylor vs. Savage, 17 Peters, 224. 1 Fla. Rep., 130.

The execution commanded the officer to make the sum recovered of the goods and chattels, &c., of S. Parkhill in the hands of the original administratrix. This writ was executed by a levy on the goods, &c., of S. Parkhill in the hands of the administrators de bonis non. If this can be legally done, as a consequence the securities of the last administrators would be liable to the devastavits of the first—this "never could be right." 2 Call, 41, 56.

Brockenbrough, for same:

As to sales under void judgment and execution, see case cited by Mr. Hagner. Armstrong vs. Jackson, 1 Blackford, 211.

A judgment must be produced. Den vs. Wright, et al., 1 Peters C. C., 67. Campbell et al., vs. Browne and wife, 6 Howard (Miss.) 112. Ventris et al. vs. Smith, 10 Peters, 173-4-5-6.

Bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, acquire no title where the party selling has no right to sell. And this may be either by revocation of letters, or non-compliance with statute.

No one but executor or administrator can sell. Hence if he who is not executor or administrator sells, it is non-compliance with statute. So revocation is in fact a non-compliance with statute. See Thomp. Dig., 202, sec. 2, as to sales, &c. Denning vs. Corwin, 11 Wend. 652. Hollingsworth vs. Barbour, et al., 4 Peters, 470.

Record must shew jurisdiction of the party by notice or publication, where publication is lawful. Also 3 J. J. Marshal, 105. 1 Florida, 127.

But here the execution was invalid on its face. Woodcock vs. Bennett, 1 Cowen, 739.

The levy was bad because it did not follow the execution. Moseley's appointment and inventories shewed the property not in hands of Manly and wife as administrators.

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

Bad because levied upon property mortgaged, and mortgages recorded. Bad because the property is mortgaged, and mortgages are a security for ultimate payment of Terriotrial bonds. Bad because the property by the charter, is to remain in possession of mortgagor until forfeiture, and the charter is notice. It is a public act.

As to the question of estoppel in pais, Lord Denman's Rule, 6 A & E., 475, in Pickard vs. Sears, adopted by this court in Cotten vs. Williams, 1 Florida, 54, is in these words: "The rule of law is clear, that, where one, by his words or conduct, wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter, a different state of things existing at the same time."

In Gregg vs. Wells, 10 Adolph. & Ellis, 90, [37 Eng. C. Law,] Lord Denman says that rule may be laid down more broadly, thus: "A party who negligently or culpably stands by and allows another to contract on the faith and understanding of a fact which he can contradict, cannot afterwards dispute that fact in the action against the person whom he has himself assisted in deceiving. The defence here is in substance collusion between Denham and the plaintiff."

1st. In examining this rule the first question is this, can 'one' estop a whole 'party' by his words or conduct in which they do not participate—can one estop several?

2d. Can a man, acting in his own right, estop himself acting in another right, or vice versa, must not both acts or pieces of conduct be in the same right or capacity.

3d. If he can estop several—and if by his individual acts he can estop himself in auter droit. Still can he by himself estop by his individual contract, the acts of himself and others in auter droit.

Fraud, imposition, deception, are the ground works of all estoppels in pais.

If one man can estop several, a fraud may be worked by the doctrine upon innocent parties for the benefit of a stranger or purchaser, a volunteer, which would be wholly inadmissible; caveat emptor should apply. The fraud is more palpable, and the law aginst the stranger more palpable when he knows there are several in interest, and only sets up the words or conduct of one.

Fraud is the essence of estoppel in pais, and where it would work fraud it is never permitted. 2 Smith's Leading Cases, Am. ed., 467.

To make the admission of one, even receivable against several there must be not a mere community of interest, but a joint interest. 1 Greenleaf Ev., 209, sec. 176, and cases cited. And the first case cited, shows executor's interest to be a community and not joint. For admission (says he) of one executor cannot be received to take a case out of the statute of limitations aginst his co-executor, citing Tullock vs Dunn, R. & M., 416, and Hammon vs. Huntley, 4 Cowen, 495, in which case an acknowledgment in writing by 2 of 3 executors was held inadmissible, because it might involve the other in a devastavit.

So the admission of receipt of money by one trustee will not bind the rest. Davies vs. Ridge and others, 3 Espinassee, 101-2. Lord Eldon puts it on the ground that they are trustees and says if individually liable, they would be bound.

So in Doe vs. Brown, 4 Cowen, 492. The admission of one tenant in common in the same suit, is not admissible aginst his co-tenants and co-plaintiffs. The court says: "But it would seem an unjust rule which would suffer one tenant in common, to admit away the rights of others. As far as I have been able to discover an admission by a party to the record is evidence aginst him who makes it, and where there are partners aginst them also, but not against others who happen to be joined as parties to the suit. The cases which speak of the admission as proper evidence, will be found to have reference to a sole plaintiff or defendant." Such an admission was not held in that case ground enough to admit, "secondary evidence of contents of a will."

2. As to parties acting in auter droit; the very examples cited under first head to show that one cannot estop several, are still stronger to show that he cannot do so in auter droit. The case in Espinasse of co-trustees is put on that sole ground. And in the executors case in R. and M., and Hammon vs. Huntley in Cowen, it is put on the ground of their being executors, and that one might force others to be guilty of a devastavit—that is, might be made by the rule, to be guilty of fraud on the others. But see further, 1 Greenleaf, 211 and 179. "Admission of a guardian or executor or administrator before completely clothed with the trust, or of a porchien amy, before commencement of suit, cannot be received either against ward or infant in the one case, or against himself as the representative of heirs, devisees and creditors on the other, though it may bind the person himself, when he is afterwards a party suo jure in another action." Why? Clearly because the administration cannot be qua executor, &c. Cannot be in auter droit—and so if made as an individual after investiture with those powers, it could not bind him, and a fortiori not bind others in auter droit, for the same reason, and ubi eadem ratio est ibi idem lex. See also 4 Perry and Davidson Rep. 1 to 9, Fox vs. Waters. Admissions by one co-executor not made qua executor not binding on his co-executor. 2. Executors interests not joint. 3. Opinion of admission of a matter of law as the legal effect of a deed, could not bind a co-executor even in a case where it might in a matter of assets. (In our case it was supposed judgment instead of a deed.)

3. If I have sustained either of the two first propositions in the negative, then a negative must follow upon this. But having established both—that one cannot estop several, unless their interest is entirely joint (as partners) and that one acting in his own right cannot estop himself in auter droit (especially against one knowing the capacities in which he acts.) it follows a fortiori that one acting individually cannot estop several in auter droit. If anybody was deceived, it was by him as an individual, for which he must have an action for deceit if he can show fraud and damages sustained by it.

A party acting bona fide may bind estates, &c. But can an executor impress his fraud upon the property of the estate? He may bind himself by fraudulent representations, but can he thereby create a devastavit and affect his sureties, his co-executors, the widow, distributees and creditors? His sureties cannot be affected by his mis-pleading though matter of record. Thomp. Dig. 211, S., 4 and S. 5. He is charged as of his own estate, with a devastavit, if he cannot prove that he has duly administered according to law, if assets have come to his hands.

And see Thomp. Dig. 358, S. 6. When a sale is made of lands or slaves by execution, a deed or bill of sale shall be made, and if more money is made than the exception demands, it shall be paid to the defendant without delay.

The defendants in exception not being the administrators in this case, the property would be given away.

Supose that Mosely had designed and perpetrated a fraud on Ponder, that fraud would be his own act. He cannot commit fraud qua administrator. He cannot give opinions on titles qua administrator. His powers are only to administer according to law. These do not extend to letting property go to purchase at a void sale, on a judgment vs. nobody, by giving an opinion that the title was good, or "that there would, he thought, be no difficulty." The most rational supposition is that he was himself deceived, as well he might be, by the perseverance of the court—the zeal of the Marshal—the energy of the executioners—the eminent authority and positiveness of all counsel except his own, and the greedy avidity of purchasers —and the universal opinion of the crowd, (as Ponder testifies.)

If I have laid down the law correctly—parties could not be deceived, because they were bound to know that law, and they had no right to act upon any such declarations. They would be estopped by the law from saying they acted upon such declarations, for they would be bound to know that they could have no effect. Coles, &c., Executors, vs. Bank of England, 37 Eng. C. L., 134. An executor who had committed forgery not estopped by that, but by gross negligence of testator. And in Davis vs. Bank of England, misprison of Felony in concealing forgery by which his own stock was sold, did not estop him from recovering the stock. 9 Eng. C. L., 452. See 1 Stra., 20.

But to return to Lord Denman's rules, the 2d question under them. "By his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief." Or in Gregg vs. Wells. "Who negligently or culpably stands by and allows another to contract on the faith and understanding of a fact which he can contradict."

The gist of this is plaintly, deceit, fraud. It must be wilfully or negligently or culpably, and it must be in a fact, and the party must not act on his own independent knowledge. He must be induced to believe the fact. He must not believe it before or be induced by others to believe it. It must be a case where his contradiction of the fact, would at once induce the party not to act.

A promise, an agreement, a covenant, (though that might in some cases to avoid circuity estop the party by deed,) will not estop the party in pais.

1. The party must believe the fact and act upon it; upon this ground rests: The Pres. Con. of Salem vs. Will., 9 Wend., 148.

The party must act on the belief, Wallace vs. Truesdale, 6 Pick., 457. A party averred property to be that of a 3d person, to prevent a sale, but the sale went on. He was not estopped from suing for it. Welland Canal Co. vs. Hathaway, 8 Wendall, 486.

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

243 2. When the party stating the fact is himself mistaken, then there is no fraud—the "wilful"—"culpable" and "negligent" are wanting, he is not estopped. Thus in Nichols vs. Arnold, 8 Pick., 174, a party was not estopped by declaring he was not a creditor of an insolvent firm, and declining to become a party to their deed of assignment under the supposition that a sale made to them in his behalf by auctioneers had been guaranteed when in fact it had not. On the same ground that the parties have participated in a common mistake. A party was not estopped from claiming from his co-surety his half of money recovered from the principal, though he had testified as a witness in behalf of his co-surety vs. the principal, and thus enabled him to recover the whole debt as his own. Doolittle vs. Dwight and another, Administrators. 2 Metcalf, 556.

3. It must be the enunciation of fact and not of opinion of law. Thus in Kimberly vs. Ely, 6 Pick., 451. Even accepting a dividend under a void insolvent law of Mass. did not preclude the party from recovering all the remainder of his debt in New York, though the insolvent law purported to give absolute discharge.—See opinion of Lord Denman himself in Fox vs. Waters, 4 Perry, 2 Davidson, 7, cited.

Polk's lessee, vs. Robertson, 1 Term. 463. So opinion as to the legal effect of a contract (here it is a judgment.) Bost. Hat Man. Co. vs. Massenger, 2 Pick., 223. "But the testimony was immaterial; since the confession of a party as to the legal effect of his contract cannot bind him, it surely ought not to bind others, who may be joined with him."

So Craig vs. Baker, Harden's Reps., 281-3-4-9. A party was consulted as to a title, and pronounced it "as good as any on the north side of Licking," yet was not estopped from setting up his own which was better, after the party consulting him had bought under that opinion.

So admission under a mis-apprehension of his legal rights do not estop. More vs. Hitchock, 4 Wendell, 292, 293.

The party must contract on the faith and understanding of the fact,—he must be induced to act on that belief. Ponder does not pretend to this. He does not say it, when he might have said it, and it was his interest to say so, if true. He does not say he acted on Moseley's advice or in consequence of his declarations. But says "it was supposed that the judgment was legal and had a right to sell the property."

244 The general opinion was that all difficulty about the property had been done away.

It is clear from this and the bill of sale he took, whose title he thought he was buying (Camps) not Moseley's nor Mrs. Manly's.—There was no question of fact, it was all of law, whose title was the best, or in his own words had the judgment a right to sell the property? Moseley's opinion could not affect the question, and it seems did not affect the conduct of the party. Unless that could be clearly shown, as Ponder might have done by his own testimony, it would be most absurd to say a party should be estopped by conduct or words which had no effect. The burden of proof is on Ponder to show that it affected him. Admissions have no effect unless they would produce some injury to the other party if permitted to be denied. See cases cited, 11 Hill & Cowen, notes, and Philips, 210. Estoppel of receipter is limited by this test of injury. It does not extend without the period or beyond the limits in which it would do injury to refuse the estoppel. Thus after delivery, receipter is not estopped, Johnson vs. Church, 12 Pick., 307. So it does not extend beyond the extent of the injury which might be effected by withholding it.—Thus though he cannot set up properly in himself to defeat the receipt, he can do it in mitigation of damages, because by delivery he would have a right to bring trespass. Burley vs. Hamilton, 15 Pick., 42.

5. It is not necessary to give a party notice or information of that of which he is already advised. Woodcock vs. Bennet, 1 Cowen, 734.

"Process bad on its face," does not always mean that the irregularity appears in the writ—it may exist in a fact aliunde, as the party being dead, or "tested out of term." 1 Cowen, 739.

A party who purchases under a void judgment, knowing it to be such, is not a bona fide purchaser in the legal sense, and he need have no notice. Jackson vs. Caldwell, 1 Cowen, 644. Woodcock vs. Bennet, 1 Cowen, 734. Wood vs. Calvin, 2 Hill, 567-8.

"The general rule is, that a purchaser, under a power, buys at his peril, and, however innocent, cannot acquire a title without showing a valid subsisting power."

"Lawrence was not a bona fide purchaser. He had full notice that the judgment had been paid, and the debtor was not in fault in omitting to tell him, what he very well knew already."

"Knowledge that another party had a claim, is enough to put the party on enquiry." He might have learned all about it by ordi- 24
nary diligence. 1 Coven, 642, Jackson vs. Caldwell. That interference at a sale does not amount to a consent to it. See Hearn vs. Rogers, 9 Barn. & Cres., 577. 17 C. Law, 452. Willoughby vs. Backhouse, 9 Com. Law, 821. 8 B. & C., 821. 9 Eng. C. L., 252.

Lord Coke also lays down certain "rules to make the reader more capable of the learning of estoppels." 3 Thomas' Coke, 467.

1st. Every estoppel ought to be reciprocal, that is to bind both parties.

If Moseley and Manly and wife, administrators de bonis non, were sued by Ponder in that capacity, for a debt vs. Parkhill's estate would he be estopped by this loose talk from saying he did not buy of the administrators de bonis non, but of Camp, and showing his bill of sale? See Welland Canal Com. vs. Hathaway, 8 Wend., 486.

A party dealing with a foreign Corporation by its name, is not estopped from denying its existence, and requiring strict proof and the best proof, because there is no reciprocity in such an estoppel.

2d. Every estoppel, because it concludeth a party to allege the truth, must be certain to every intent, and not to be taken by argument or interference.

Apply this test, there is no certainty. It is all argument, and only interference. And what is to be inferred? Even that is doubtful. It may be that Moseley thought Camp's title good, or that he would not sue. It is difficult to find what is to be inferred. There is no allegation.

Thirdly. Every estoppel ought to be a precise affirmation of that which maketh the estoppel, and not be spoken impersonally, as if it be said, 'ut dicitur, quia, etc., impersonalitas non concludit, nec legat; impersonalitas dicitur, quia sine, persona.' Here the words are, "There would be no difficulty. He thought there would be no difficulty." Entirely impersonal, sine persona. It binds nobody—there is no affirmation.

Sixthly. 'Estoppel aginst estoppel doth put the matter at large.' Ponder having taken Camp's title, paid him the money—taken slaves from him, and taken his title, as by law directed, in valid executions, is estopped from claiming the title of administrator de bonis non. If Moseley's loose conduct could estop him and Manly, how much more should these grave acts estop Ponder? 2 Murphy 6, Cross vs. Terlington. 2 Camp., 441, Holmes vs. Lipscombe.

Ellenborough was about to non suit a surgeon, who sued for fees 24 because he had been called "Doctor," and signed prescriptions "M. D.," because a physician cannot sue for fees in England; but when he found defendant had paid £3 13*s.* 6*d.* into court, he thought that remitted the objection, and admited his right to sue as surgeon.

Eightly. Where the verity is apparent in the same record, there the adverse party shall not be estopped to take advantage of the truth; for he cannot be estopped to allege the truth, when the truth appearth of record.

Thompson, for Appellant:

We contend—

I. That the judgment of the Union Bank of Florida against Martha Ann Manly and Hiram Manly, administrators of S. Parkhill, deceased, and through which the plaintiff in error claims title, was not void, but erroneous merely.

It must be admitted that the late Superior Court of the District of Middle Florida had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit, which was brought to recover a sum of money due on a single bill made and executed by the said Parkhill in his life time. See Act of Congress of May 15, 1826, Sec. 1. Thompson's Digest. 597—Appendix.

The power to hear and determine a cause is jurisdiction: it is coram judice, whenever a cause is presented which brings this power into action. If the plaintiff states such a case, that, on a demurrer, the court would render judgment in his favor, it is an undoubted case of jurisdiction. United States vs. Arredondo, 6 Peter's Rep., 709.

Tested by this rule, it cannot be doubted, that of the subject-matter of the suit, the Superior Court rightfully entertained jurisdiction.

But it is contended that every court must have jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, and that, without notice, actual or constructive, one can no more be deprived of his property than he can of life, limb, or liberty; and that the Superior Court had no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, and, therefore, could acquire none over the subject-matter of the suit.

We admit that a judgment is inoperative and null, as against the

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

247 person who has not had notice, either actual or constructive; but we shall contend and maintain that the defendants had notice of the institution of the suit, and submitted their persons to the jurisdiction of the court.

The suit in the Superior Court was instituted by summons ad respondendum, which was duly served, and the defendants apepared.

The order of pleading which the law has prescribed and settled, and which the defendant is to pursue, is laid down, as follows:

1st. To the jurisdiction of the court.
2d. To the disability of the person.
1st. Of the plaintiff.
2d. Of the defendant.
3d. To the Court or Declaration.
4th. To the writ.
1st. To the form of the writ.
1st. Matter apparent on the face of it.
2d. Matter dehors.
2d. To the action of the writ.
5th. To the action itself is bar thereof.

This, it is said, is the natural order of pleading, because each subsequent plea admits that there is no foundation for the former, and precludes the defendant from afterwards aviling himself of the matter, as when the defendant pleads to the person of the plaintiff, he admits the jurisdiction of the court—for it would be nugatory to plead that defence in a court which has no jurisdiction; and when the defendant pleads to the count, he admits that the plaintiff is able to sue him, and the defendant to be sued; and when the defendant pleads to the form of the writ, he admits the form of the court; and after a plea in bar to the action, the defendant cannot plead in abatement, unless for new matter arising after the commencement of the suit. 1 Chitty's Pleading, 474.

The want of jurisdiction did not appear on the face of the procedings, nor was any pleaded; but the defendants, after general imparlance, pleaded in bar of the action two pleas, viz: non est factum and plene administravit, on which issue was joined. Wherefore, we say it was not a void judgment. See Thompson vs. Tolmie, 2 Peter's Rep., 163.

All the cases cited by the defendants in error of void judgments, for want of jurisdiction of the person, are of the following character.

248 I. Where there has been no service of process, or any constructive notice upon the person sought to be charged by such judgment —as in Campbell et al. vs. Brown, 6 Howard Miss. Rep., 111—which was a case where the defendants had never been summoned, either actually or constructively.

Denning vs. Corwin, 11 Wend. R., 651—a partition suit, in which there was no service of process, personally or by publication.

Hollingsworth vs. Barbour, 4 Peters R., 472, was a proceeding against "unknown heirs," and an attempt to give notive by publication—the court decided the record was no evidence that any such heirs existed, and the decree and deed made in pursuance of it could not avail to pass any title, without evidence that there were some heirs.

3. J. J. Marshal, 105—no service of process, nor any evidence of publication, in a chancery suit; or

2. Where courts of a special and limited jurisdiction have exceeded their powers in assuming control over persons not subject to their jurisdiction.

As in Smith & Shaw, 12 Johnson's R., 257—the case of a court martial assuming jurisdiction over one not in the military service of the United States, held to be a nulity.

Thurston vs. Martin, 5 Mason R., 498—where the assessors taxed one without their territorial jurisdiction, held to be an excess of jurisdiction and trespass maintainable against the collector, who imprisoned the plaintiff.

Perkin vs. Proctor, 2 Wilson R., 382—where commissioners of bankruptcy assumed jurisdiction over one who was not a trader.

Griffith vs. Frazier, 3 Peter's Cond. S. C. Rep., 1—where a Court of Ordinary in South Carolina assumed jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, because of the absence of the executor who had proved the will—which was held to be a void grant.

There is, we believe and contend, no room for doubt, but that the Superior Court of the Middle District of Florida had jurisdiction, as well of the persons of the defendants, as of the subject-matter of the suit, or action, at the time of the institution of the suit, and the filing he pleas in bar, &c. &c.

Now, when was the jurisdiction ousted; or, rather, can a court which has rightfully and properly obtained jurisdiction of a suit, both of the person and subject-mater be ousted by any matter, supervenient? Can a mater of jurisdiction be pleaded as having occurred "since the comencement of the suit," or "since the last continuance?" 248 It must be answered in the negative.

However, no mater of jurisdiction was pleaded, "puis darrein continuance;" but it is urged that the fact of the revocation of the letter of administration of Mrs. Manly, set up in the plea puis darrein, showed that she was civiliter mortua.

Mrs. Manly and her husband, however, still appear in Court by attorney, pleading the fact of revocation in bar of the action—the plaintiff continued prosecuting—both parties were fairly before the Court, and the question was upon the effect, or conclusions of law, upon the matter pleaded. The Court decided the question:—this Court has declared erroneously, and the error has been corrected by the reversal of the judgment.

No usurpation of power, no unwarrantable assumption of jurisdiction, appears in the proceedings of the Superior Court.

In Elliot vs. Pierson the Supreme Court decides, that "when a Court has jurisdiction, it has a right to decide every question that arises in the cause; and whether the decision be correct or not, its judgment until reversed is regarded as binding in every other court." 1 Peter's Rep., 340.

But it is said Mrs. Manly was civiliter mortua, by the revocation of the grant of administration, and the judgment afterwards was a nullity. No greater effect can be given by the law to a civil death than to a natural death; and a judgment against a dead man is not void, but erroneous. Viner's Abridgement, Tit. Judgment, G. a.

And so, if after the commencement of a suit, a party plaintiff or defendant dies, before verdict or interlocutory judgment, it is an error of fact, which is corrected in the same court by a writ of error, coram nobis. 2 Tidd's Practice, 1136.

But it is clear, from an examination of the case of the Union Bank and Parkhill's administrators, 1 Florida Rep., 110, et seq.; that the judgment of the Superior Court was reversed for errors of law in the record, and was not declared to be a void judgment.

I may here invite the attention of the court to the case of Voorhees vs. Bank U. States, in which the Supreme Court of the United States go very far to support a judgment founded on constructive notice of the suit. 10 Peters, 471, 472.

And to the case of Ranahan vs. O'Neal, in which the Court of Appeals of Maryland fully sustain the position of the previous case cited. 6 Gill & Johns., 298.

Fraud, too, which strikes at the root of every contract and agree- 250
ment does not affect judgments. Ch. J. Marshal, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in Sims & Wise vs. Slocum, said, 'the judgments of a Court of competent jurisdiction, although obtained by fraud, have never been considered as absolutely void, and therefore all acts performed under them are valid so far as respects third persons.' 'All the legal cosnequences which follow a judgment are, with respect to third persons, precisely the same in one obtained by fraud as if it had been obtained fairly.' 3 Cranch Rep., 300.

Courts will not declare a judgment void, unless there is a total want of jurisdiction. The policy of the law requires that some sanctity should be given to judicial proceedings—some protection afforded to those who purchase at sales by judicial process, and some definite rules established by which property thus acquired may become transmissible with security to the possessors. 10 Peters, 473. 8 Missouri Rep., 257. 6 Gill & Johns. Rep., 298.

II. It is also argued by the counsel for the defendants in error, that the execution issued on the judgment is also void because it is irregular on its face.

The matter of irregularity, it is argued, need not be stated in the writ to make it irregular on its face, as if, according to the practice in England and in New York, where the execution is required to be tested of some day in term, if it be tested out of term it is irregular on its face; so if it issue against one who is dead, it is irregular on its face, although the death of the defendant be not stated in it, and cited. Woodcock vs. Bennet, 1 Cowen Rep., 734-739.

On examination of the facts of this case, it will be found that it was a case of a judgment against two persons; one died—a year and a day elapsed after judgment before execution was sued out. It was then sued out without scire facias. The writ was held not void but voidable—it issued correctly against both defendants to correspond with the judgment, but could be levied only on the goods and chattels of the survivor: it was good against the survivor till set aside on his application.

At p. 738, there is a dictum of the court that an execution against one who is dead is void, because the dead cannot appear in court to move to set it aside for the irregularity: but the learned judge here referred to the case where the defendant was ipso facto dead, not to the case of a legal or constructive death. In the case at bar, the counsel for the defendants in error do not contend for 251 any other than a constructive death, and the reason does not apply; the parties being alive could have appeared and moved to quash or set aside the execution, as effectually as they subsequently appeared in this court to prosecute their writ of error to reverse the judgment.

The case of the administrators of Parkhill and the Union Bank, in 1 Florida Rep., 110, et seq., was also referred to in connection with this point, but I do not understand this court in that judgment to go farther than to decide that the judgment should be reversed for error. If, however, the counsel for defendants in error be correct in their position that Manly and wife were siviliter mortui, as administrators, from the time of the revocation of the letters of administration, and had "no day in court," how could this court recognize them as plaintiffs in error in their suit in error here for the reversal of the judgment of the Supreme Court.

III. Having shewn that the judgment of the Superior Court in favor of the Union Bank of Florida against Parkhill's administrators was not void, though erroneous; then we contend that the other judgments and executions under which, as well as that of the Union Bank, the sale was made are not void; the execution having been isued on the same day, and on judgments rendered at the same term of the court, and on the same pleadings as the case of the Union Bank. See Record p. 19. These judgments are now irreversible from limitation of time. See the case of Voorhees vs. Bank United States, 10 Peters, 473, et seq.

IV. Again, it is urged by defendant in error, there is an irregularity in the levy of the writ of execution: the judgment is against Manly and wife as administrators—not administrators de bonis non. The command of the writ is to levy on the goods, &c., of S. Parkhill, in the hands of Manly and wife, administrators, and the Marshal has levied on the goods, &c., of S. Parkhill in the hands of Manly and wife, administrators de bonis non, and this is a patent irregularity.

We answer to this, that they represented the same right, they were the same persons claiming and having the same rights by another title. If one is sued as executor when he is administrator. and does not plead in abatement, he cannot set it up in bar of the plaintiff's action, because it is the same right and but by another name.—Granwell vs. Sibley, 2 Levintz, 190. Harding vs. Salkin, Comberbach, 220. Same case, Skinner, 365. Powers vs. Cook, 1 Lord Raymond, 63-4.

252 So if judgment is rendered against one as administrator who is executor with another, and a second suit is brought against both in their character as exectuors, the former judgment against one of them as administrator may be pleaded in bar of the second suit, because there was a true debt due, and a recovery had upon the right of the debt. Parker vs. Amys, et al., 1 Levintz, 261.

The judgment being against a proper person by the wrong name does not vitiate it—the law looks to the right, and it is the same.—Therefore, a judgment and execution against A executor of B, when he is administrator of B, may be levied on the goods, &c., of B in the hands of A, administrator, to be administered, and thus it is shewn there is no irregularity, patent or otherwise.

The case of Griffith vs. Frazier, 3 Peters Cond. S. C. Rep., 1, was cited by the defendants' counsel to support their position: but it will be seen, on examination, to be wholly inapplicable. That was a case where an executor had proved the will of his testator, and had obtained letters testamentary thereon in the proper jurisdiction in South Carolina, having removed from the State, the Ordinary afterwards granted administration durantee absentia to another. A scire facias on a judgment recovered against the testator in his life time was sued out against the administrator durante absentia, and execution obtained, levied on the lands of the testator, and a sale thereunder. It was held by the Supreme Court that letters durante obsentia could not legally issue after probate and grant of letters testamentary, and that therefore the administrator was not the representative of the deceased, but that another person was the representative who was the executor.

In the case at bar, the persons are the same who hold the right of represenation; they are called by the wrong title, but there is no question of their identity.

V. But the counsel for defendants in error assert there is another iregularity. The judgment and execution was against the goods, &c., of S. Parkhill, in the hands of Manly and wife, administrators, &c., and it was levied of the goods, &c., in the hands of Manly and wife and Mosely, administrators.

If an action at law be brought aginst one of two or more executors or administrators, unless the non-joinder of the others be pleaded in abatement, the plaintiff will be entitled to his judgment against the one sued for debt, and if he proves assets in the hands of the defendant and his co-executors or co-administrators, he will be entitled to his judgment that the debt be levied and made of those assets.— 2

This cannot be denied.

This, then, is a sufficient answer to this alleged patent irregularity. The law will not give a plaintiff a judgment which cannot be enforced.

Again, if suit be brought against several co-executors or co-administrators, and upon the isue of plene administravit, assets be found in the hands of one only, the plaintiff can take judgment only against him whom he proves to have assets; if then, it would be irregular to levy on those assets in the hands of another of the executors, or in the joint possession of two or more it would always be in the power of several co-executors or administrators to defeat the action of judgment creditors by shifting the assets from one to another, as the circumstances of their case might require.

The slaves so levied on by the Marshal were in possesson of Manly and wife as well as Moseley, and were of the goods of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, the debtor of the plaintiff. This possession is asserted in the declaration filed in the present suit by the defendants in error, and cannot be avoided or denied.

I have thus, I think, met and answered satisfactorily all the positions of the counsel for the defendants in error, so fas as the validity of the judgments and subsequent proceedings thereon are concerned, singly and in the order presented and urged upon the court; if I am not mistaken in the conclusion I have arrived at, that not one alone is tenable, it certainly follows that they derive no additional force taken together.

If, then, the judgments of the Superior Court were erroneous, and not void, and the execution, the process prescribed by law, it follows that the authorities referred to by my colleague, Mr. Hagner, that the judgment and execution are good and valid until reversed, and that all proceedings had thereon are good—that is, the officer is protected in executing the writ, and the purchaser is protected in the possession and enjoyment of the property acquired at the sale under said process. Upon reversal of an erroneous judgment, which has been executed, the defendant is entitled to restitution of the money only.

Question of Estoppel.—I come now to this question, in which we say, that even if we are mistaken in our view of the validity of our title under the judgments and executions, yet these parties are estopped by their acts, declarations and conduct from setting up a title adversary to us.

For a full view of the law upon this point, I need only refer to the 25 very able argument of my colleague, Mr. Hagner, a brief of which is in the possession of the court. With this general reference to the authorities it will be sufficient for me here to asert, that from the decision of Lord Denman in Pickard vs. Sears, 33 Eng. Com. Law R. 115, 117, of the same Judge, in Gregg vs. Wells, in 37 Eng. Com. Law R., 54, and the Supreme Court of New York in Dezell vs. Odell, 3 Hill's Rep., 217, as well as the other authorities, it seems clear that the law of estoppel in pais may be laid down thus:

1. Words or conduct causing another to believe the existence of a certain state of things.
2. In which the person speaking or acting did so wilfully, culpably or negligently.
3. By which such other person may be induced to act so as to change his own previous position.

Under the first head, let us refer to the evidence in the record to ascertain what were the words, and what the conduct of Moseley in reference to the subpect matter of dispute.

1. He sent a slave to Ponder to tell him to purchase her assigning his own inability as a reason for not making the purchase himself.
2. At the sale he encouraged Ponder to buy, saying there would be no difficulty about the property, thus giving confirmation as to the verity of general impressions, and removing all trace of doubt in relation thereto.
3. His active participation in the sale by the Marshal, arranging the slaves into lots and parcels—insisting on the division of families in order to secure a better price, recomending the slaves and speaking of their good qualities.
4. Encouraging others to bid; and,
5. Offering the highest evidence of the sincerity of his acts and declarations, and his belief therein, by bidding for himself and his friend and counsel, W. H. Brockenbrough, Esq.

These are among the most prominent of his acts and conduct, and who is there who can say that these acts and declarations, &c., did not induce the belief in all who saw and heard, that, by the sale, a full, complete, and valid title would pass, free from all objection on the part of Moseley? Could any one suppose that Moseley did not believe in such a state of things?—and was it possible for a person there attending and purchasing to believe, or even to think that from Moseley he must expect a harrassing and vexatious litigation, for the very property which he (Moseley) was urging them to buy? Clearly not. Moseley, therefore, did, by his acts and conduct, induce a "belief of the existence of a certain state of things," which the law of "good words" will now interfere and estop him to deny.

Under the second head, we ask, was not this conduct wilful, culpable or negligent, for either is sufficient? To answer this, it is sufficient to look at the testimony, and see if he did not then know as much in relation to the property as he did afterwards, and now.

Can it be pretended he did not then know that he was one of the administrators de bonis non of S. Parkhill—that the property was taken from the possession of Mr. Manly and wife and himself, by the Marshal, on an execution in favor of the Union Bank of Florida, against Mr. and Mrs. Manly, as administrators of said estate, as well as other executions, in favor of other plaintiff?—and did he not know the proceeds of the sale would be applied to the satisfaction of the executions? Did he not know the state of pleadings under which said judgments were obtained? What does he now allege?—that the judgment execution, levy and sale, are void, and no right or title passed thereby to the purchaser. Are his acts, conduct, or declaration at the sale, consistent with the claims now set up?

Knowing all the facts and circumstances, and his present claims of right and title, he was bound to declare them to those strangers whom he saw about to purchase. Silence under such a state of things would be inexcusable—a multo fortiori—the active participation in the sale, and his encouragement to the persons present to bid for and purchase the property. His encouragement of, and advice to Ponder, to purchase, was personal and direct—and can it be said his acts, &c., were not wilful and culpable?

Lastly. Can it be denied that Ponder's position is changed?—has he not parted with his money?

Is it possible to asert, upon the evidence in this record, that Ponder parted with his money on any other ground than for the purchase of property, to which his title would be good? We say, without the fear of contradication, that if the title be bought proves defective, he looses his money, the consideration paid for it—has no claim for indemnity upon the officer, none upon the plaintiff in execution 256 —he is utterly remediless, unless he is protected in the possession and enjoyment of the property.

Here, then, is a concurrence of every circumstance necessary to constitute an estoppel. The court will not go beyond the record to ascertain what were the moving causes of Ponder's action, when sufficient reasons appear in the proofs. It is said Ponder came to the sale with his own opinion as to the existing state of things.—No evidence of it. Ponder states there was a general opinion, but he does not say he participated in it. He does not seem to have acted on it, or the opinion of counsel; but he asks Moseley for information, and he confirms the general opinion, and advises him to purchase. There seems to have been a doubt upon Ponder's mind—a doubt sufficient to put him on inquiry, and he applies to Moseley, as a representative of Parkhill's estate, as one in authority, and likely to know what was the truth; and it is evident, from Ponder's action, that Moseley's declaration and advice influenced him, and it is from Moseley now that he finds his title assailed. The conduct of Ponder was that of a careful and cautious man, anxious to avoid litigation. Moseley advised the purchase—did all the acts specified in the evidence; and Manly was present during the whole period of the sale, and by his silence, tacitly acquiesced in all that his co-administrator said and did.

On the part, however, of the defendants in error it is alleged that the purchasers should not only have given Moseley and Manly notice that they purchased on the faith of their acts and declarations, but should have demanded their guaranty and bill of sale.

With due reference to my learned brethren, it is clear that to maintain such a principle is to deny, in toto, the doctrine of estoppels in pais; for if Moseley and Manly had given their bill of sale, then they would be estopped by deed, which is another kind of estoppel.

They contend that the two titles which are set up are inconsistent, to wit: 1. Camp's bill of sale; and 2, the estoppel of plaintiffs.

Now this argument would apply to every conceivable case, and would forever prevent the application of an estoppel in pais. If I buy a slave from B, and A who is the real owner, stands by, hears the bargain, sees the consummation, and says nothing, is it not true that I buy B's title, and get A's by his silence? And when I rely on A's title, do I repudiate that which I have from B?

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

Lord Denman, in the case of Pickard vs. Sears, before cited, says 257 that in such a case the real owner may "part with his interest in the property by verbal gift or sale, without any of those formalities that throw obstacles in the way of legal evidence."

Again, it is urged that to constitute an estoppel it must not only appear that the party sought to be estopped made the admission, but the other party acted on it alone.

If this is true, would not the party engaged in a treaty for the purchase from A when B is present, and assures the purchaser of A's title, in every case afford evidence against himself, that he acted upon the faith that he was buying A's title and not B's from the fact that he took A's title, and did not ask for B's? If the quo animo of the purchaser was the thing to determine when a party shall be estopped by his admission; and to be thus tested, then there could be no such thing as an estoppel, because the circumstances would always be against the purchaser, that he relied on the title from whom he purchases:—if he did not, it might be asked why not abandon the treaty with that man, and buy the other's title.

The true question therefore is: Did the party make an admission or statement of the existing state of things upon which the other party might have acted—and it is not submitted to the jury to weigh possibilities as to whether he did act on that admission, or whether he relied wholly on the title of the vendor—or whether he would have completed the purchase without the admission?

It is also urged that to constitute the estoppel, the party sought to be charged by it must not be himself deceived, but must know his own rights.

To support this, Moore & Hitchock, 4 Wendell, 292, is cited, but on examination it will be found that the case cited presented not one of the features of an estoppel; it was a question whether a party could explain an ordinary admission made in an attempt to settle and adjust a controversy. It was made after the transaction had occurred—no action was had or could have been had on it prejudicial to the other party, whose position was not in fact altered. But the case of Coles vs. The Bank of England, in 37 Eng. Com. Law Rep., 134, is one where the party estopped the plaintiff's testatrix, was herself deceived, most grossly deceived, yet the plea was not recognized as sufficient.

So, also, in Hamer, et al., vs. Johnson, et al., 1 Smedes & Marshal Ch. Rep., 563, the party was estopped by his admission that the 258 notes in that case were good, valid and binding notes—the court holding he was bound to make them so; and the plea which he set up that he was himself deceived, was not allowed to have any force. See also 1 Story's Equity, 202-3.

It is also argued that loose expressions will not amount to any estoppel, and the following cases are cited: Jordan vs. Antrey, 10 Ala. Rep., 278. Tuffs & Hays, 5 N. Hamp., 452. Jackson vs. Anderson, 5 Wend., 480.

While we freely admit that loose and general expressions not made to the party, and not calculated to induce him to believe in a state of things, so as to produce a change of his previous position, will not amount to an estoppel, yet we contend such is not the case at bar. The authorities cited shew that loose and general expressions upon which the party could not have acted do not amount to estoppels, and are not applicable.

It is also urged by the counsel for the defendant in error that one of several cannot estop those interested with him, unless there is a joint interest; that a community of interest is sufficient—and cities Greenleaf on Ev., 209-211.

We admit the position but deny its application here;—if these parties were tenants in common, then the act of one would not bind the others, because they hold by unity of possession, not of property; but co-executors and co-administrators have a joint interest, and the act of one in selling or disposing of the estate in their hands, &c., is the act of all—the property passes, for they have a joint and entire interest. See this subject fully discussed in 1 Williams on Executors, p. 591, of the Phil. edition of 1832. Bacon's Abr. tit. Executors, (D) 1.

It is said that the admission of one co-executor will not take a case out of the statute of limitatons; this is not stated broad enough—the admission of all cannot have that effect. Thomp. vs. Peter, 12 Wheaton Rep., 565.

The true doctrine is that one of several co-executors or administrators or trustees cannot by his admission charge the others personally as for a devastavit: and it is this which is intended, when it is said one trustee, executor, &c., cannot bind his colleagues. See Nation vs. Tozer, 1 Crompton, Meson & R., 172.

The case of Fox vs. Walter, cited from 4 Perry and D. 9, has no application, for it is manifest from the evidence that Moseley did act 259 qua administrator: he was not, in the eloquent description of the learned counsel, a discredited representative, impotent to act. His suggestions and directions as to the sale of the property so as to produce the most money were implicitly obeyed, even against the dictates of feeling and common humanity in the separation of families. This shows that he assumed to act as one having a deep interest: no stranger would have so acted, or been permitted to make requisitions upon the officer so repugnant to feeling, they were yielded to, no doubt, because they were supposed to be prompted by a stern sense of duty.

In Cross vs. Terlington, 2 Murphy Rep., 8, one was held bound as administrator by his acts before his appointment.

Another objection is urged against the estoppel, because it is said Moseley as administrator had not power to dispose of the estate of his intestate by any other means than a public sale, nor could he sell the slave till all the other estate was disposed of, and only to pay debts; and cited Thompson's Digest, 202.

The answer to this is, that the statute is directory merely—it points out how the executor, &c., may perform his duty—it contains no negative words—it does not declare the sale made otherwise to be null and void. It does not conflict with the common law, as to the power of executors or administrators, but points out his duty.—If he departs from the instructions given, his acts are not invalid; but if injury results, he is liable as for a devastavit.

The case of Ventris vs. Smith, in 10 Peters, R., 173, cited by the counsel for defendants in error, was decided on the local law of Alabama, which differs from our statute, and from the common law.—In Alabama, the slaves may not be sold without an order of court—the statute is negative and peremptory, and if not followed, no title passes.

The excuse set up for Moseley, that he yielded to superior force alone, is not sustained by the record—he did not speak or act like one coerced into measures. It is said he had exhausted all his lawful remedies, and nothing was left him but to oppose by force of arms, which he would not attempt.

An error—his legal remedy was not exhausted, if it is true that he was a stranger to the proceedings, he could have interposed his claim under the statute, by tendering his affidavit and bond. The injunction applied for may have been refused on the ground that if he had any remedy, it was complete at law upon his own showing.

260 The only point remaining to be disposed of is, that the property in question has been mortgaged by the intestate Samuel Parkhill in his life time, and, therefore, was not liable to seizure and sale, under an execution at law.

It will be seen from the record that the slaves were mortgaged to the Union Bank, the plaintiffs in one of the executions under which they were sold, to secure the subscriptions of Samuel Parkhill to the capital stock of said Bank; and that the obligation on which the judgment and execution of the Bank was for a loan made under the 29th section of the charter of the Bank, on a pledge of the stock.

The Court of Appeals of the Florida Territory decided in the case of Kissam et al., vs. Chapman et al., that the Band had a lien on the property mortgaged for the loan, on the pledge of stock, under the 29th section of the charter, as well as for the subscriptions to the capital by the stockholder, which gives the right to the Bank to pursue the property for this very debt.

Whether the Bank does or does not perform its duty to the Territory, in the application of the funds to the extinguishment of the Territorial bonds, is not for these parties to inquire. If the Bank does not faithfully perform its trust, it is for the Territory, or the holder of the Territorial bonds, to complain. The Bank, as mortgagee, is the legal owner; and these parties—that is, the representatives of Parkhill's estate—cannot deny the right or title of a purchaser of property, under an execution in which they are defendants.

If the Bank has taken its own property, or the property of a third party, a stranger, to pay a debt of their intestate, it does not lie on the mouths of these mortgagors to complain of it.

LANCASTER, J., delivered the following opinion:

This case comes before this court by appeal from Leon Circuit Court. It is an action of detinue brought by the administrators de bonis non on the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, to recover from the defendant, William G. Ponder, certain negro slaves alleged to belong to the plaintiffs as such administrators, and to be detained by the defendant, Ponder. The declaration contains two counts. The first declares upon a delivery of the slaves to the defendants by the plaintiffs, to be re-delivered to them, when he, the defendant, should be thereto requested. The second count declares, upon a 261 casual loss of the slaves by the plainitffs, and that said slaves afterwards came to the possession of the defendant, Ponder, by finding; and that he, well knowing the said slaves to be the property of the plaintiffs as administrators, &c., aforesaid, although often requested so to do, hath not delivered them to said plaintiffs, as administrators, &c., as aforesaid, and still detains the same.

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

To this declaration, the defendant pleaded—1st. Non detinet. 2d. That said slaves sued for, or any of them, were not the property of the plaintiffs, as in their declaration alleged. 3d. That the plaintiffs were not lawfully possessed of the negro slaves mentioned in the second count in their declaration. Upon all of which pleas, issues were joined. Upon the trial of this cause, the plaintiffs among other things offered in evidence the revocation of letters of administration to Martha Ann Manly, late Martha Ann Parkhill, on the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased; to the introduction whereof the defendant by his counsel objected—which objection was overruled by the court, the testimony admitted, and thereupon the defendant by his counsel excepted. The plaintiffs also offered in evidence sundry mortgages executed by Samuel Parkhill in his life time to the Union Bank of Florida, (nine in number,) to secure his shares of stock in said bank, with a view of proving that the slaves in suit were embraced in said mortgage, &c., &c. To the introduction of which evidence the defendant by his counsel objected, but the court overruled the objection, and allowed the testimony to be given in evidence before the jury—to which ruling the defendant by his counsel excepted; also, a bill in Chancery of W. D. Moseley, one of the plaintiffs in this suit, praying an injunction, &c., to restrain the sale of the negroes belonging to the estate of S. Parkhill, deceased—which injunction was denied by the Judge of the Superior Court, to whom it was presented to be allowed. To the admission of which in evidence the defendant by his counsel objected, but the court overruled the objection, and allowed said bill to be read in evidence to the jury—to which decision of the court, the defendant by his counsel excepted. The proof on both sides having been given in evidence, and the cause fully argued by counsel on behalf of each of the parties, the court gave to the jury eight several instructions. And the counsel for defendant moved the court to give sundry instructions, numbered from one to fourteen, inclusive—all of which were refused by the court to be 26 given, but instead of the tenth instruction asked by the defendant, gave an additional instruction—all of which said instructions given or refused by the court are specifically set forth in the record. To all which said several rulings, decisions, and judgments of the court, on the trial of this cause, and to the instructions given and the instructions refused to be given to the jury, the defendant excepted, and prayed his exceptions might be signed, sealed, and enrolled and made part of the record of this case, which was done.

The plaintiffs proved that their intestate, S. Parkhill, deceased, died seized and possessed of the slaves for which this suit was brought, which continued to be the property of his estate, up to the time of the seizure by the Marshal of the Middle District of Florida, of which mention will be hereafter made. It further appeared in evidence, introduced by the plaintiffs, that, on the 20th of March, 1845, the said Marshal levied on the slaves in this suit depending, as well as other slaves belonging to the estate of S. Parkhill, deceased, by virtue of an execution, or writ of fieri facias, issued from the Clerk's Office of the Leon Superior Court, wherein the Union Bank of Florida was plaintiff, and Martha Ann Manly, late Parkhill, and Hiram Manly, in right of his wife said Martha Ann, administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, were defendants; which said execution was issued by virtue of a judgment rendered in the Superior Court for Leon county aforesaid, wherein the said Union Bank of Florida was plaintiff, and the administrators were defendants, and which judgment was in favor of the plaintiff. It further appeared, that by virtue of said levy by the Marshal under the execution aforesaid, and after having duly advertised the same, the said Marshal, on the first Monday in May, 1845, proceeded to sell the said slaves in this suit depending at public sale, to the highest bidder for ready money—at which said sale the said defendant, William G. Ponder, became the highest bidder, and bought and paid for the said negroes. Upon which title, supported by an alleged estoppel in paris, the defendant placed his defence.

The plaintiffs contend that the aforesaid judgment of the Superior Court, rendered in favor of the Union Bank of Florida aginst the said Martha Ann Manly late Parkhill, and Hiram Manly in right of his wife said Martha Ann, administrator of Samuel Parkhill deceased, as well also as the execution of writ of fieri facias issued thereon, and upon which execution or writ of fieri facias, the levy and sale of the negroes was had, which said negroes are the subjects of con-

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

263 troversy in this suit, were and are null and void. And further that there are or were no acts or things done by the said plaintiffs which can or ought to amount to an estoppel in pais, so as to conclude them from having and maintaining this suit.

Upon these positions of the parties, the first instruction given by the court, is in the following words, to wit:

1. The judgment and execution under which the slaves were sold are wholly void, and gave no authority, and no right of the property passed by the sale.

This instruction was excepted to by the defendant and it now devolves on this court to decide upon its propriety.

Whether a judgment be absolutely or wholly void depends upon the jurisdiction of the court in which it is rendered; this again is divided into jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit, and of the person of the defendant.

The suit in which the judgment referred to was obtained, was instituted in the Supreme Court of the Middle District of the Territory of Florida, held in and for the county of Leon in said Territory, upon a bond executed by Samuel Parkhill in his life time, to or in favor of the Union Bank of Florida. The Superior Court was organized and jurisdiction conferred upon it by virtue of saundry acts of Congress. The act approved May 15, 1826 entitled "An Act to amend the several acts for the establishment of Terriorial Government in Florida," contains in the first section thereof the following provisions: "That the Superior Courts of the Territory of Florida within their respective districts shall have and exercise original jurisdiction in all civil cases in law or in equity, whether arsing under the laws of the said Territory, or otherwise, where the sum in controversy shall amount to one hundred dollars, and shall have original and exclusive cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, including all seizures under laws of impost, navigation, or trade of the United States, whether such seizures be made on land or water, and all suits for penalties or for feiture incurred under the laws of the United States, and original but not exclusive jurisdiction of all suits in which the United States shall be a party, whatever may be the amount in controversy in such causes and suits, and shall have and exercise appellate jurisdiction in all civil causes originating in the inferior courts of said Territory, whatever may be the amount in controversy; and shall have and exercise original and exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes 264 and offences committed against the laws of said Territory, where the punishment shall be death; and original and appellate jurisdiction of all other crimes and offences committed against the laws of the said Territory; and original and exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes and offences which shall be cognizable under the authority of the United States, committed within the respective districts of the said Superior Courts, or upon the high seas."

The second section of the same act gave power to the Superior Courts in term, and the judges thereof in vacation, to issue writs of habeas corpus, of error, of certiorari, of mandamus, of prohibiton, of scire facias, and of quo warranto, according to the principals and rules of law. See Thompson's Dig., 597.

It may, perhaps, be safely assumed, that no court in the United States, or in any State in the Union, either now or in time past, is or was invested by law with a more general original jurisdiction than was by the act of Congress in the sections before recited and referred to, given to that court. It was emphatically a court of general jurisdiction, and by the first clause of the first section recited above, had jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit between the Union Bank of Florida and the administrators of Samuel Parkhill, deceased.

But to perfect the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction, it is necessary to have jurisdiction of the person of the defendant in the action. That is to say, he must have actual or constructive notice of the institution of the suit by which an opportunity is or may be afforded him of making defence, if he should desire so to do. In the case of the Union Bank of Florida against Parkhill's administrators, the suit was commenced by summons ad respondendum, against said administrators, the mode directed by the laws of Florida for instituting suits in the Courts of the Territory. See Duval's Compilation, p. 90, Sec. 4. The process was regularly returned by the Marshal duly executed, and the defendants, the said administrators of the said Samuel Parkhill, deceased, apepared in court, and pleaded to the action, the pleas of non est factum and plene administravit. These pleas were pleas in bar. It is laid down in Bacon's Abridgement. Title Pleas and Pleading, letter (A.) "that the order of pleading is 1. To the jurisdiction of the court. 2. To the person of the plaintiff, and next of the defndant. 3. To the count or declaration. 4. To the writ. 5. To the action of the writ. 6. To the action itself in bar thereof." The author then adds "this has 265 been settled as the most natural order of pleading, because by this order each subsequent plea admits the former; as where the defendant pleads to the person of the plaintiff he admits the jurisdiction of the court, for it would be nugatory to plead anything in that court that has no jurisdiction in the case." When therefore he pleads in bar of the action he admits the action of the writ—the writ—the count—the parties—and the jurisdiction of the court.—The pleas in that action were pleas in bar of the action, and therefore according to the order of pleading before mentioned (which order is substantially recognized by all the legal writers who have treated on the subject of pleading at common law) all the antecedent steps were admitted by the defendants to have been lgally or aptly taken. But the defendants having appeared in court and pleaded to the action thereby admitted legal notice of the institution of the suit as well also as the jurisdiction of the court, not only of the parties to the action, but also of the subject matter of the suit. On the two pleas in bar before mentioned issues were joined by the plaintiff. At that time the jurisdiction of the court in that cause, not only existed in contemplation of law, but by the steps taken, had acquired a practical application of the parties to the action. Subsequently the defendants pleaded puris darrien continuance, a revocation of their letters of administration on the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, to which plea the plaintiff demurred. Demurrer was sustained. Defendants then amended their plea puis darrien continuance, the plaintiff filed a replication. The defendants rejoined, and plaintiff demurred, which demurrer was sustained and judgment as aforesaid given for the plaintiff. Upon which judgment execution as aforesaid issued, went into the hands of the Marshal, was levied and negroes sold in the manner herein before stated. After the sale a writ of error was sued out, by the defendants against the plaintiff returnable to the Supreme Court of the State of Florida, upon the hearing whereof it was decided by the said court that "errors were well assigned" and "the judgment was reversed." See Parkhill's Administrators vs. Union Bank of Florida. 1 Flo. R., 110 to 133.

The defendant in this case (the appellant in this Court,) claims title to the negroes in controversy, under and by virtue of a purchase made by him at a public sale of the Marshal of the Middle District of Florida, who levied, advertised regularly, and so sold, under and by virtue of an execution issued from the Clerk's office 266 of the Superior Court in and for Leon County, upon a judgment rendered by said Superior Court, at a time when said judgment was unreversed and in full force. But which judgment was afterwards reversed by the Supreme Court of the State of Florida, not because the Superior Court had not jurisdiction in the case, both of the subject-matter and of the parties, but because of errors apparent in the proceedings in the court below. Many instances were cited in argument, which showed the courts had considered and declared judgments void for want of jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. As where the defendant had never been summoned actually or constructively. Campbell, et al., vs. Brown, 6 How. Miss. R., 111. No service of process personally or by publication. Denning vs. Corwin, 11 Wend. Rep., 651. An atempt at service by publication against "unknown heirs,"—not evidence of the existence of heirs, and decree and deed in pursuance thereof, could not pass title without such evidence. Hollingsworth vs. Barbour, 4 Peter's Rep., 472.

So also in cases where courts of special or limited jurisdiction, have exceeded their powers by atempting to assume where they have not jurisdiction over the person. Thus a Court Martial assumes jurisdiction where the party was not liable to Martial law, held void. Smith vs. Shaw, 12 John. R., 157.

In a case of assessment of taxes, if the person taxed or the subject-matter of taxation, be not within the authority of the officers who make the assessment, all subsequent proceedings by mere ministerial officers under a warrant to enforce the tax are deemed utterly void, the original assessment being coram non judice. Thurston vs. Martin, 5 Mason R., 501. See also cases there cited.

Upon a commission of bankruptcy sued out against a person not a trader, (a class of persons over whom, under certain circumstances commission may issue) it was held the commission of bankruptcy was void, the jurisdiction being confirmed to particular persons and cases. And the court said, "Where courts of justice assume a jurisdiction which they have not, an action of trespass lies against the officer who executes process, because the whole proceeding was coram non judice." 2 Wilson R., 384. An application was made for letters of administration during the absence of the executor who had duly proved the will of the testator, and qualified as executor thereto, which was granted by the Court of Ordinary in the State of South Carolina. This case going by writ of error to the Su-

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

267 preme Court of the U. S., the court say, (Chief Justice Marshal delivering the opinion) "In its very nature the appointment of an administrator, during the absence of an executor under no disability is essentially nothing more than the appointment of an agent for that executor. This the ordinary has no power to do. The executor alone can appoint his agents. If the ordinary had no jurisdiction in the case, then the grant of administration is void ab initio, and all the acts of the grantee are void." Griffith vs. Frazier, 3 Peter's Con. R. S. C., 11-12.

These cases and many others not deemed necessary to be referred to, shew that to authorize the assertion, that a judgment is void, it must have emanated from a court of limited jurisdiction, not acting within its legitimate prerogative, or in a court of general jurisdiction where the parties are not actually, or by legal construction before the court and subject to its jurisdiction.

The case referred to in the instructions under consideration was before a court of general jurisdiction. The parties were before the court. Pleas in bar o fthe action and*puis darrien continuance* were filed. Upon the whole case judgment was given by the court for the plaintiff which was subsequently reversed for error. Was this judgment void or voidable?

It is laid down in Elliot, et al., vs. Piersol, et al., 1 Peter's R., 340, and re-asserted in 2 Peters, 169, "when a court has jurisdiction, it has a right to decide every question which occurs in the cause, and whether this decision be correct or otherwise, its judgment until reversed is regarded as binding in every other court."

So in the case of Voorhees vs. the Bank of the United States, 10 Peter's 474-5, the court say: "the line which separates error in judgment from the usurpation of power, is very definite, and is precisely that which denotes the cases where a judgment or decree is reversable only by an Appellate Court or may be declared a nullity collaterally, when it is offered in evidence in an action concerning the matter adjudicated or purporting to have been so. In the one case it is a record importing absolute verity; in the other mere waste paper."

The foregoing authorities as well as many others not supposed necessary to be referred to, clearly show that judgments of courts of general or competent jurisdiction, are not considered under any circumstances as mere nullities, but as records importing absolute verity and of binding efficacy, until reversed by a competent appel-
268 late tribunal. They are voidable: not void. The Supreme Court of Florida decided in the case of Parkhill's Administrators vs. the Union Bank of Florida, the judgment of the court below was erroneous. It did not decide it was void.

While then the judgment of the Superior Court which has already been shown to have been a court of general and complete jurisdiction remained of record, and unreversed, importing per se absolute verity; and possessing by virtue of the authority of the court in which it was rendered, a binding efficacy, an execution issued thereon, and was placed in the hands of the proper officer of the court, who levied the same on the negroes in controversy in this suit, being the property of the estate of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, against whose representation that judgment was rendered and after having duly advertised the sale thereof proceded on the designated day to offer said negroes for sale at public outcry to the highest bidder. At which sale the defendant in this action below, Wm. G. Ponder, being the highest bidder became the purchaser and paid for and obtained the delivery to him of the said negroes. This then being a case of a purchase under an execution issued in conformity to the statute in such case provided, under a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, and when execution issued of binding efficacy, it is sufficient to give the purchaser a good title. Armstrong vs. Jackson, 1 Blackford, 210.

The judgment of the court, the execution and the bill of sale of the Marshal, were all in evidence in this case, and this was all the defendant was required to shew. Lessee of Cooper vs. Galbraith, 3 Wash. C. C. R., 550, and cases there cited. Also Simms and Wise vs. Slacum, 3 Cranch, 300. In which last issue C. J. Marshal says, "the judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction (although obtained by fraud) have never been considered as absolutely void, and therefore all acts performed under them are valid so far as respects third persons."

The plaintiff in this action in the court below proved that there were nine other executions issued from the same clerk's office on judgments rendered by the same Superior Court, at the same term, and on the same state of pleadings as in the case of the Union Bank of Florida against Manly and wife Administrators of S. Parkhill, in favor of other plaintiffs which judgments have never been appealed from, or in any wise reversed, and which are now irreversible because by limitation no appeal or writ of error can be now obtained,—and under which other executions a levy and sale of the 269 negroes in this controversy, were also had and made at the same time and place. In the case of Voorhees vs. the Bank of the United States, 10 Peter's R., 475, the court state the doctrine and say "there can be no middle character assigned to judicial proceedings, which are irreversible for error. Such is their effect between the parties to the suit, and such are the immunities which the law affords to a plaintiff who has obtained an erroneous judgment or execution. It would be a well merited reproach to our jurisprudence if an innocent purchaser no party to the suit, who had paid his money on the faith of an order of court, should not have the same protection under an erroneous proceeding as the party who derived the benefit accruing from it. A purchaser under judicial process, pays the plaintiff his demand on the property sold; to the extent of the purchase money he discharges the defendant from his abjudged obligation. Time has given an inviolable sanctity to every act of the court preceding the sale, which precludes the defendant from controverting the absolute right of the plaintiff to the full benefit of his judgment, and it shall not be permitted, that the purchaser shall be answerable for defects in the record, from the consequence of which the plaintiff is absolved. Such flagrant injustice is imputible neither to the common or statute law of the land. If a judgment is reversed for error, it is a settled principle of the common law coeval with its existence, that the defendant shall have restitution only of the money. The purchaser shall hold the property sold, and there are a few, if any states in the Union who have not consecrated this principle by statute."

It was urged in argument in this case, that the writs of execution were illegally levied. The judgments being against Manly and wife, administrators, and not against them and Moseley, administrators de bonis non of S. Parkhill, deceased.

The executions were commanded to be levied on the goods, &c., of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, in the hands of Manly and wife, administrators, &c. That the goods were the goods of S. Parkhill, deceased, and in their hands, is averred in both counts of the declaration: it is true they allege them to have been the goods, &c., of S. Parkhill, deceased, and to have been possessed by them together with William D. Moseley, the other plaintiff in this suit, as administrators de bonis non. Now the judgment was against them as administrators, and the execution went against them as such, to be 270 levied of the goods, &c., of their intestate, by reason of his indebtedness; the execution was levied on his property, and went to pay his debt, and pro tanto to relieve his legal representatives. If one is sued as executor, when he is administrator, it must be pleaded in abatement—he cannot set it up in bar, because it is the same right, and but by another name. Granwell vs. Sibley, 2 Lev., 190. Harding vs. Salkin, Comb., 220. Powers vs. Cook, 1 Lord Raymond, 634.

If debt is brought against two as executors, they plead judgment against one of them as administrator. This is good to bar, because there was a true debt due, and a recovery upon the right of the debt. Parker vs. Amys, 1 Lev., 261. So the administrators de bonis non in this case might plead a former recovery against some of them as administrators, and a payment by one as administrator would be good in bar to prevent a recovery against the whole as administrators de bonis non.

The court are aware there is a conflict of authorities on this point. In the recent case of Taylor and others vs. Savage, 1 How. S. C. R., 282, the court say, (Chief Justice Taney delivering the opinion,) "The decree in the Circuit Court is against George M. Savage, executor of the last will and testament of Samuel Savage, deceased. There was no other party respondent in the District Court, and the decree was passed against him in his representative character. Before the appeal was prayed on either side he had ceased to be the representative of the estate of Samuel Savage, and had no control over it, nor any right to interfere with it, by prosecuting or appearing to an appeal, or in any other manner. By his removal from the office of executor, he was as completely separated from the business of the estate as if he had been dead, and had no right to appeal in or be a party in this or any other court, to a suit which the law confided to the representative of the deceased. No further proceedings, therefore, could be had in the District Court until Benham, the administrator de bonis non, was made a party." It further appeared in this case by affidavit, that after appeal granted, and the record was made out and sent up, (for no notice was taken of it on the record,) execution had issued in favor of the appellant. The court say, "In this view of the subject, it follows that the execution issued on the decree was unauthorized and void, and no right of property will pass by a sale under it, if one should be made by the Marshal."

William G. Ponder, vs. W. D. Moseley and others, Administrators.

In the case of Jewitt vs. Jewitt, 5 Mass. R., 275, Chief Justice Parsons says, "that it is a good plea in bar against an administrator, that since the commencement of the action against him, he has been removed from office by the Judge of Probates." "If the matter of the plea be good, it shows that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendant, either on this or other writ. It is, therefore, properly pleadable in bar."

I have not been able to perceive the precise analogy of the last case cited to the present one, although by the revocation of letters of administration to Mrs. Manly and her husband on the estate of S. Parkhill deceased, if letters of administration de bonis non, on the estate of the decedent had been granted to any other person, the plea would be good in bar because no action could be maintained against them as administrators on that, or any other writ, yet when the same identical persons are appointed administrators de bonis non, to succeed themselves as administrators on the same identical estate, and on which the same plaintiff claims to have a cause of action, it seems to me that although the writ on which the suit was progressing might not be properly allowable, yet another writ might be given against the defendants on which suit could be maintained, to wit: a writ against Martha Ann Manly, late Parkhill, and Hiram Manly in right of his wife, and William D. Moseley, administrators de bonis non of Samuel Parkhill, deceased, the two former being the same identical persons, and not different, defending by representation the same identical estate. Whereas, if as administrators they pleaded a good plea in bar, when they came to be sued as administrators de bonis non, jointly with Moseley, for as much as the plaintiff's action would be barred as to them, it would be barred against the administrators de bonis non, because being joint, they are as one person in law for the purpose of representing the estate, and this would be, to make the revocation of letters of administration to Mrs. Manly and her husband, a good plea in bar to the plaintiff's action. I cannot think the plaintiff should lose his right of action, or his demand (if one be due him) for such a cause.

In the case of Taylor, et al., vs. Savage, Chief Justice Taney in delivering the determination of the Supreme Court announced the execution in that case void and very properly as a consequence said no right of property will pass by a sale under it. The recognized doctrine everywhere is, that a sale under a void execution will not pass property to the purchaser. The reason on which the Chief 272 Justice founded his determination is that in that case there was no defendant in court, the executor having ceased to be the representative of the estate of Samuel Savage, and administration having been committed to a different person. That the executor had no right to interfere with the estate by prosecuting, or appearing to an appeal, or in any other manner. If the administration de bonis non. had been committed to the same person the case would have been distinctly different, and the execution would not have been void, but at most voidable. In this case we have seen the defendants Manly and wife not only in court pleading after the revocation of their letters, and subsequent re-appointment to the same trust as administrators de bonis non, but they pray a writ of error—it is allowed them. They apepar in the Superior Court, are recognized as competent parties, maintained their writ of error, and the judgment below is reversed upon their motion.

They must therefore have been competent parties whom an execution might issue, upon a judgment unreversed and unappealed from, and which itself was not void but erroneous. The execution in this case was therefore only voidable, and under such an one a the case of Taylor, et al., vs. Savage. But in the case under conpurchaser acquires a right of property, and is distinguishable from sideration before the Supreme Court, the question of the character of the execution did not properly arise, no question was made by the record, or was necessary to the determination in the case. The character of the execution was not discussed, no authorities on the point were referred to by counsel, or the court; with very great respect for Chief Justice Taney, I incline to think his decision of that point may be regarded as rather an obiter dictum.

But the defendant in this case relies on an estoppel in pais, as also protecting him in the purchase of the negroes in controversy. I shall not stop to consider the doctrine, but content myself with a reference to the cases of Cotten vs. Williams, Flor. Rep., 54, and Camp vs. Parkhill's administrators, decided at this term, for the doctrines of estoppel in pais, which I need hardly add have the sanction of my approval.

I will look at the facts of this case. Before the day of sale, one of the slaves purchased by Ponder applied to Moseley, one of the plaintiff's to purchase her. He declined (because he said he was unable,) but recommended her to apply to Ponder who owned her husband. She went to Ponder accordingly, and thereafter he attended the sale; at the sale Moseley was present—advised Ponder to 273 purchase, and upon suggestion about title, said there would be no difficulty—said that he had hired the negro, and that she would suit Ponder. Moseley took an active part in separating and parceling the negroes so as to make them bring the best price. Mr. Archer, attorney for Mrs. Manly, forbade the sale, because he said the negroes were subject to her dower. Moseley expressed disapprobation; said the sale had better go on, that the negroes could not be sold at a better time. Said audibly to the crowd, bid up, bid up gentlemen, the property is not bringing half its price. The title will be good. And thereupon the property sold better. Moseley bid at the sale as high as $800 for one negro woman, and at least bid for two slaves at that sale.

Manly also was there and kept an account of the sales; asked William Bloxham, a witness, to bid against Col. Gamble, who was buying slaves for Meintzhagen without competition. Witness did so and caused the slaves bought by Gamble to bring at least $150C more than they would have done. During all this time we heai nothing of a void judgment—a void execution—or a bad title to property—or an improper levy on property. The only claim interposed is for Mrs. Manly's right of dower. The parties even seem to waive that, and a fortiori any other claim—and it is most certain, it is not now the pretext for this attempted recovery.

The administrators de bonis non were present assisting at and encouraging and aiding this sale. The property sold according to testimony at its fair value. Can now any reasonable person arrive at any other conclusion than that the condition of the purchaser or purchasers was or were changed by this conduct. Suppose these administrators by themselves or their attorney with their assent, had said: This property has been wrongly levied; it is the property of the administrators de bonis non of Parkhill deceased; it has been levied on as the property of the administrators whose letters have been revoked. The judgment is void. The execution is void. The whole mater is illegal, and purchasers will buy at their peril. Would the property under such circumstances have brought fair value. Would Ponder who is represented as a prudent, cautious man, have become a purchaser. Was not in fine, a belief induced by the conduct of these administrators which caused the purchaser Ponder to change his previous position. If so, (and so we think) then by the law of estoppel they are concluded from averring against Ponder a different state of things existing at the 274 same time.

The foregoing remarks and authorities referred to, rightly considered, we think, shew that the Superior Courts of the Territory of Florida, were courts of general jurisdiction. That the Superior Court of Leon county had and rightly took jurisdiction of the subject-matter in the case of the Union Bank of Florida vs. Parkhill's administrators. That the defendants in that action were legally summoned to answer to that suit, and appeared and pleaded pleas in bar. That that court having competent jurisdiction, both of the subject-matter, and the parties gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff.—That while that judgment was in full force, and when no appeal or writ of error had been sued out on it, an execution issued on said judgment (as well as on sundry other like judgments) from the Clerk's office of said Superior Court, pursuing the judgments on which they had been respectively issued, and acording to law—which executions were all placed in the hands of the Marshal who was the officer of said Superior Court. That by virtue of said execution the Marshal levied upon the negroes in controversy; and upon others being the property and effects of the estate of S. Parkhill, deceased, according to the very right of the case. That under and by virtue of those executions and levy, after having duly advertised, he sold at public outcry, to the highest bidder, the said slaves for ready money. That William G. Ponder, the (defendant below in this suit, and) appellant in this court, because the purchaser, paid for and took possession of the negroes now in controversy. That said judgments being judgments of a Court of Record of general and competent jurisdiction were not and could not be void; but valid, unless appealed from, or reversed for error, and therefore voidable only.

That a purchaser at a public sale, under and by virtue of an execution issued upon a voidable judgment, if sale be made before the judgment is reversed, acquires a good title. That nine of the judgments upon which executions issued are valid even if erroneous, the limitation of time for appeal or writ of error having expired. And that there was no iregularity in the levy material to the very right of the parties the true defendant being Samuel Parkhill in his life time and his representatives in right of his estate after his death, and the property levied on and sold, his property to pay his debts, and that the plaintiffs are estopped to deny his title.

275 The court will forbear to express their sense of the inconvenience which would result in society from the establishment of a rule, which would create uncertainty among buyers at Sheriff's sales under executions issued from the highest courts of record and original jurisdiction. It might perhaps be justly apprehended that such a rule would disarm the courts of the power to redress private wrongs or to enforce private rights.

We are therefore of opinion that the circuit court erred in the instructions under consideration. That the judgments and executions under which the slaves were sold were not void. That they gave a sufficient authority for the sale, and that the right of property in these slaves passed by the sale to the defendant or appellant, William G. Ponder.

The foregoing opinion being conclusive of this whole case, the court have not deemed it necessary to look further into the assignment of errors set down in the record.

Per Curiam.—The judgment of the court below is reversed and the clerk of this court will tax costs in favor of the appellant.

Hawkins, J., said, that he agreed to the conclusions, but not altogether to the reasoning of the court as expressed in the opinion of Judge Lancaster. He was in favor of a reversal exclusively on the ground that the plaintiffs in the court below were estopped by their words and conduct to deny the title of Ponder to the slaves in question.

276 Charles Le Baron and Walter T. Colquitt, Appellants, vs.

Thos. W. Fauntleroy, et al., Appellees.

A paper purporting to be the will of F. was admitted to probate by the County Court of Escambia, and L. appointed administrator with the will annexed. Under the provisions of the will, L. paid a legacy of $50,000 to the widow of testator. Afterwards the next of kin of F. applied by citation to the County Court for revocation the the probate of the will and the application was refused, but upon appeal from the judgment of the County Court, the Superior Court revoked the probate and set saide the will. Held, that the payment by L. of the legacy did not constitute a devastavit, but on the contrary was a duty enjoined by the obligation of his official oath, and that the next of kin could not recover the amount of the legacy against the administrator.

In such case where the widow and legatee afterwards married and died, her surviving husband is not liable to the next of kin for the amount of the legacy upon suit instituted after death, and simply upon the allegation that the administrator in paying the legacy committed a devastavit.

An appeal from a final decree opens for consideration all prior or interlocutory orders or decrees connected with the merits of the final decree.

This case comes up by Appeal from Decree rendered pro forma in Chancery in Escambia county, upon bill filed by heirs of George L. Fauntleroy against Charles LeBaron his administrator, and Walter T. Colquitt who intermarried with the widow of George L. Fauntleroy. The facts of the case and the pleadings appear in the following agreed state of facts and pleadings, and in the opinion of the court:—

The following facts are admitted and agreed upon in this cause:

1st. On the fifth day of November, 1839, George L. Fauntleroy died in Escambia county.

2d. On the 27th day of December, 1839, application was made to the Judge of the County Court of said county, for probate of a supposed will of the said George L. Fauntleroy, deceased, which application was rejected and refused by the court.

3d. On the 22d day of January, 1840, letters of administration were duly granted by said County Court to Charles LeBaron on the estate of said Fauntleroy.

4th. On the 7th day of April, 1840, application was again made by the widow of the said George L. Fauntleroy, deceased, to the 27
Judge of the County Court of Escambia county, for probate of the said supposed will, and the same was then duly admitted to probate as the will of the said George, on the testimony of George Willis and Judith Fauntleroy, now Caldwell, and there being no executor appointed or named in said supposed will, the same was ordered to be annexed to the letters of administration of the said Le Baron.—The said will was written and executed by the said George L. Fauntleroy about two weeks before his death, and in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Pensacola, 22d Oct., 1839.—In the name of God, amen. I, George L. Fauntleroy, of Pensacola, Florida, do hereby make this my true and only will.

"I give my wife fifty thousand dollars forever, to be paid in bonds, &c. I also give her the Piano, the sets of silver, and the dessert set of China.

"To my slaves Davy, James, Maria Ann, and the children of James and Maria Ann, I give their freedom forever, to be liberated at the expiration of six months from my decease. I give."

5th. On the 25th and 31st of May, 1840, said Le Baron as administration with the will annexed, assented to the foregoing legacy to the widow and paid over to her $50,000 in bonds and notes due the estate, and $302.78, this being the estimated value of the Piano, silver set and dessert of China, as directed in said supposed will.

6th. On the 15th day of October, 1840, the said Aphia having removed to the State of Georgia, intermarried with the defendant Walter T. Colquitt, and on the first day of December, 1840, the said Aphia died.

7th. On the sixth day of October, 1841, the parties complainants herein applied by citation to the County Court of Escambia county for revocation of the probate of the said supposed will of the said George L. Fauntleroy, and a judgment and sentence was pronounced by said court against the application. Whereupon the applicants appealed to the Superior Court of the said county, and the judgment and sentence of the County Court was reversed, and a judgment was rendered in said Superior Court revoking and setting aside said probate of said supposed will. Which judgment was afterwards affirmed by the Court of Appeals.

8th. Said Fauntleroy in his life time was guardian of one Ann Beatty, a minor, who had some slaves in Florida, and they were 2 hired out by the said George, he receiving the hire and keeping a regular account thereof. On the first of January, 1841, there was due to the said Ann Beatty, $4,341.07, as the balance of said hire, and the same was duly paid over by the said Le Baron to the Guardian of said Ann Beatty, appointed after the death of Fauntleroy.

9th. On the 19th day of August, 1840, said Le Baron, as administrator, purchased at Mobile a draft on New York, drawn by Hart, Anderson & Co., in favor of J. C. Jacobson or order, for $668.57; this sum being then due to said Jacobson, in Virginia, for the boarding and tuition of the said Ann Beatty—no guardian of the said Ann having been yet appointed since the death of the said George L. Fauntleroy. Said draft was duly forwarded to the said Jacobson and by him presented for payment, but the same was not accepted, and was protested. Suit was brought and judgment was obtained against the drawers without delay, and the execution was returned nulla bona. Suit was then brought by said Le Baron, as administrator against Ann Beatty and Thomas Heard, (with whom she had since intermarried,) in the Superior Court of Escambia county, to compel them to account to the estate for the amount of said protested draft; and at the June term of the Circuit Court for said county in 1846, the defendants having appeared and answered, the said Circuit Court decreed against the bill and ordered it to be dismissed.

10th. The entire amount of assets which have come to the hands of the said Le Baron, as administrator, (counting the $50,000 paid the widow as so much money, and regarding the amount due Ann Beatty as a part of the estate,) is 80,365.37. The amount paid out by him to widow and distributees, (including the amount of the protested draft of Hart, Anderson & Co.,) and for debts and expenses, is, $80,644.60, besides one thousand dollars paid R. C. Corbin.

11th. The following is a schedule of the persons entitled to claim under the will of the said George L. Fauntleroy, and of the payments made to them respectively by the administrators:

WALKER ANDERSON,
Solicitor for Complainants.
BENJ'N D. WRIGHT,
Solicitor for Defendants.

1. The bill states certain facts as a ground for relief, which are set forth in the agreement as to facts entered upon the record, and prays for relief.

2. Charles Le Baron, one of the defendants, demurs generally to the bill, and specially in that he is bound to settle his accounts, as administrator, in the County Court of Escambia.

3. Walter T. Colquitt, defendant, pleads, and for plea saith, that the will of Fauntleroy was duly admitted to probate, in which a legacy of $50,000, in bonds, &c., was bequeathed to Aphia Fauntleroy, widow. That, in pursuance of the will and probate, the administrator, Le Baron, delivered to the said Aphia the said sum of money in bonds and notes.

4. Charles Le Baron pleads, and for plea saith, what Colquitt said in his plea, adding, thinks at the time of his payment to the widow, the probate of the will was in full force and unrepealed.

5. Charles Le Baron answers, that he has filed a correct statement and account of the assets of the estate of Fauntleroy, together with an account of payments and distribution of the same, so far as administered, and an account of the assets yet unadministered.

6. Decree of the Superior Court.

And now at this day a decree was made by the court, and is in the following words and figues, to wit:

Fauntleroy and others,
vs.
Charles Le Baron, Administrator, W. T. Colquitt and Henry Ahrens. } In Chancery, Nov. T'm, 1843.

The exceptions taken to the report of the clerk, and Master in this case having been overruled, the cause was then submitted upon 280 bill, answer, plea, and demurrer. It appears that some time in the year 18—, George F. Fauntleroy departed this life, leaving a paper writing purporting to be his last will and testament, which was admitted to probate in the County of Escambia. The letters of administration, with the said "will" annexed, were granted to Charles Le Baron; that by said supposed last will and testament, fifty thousand dollars in good notes and bonds, &c., were bequeathed to Aphia Fauntleroy, widow of the said George F. Fauntleroy, dec'd; that by authority of said "letters testamentary," said Le Baron took possession of the estate of said Fauntleroy, and paid over to the said Aphia (widow) the said legacy; that said Aphia subsequently intermarried with the said W. T. Colquitt, and shortly thereafter died; that subsequent to said probate payment of the said legacy, and intermarriage of the said Aphia with the said Colquitt, proceedings were instituted to set aside and annul said probate, and resulted in a final decree, declaring the said paper writing not to be the last will and testament of the said George F. Fauntleroy.—It also appears that the legacy aforesaid was paid, before proceedings were instituted to set aside the will, and while the probate aforesaid was unrevoked, and before any notice had been given of an intention to revoke the same.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the plea filed in this cause by the said Colquitt be sustained, and the bill dismissed as to him; for should the legacy, thus paid to the said Aphia, before her intermarriage with him, be excessive of her distributive share as widow under the laws of Florida, then the right of the other "distributees" (if they had any) to sue for this excess should have been exercised before the death of the said Aphia—for by her death her coverture with him was dissolved, and he was no longer responsible for any liabilites existing against his said wife anterior to her marriage with him, and which might have been enforced jointly against them during the coverture. It is further declared to be the opinion of this court, that the said Le Baron did not commit a devastavit in paying over the said legacy to the said Aphia, before a revocation of the probate, or notice thereof, and before suit brought to invalidate and set aside the said will. It is further ordered that the demurrer filed in the case by the said Le Baron be overruled, and he is hereby ordered and decreed to distribute amongst the complainants, their respective proportions of the assets remaining in his hands after paying the aforesaid legacy, and deducting the costs, charges and commissions incurred, 281 in administering said estate. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that this suit be dismissed, so far as it seeks to make Henry Ahrens the security of said Le Baron on his administration bond, a party defendant, for in case of a default, or devastavit by said Le Baron, the remedy against said surety, would be in an action at law upon the administration bond.

DILLON JORDAN, Judge.

7. From this decree an appeal was taken by defendants, and the Court of Appeals decreed as follows:

George Fauntleroy and others, and } Appellants
Charles Le Baron, Walter T. Colquitt and Henry Ahrens. } Appellees and Defendants.

Upon an appeal to a decree of the Superior Court for the Western District for the county of Escambia.

This cause coming on to be heard on an appeal from the decree of the Superior Court of the Western District sitting as a Court of Chancery in and for Escambia county, and after hearing the arguments of Mr. Anderson and Mr. Brokenbrough, of counsel for complainants, no counsel appearing on behalf of defendants, and after inspection and examination of the record in said cause, and due deliberation being thereon had, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed, and this court by virtue of the power and authority in it vested, doth hereby order, adjudge and decree that the decision and decree of the said Superior Court of the Western District, made and entered in this cause, at the November term of said court, in the year 1843, be and the same is hereby in all things reversed, annulled and set aside, except as to so much of said decision or decree of November term 1843, as directs or decrees that the bill of complaint shall be dismised as to the said Henry Ahrens, and the said decree, so far as the same declares that the said Ahrens is not properly a party to this suit, and ought not to be included in the bill of complaint, is hereby affirmed. And it is hereby ordered and decreed that the said bill be dismissed as to the said Ahrens, without prejudice however to the future rights of the complainants. And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that so much of the previous or interlocutory decree in this cause, (made before the final decree of November, 1843, aforesaid,) by the said Superior Court as ajudged, ordered or decreed the complainants' bill of complaint to be dismissed as to the said Colquitt, and so much of said interlocutory 282 decree as orders and directs the said bill to be dismissed so far as it charges the said Le Baron with a devastavit be and the same is hereby reversed, annulled and set aside, and that the remainder of said interlocutory decree be affirmed. And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that this cause be remanded to the Superior Court of the Western District, with directions to that court to overrule the pleas and demurrers of the defendants, Colquitt and Le Baron, and to cause them to answer fully and distinctly the complainants bill, and to proceed in said cause according to law and equity, and as to right and justice may appertain. And it is further ordered and decreed that the said defendants, Le Baron and Colquitt, pay the costs of said appeal in this court to be taxed.

8. Walter T. Coquitt answers, setting forth facts already stated and also alleging that certain of the bonds and notes paid to Mrs. Fauntleroy by Le Baron had been lost to respondent, who had incurred certain expenses in endeavoring to collect them; the facts relating hereto will appear by affidavits, to be taken by agreement.

9. The amended answer of Charles Le Baron recites facts already upon the record, and repiles to his accounts, which are filed.

10. Decree of the Circuit Court:

Thomas Fauntleroy, et al., Complainant,
vs.
Charles Le Baron & W. T. Colquit. } In Chancery, Circuit Court, Western District, Escambia county.

This day came the complainants by their counsel, and the defendants by their counsel, and thereupon this cause was submitted for hearing upon bill, answer and exhibits, and the court having advised and considered the same and the decree of the Court of Appeals of the late Territory of Florida, doth order and decree as follows:

That defendants, Charles Le Baron and Walter T. Colquitt, are properly chargeable in account with complainants, as heirs and distributees of George L. Fauntleroy, deceased, with the bonds and securities in the proceedings mentioned and referred to at the value thereof, delivered by the said Le Baron under the pretended will of the said George L. Fauntleroy to said Walter T. Colquitt, in payment of a legacy to Aphia, wife of said Colquitt, and formerly widow of said Fauntleroy, mentioned in said pretended will.

That said defendants, Colquitt and Le Baron, in accounting for

Le Baron and Colquitt, Appellants, vs. Thos. W. Fauntleroy, et al., Appellees.

283 said securities or their value, and the interest thereon since the date of their respective receipts, are entitled to be credited with the interest in value of said Aphia as widow, and her representatives, in the estate of the said George L. Fauntleroy, that is to say, one half of the clear actual value of the personal estate, (except slaves,) of the said Fauntleroy, with the value of the use of one-half in value of the slaves after the death of the said George L. Fauntleroy up to the death of the said Aphia, and to the value of the use of one-third in value of the lands of said George L. Fauntleroy, deceased, during the same interval: the value of which said uses for life of said portions of the slaves and lands is to be estimated by taking one-half of hires and profits of the slaves, realized or secured during that period by the said Charles Le Baron as administrator, or said complainants; and one third of the issues and profits realized and secured from the land during the same period by said Le Baron, as administrator, or said complainants. Provided, that all payments, (exclusive of the delivery of said bonds and securities to said Colquitt under the said pretended will,) made to said Aphia or said Colquitt, on account of said claim for dower, be deducted as of the dates they may have been respectively made. And provided further, that in estimating the value of the estate of the said Fauntleroy, the estate of Ann Beatty, held by him as guardian of the said Ann Beatty, be not regarded as assets in the hands of the administrator, but that the same be deducted from the fund out of which dower is to be paid to the said Aphia and her representatives.

And it is further ordered and decreed, that it be referred to Owen M. Avery, one of the Masters of this court, to take account of and ascertain upon such proofs as shall be adduced by the parties, after notice to them or their counsel for that purpose, what amount of bonds and securities delivered as aforesaid, under said pretended will, to said Walter T. Colquitt, remains in specie in the hands of said Colquitt, and the value of the remainder which may have been collected or disposed of: and also what is the value of the dower of said Aphia in said estate, estimated upon the principles above laid down—and that the said Master make report to this court, with all convenient speed, upon the matter herein decreed and referred, with such other matter specially stated, as he may deem pertinent, or either of the parties may require to be stated.

GEORGE W. MACRAE,
Judge of South. Cir. Florida, presiding in West Circuit.

284 11. In obedience to the foregoing decree, the Master presented his report as follows:

And now at this day, to wit: on the 13th day of October, A. D. 1874, O. M. Avery, as Master in Chancery, and in pursuance of the above decree, filed his report herein, which is in the words and figures, to wit:

To the Hon. Thomas Baltzell, Judge and sitting in Chancery for the county of Escambia:

The undersigned to whom was referred by an order of this Honorable Court, to take account of and ascertain the amount and value of certain bonds and securities delivered by Charles Le Baron, administrator of George Fauntleroy, deceased, to Walter T. Colquitt, either remaining in the hands of said Colquitt or collected and disposed of by him; and also to ascertain the value of the dower of Aphia, the widow of said Fauntleroy, and since the wife of said Colquitt, estimated upon the principles set forth in a decree of this court at the fall term thereof held in 1846, and to make report thereon with such other matters as he may deem pertinent to the controversy before the court, respectfully reports:

That his first care has been to ascertain the clear value of the estate of the said George Fauntleroy, coming into the hands of the administrator, which is subject to the dower of said Aphia, late wife of the said Colquitt. 1st. The whole amount of the personal estate reduced to the possession of the administrator, as set forth in his account on file, is 80,285 37. From this amount the undersigned by the direction of the court deducts the amount of the estate of Ann Beatty; which having been found in the hands of the deceased as the guardian of the said Ann, was paid over to her by the administrator, to wit: $4,495. He also deducts as directed the amount received on the sale for the hire of negroes and for house rent. This amount according to the statement of the administrator is $3,276. He finds also amongst the assets reported as received a draft afterwards lost, amounting with charges to $752 13—which he deducts as forming no part of the estate realized. The expenses also of administration allowed by the Court of Probate, including the commissions of the administrator, are also deducted, amounting to $6,169 95. The aggregate of these several items is $14,693 08—which being deducted from the whole amount received by the administrator, to wit: $80,385 37, leaves as the fund subject to the dower of the widow $65,692 29. The half of this amount is $32,846 14—to which is to be added according to the terms of the 285 decree of this court, the value of the use of one-half of the slaves and one-third of the lands from the death of Geo. Fauntleroy to the death of his widow Aphia. The real estate appears to have rented at $50 per month, and the slaves to have hired at $22 50 a month.—So that the sum of $27 90 a month is to be added to the dower during the life-time of Aphia Fauntleroy, and she having survived her husband 13 months, the gross amount would be $362 70, making the whole dower $33,208 84.

The undersigned reports therefore that this amount, to wit: $33,208 84, was properly paid by the administrator to Aphia Fauntleroy on the 25th day of May, 1840. And it appearing that on that day, the sum of 50,302 78 was paid to Aphia Fauntleroy, it follows that the sum of $17,093 94 was over paid, and that the administrator and the said Walker T. Colquitt are responsible to the complainants for that sum, together with 8 per cent. interest on the same—which amounting on the 25th Oct., 1847, to $10,142 37, makes the whole amount $27,236 31.

2d. This amount of 27,236 31, due to the complainants, must be divided amongst them in unequal proportions, inasmuch as it appears from the account of the administrator that unequal payments have been made to them.

By a calculation which it is not necessary to spread at large upon this report, the undersigned finds that in order to equalize the shares of the respective claimants the aforesaid sum should be divided as follows, to-wit:

1. To B. C. Corbin, guardian, &c.,	$3,168 75
2. To G. L. Nicholson, husband, &c.,	4,168 75
3. To C. G. Curtis, guardian, &c.,	4,168 75
4. To J. P. Fauntleroy,	3,995 40
5. To Dr. Byrd, guardian, &c.,	6,668 75
6. To A. C. Caldwell, husband, &c.,	2,992 16
7. To G. Willis, guardian, &c.,	3,073 75
	$27,236 31

The undersigned further reports that no testimony has been presented to him as to any losses sustained by the said W. T. Colquitt, on the amount paid over to the widow of George Fauntleroy, except that it is alleged in the answer of said Colquitt, that the amount of loss was about $8000. He is informed by the respective Solicitors of the parties, that further testimony upon this point will be ta- 286 ken at some future period, and he will therefore only observe that according to the principles upon which this report is based, whatever loss sustained by said Colquitt, may by the court be adjudged to fall on the estate of the said Fauntleroy, should be deducted from amount with which he would otherwise be charged.

In conclusion, the undersigned reports, that a large amount of the estate, to wit: More than $14,000 is yet unadministered. The greater portion of this being represented as bad debts, and a part being in process of recovery by law, he submits to the court, that it be left to future adjustment, upon the same principles set forth in this report.

O. M. AVERY,
Master in Chancery.

12. Defendants file exceptions in the following words:

And now at this day, to wit: on the 14th day of October, A. D., 1847, came the defendants by their solicitor, and filed their exceptions to the Masters report, which are in the words and figures following, to wit:

Thomas Fauntleroy, and others, vs. Charles Le Baron and Walter T. Colquitt. } In Chancery.

Exceptions taken to the report of Owen M. Avery, Esq., Master in Chancery, made in pursuance of a decree in this cause, dated the 24th day of October, 1846.

1st exception. For that the said Master has in his report excluded the commissions and expenses of settling the estate of the said George L. Fauntleroy, deceased, from among the charges made by the administrator against the distributees, thereby making the same a charge upon the widow's dower; whereas the widow's dower should be estimated and set off without reference to such commissions and expenses, being in this case the entire half of the personal estate, the use for life of one-half of the slaves, and the use for life of one-third of the real estate.

2d exception. For that the said Master in his said report charged these defendants with interest from the 25th day of May, 1840, to the 25th day of October, 1847, on the amount by him declared to have been paid to the widow, over and above what she was entitled to as her dower, when so much interest can be legally or equitably charged.

287 Whereupon the said defendants except to the said Master's report, and appeal therefrom to the judgment of this honorable court.

BENJ. D. WRIGHT,
Solicitor for Defendants.

13. Final decree of the Circuit Court.

Fauntleroy and others, vs. Le Baron and Colquitt. } In Chancery.

This cause coming on to be heard upon the report of the Master, made in obedience to a decree of this court, and upon the exceptions thereto, and the counsel of complainants and respondents being heard, and it being agreed by the parties through their respective solicitors, that a decree pro forma shall be pronounced herein, without prejudice to the competency of the Judge by whom the decree is pronounced, to sit in the cause in the Supreme Court, in case there be an appeal: It is, therefore, in furtherance of said agreement, considered by the court, that the said Le Baron committed a devastavit in paying over to the said Aphia more than she was entitled to as dower in the estate of her deceased husband; and it is therefore ordered and decreed that the exceptions to the said report be overruled, and that the defendants pay to the said complainant, R. C. Corbin, as guardian of his infant children, the sum of $2,-168 75; to the complainant, G. L. Nicholson, the sum of $4,-168 75; to the complainant, G. P. Curtis, as guardian of his infant children, 4,168 75; to the complainant, Thomas L. Fauntleroy, the sum of $3,995 40; to the complainant, Dr. ——— Byrd, as guardian of the infant children of Lawson Fauntleroy, the sum of $6,668 75; to the complainant, Robert C. Caldwell, in right of his wife, Judith Fauntleroy, the sum of $2,992 16; and to the complainant, George Willis, as guardian of his infant children, the sum of $3,073 75—these several sums being the amount with interest which was wrongfully paid to Aphia Fauntleroy on the 25th May, 1840, over and above her dower, and that the defendants pay the costs of this suit. And it is further ordered that the said defendant, Charles Le Baron, proceed to administer the residue of the estate in his hands reported by him to be unadministered, and that as he reduces the same to possession, (after deducting the charges of administration,) he shall pay to the said Walter T. Colquitt the one-half thereof, and to the complainants the other half, in the proportions respectively due to each; and that the said Le Baron make 288 report thereof, as early as practicable, to the Court of Probate for Escambia county.

It is further ordered and decreed that the parties have leave to take further testimony, to be used in the Supreme Court.

THOMAS BALTZELL, Judge

Wright, for Appellant.

Anderson, for Appellees.

1. The decree of the Court of Appeals reversing the decree of the Superior Court is conclusive against Colquitt as to his right to retain the legacy paid him.

2. It is also conclusive against Le Baron, the administrator, as to having committed a devastavit in paying over the legacy to Colquitt.

3. Supposing it not to be conclusive, they are both responsible to the distributees for the supposed legacy, because the right to the legacy was derived solely from the supposed will, which being a nullity, the legacy was paid in wrong of the distributees.

4. The probate of a will is only operative as evidence, and gives no vitality to the instrument itself. 1 Williams on Executors, 159, Ib., 339. Thompson's Dig., 199.

5. The executor derives his title solely from the will, and not from the probate. Ibid. Toller on Ex., 75. 1 Dane's Abridgement, 558. The authority of an administrator to execute a will rests, of course, on the same foundation.

6. The acts referred to by the appellants' counsel, such as the paying and receiving of debts by an executor or administrator, acting under a grant subsequently revoked, differ from the payment of the legacy in question in this: that the former relate to rights pre-existing before the grant, while the latter, resting upon a void will, derives its sole authority from the probate.

7. The allowance of all the acts referred to by appellants' counsel under the revoked grant, secures the rights of all parties while the allowance of the legacy in question would irreparably destroy the undisputed rights of the complainants. 1 Will. on Ex., 373.

"The rightful representative may either sue the buyer from the wrongful representative in detinue or trover, or he may waive the tort and sue for the money." 1 Williams, 368.

8. The probate of a will is an ex parte proceeding, and therefore 289 not binding as a judgment. Thomp. Dig., 193.

9. Le Baron was not compellable to pay the pretended legacy at the time he did. Thompson's Dig., 205. See statement of facts.

10. The refunding bond required by our statute, (Thomp. Dig., 206,) strengthens all the previous views on this subject, and provides for the very contingency which has happened, and secures, as it was intended to do, the rights of all the parties.

This bond is unnecessary, if defendants' counsel are correct. 2 Call's Rep., 95.

11. The probate of Fauntleroy's will was void, and not voidable as is contended, and consequently the acts under it are void. Toller on Ex., 78. 1 Williams on Ex., 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, and note (1.) Exception to the general rule: 3 T. R., 125, Allen vs. Dundas.

The apparent contradiction of Toller and Williams is reconciled by noting that the distinction between void and voidable grants applies to administrations, and rarely (if ever in the country) to probates. The latter when revoked are necessarily void, ab initio. 1 Toller, 78, 119, 128, 129, 131. 1 Will., 369, and note (o) 370.

The distinction between repeal upon appeal and citation, applies to grants of administration, and not to probates, the latter being an ex parte proceeding.

Voidable administrations what? 1 Williams, 361. Comstock's Dig., 262. 1 Williams, 371, and note (1.)

12. The Ordinary is incapable of divesting the interests of the distributees in this case which vested upon Fauntleroy's death.

13. The act of the administrator being void the complainants should recover from Le Baron and Colquitt, the whole amount paid Mrs. Fauntleroy, because no dower having been assigned to her during her life none can be assigned now, the only mode known to the law being now impossible. Thomp. Dig., 186.

14. If the court should think the widow entitled to retain the difference between the legacy and her distributive share as widow, then the principles upon which the account should be made are correctly set forth in the decree below, and Master's report.

Brockenbrough, for Appellees.

Colquitt, for Appellant. 290

First. The decree of the Court of Appeals of the Territory settles no principle of law in the case.

Second. If the decree of the Court of Appeals had decided upon what principles the cause must be settled; still, if in carrying out that decree by the court below, any cause of grievance should justify an appeal, upon such appeal the Appellate Court will examine the merits of the whole cause. 1 Hill's Ch., 450, and authorities there cited.

Third. If the agreement of facts in the fourth statement be, as counsel for complainant insist, conclusive, that the administrator was not qualified according to law as administrator cum testamento annexo, after probate of the will, then we insist that he is not administrator at all, and that he is not charged in complainants' bill for any default for which he can be charged as administrator, as the matters of complaint all transpired after his letters of administration were annulled by probate of the will. Williams on Ex., 367.

Fourth. The Court of Probate for the Territory of Florida had exclusive jurisdiction of probate of wills, subject only to the Chancery supervision, as in England, and therefore the Superior Court of the Territory had no jurisdiction of an appeal from the Probate Court and their decree upon such appeal was a nullity. Thomp. Dig., 194-5. Ib., 365. Ib., 57-8.

Fifth. The widow has a distributive share of the personal property in preference to all claims, and consequently before the deduction of funeral expenses, &c. That distributive share must necessarily be on the gross amount, and not on the nett sum after deducting expenses of administering the estate. Dower is of the real estate and slaves. Thomp. Dig., 184-5, and notes.

The amount due Ann Beatty was a debt of the estate. 11 Pick., 173. By the statute of the Territory no interest can be allowed but on cash balances, and then only in certain cases. Thompson's Dig., 207-8. Williams on Ex., 1131. 12 Vesey, 386.

While the draft with charges amounting to 752 13, may be a charge on the estate with which the administrator should be credited, it was certainly a debt on the estate, and of consequence had to be postponed to the widow's distribution. The widow should have been allowed the full rent of the houses, offices, &c., 12 months provisions, and the hire of half the servants.

Le Baron and Colquitt, Appellants, vs. Thos. W. Fauntleroy, et al., Appellees.

291 Sixth. The complainants' bill makes no allegation by which the defendant Colquitt can be made liable. Story's Eq. Pl., 27. Gresley on Ev., 23.

The bill charges, in its charging part, that the administrator paid Colquit $50,000. This charge is denied by the answer, and is not sustained by proof. The bill further charges, in the charging part of the bill, that a portion of this amount was paid in bonds and notes to the said Colquitt. This charge is denied in the answer, and the complainants offer no proof to sustain it. The answer denies ever having received any of the assets of Fauntleroy's estate, except the same may have been received by his marriage with the widow.—The answer admits that Mrs. Fauntleroy may have received bonds, notes, &c., and if she did so she received them properly, under the will of her deceased husband, and would not have been responsible.

Seventh. If the widow were responsible at all to refund as distributee, she could not have been joined, if alive and a femme sole, with the administrator in an action for devastavit against him.

Eighth. If the widow could so have been joined, and was legally responsible, as assisting to commit a devastavit, Colquitt after her death was not liable. And any suit brought for a devastavit committed by the wife against him would be dismissed with costs. Will. on Ex., 1128. 2 Kents Comm.

Ninth. Personal assets cannot be followed when disposed of by an executor or administrator unless for fraud. Will. on Ex., 609. 4 Term, 625. Note to Farr vs. Newman, 1 Atkinson, 463.

Tenth. When executor consents to legacy the legatee's title is complete. Williams on Ex., 843, and references.

Eleventh. At what time legacies are to be paid. Time allowed the administrator is for his convenience. Will. on Executors, 853-4.

Twelfth. The complainants' bill in stating its equities against the administrator is a simple bill to account. Story's Eq. Pl., 27.

Thirteenth. What is a devastavit, and what the duties of an executor or administrator with will annexed. Williams on Ex., 1104.

Fourteenth. When the administrator paid in bonds and notes to widow, it was in conformity to directions of a valid will accompanying his letters, which he could not refuse to obey. It was not a supposed will—not a pretended will—but an actual will—a valid will, and so declared by a court of competent jurisdiction which 292 was binding on the administrator, and all the world. The refunding bond to the administrator could not make an act of the administrator which was legal and right when he performed it, wrongful and tortious.

Fifteenth. The after setting aside of the probate of that will upon citation does not make void the acts of the administrator. Williams on Ex., 367-8. Ib., 371, and note 1. Ib., 339. 3 Bac. Abr., 51, 61, and notes. 1 Danes' Abr., 581, 564. 1 Bailey Rep., 221.

Sixteenth An executor or administrator stands in the most favored condition of all Trustees. Will. on Ex., 1021. 14 Ed. Comyn's Dig., Assetts D. 2 Vesey, Sr., 240.

Seventeenth. The complainants had been virtually receiving under the will. The widow, of course, yielded her legal rights given by statute in case of intestacy, and those rights were at once distributed among the complainants. It is against the principles of equity, that a party shall derive a benefit from an instrument, and then seek rights adverse to it. Story's Eq., 345, Sec. 1082.

"You cannot come forth to a court of Justice claiming in repugnant rights," are the words of Lord Roselyn. 2 Vesey, Jr., 696. The same opinion expressed by Lord Mansfield, 4 Term Rep., 743, n.

In case of Lord Little vs. Baily, Cowper, 597, it is said, "that no court will enforce rights which it recognizes as repugnant, may be admitted as a universal proposition.

Eighteenth. The complainant who swore to this bill, and on whose testimony the will was established, and who is acting for others, consented to the judgment of the legacy under the will, acquiesced in such payment for near 18 months before moving by citation—the other claimants, with full knowledge, acquiescing and receiving distribution, adds to the injustice of seeking to hold the administrator liable, and is contrary to every principle of equity.

BALTZELL, J., delivered the following opinion:

On the seventh day of April, 1840, probate was made by the County Court of Escambia of an instrument of writing purporting to be the last will and testament of George L. Fauntleroy by which he bequeathed to his widow the sum of fifty thousand dollars, a piano, some plate and a set of china, and the will was ordered to be annexed to the letters of administration previously granted to Le Baron there being no executor named in the will.

On the 25th and 31st of May, of the same year, Le Baron acting 293 in obedience to this will and under the probate of the court paid to Mrs. Fauntleroy $50,000 in notes and bonds, and a sum equal to the piano and the other articles.

In October 1841, the next of kin the present complainants applied to the County Court for a revocation of the probate, which was refused. They appealed to the Superior Court who revoked and set it aside declaring the will invalid. An appeal was taken to the Court of Appeals who affirmed the judgment of the Superior Court in 1845.

This suit is instituted against the administrator and against Colquitt who intermarried with Mrs. Fauntleroy, complaining of this payment as a devastavit and insisting not only upon the disallowance of the sum paid to the widow, but of the forfeiture of all interest by her in the estate of her husband.

In support of this position complainants reply upon the difference assumed in the books between acts of an administrator or executor regarded as voidable and those that are void, contending that the action of Le Baron in the payment to Mrs. Fauntleroy was void.

"Whether the acts of an administrator or executor whose probate or letters are revoked, are valid or not, depends it is said upon the character of the grant. The distinction is between grants that are void and such as are voidable. If the grant be of the former description the mesne acts of the executor or administrator done between the grant and its revocation shall be of no validity." 1 Will. on Executors, 400. Toller, 120-8.

"But if the administration be voidable only, all lawful acts of the first administrator shall be valid." 1 Will., 402. Toller, 129.

"It may be laid down as a general rule that where the grant is in derogation of the right of the executor it is void, but where the administration is granted by the proper jurisdiction and is only in derogation of the next of kin or residuary legatee it is merely voidable." 3 Bacon Ab., 50. 1 Will., 403-4.

Toller says "in all such instances the administration is a mere nullity. The executors interest, the ordinary is incapable of divesting." Toller 120.

It seems according to this that if the grant be in derogation of the interest of the next of kin this does not make the action of the administrator void. Let us enquire as to the interest of the executor which is attended with such important consequences.

1st. He had a right to retain for a debt due to him in preference to 294 all other creditors in an equal degree. Toller, 295.

2d. If indebted to his testator his appointment and acceptance of the office shall operate as a release and extinguishment of the debt. Toller, 347.

3d. After payment of funeral expenses, testamentary charges, debts and legacies, if there be a surplus it shall vest in him beneficially. 2 Will., 898. Toller, 351.

This was the law in former times but by our statute this extinguishment is expressly done away, so is the right of retainer by the same act providing for a pro rata settlement of all demands which may be rendered in according to law, whilst there is no instance of a claim to the surplus with us. Duval, 188. Thus clearly placing an executor on the same footing of an administrator, making him alike with the administrator an agent or officer merely for the settlement of the estate with no further interest than that of commissions and fees.

It will be thus perceived why a grant in derogation of the right of the executor was so highly esteemed in the early decisions, yet when the cases supporting this doctrine, to wit, Parten and Barsdens, case 1 Mod., 213—Dr. Henslow's case, 9 Co., 37, B—Abram vs. Cunningham, 2 Lev., 182—Wankford vs. Wankford, Salk., 307—Graysbrook vs. Fox, Plow., 275, were cited before Lord Redesdale in Doyle vs. Blake, he said that "some of these old cases could scarcely be supported on principle, they were decided whilst a great jealousy of the Eccelsiastical Court prevailed. That the meaning of the modern determinations was that an administration granted after an executor having acted in pais might be repealed by an application to the Ecclesiastical Court, not that it was a mere nullity unless as a protection to the executor. That it was true an executor having acted could not discharge himself from liability by such an administration being granted to another, but that a debtor to the fund could not in answer to a suit by such administrator set up the act in pais of the executor against his renunciation, in order to delay or prevent a recovery by the administrator. That the administration was void only as a protection to the executor, but in no other sense." The case before the court was an illustration of these remarks.—Blake and Atley were appointed executors and after performing some acts which the chancellor considered as amounting to an action by them in that character renounced in favor of a third party, 295 to whom administration of the will was committed, he becoming insolvent, they were held liable for his administration as if he had been their agent. 2 Sch. and Lef., 246.

Williams on Executors adopts these remarks, and adds, "so if the executor has acted, and the ordinary not knowing it, commits administration to another, though the administration may be revoked, and the executor compelled to prove the will, yet the grant of administration, with the will annexed, until so revoked, is valid." 1 Williams on Executors, 162, and notes.

This view is sustained by the case of Allen vs. Dundas, which was to recover from a debtor a debt which he had paid to an executor, under probate of a forged will afterwards revoked. The position taken was as in this case, that the probate was only evidence of right; that the executor derives his authority from the will, and not from the probate, and that there was no payment. The court, however said: "Here the defendant acted under the authority of a court of law. Every person is bound to pay deference to a judicial act of a court having competent jurisdiction. Here the spiritual court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and every person was bound to give credit to the probate till it was revoked." Buller, Justice, said, "I am most clearly of opinion that it is a judicial act, and that the probate is conclusive till it be repealed, and no court of common law can admit evidence to impeach it." 3 T. R., 129.

See also the case of Digby & Hollis vs. Wray, B. R., 25 & 26, Car. 2, the plaintiff as executor had judgment against the defendant, and then there was a suit in the spiritual court to repeal the letters, and the defendant prayed a stay of execution till the matter was tried in the spiritual court—the court denied it, for the reason that if a debtor pay money on a judgment and execution to one who is executor de facto, having a probate under seal of a prerogative court, he shall never be forced to pay it again. 3 Bac. Ab., 51.

To the same effect are decisions of the Supreme Court of South Carolina. In Benson, administrator, vs. Price & Byers, the court say, when an administration which has been granted is properly revoked, the latter administrator may sue the former for money had and received, or in trover for any goods remaining in his possession, by him converted or not duly administered. Any other doctrine would be fraught with the most monstruous inconvenience. 2 N. & McC., 577.

296 In Foster vs. Brown administration had been obtained by a fraudulent suppression of the will, in which the executor as well as the administrator concurred—it was held that all acts done in a due and legal course of administration are valid and binding on all interested although it be afterwards revoked, nor can the manner of obtaining the administration, whether fairly or fraudulently, vary the question. 1 Bailey, 221.

In Price vs. Nesbit, allusion was made to these authorities, and their application to the case, which was that of a will set up after grant of previous administration enforced. 1 Hill, 461.

So also in Pennsylvania, an opinion was once entertained that payments made to one who had obtained probate of a will which was afterwards repealed were void, and in support of it, 1 Roll. Abr. & Con. Rep., 152, were cited, but those cases have been overruled. The granting probate is a judicial act, and while it remains in force cannot be contradicted. Appeal of Peebles, 15 Sergenat and Rawle, 39.

But there is another consideration showing the entire inapplicability of the rule in the present case, even conceding it to be in operation, when derogatory to the rights of an executor. There was no executor by this will possessed of rights to be affected by the action of Le Baron. He was himself filling the office of executor, having been appointed administrator, with the will annexed, and continued administrator after revocation of the probate.

It is contended that the acts of paying and receiving debts by an executor or administrator, acting under a grant subsequently revoked, differ from the payment of a legacy in this, that the former relate to rights pre-existing before the grant—whilst the latter, resting upon a void will, derives its sole authority from the probate. The propriety of the distinction is not perceived. Indeed, to allow it would be to assert that the probate is a judicial act, available to a legatee or creditor of the estate against the officer, but impotent for his protection. This would be to declare a part of his duty as obligatory, and hold him discharged from the remainder. We cannot, however, draw such a distinction. All the duties of the executor or administrator, resulting from the probate of the will, or from the letters of administration, with the will annexed are alike imperative and obligatory. "An executor is he to whom another man commits, by will, the execution of that, his last will and testament, and the duty of an administrator with the will annexed is very little different from that of an executor." 2 Black., 503. "The executor is bound to 297 perform a will." Ib., 507.

"All administrators, with the will annexed, shall make oath or affirmation before the Court or Judge that they will well and truly perform the last will and testament of the testator, and pay his just and lawful debts, &c." Duval's Com. 170.

"A probate is conclusive both in courts of law and equity, as to the appointment of the executor, and the validity and contents of a will so far as it extends to personal property." 1 Williams, 368. Teller, 76.

"The probate is conclusive as to every part of the will in respect of which it has been granted." Ibid, 369. 4 Rand., 538. 2 Ibid. 194.

The will being established by competent judicial action, and this administrator having sworn to perform it, what was his course?—Obviously to pay debts first, if there are none, then to pay legacies and distribute the residuum. If the assets were in bonds and notes, they should have been collected as early as possible, and paid over; but, if the legatee preferred taking the burthen of collection, we see no objection, but on the contrary very great propriety in the executor permitting it.

It was clearly a matter of duty on the part of this administrator to pay legacies under the will as much as to receive debts, and if there be a discharge in the one case, we are at a loss why it should not operate in the other. In the case under consideration there was an express mandate of the court to pay this legacy—an adjudication upon the very point; the very object of the probate, its almost entire object was to procure its payment, and the officer was bound as well by his office as by the solemn obligation of his oath to pay it. To refuse payment would have been alike inconsistent with both of these. To enforce a performance of duty by such injunction, and then subject the officer to peril of his fortune, if through a diverse action of the parties interested, or a change of opinion as to the law by the courts whose agent he was, would be in our opinion the height of injustice. In the case of the debtor protected as we have seen by the probate, as a judicial act there was no mandate, but mere obligation to pay. If the comparative loss is to be regarded, distributees may be as much affected by improper and illegal receipts, and payments by an executor or administrator, as by the improper payment of a legacy. The remarks of the court in Allen vs. Dundas, are so appropriate as to deserve a more special reference on this 298 branch of the subject. Ashurst, J., said "I am of opinion that the plaintiff has no right to call on the defendant to pay this money a second time, which was paid to a person who had at that time a legal authority to receive it. It is admitted that if he had made this payment under the coercion of a suit in a court of law, he would have been protected against any other demand for it, but I think that makes no difference. For as the party to whom the payment was made had such authority as could not be questioned at the time, and such as a court of law would have been bound to enforce, the defendant was not obliged to wait for a suit, when he knew that no defence could be made to it." 3 T. R., 129.

If there were yet doubts, we think there is express authority in support of the view we have taken. In Hele vs. Stowel the husband devised his lands to his wife during the minority of his son, with power to make leases, to pay debts, &c., and dies, &c., the wife enters and takes the profits, and then marries a second husband, and he lives some years and takes the profits and dies, and the wife continues to take the profits, &c. The son attains his age, and proves a revocation of the will, and prays an account. The account was ordered. She was to answer as to what her husband took as in a devastavit—the wife having no notice of the revocation had paid legacies charged on the lands by will. Ordered that she be allowed those Cases in Chancery, 126, quoted 3 Bac. Ab., 50 n. 3. 1 Lomax on Ex., 190. Inaccurately stated in Williams on Ex., p. 406.

We do not perceive that there is any thing in the position that Le Baron was not compellable to pay at the time he did or that the statute allowed him to take a bond to refund. It would not have altered the legal bearing of the act, if payment had been made after the six months fixed by the statute, for the movement against the will took place upward of a yeard after the grant. This time is for the convenience of the executor to ascertain the debts of the testator and the amount of the assets so as to make a proper distribution. 1 Will. 855. Bonds seem to have been required, by the ancient practice in Chancery, of a legatee to refunnd if debts should appear, but it is now out of use. It was for the protection and benefit of the Administrator which he might waive as he might the payment before six months. 1 Story's Equity, 605.

We have not noticed the obvious distinction between cases commenced by citation before the ordinary to revoke a probate and those

Le Baron and Colquitt, Appellants, vs. Thos. W. Fauntleroy, et al., Appellees.

299 by appeal from his decision depending before a superior judicature for the very obvious reason that the payment was made before either appeal or citation.

We have by no means overlooked the cases in which a legatee as well as an executor have been held liable for payments illegally made to or received by them. Such are abundant in the books but they are cases of fraud in which the wrong doer whoever he may be is converted into a trustee. 4 T. R. 625. 1 Atk. 463. 1 Will. 609—370-1-2.

But there is no pretext for anything of the kind as to this payment either on the part of Mrs. Fauntleroy or Le Baron. Indeed the probate of the will was made on the affidavit of two of those who are now complainants in the bill, and another fact is to be remarked that there was no movement to disturb it until after the death of Mrs. Fauntleroy. But the liability is asserted in the bill on account of a devastavit charged to have been committed by Le Baron. Let us see whether this view of the subject is sustainable. "Devastavit is defined to be a mismanagement of the estate and effects of the deceased in squandering and mis-applying the assets contrary to the duty imposed on them for which executors and administrators shall be responsible out of their own pockets as far as they had or might have had assets of the deceased." Bac. Ab., Ex. L., 1. Will. Ex., 1105. Toller, 424.

It is under this head Williams says "An executor is personally liable in Equity for all breaches of the ordinary trusts which in courts of Equity are considered to arise from his office. And it may here be observed that where personal property is bequeathed to executors as trustees, the circumstance of taking probate of the will is in itself an acceptance of the particular trusts; therefore when the will contains express directions what the executor is to do, an executor who proves the will must do all which he is directed to do as executor, &c. Will., 1104. Meeklow vs. Fuller, Jacob. 198.

Now it will hardly be contended that the administrator Le Baron could be held liable for not obeying the will by refusal to pay this money and again liable for paying it. We are then of opinion that in equity and justice as well as by the principles of law Le Baron should not be held liable for the payment of this legacy to these complainants.

The question yet remains as to the responsibility of Colquitt.—In reference to this we have no hesitancy in saying that if the pay-300 ment made to Mrs. Fauntleroy could not be supported under the will of her husband, that it should and ought to be so far as her distributive share as widow extended. If a mistake was committed by her in common with others interested in the estate, as well as by the tribunal whose office it was to adjudicate as to the legal effect of the paper set up as the testament of her husband, it certainly should not operate to produce a forfeiture of her interest as a distributee.

A salutary rule of a Court of Equity is to regard that as done which ought to have been done, and rather than declare a forfeiture of the widow's right, Equity would regard the payment as made to her originally for her distributive share and not as a legacy. This share does not reach the amount paid her by Le Baron and the enquiry is as to the liability of Colquitt to make the deficiency good. Whether such a liability may be made out against him is not the question before us. We have to decide whether the complainants have by their pleadings and evidence, made a case entitling them to relief in a Court of Equity. The allegation as to his liability is to this effect, "your orators further charge that said Le Baron has committed a devastavit upon the estate of his said intestate and wasted the same by paying a large portion thereof, to wit the sum of fifty thousand dollars to the aforesaid Walter Colquitt under pretense of a legacy having been left to the said Aphia in a pretended will of said deceased, which pretended will has long since been pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction, to be invalid &c., and that said Le Baron and Colquitt have combined and confederated together most unjustly to detain from your orators the said sum of fifty thousand dollars so illegally paid by said Le Baron to Colquitt, and they further show that a portion of the said estate of said Fauntleroy so illegally paid to said Colquitt consists of bonds due by sundry persons, to wit, (here a blank) to the said estate and that many are now in suit by said Colquitt as assignee of said Le Baron and is thereby reducing the same to his possession." Here there is the simple allegation of devastavit against Le Baron for paying to Colquitt, though both are charged with combining to detain the $50,000. Now this charge of payment to Colquitt is expressly negatived by the agreed case showing that on the 25th and 31st of May, 1840, this sum was paid to Mrs. Fauntleroy before her marriage. So that if a decree was rendered in favor of complainants against Colquitt it would be on grounds directly opposed to and falsifying the statements in their bill. It would be without allegation and against proof. We hold it to be very clear too that a mere charge 301 of confederacy against a party is not the foundation for the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity. Story's Eq. pl., 25-27.

The whole case against Colquitt is clearly predicated on the idea of Le Baron's having committed a devastavit and that failing, the plaintiffs' case would seem to fail also as to him. This case in distinct and separate in its character from the distribution and may be better adjudicated by itself than in connection with it. The complainants had permission too of which they did not avail themselves to amend their bill, and cannot complain now of the dismission for want of it.

We are therefore of opinion that the bill should be dismissed as to Colquitt, without prejudice to the institution of another suit against him, if the parties think they can maintain one for the difference between the amount of the legacy and the distributive share of Mrs. Colquitt. In the mean time the present suit will proceed for distribution against Le Baron as to the residue of the estate crediting to him the sum paid on account of the legacy. This view of the subject disposes of the exceptions to the master's report.

This same case was before the Court of Appeals of the late Territory at their January Term, 1845, and they holding different sentiments and opinions as to the law of the case, reversed the decree of the Superior Court which had dismissed the suit as to Colquitt, and declaring that Le Baron had committed a devastavit, required them both to answer. This decision, it is contended, is conclusive in this court as to the rights of the parties having been made by a court having full jurisdiction of the subject-matter. This question was very fully considered by the Supreme Court of South Carolina in the case of Price's Executors vs. Nesbit, in which the court after reviewing their own decisions and those of New York, held that the appeal from a final decree would, if pursued, open all prior decrees whether of the Chancellor or Court of Appeals. 'So long as a decree operates,' it was said, 'merely as authority or as the reasoning of the court to prove the party's right in whose favor it is pronounced it may be reviewed and reversed whenever it comes up properly before the Court of Appeals, in any of the subsequent stages of the case." The opinion of Chief Justice Spencer in the Court of Errors of New York, was quoted with approbation, concurred in, as it was, by the whole court. "An appeal from a final decree opens for consideration all prior or interlocutory orders or decrees connected with the merits of the final decree." 17 John, 548.— 305
1 Hill, 547.

There could scarcely be higher authority than this in support of a legal proposition, yet without holding it decisive, and reserving the point for a more careful consideration, there is in our opinion in the record and in the opinion and mandate of the court sufficient to shew that it should not conclude the rights of either Le Baron or Colquitt.

There is no where in the record, or amongst the papers, any evidence of an appeal prayed or taken either in the Court below or before the Clerk, nor does notice appear to have been given to the adverse party of the appeal. The mandate of the court itself states that argument was heard of counsel for complainant, but that "no counsel appeared on behalf of defendants." It is true the name of an attorney for defendants is marked on the docket of this court at that time; but at the most this is an equivocal act. In the Circuit Court by statute the name of an attorney operates to prevent a judgment by default in common law cases; but we are not aware that of any law declaring its effect in a case of Chancery or in the Court of Appeals. Does it amount to notice of an appeal by the other side, and of the pending of the suit in the Appellate Court. But again it is insisted by appellants that, that court had not the facts before it, and therefore its decision could not be conclusive, and we are referred to the opening of the opinion commencing as follows: "It is difficult from the very imperfect record before us, to ascertain either what the real questions in the cause are, or what decree ought to be given upon the record, and were we not aided in some measure by the admission of complainant's counsel on the argument and by some references to facts in the opinion of the Judge in the Court below we should find it still more difficult. Disregard, however, the defects of the record as much as possible we shall endeavor to express our opinion on the main points or questions upon which the parties desire a decision as we undertsand them, from the argument at bar as well as from the record."

In declaring the plea of Colquitt bad, which the court did, on grounds that neither the will nor probate were set out in the plea, nor any averment that the $50,000 paid to Mrs. Fauntleroy were the same $50,000 charged in the bill to have been paid to Colquitt, and no answer connected with the plea as required by the statute, they say, "it should be observed, however, that in the opinion of 303 the judge below, a state of facts is set forth which do not appear upon the record, and upon which it would seem that the decision of the court below was predicated, and which might form a good ground for the decision of the court below; and we are not prepared to say, that if the facts set forth in the opinion of the judge were spread upon the record, and those were the only facts of the case, that the decision might not be entirely correct." They then direct him to answer fully, and that in doing so he compromits no rights—and if upon the coming in of his answer it clearly appears that he is not properly a party to the suit, the bill may be dismissed.

Even as to Le Baron, they say, "the court below in its decision considered that the payment or delivery of the $50,000 of securities by the administrators to Mrs. Fauntleroy, who was justified by the then existing probate of the pretended will, and in the opinion of that court this conclusion is arrived at upon a state of facts set forth in the opinion, which nowhere appear in the record, and upon which that court came to the conclusion, that although the will was annulled and declared void, and the probate of it revoked, yet that Le Baron is not bound to refund, &c.

Now, turning to the opinion of the court below, we find these facts stated as the ground of its opinion. "It is declared to be the opinion of this court, that Le Baron did not commit a devastavit in paying over the said legacy to the said Aphia, before a revocation of the probate, or notice thereof, and before suit to invalidate the said will." Perhaps with the facts now before us, the Court of Appeals might have come to the conclusion we have taken in common with the Judge of the Superior Court.

We are, therefore, of opinion, that, under these circumstances, the decree of the Court of Appeals should not be held to conclude the defendants in this case, as contended for by complainants. The decree of the court below will be reversed and set aside, with directions to dismiss the bill as to Colquitt, and to allow the payment by the administrator of the legacy, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

304 ROBERT W. WILLIAMS, APPELLANT, vs. WILLIAM D. MOSELEY, FOR THE USE OF PATRICK SMITH, APPELLEE.

H. as principal and W. and C. as sureties, executed notes payable to B., as guardian of the heirs of F., upon the purchase by H. of lands belonging to the wards. B. the guardian died, and H. was appointed his successor, who, upon a settlement as guardian with the executor of B., his predecessor received among other things the note executed by himself, and gave receipts as guardian to the executor of B., as for so much money. He afterwards, at the instance of C., one of his sureties, cut the names of W. and C. from the notes. In his accounts filed in the County Court, H., charged himself with a large sum, comprising nearly all the estate of his wards received from the executor of B., as received in "notes and accounts." H. died, and S., who was appointed his successor as guardian, instituted suit in the name of the executor of B., for his (S.'s) use as guardian, against W., one of the sureties on the notes. Held, by a divided court:

That the notes were not extinguished, and that S. was entitled to recover the amount of the notes.

A note payable in "current Florida money," is payable in good funds.

Appeal from judgment rendered in Leon Circuit Court in favor of appellee, for $4,122 24-100, on 23d May, 1846.

This cause was argued at the last term, and also a second time at this term, when the judgment of the court below was affirmed by a divided court. The facts of the case fully appear in the opinion delivered by the Justices.

D. S. Walker, for Appellant:

The first question presented by this record, is whether the notes sued on were the property of Arthur Burney at the time of his death, as alleged in the first instruction asked for. That they were would seem to be admitted by the institution of this suit in the name of his executor Moseley. But as this proposition is in some sort denied by the court below in refusing to give said instruction and in giving the first it gave in its stead, we present the following authorities to sustain it; Chitty on Bills, 160, and cases cited—Same, 358. Story on Promissory Notes, page 130, sec. 125—page 461, sec. 375—page 132, sec. 126—page 296, sec. 250—page 129, sec. 123. Bailey on Bills, 335, and notes—same, 76. 1 Vermont 500.

The error of the court is, in declaring the notes themselves to be the trust property of Arthur Burney, in contradistinction, as we suppose to the legal property, must have been fallen into by confounding the paper and ink used in making the notes, with the money intended to be secured by them. That the money, had it been collected by Burney, would have been holden by him in trust for his wards is true, but the notes themselves were not his trust property. See Story on Promissory Notes, 122, sec. 126. 305

2. It being true, then, that the legal title to these notes was in Burney at the time of his death, it follows that that title passed to Moseley as his executor. Therefore the next question is, whether Moseley was not divested of that title by voluntarily delivering them to Hart, the principal obligor, in consideration of his receipts for so much money. These receipts were valuable to Moseley, because they were vouchers sufficient to discharge the estate of his testator, Burney, from the debt it owed to Farmer's heirs. Story on Promissory Notes, 540, 503, 504.

The receipts Hart gave are "binding" upon the heirs of Farmer, so as to preclude them from ever setting up this claim against Burney's estate. See Thompson's Digest, page 201. If, then, with these notes Moseley has paid off and discharged a debt that was valid and subsisting to their full amount against the estate of Burney, how can it be pretended that he still has title to them? If, then, Moseley has no legal title, this suit cannot be maintained in his name; and if his right of action was even suspended, he cannot resume it now. 2 J. R., 471. 5 Peters S. C. U. S., 267.

3. But it is further contended that these notes were cancelled by being delivered to Hart, and by the names of Williams and Chaires being cut therefrom; and that even if such cancellation has been fraudulent, (which is by no means admitted,) a suit at law cannot be maintained upon them. A cancelled note is no note at all; but if the cancellation is procured by fraud, a Court of Equity may relieve against such fraud, by compelling the obligors to pay the money just as if the note had not been cancelled. This power does not appertain to a court of law; our statute in regard to the mode of suing at law upon lost notes makes no provision for a suit at law upon cancelled notes. It is obvious that this cancellation took place with the approbation of Moseley, who had been the legal owner, and Hart the principal obligor, to whom they had been delivered as aforesaid. If this was a fraud, it cannot be relieved against in a court of law, but relief can only be had in a Court of Equity. See Daniel's Chancery Practice, 504, 505, in new law library, 298, and cases there cited. 306

4. But the main question in this cause still remains to be discussed; for it is obvious that if it shall be dismissed merely because a wrong party is suing, or the suit is instituted in the wrong court, the ultimate liability of Williams will not be thereby determined. That question is, whether Williams is liable to any person, in any court, upon these notes. We contend that when Hart, the principal obligor in these notes, became possessed of them as the guardian of the heirs of Farmer, such possession operated in the law as an extinguishment of all liability of Williams upon said notes. This, we think, is made manifest by the following authorities: In 5th Peters Rep. of S. C. U. S., 207, the court say—"The executor cannot sue himself, and for this reason he is authorized to retain his debt out of the assets in his hands. The right of action being once extinguished, cannot be revived, either by the executor or his legal representative. On this point the authorities are decisive; and although some difference of opinion seems to have been entertained as to the extinguishment of the debt, yet it is in effect extinguished, as the legal right to enforce the payment of it is gone."

In the case of Hall vs. Hall, 2 McCord Chancery Reports, 304, the court say—that "debts due from the executor to the testator are so much cash in the hands of the executor."

In the case of O'Neal vs. Herbert, 1 Dudley's Law and Equity Reports, 31, Chancellor Harper, in delivering the opinion of the court, says—"I suppose that if an administrator have in his hands the balance of an estate, and is afterwards appointed the guardian of infants entitled to it, he will be chargeable as guardian, and will be liable as in the case of Simkins vs. Cobb, (2 Bailey Reports, 60.) So, if before his appointment he has received a sum of money belonging to his wards, as in McDowell vs. Caldwell, (2 McCord's Chancery Reports, 55.) Or, if in any other capacity he be indebted to himself as guardian, being unable to sue himself, the debt shall be presumed to be paid."

In Chief Justice Marshall's Decisions, 267, is the following case: The testator Munford by his will gave a bond on John Bannister to his daughter Francis, and made his brother Robert her testamentary guardian, and his own executor. Robert charged himself as executor with the amount of the bond, and assumed the same to be his undeniable property. Chief Justice Marshall held, that Robert as

R. W. Williams, Appellant, vs. W. D. Moseley for the use of P. Smith, Appellee.

307 executor, with his securities, was not bound; but that Robert was bound as guardian, on the ground that when he chose to consider the bond as money in his hands, (which he had the right to do,) he was instantly chargeable with it as guardian, because it being his duty instantly to pay over to himself as guardian, the law will consider him as having done that which he ought to have done. Now, we urge, that if Hart had the right to consider the bond of "John Bannister" or any one else as cash, and to charge himself with the amount thereof, and assume that it was due to himself individually, surely he had the right to consider the notes of himself and Williams as cash, and to charge himself with the amount thereof.

In the case of Galphin vs. McKinney and Breithaupt, (1 McCord, 280,) Brooks as commisisoner in equity was ordered to sell land. He did so and McKinney purchased it and gave his bond with Breithaupt as his security for the purchase money. The money, when collected, was to go to McKinney as the executor of Galphin. McKinney applied to the court to have this bond delivered up to him, and it was done. The Court of Appeals of South Carolina decreed that it was properly delivered up to him, and that Breithaupt, the security, would have had the right to have it delivered up to be cancelled if McKinney had not done so. To change the names of the parties, Arthur Burney was made commissioner to sell lands. He did so, and Hart became the purchaser, and gave his notes with Williams as his security for the purchase money. The money when collected was to go to Hart as guardian of the heirs of Farmer. Therefore Hart had a right to have those notes delivered up to him to be cancelled, and Williams himself would have had that right if Hart had not exercised it.

In the case of Gray vs. Brown, 1 Richardson's Law R., 352.—William G. Steel was trustee for Rachael Carroll, who married and died, leaving five children, of all of whom B. R. Carroll was appointed guardian, and defendant Brown signed his guardianship bond as security. Afterwards Carroll, the guardian, was substituted trustee in place of Steel, and on 9th June, 1838, filed a petition for leave to sell the trust property. This leave was granted (see it page 353) on his giving bond with security in double the value of the property, the bond was given (see it on page 353.) The property was then sold, and Carroll received the money for it, being $8200. Carroll did not account for the money, which he thus received as trustee and became insolvent. This suit was brought to recover the amount 308 from defendant Brown as security on Carroll's guardianship bond. The Court of Appeals held that Brown was bound to pay it, because it was Carroll's duty, as trustee, to pay himself as guardian, and the law presumes he did so. The court further declared that "even entire destitution of means would not seem to arrest the presumption of payment, which by law results from the union of debtor and creditor." The court says further, "The cases which have been cited from our court—Simpkins vs. Cobb, 2 Bail., 60. McDowel vs. Caldwell, 2 McCord, Ch. 55. Hall vs. Hall, 2 McCord, Ch. 304. Joyner vs. Cooper, 2 Bail., 199. Schnell vs. Schroder, Bail. Eq., 334, and O'Neal vs. Herbert, McMull. Eq., 334, all seem to regard the extinguishment of the debt as a necessary legal result of this union, 304.

Mr. Thompson for Appellee contends:

I. As to the first error assigned, that Tom Peter Chaires was properly excluded. He was one of the makers, a co-surety with Williams, and liable for contribution, in case of recovery against Williams. He was not competent without a release. 1 Greenleaf on Ev., sec. 390, et seq., 402—Leroy vs. Johnson, 2 Peters, S. C. Rep., 187, 194—Bagley vs. Osborne, 2 Wendell R., 527—Ransom vs. Keys, 9 Cowen R., 128—Carleton vs. Whitcher, 5 N. Hamp. R., 196—2 Philips on Ev., 1521, and notes, where all the cases are reviewed, and the ruling of the court sustained.

II. As to the second error assigned, the refusal of the court to permit the witness Lang to give evidence of the declaration of defendant himself in his favor.

The court below did not err in this—the defendant sought to give evidence of what he had himself said to the witness, a third party in relation to these notes, and thus make evidence for himself.

The conversation, too, was at a time subsequent to the institution of the suit.

I do not conceive it necessary to say more on this point.

III. The court did not err in its refusal to instruct the jury, as prayed by the defendant.

1. The first instruction asked for seemed to regard Burney as the owner of the notes, having full property in them: this was in direct opposition to the evidence, which showed that he held them in his fiduciary capacity as guardian. The first instruction which the 309 court gave states the law correctly according to the facts of the case.

2. The second instruction asked for was, that the delivery, without fraud, by Moseley to Hart of the notes in suit, in consideration of the receipts, operated as a divestiture of all title out of Moseley, and therefore this suit cannot be maintained in his name.

The delivery was made to Hart, in virtue of his letters of guardianship—Moseley being the representative of Burney, the former guardian. If the party here meant that the delivery, without fraud, to Hart extinguished the notes, that will be considered in the argument on the 3d, 4th and 5th instructions hereafter.

If, however, he meant that the notes being assigned by Moseley by delivery operated as such a divestiture of interest and title as would prevent his name being used by a holder to recover the money, it is clearly erroneous and the court below was right in its refusal.

The notes were payable to Burney, guardian, &c.—they did not contain the words, "or order, or bearer"—the assignee or beneficial owner has a right to use the name of the payee for the purpose of recovery. The death of the assignor does not defeat the assignment, but the assignee may use the name of the executor or administrator of the assignor to recover the money. Dawes vs. Bowleston, 9 Mass., 337. Cutts vs. Perkins, 12 Mass., 206.

The action, therefore, is well brought in the name of Moseley, administrator, for use, &c.

3. The 3d, 4th, and 5th instructions are the same in substance, and assert the position that Hart, being one of the makers, and acquiring the possession without force or fraud, the notes were extinguished.

It is said that when the right to receive and the duty to pay unite in the same person, the debt is extinguished, but there are exceptions to this rule.

4. The 6th instruction asked and refused was, that if Hart obtained possession of these notes lawfully he had a perfect right to destroy the same, &c.

He received the notes in his capacity of Guardian, and in virtue of his authority under the letters, &c.

He had no authority as holder to destroy the interests of the real owner. Hill vs. Calbert, 1 Rich. Eq. R., 56.

5. The court did not err in refusing the 7th instruction asked for by the defendant below.

A receipt is not conclusive evidence: it may be explained or rebutted by parol. 1 Phillips on Ev., 108. Elwell vs. Leslie, 2 Halstead, 349.

But these receipts are by Hart, one of the payers of the notes, and to give the receipts the effect contended for is to permit a party to make the evidence of his discharge.

6. The 8th instruction asked for, was on the supposition that the court would charge that the legal title of the notes did not pass to Burney's representative on his death, but the court did charge that Moseley, the representative of Burney, held the notes as Burney had held them in his life time.

7. The 9th instruction asked for, was an abstract question of law
312 which though right the court may well refuse. Caton vs. Lenox, 5 Rand., 31. Hamilton vs. Russell, 1 Cranch., 309.

8. The court was right in its refusal to give the tenth instruction. "Current Florida money," means specie, or par money. See Cockrill vs. Kilpatrick, 9 Missouri R., 697.

9. The court was right in refusing the 11th instruction asked for. The character in which Moseley sues was not denied by plea, which is necessary if defendant would put it in issue. 1 Chitty Pl., 526. Thyme vs. Thyme, 2 M. & S., 553. IV. The fourth error assigned is that the court erred in the instructions given.

1. That the first is correct is manifest from the facts which appeared in evidence.

2. The court was right in leaving the fact of payment to the jury. See Garlock vs. Geortner, 7 Wend., 198.

3. The third instruction is fully sustained by the argument and authorities in justification of the refusal of the prayer of the defendant.

An action at law may be sustained on the notes, though mutilated by the cutting off the names of T. P. Chaires and R. W. Williams, the same having been done by Hart in fraud of his wards the beneficial owners of the notes. See U. S. States vs. Spalding, 2 Mason Rep., 478.

It was a fraud in Hart, and none can gain any interest thereby. 4 Iredell Eq., 219.

V. As to the 5th error assigned, that of the trial on the 23d May, 1846, there is nothing in it.

A court may be continued to a distant day by adjournment. See Mech. Bank vs. Withers, 6 Wheaton, 106.

See also 7 Barn. & Cres., 6—the case of the King vs. Leicester, in which it was held that the 51 Geo. III. c. 84 which enacted that the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions shall be holden in the week next after the 11th of October is merely directory, and the sessions may notwithstanding that enactment, be legally holden at another time.

R. W. Williams, Appellant, vs. W. D. Moseley for the use of P. Smith, Appellee.

Brockenbrough for Appellant, in reply:

I. In this action we must consider the rights of Moseley, executor, alone, and if he, in that character, cannot recover, no recovery can be had—the appendage of the words, "for the use of Patrick Smith, guardian of the heirs of John Farmer," in no respect alters the rights, claims, or character of the plaintiff—with them the defendant has nothing to do. He can traverse nothing and take no issue, with or about Smith; the words only regulate rights between Moseley and Smith, and cannot increase Moseley's rights against defendant.

By suing in this mode, Smith admits he has no right of action in his own name, in this case, and if Moseley has none, they cannot recover together, when neither could separately. Even if Smith could separately, it will not avail him here, unless Moseley, Admr. can, because he sues.

Mr. Thompson's doctrines in his printed brief, "that the assignee or beneficial owner, has a right to use the name of the payee, for the purpose of recovery, and that the death of the assignor will not defeat it, and even that the assignor cannot dismiss, &c.," is not denied. But the application is denied.—

1. Because the doctrine and authorities apply only to releases, discharges and equities, between assignor and defendants, arising subsequent to assignment, or notice thereof. And here all our defences vs. Moseley existed long anterior to any possible interest in P. Smith.

2. P. Smith never had any assignment whatever from any one.

3. Smith is not the "beneficial owner" of these notes if existing—but his several wards—who have several interests, and several rights —and must proceed severally in any action that they bring at law. —Burnett vs. Commonwealth. 4 J. J. Marshall, 389. 7 Pick. 88.

4. If the notes existed, and the law assigned them to Smith, the law made the same assignment before to Hart; and if so, the legal title has never been in Moseley, and he cannot now sue. If the words "guardian" imply a severance of the funds from Burney's own funds, as "administrator" is held to do—and upon the authorities cited—it would then have to be admitted that there can be a guardian in the nature of a guardian de bonis non, to whom the notes would go, as to an administrator de bonis non, in the case supposed. It then follows that the 2d or 3d guardian, (de bonis non!) must have the legal title, and sue in his own name, (for by this doctrine Moseley never could sue, as no estate would come to him.)

Administrators de bonis non do not sue in the name of the executor 314 of the first administrator.

This doctrine is inconsistent with the doctrine of assignment from Moseley, and with this suit. If on Burney's death the paper goes to Hart, and thence to Smith, as the ward's estate, nothing goes to Moseley.

II. The question then is not, what could the heirs of Farmer do? or what could Patrick Smith do? As they are not parties to the record, and the heirs certainly no more bound by the acts of Smith than by those of Burney or Hart—and Moseley and Smith combined can do more than Moseley and Hare combined. The question is, can Moseley recover?

1. The legal title passed to Moseley—or it did not.

1. If Moseley can sue now, some legal right must have passed to him on Burney's death. There is no intermediate state—a man must have the legal right entirely, or not at all. In Mr. Thompson's cases, the words "Administrator, &c.," passed over the whole estate to Administrator de bonis non, and left none in Executor of first Administrator. So on Mr. Archer's supposition, that title passes to successive guardians by act of law in virtue of their appointment.—The whole title passes, if he is correct, or none at all—and unfortunately for Moseley's title to sue, the whole title would pass, not to the guardians, but still further off to the wards, for the land was theirs —as in the cases he supposes, of bond to the Governor and his successors. He says no title could pass to his Executor or Administrator—conceded. But then Moseley cannot sue. See case cited by Mr. Thompson, 8 Eng. C. L., 45, Catherwood vs. Chabaud. The administrator de bonis non took the title, and sued in his own name. See also 1 Salkeld, 306. The title passed directly.

2. If this action is sustainable, then Moseley must have taken the whole legal right in these notes when Burney died. If a right to sue existed, he then had a right to receive payment on them, and charging his account as Executor with the money, to credit the Testator's guardian's account. This was the only thing he could honestly do with the money when he received it. This he did.—When Hart was appointed guardian, Moseley renders an account, crediting Hart as guardian, and debeting himself as Executor.—Hart's receipt paid the debt due from him to the guardian, and also the debt due from him as Executor—and being filed, releases him as Executor —releases Burney as guardian—and on his bond to sell

R. W. Williams, Appellant, vs. W. D. Moseley for the use of P. Smith, Appellee.

315 land. It also charges Hart and his sureties with cash as guardian. All these things he had a right to do, and it was his duty to do. The payment of notes over to Hart, and his receipt might have left open for a long term of years, dangerous question of liability of his Testator and himself. He closed all questions. He made his election. The law was with him. Alston, vs. Munford, 1 Brockenbrough, 278, and note and cases cited, viz: Taylor vs. Deblois, 4 Mason, 131. Pratt, &c. vs. Northan, &c., 5 Mason, 108. Myers vs. Wade, 6 Rand., 444. To which cases special attention is invited.

These things we contend Moseley had a right to do—if he had not, he is estopped from disputing his right vs. Hart—a fortiori vs. Williams. See Lord Denman's beautiful rule as to estoppels in pais in the case of Pickard and Sears, 6 Adolphus and Ellis, 475—cited and approved and adopted by this court in Cotten vs. Williams, 1 Branch, 34. 5 Arkansas, 568. Cheever vs. Smith, 15 Jo., 276. Bacon vs. Chesney, 2 Eng. C. L., 352. Parsons vs. Administrators of Gaylord, 3 Johnson, 464. Coxe vs. Williams, 4 Cond. La. R., 249. "A positive right conferred by law on the doing of a certain act, cannot be destroyed by speculations as to what would have been the situation of parties, if that act had not been done." Nolte et al. vs. Their Creditors, 4 Cond. Lou'a. Reps., 136. 1 McCord, 298, Galpin vs. McKinney, et al., a great case upon the whole subject, the equity of which has not been and cannot be impeached.

This case, and Gray vs. Brown, 1 Richardson, 364, (and the many cases there cited,) and the principle of extinguishment in all fully sustained, are not in the least overruled, or even the doctrine approached in Bellune vs. Wallace, 2 Richardson, 81. In that case there was no question of extinguishment whatever. The two guardians bonds were held to be entirely cumulative, and therefore the last bond did not discharge the first, and therefore the mortgage given to secure the surety in the first bond, was not discharged by giving the last. And the real question in the case was whether the mortgagee (his mortgage being thus held good,) could bring an action of trover for a slave against a purchaser under judgment against the mortgagee, before he, the surety, had actually paid money on account of his suretyship, and been therefore damnified. And it was held he might. Because the mortgage passed a present estate, and performance of the condition must be shown to defeat. There was no question of extinguishment. Wardlaw, dissenting, still con-316 tends that the whole doctrine of extinguishment is in full force.—He dissents only on the main question—whether trover would lie, until the party had actually been damnified by payment.

He admits the continuance of the mortgage, by saying "the proceedings were probably such as saved to the plaintiff in his securityship to the second bond, all the securities he had taken when he signed the first bond." And he goes on to say, "BUT IF" the guardianship had been revoked and a new appointment made to the same man, he would have been held to have paid over the assets to himself under the new appointment, and in discharge of his first sureties, under the authority (which he cites) of Gray vs. Brown, and cases there cited as the admitted law. And which position, so far from being overruled or doubted, is not even alluded to by the court in its decision.

The hypothetical citation of a well established principle, (in a case in which it is admitted it does not apply,) in a dissenting opinion, on a wholly different question, is cited to show that the court, which does not allude to the subject, intends to overrule a whole series of well considered and established cases, which had been before cited and approved as the law by the same court, in the same year, (1845)—the first being in January, the latter in December.—And when Wardlaw, O'Neal, Butler, and Frost, decided the first cause, and only Evans dissented. And Evans, O'Neal, Butler, and Frost, decided the last case, and Wardlaw and Richardson dissented on another point, citing the former case as established law. Can O'Neal, Butler and Frost, be held to have changed their minds, and overruled so many cases, so lately approved, without a word upon the subject, and in a case in which it is admitted the question did not arise? No one could be more surprised than those Judges would be at the citation of the last decision as overruling the whole series preceding. Certainly Bellune vs. Wallace might as well be cited as overruling any other series of cases.

To return to Estoppels:

See also Doe-demise of R. V. vs. Oliver & Duchess of Kingston's case, 2 Smith's leading cases, 439, [30 Law Lib. 105.] Estoppels must be mutual. Hart and his sureties on his guardian bond, and Hart's adm'r would be estopped by Hart's receipt. Even his wards themselves would be estopped by it conclusively.—Thompson's Digest, 201, 36.

If the Farmers sued Moseley for these notes specifically, he might reply that they were paid to him. And it must be a good reply, if he 317 can sue on them. And if sued for the money, he can reply this receipt. The receipt being conclusive between him and any subsequent guardian. And if conclusive for him, it must be against him.—Certainly when suing in the same right. Nor is it evidence made by Hart for himself, as Mr. T. contends. Moseley wrote it—dictated—executed it. Moseley made out the account and rendered it—He accepted it—He filed it—He has relied upon it. It is the sheet-anchor of safety to himself and Burney's Estate.

4. The Record shows that Moseley is no longer held bound in the Probate Office—but Hart. There is a judgment there approving Hart's loose memorandum, so far as it charges himself. The account is "examined, approved, and allowed." This is res judicata —The decision of a court of competent jurisdiction unreversed.—It discharges Moseley as Executor, Burney as guardian, and on his land selling bond he charges Hart as guardian and discharges him and sureties as an individual.—See Steele guardian vs. Glass—1 Kelly, 488.

The recovery in this action by Moseley could not undo all this. If he recovers he holds as his own. He cannot by recovery make the discharged parties again responsible. By not paying over the money he would commit no devastavit. If insolvent, Williams would lose it.

III. The notes were extinguished before they came to Hart's hands. They never came to his hands as guardian. He and Moseley are both estopped from saying they did. When Moseley calculated the interest then due, and charged up principal and interest in an account rendered—he admitted them paid, and that he only then held them as a voucher for correctness of his entry, and when he consummated his act by taking the receipt, or one new voucher for the whole account, he had no longer a right to hold it in any shape. It then became Hart's voucher for the payment for land, and as such he must have received it. Except as such he had no right to receive it.—Hart could not then attempt to set up the extinguished note in his own hands, without fraud.

1. Upon his own securities in the note, who had been discharged.

2. Upon his wards, for whom he had received so much cash, the principal and interest on which combined sum he and his bondmen were liable for interest annually, until they came of age. Thomp- 318 son's Dig., 207.

If the note had come to his hands and been thereby extinguished, he would have been responsible for the amount as guardian, as by his actual arrangement with Moseley; but if as opposing counsel contend, the right of action would have been suspended pending his guardianship, then by attempting to set up this note, when so passed to him by Moseley, he would have committed a further fraud upon his wards, by releasing his sureties on the guardian's bond, (made responsible by his receipt to Moseley)—and if he could have validly set it up against Chaires and Williams, he would be holding for a long term of years at simple interest his own uncollected paper, with all the hazards of death and insolvency in Chaires and Williams, and the certain operation of the statute of limitations in a short time, instead of being responsible for cash received on his bond and security as guardian, and compound interest, annually, and immediate liability at all times to a call for new security, or to disgorge.—Thompson's Digest, 225, sec. 2.

For these reasons, Moseley and Hart's conduct was most beneficial to the wards. It was best calculated to secure their interests. It was such a course as any man would wish pursued in his own affairs. It was the most favorable arrangement which could be made.

Fields vs. Schieffelin, 7 Jo. Cha. 150, [powers and duties of guardians, and nature of their estate fully examined and decided upon.]

We have yet to hear of any disaster. No devastavit is shown. The money is yet in Hart's hands, and no evidence of even a call upon him, or his administrators or sureties. The receipt of the money by a guardian is no devastavit. It is the very thing he was appointed to do. It is only non-payment when required that shows impropriety. See Bryant, guardian, &c., vs. Owen and wife, 1 Kelly, 374—doctrine at large, and confirmed in a subsequent case same volume. The record does not show that they have not collected it. They may be suing now. They might yet sue, and recovery in this action would not be a bar, even when paid. When Hart received the note, it would have been a fraud to attempt to set it up. The only honest course was to cancel actually, that which was already legally discharged.

IV.—1. But Williams is only a surety. His obligations are stric- tissimi juris. He had a right to pay the notes at the moment due, and sue Hart. Could Moseley. after the receipt, have accepted payment? And if he had, could Wiliams, on Moseley's receipt, have recovered from Hart, who had already discharged the note by irrevocably rendering himself responsible as guardian to his wards? If so, Moseley could, by his acts, lawfully put Hart, without his consent, in a situation to be forced by law to pay the same debt twice.

2. Moseley then calculated all the interest then due, and charged himself with it, and was discharged by Hart. Can he now, after Hart's death, make Hart's surety pay him, not only that interest, but all that has since run upon the note, if unextinguished?

3. Hart is dead. If Wiliams pays, his remedy is against Hart's administrator. But his administrator is strictly bound by his acts. He is estopped from denying that Hart charged himself as guardian. He cannot set up that Hart acted fraudulently or wrongfully in cancelling the notes. Hart's administrator is irrevocably bound to the wards, if they sue for the money. If now in court, against Hart's administrator or heirs, could any defence be made to them? And if Williams at the same time claimed on account of a payment to Moseley, the court must decide in favor of the liability to the Farmers, and Williams must lose his debt, by Moseley's act, or he is now released.

Williams has, on the same principles, lost his right of contribution against Tom Peter Chaires. As to joint and several liabilities, see Cheetham vs. Ward, 1 Bos. and Pul., 633. Nicholson vs. Revel, 4 Adol. and Ellis, 675. Cited and approved, 4 Meeson and Welby, 465.

As to alteration—3 Maddock, 120, 221. 15 Eng. C. Law, 44 and 514. Master vs. Miller, in Smith's Leading Cases, vol. 1, 599, American notes.

V.—1. Moseley having acted in auter droit in his settlement with Hart, and now suing on the same right, is as much estopped by his own acts, as if acting in his individual capacity in both cases. He can no more be allowed to do that which would be a fraud upon parties, than he would if acting in both cases for himself.

2. If A. holds B.'s note, and renders him an account, in which the interest on the note is calculated, and the whole interest and principal is added up with other items, and placed to A.'s credit, and B.'s debit on another account, and A. takes B.'s receipt and discharge on the account rendered, and uses it to discharge himself as so much cash on the last account, and gives B. the note which B. cancels, and after B.'s death the cancelled note comes by any accident into A.'s hands, and he sues and recovers the money from B.'s surety, it is a fraud upon B.'s representatives and on his surety.

3. It is not less a fraud, if he does it as executor.

4. Patrick Smith cannot against his will use his name, and make him do that which it would be a fraud for him to do himself.

VI. Moseley can have no greater rights certainly against Hart's surety, than he could against Hart, if now alive, or when he was alive. When Hart was alive, Moseley had not possession, or right of possession, of the note, and certainly no right of action, when it would have been a fraud to recover. Then what sort of a legal title had he in the note? And when and how did he get back his right of action?

If Hart's death could by possibility have carried forward a right to sue on an extinguished note—to Smith, or the Farmer's—it could not carry it back to Moseley as executor.

VII. Nothing can better exemplify the true merits of the case than the admission, "that if Hart had actually paid the cash, the whole matter would have been proper, and no action sustained, though Moseley had at once paid it back."

The law never compelled parties to do so vain an act. It would be strange, indeed, if all the rights of all the parties depended upon so idle a ceremony, ending in the same receipts, cancellations, debits, credits, discharges, rights, duties, and obligations, precisely as we contend they now exist. Common sense has been appealed to as authority. May we not invoke it here, and common usage also?—When two men owe a debt to each other, though in different rights, do they always pay the money, and then pay it back again, or pass receipt and papers? Would not so idle and unusual a ceremony raise a suspicion that some fraud, or cloak for perjury was intended?

R. W. Williams, Appellant, vs. W. D. Moseley for the use of P. Smith, Appellee.

BALTZELL, Justice: 321

This case has been twice argued with a zeal and ability proportionate to its importance and the interest felt by the parties in its decision.

It has received from the court the consideration due to the questions involved and the great principles at stake, and though regretting a difference of opinion amongst the Justices, yet they proceed to give the results to which they have arrived.

A tract of land of 400 acres, belonging to the heirs of John Farmer, was sold at public auction on the 1st of January, 1841, and William W. Hart having become the purchaser executed his five notes with the defendant and Tom Peter Chaires as securities for the purchase money, payable in annual instalments of $960 each on the first days of January '41, '42, '43, '44, and '45. The notes were payable to Arthur Burney guardian of the heirs, and the sale was made under the order of the County Court of Leon County, upon the representation of the guardian that the interest of the heirs would be greatly promoted by the sale, that the lands were renting for only $100, whereas they were worth 10 or 12 dollars per acre, and the legal interest on what they would sell for would be equal to $400.

Burney died and Hart in December, 1842, was appointed guardian. Hart died about March, 1843, and Patrick Smith, who has instituted this suit in the name of Moseley executor of Burney, was appointed guardian in his stead. The counsel of both sides agree that the legal title in the notes was in Burney in his life time, and after his death in Moseley. Defendant's counsel support their position in this respect by reference to Chitty on Bills, 160, 358. "In the case of a bill payable to A. or order for the use of B., payment should be made to A. or his indorsee, and not to B." Other authorities are also cited by them to the same effect. Story on Notes 130, 461, 130. To strengthen his case, plaintiff availing himself of a provision in the rules of the late Court of Appeals "that suits may be brought by a plaintiff for the use of another person named in the process of pleadings," has connected the beneficiary or equitable with the legal interest on the notes. So that there would seem to be no real difficulty as to the form of the action.

The general issue was filed in the case, and various positions are assumed in defence, mostly arising from the fact that the names of defendant and his co-surety were cut off from the notes, whilst in 322 possession of Hart as guardian. Before noticing these, it is proper to advert to grounds not taken in argument either in this court or in the court below, but which have been regarded as worthy of attention by the justices dissenting from the decision of the case. The first of these is, that Patrick Smith is not in fact guardian of all the heirs of John Farmer, but of a part only. Objections of this kind are not in general favored—if made to the person of the plaintiff they should be presented in proper time so as not to surprise—usually by plea in abatement, and the issue thus formed is first tried and disposed of. A plea in bar waives objections that could be presented in abatement, and especially admits the character in which the suit is brought. Archb. Pl. and Ev., 283, 167. 2 Phil. Ev., 447. 3 Ibid, notes, 331. 1 McCord, 468, 470. 15 John., 228.—1 Bibb., 604.

Other objections are also taken, such as that the sale was not made in conformity with the order of the court, and the notes taken differently from its directions. These questions are not presented by the pleadings, and the appropriate time to decide them is when they shall be properly raised or adjudication. If the objections exist there should have been a plea alleging the failure of consideration; but there is none such in the record, nor is it pretended that Hart was disturbed in the possession of the land or that his title under his purchase has ever been questioned; indeed we see defendants have taken a mortgage of it for their indemnity. We therefore decline to notice these points. If requisite it might not be difficult to dispose of them satisfactorily and conclusively.

The main reliance of the defence is on the position that the receipt given by Hart to Moseley paid the notes and satisfied them.—It is admitted that Moseley is discharged by the receipt so far as Farmer's heirs are concerned. The question is as to its effect upon Hart, and it is only necessary to refer to the transaction to ascertain its true character. Moseley held the notes as executor of Burney; but they belonged not to the estate he represented, but to the heirs of Farmer, and Hart being their guardian was entitled to them. Moseley delivered them, and takes the receipt for his own protection. The transaction concluded, Hart obtained the notes, Moseley Hart's receipt. Hart got the notes not because he was maker and through a payment to Moseley; (for it is not pretended that money or consideration of any kind passed) but as guardian. It is difficult to

R. W. Williams, Appellant, vs. W. D. Moseley for the use of P. Smith, Appellee.

323 see how Hart can claim under the receipt, it was Moseley's not his. So far from Hart deriving an interest by the receipt, it is on the contrary evidence of Moseley's having derived an interest from him. So far from relieving him from responsibility it creates a duty, and involves accountability upon him. To make the receipt a payment to Moseley, is to make Moseley debtor to Farmer's heirs, thus destroying the entire legal effect of the receipt, and the design of the parties in executing it. Such an idea was never entertained by the parties at the time of the transaction nor afterwards, and is not in our opinion the fair import of the agreement which is to be taken or considered in reference to all its parts. Hart retained the notes as they were received from Moseley until his death—returned them in his guardian account as the notes of his wards, distinct from cash—retained his own name in the notes, whilst he cut off, or permitted the names of his securities to be cut off, showing that he did not consider them as paid. The Judge of Probate too charged the notes to him separate from cash. But the relation which the two parties Moseley and Hart occupied to the subject we think is conclusive, if anything were wanting. They were co-trustees to the infant heirs of Farmer, Moseley having the naked legal title while on Hart was imposed the duty as guardian of taking charge of the notes, and the money obtained from them until his wards came of age. A receipt by one to the other on parting with their possession would have the effect merely to devolve on the party receiving the peculiar duty and responsibility of collecting them as in the case from Chitty, of a note given by A. to B. for the use of C. C. gets the note from B. and gives a receipt for it, this is no discharge of A. The only effect is to relieve B. of the responsibility, if there be one, of collecting the note. Hart, however, through means of the receipt obtained possession of the papers, and the true question is not whether the receipt constituted a discharge, but whether through this possession, thus uniting the two characters of maker of the notes and guardian, there was in law an extinguishment of the debt.

That in case of an executor indebted to his testator such a result would follow is very fully settled, though we shall find that the grounds upon which it has been permitted to operate are various and conflicting both in this country and in England. The probability is that it is a consequence of the enlarged interest in the estate of the testator allowed by the law at a very early period to the executor already referred to by this court in the case of Colquitt vs. Fauntleroy. In the leading case on this subject, that of Wankford reported in Salkeld, we find a difference between two very eminent judges Lord Holt and Justice Powell, the latter remarking "some books say the action is gone, some say the debt is gone, and some say the debt remains, they will all be reconciled by this, that the debt will be assets," that it was by way of legacy or gift of the debt, and not by release, &c. The Chief Justice said, "as the person entitled to receive it is also the person that is to pay it, that amounts to an extinguishment." Salk., 303.

In Masachusetts the court say, "It is not always a legacy nor a release nor extinguishment of the debt. It is more correct to say that although the duty remains, the right of action is discharged because the executor can't sue himself." Shephens vs. Gaylord, 11 Mass., 269. In New York it is considered in " the nature of a specific bequest of the debt not to be paid unless there are assets sufficient to pay the debt." Marvin vs. Stone, 2 Cow., 781.

Notwithstanding the rule we shall find that an executor could be sued by a creditor of the estate at law always, and charged with his debt as assets. Will. on Executors, 937, 945. Freshly vs. Fox, 9 B. & C., 130.

So also will be charged in equity at the suit of a legatee, distributee or next of kin. Toller, 274. 2 Cowen, 781. 3 Brown Cry., 111. 3 Ibid Par. Ca., 607. 11 Vesey, 90. 13 Ibid, 262.

By statute the rule has been abrogated with us both at law and in equity as early as 1834. Duval, 188. It never was applicable to an administrator in reference to whom it is said "the appointment being by the mere act of the law, and a temporary privation of the remedy only the debt is not extinguished—the action merely is suspended during his administration; but revives after it ceases."—Toller Ex., 349. No authority has been cited showing the application of the doctrine to guardians, and we have been unable to find such ourselves. If applicable it must be by some analogy to the office of executor, and we propose to enquire whether any such exists. The civil law is more full and clear as to this relation than ours, and we propose to refer to it in connection with this subject commended as it is by 325 those two eminent jurists the late Judge Story and Chancellor Kent. "It is equally a provision of religion as of law that those who are deprived of their father during their minority should be put under the conduct of some one who will fill the place of a father as far as possible, and be charged with their education, and the care of their property, who is termed a guardian." Domat, 171.

"His power and authority extends to all that can be necessary for the faithful management of the affairs of the ward—he is esteemed acting for his ward when he rightly manages the estate, not when he wastes and destroys it." Ibid, 171.

"He cannot give away the goods of his ward nor surrender any right he has, nor even diminish it, nor impose on the estate new burdens, nor can he impair, nor render worse the condition of his ward—he has no power but to preserve the property of his ward not to injure or destroy it." Ibid, 176.

The same principles are maintained and asserted by the common law. "The authority of the guardian extends only to such things as may be for the benefit and advantage of the infant whereof he may give an account." Bac. Ab. Guard, 684. Co. Litt., 89, a. 7 John., 557.

He can do no act to the injury of the ward. 10 John., 441.

"The court will not suffer an infant to be prejudiced by the laches of his guardian." 1 Black., 463, n. 11.

"When it can pronounce a contract to be to the prejudice of the infant, it is void." Maule & Sel., 482. 2 Hen. Black. 511. 2 Mason, 82.

He cannot set aside an award favorable to his ward. 4 Bibb, 437.

In law he is the mere bailiff or servant to the infant, and liable to account which an administrator or executor was not subject to except by statute. 2 Bacon's Ab., 687. 1 Black., 643. 1 Com. Dig., a. 2.

Now account lies not for wrong or waste, but only for money paid. 1 Com. Dig., a. c., 192.

As servant or agent he can only discharge on receipt of the money due. Story's Agency, 170, 437. Paley, 262.

He cannot release a debt even to make a debtor witness for his ward. 3 Cond. Eng. Chy., 235.

His powers and duty seem to bear a very near, if not complete resemblance to those of an administrator de minore aetate who "may pay debts of the estate—sell and dispose of the goods if perishable, 326 retain for his own debt—receive debts due to the testator, and discharge and acquit them on payment. But he is only in nature of a bailiff, and ought to account to the executors—has no authority to transfer the property by sale except in case of necessity nor to release a debt without actually receiving it." Toller Ex., 405-6. 1 Com. Dig., ad. F., 1.

There is no power here to give receipts without payment nor discharges without satisfaction—the power obviously results from the duty, and extends not beyond it; it is to guard, protect, and save the goods and property of the ward during his infancy, and turn them over when he comes of age. The moment the guardian attempts wrong or injury the law intervenes to prevent it by declaring his impotency, and the nullity of the act. Especially we have seen that there can be no bequest, gift or other circumstance in the case of a guardian as in that of an executor to create an extinguishment of the debt. Nor is it by any means clear that if the note were discharged by extinguishment as to Hart, the other makers, the defendant and Chaires, would be exonerated by it. "A discharge of one joint maker of a note by mere operation of law, and without any act done by the creditor will not discharge the other maker." 13 Mass., 148. Story's Prom. N., 502.

Again "Extinction of the debt as to the principal, in general discharges securities, except when it arises from causes such as bankruptcy, which originate with the law and not in the voluntary acts of the creditor." Theobold, 73. Brown vs. Carr, 7 Bing. 508. 2 Russ. 600. Other cases relied upon "as precisely in point," are to the effect that "because a guardian could not sue himself, it, the debt, shall be presumed to be paid, and he and his securities on the guardian bond shall be liable." Dudley's S. Carolina Reports.

Literally construed, this authority asserts that if A., indebted to an infant, be appointed his guardian, the debt is presumed to be paid (that is, discharged and settled,) and this is the construction contended for by defendants' counsel. Now it is obvious that if this be true there is no liability on the part of any one; and the principle asserted by the court is directly at variance with their adjudication. But we do not so understand it, nor the numerous cases to be found in the American courts on this subject. In none of them was the question raised as to the liability of the original debtor, whether sued upon the debt in its original shape, or upon the guardian or adminis-

327 tration bond. Can it pretended that to a suit instituted for the recovery of this debt the party could invoke the presumption of payment through his appointment as guardian or administrator as a means to defeat the suit against him? We think not. The question in the cases alluded to was, whether such indebtedness of the guardian or administrator of themselves, were sufficient to make the securities liable, and such liability was asserted on the ground that as an officer he must be presumed to have discharged his duty; and their liability was the result of such presumption. But it is difficult to perceive how a rule of law whose obvious effect is to enlarge and extend a liability, indeed to give new names and further security, can be invoked to impair, defeat and destroy one already in existence. To discharge the principal under such circumstances would be to overthrow the cases referred to: for obviously without an obligation on the part of the principal there can exist none against the security; it would be to set up the doctrine of extinguishment as to administrators and guardians which we have seen uniformly denied from the commencement as to the former, and opposed to every principal and analogy as to the latter.

A class of cases invoked by defendant maintains that where an executor or administrator is also guardian, the responsibility is devolved by operation of law from the securities of the one to those of the other. These go upon a like presumption that the officer has discharged his duty, and that neither he nor his securities on his official bond can excuse themselves from responsibility by alleging a failure of duty. But upon another ground it is clear to our minds. An administrator or executor is the agent or trustee for creditors, legatees and distributees; so soon as he becomes guardian for a minor having money in his own hands, his joint agency ceases as to this by operation of law; he then holds the money as the individual agent of one instead of all his former cestui que trusts. If he gives bond as guardian, his securities become liable for this separate agency, displacing by necessity his former joint action and the responsibility connected with it.

A further illustration may serve to explain: A. is agent for several individuals connected in business; they dissolve and he is made agent by one of those having a large amount of money in his hands derived from the old association; his employment and possession of the money continue under his new relation. It is very obvious that this separate and individual agency supercedes and displa-328 ces the former joint agency and responsibility, thereby creating new liabilities. If a new bond were given, the relation of the securities under the new and old arrangement would necessarily be altered; and such we apprehend is the case with the offices of guardian and administrator. But any way considered we do not see that the law of these cases is applicable to the case of this defendant. Hart was never executor or administrator of Farmer's estate so as to transfer a responsibility from the securities on an administration bond to those on his guardian bond.

It is a mistake, too, we think, to suppose that the securities on these notes occupy a more favorable position than the securities on the guardian bond. In establishing the liability of the latter, it by no means follows that the former are discharged. In the case of Fox vs. Alexander, decided by the Supreme Court of N. Carolina, the guardian had traded a note of the ward's in payment of his individual debt. The ward coming of age recovered the amount of his debt against the securities on his guardian bond; the latter filed their bill, alleging the insolvency of their principal, and praying that the payers of the notes be compelled to pay them in preference to the person to whom the note had been traded; the court say, they (the securities on the guardian bond) have a right in a Court of Equity to stand in the place of the ward and follow the trust fund and recover satisfaction to that amount now in the hands of the defendant or in the master's office." 1 Iredell, 341.

To the same effect is Powell vs. Jones in the same court. Ib. 337.

Reliance is placed on the 40th section of the act of the Legislature, Duval, p. 178. But to bring the case within that provision there must be "a discharge given by an executor, administrator or guardian, of a debt, &c., belonging to a minor." Now we know of no discharge given by Hart to Williams and Chaires except the cutting off their names can be regarded in that light. But the design of the law must be construed to mean not an act of waste or spoilation, but of lawful and rightful discharge. It would be a forced and most violent construction to suppose that the Legislature designed to make an act such as we have been considering, a discharge binding upon a minor and orphan.

Another position is, that "the notes were in fact and in law cancelled and discharged as soon as Williams' and Chaires' names were cut off by Hart, and this, if it were done even through fraud." If a guardian cannot make a contract to the prejudice of his ward, he cannot without payment legally destroy one already made. There 329 is no where within our knowledge a law written or unwritten, a rule or principle of any court professing to administer justice, which permits the improper mutilation or defacing by an officer, of the evidences of title or of debt entrusted to his charge. So far from it, there are prohibitions of every various character, civil as well as criminal, against such profanation. We could not well give our sanction to a doctrine more mischievous in its results or more disastrous to the peace, the morals, and the dearest interests of society. If a guardian may discharge a debt due to his ward by tearing or cutting up the note of his ward, and more particularly discharge a debt of his own by such expedient, why may not all other officers having a trust and charge protect themselves after this fashion, and pay their debts also—and with less criminality on their part, representing as they do the interests of those able to protect themselves; whilst guardians have the weak and the helpless children alone confided to their charge. But if this doctrine is to prevail, what is to prevent its extension to deeds, judgments, bills of sale, and the records of the Courts? Why may not mutilation pay debts evidenced in this manner as well as notes to a guardian, and thus riot and spoil become the order of the day?

But the law is not subject to such reproach. "The principle is well settled," says the late Justice Story, "that the obligor shall never take advantage of his own wrong, and that his own deed fraudulently or innocently destroyed by himself without payments, does not thereby lose its legal obligation; and the principle applies still more strongly where there are sureties." 1 Gallison, 74. 2 Mason, 2. Olcott vs. Rathbone, 5 Wendell, 492. Mitchell vs. Cotten, decided at this Term. Equally clear is the doctrine in cases of notes and bills of exchange. Chitty on Bills, 143. Bailey, 358.

Turning to the facts of the case we find no ground for indulgence favorable to the case of the defendant, or to the action of the guardian. These notes were evidently designed by the County Court, under whose orders and by whose direction they were taken, as a permanent investment in lieu of the land of the minors; they were payable after the long interval of five years, and from all that appears in the record were well secured; there seems to have been no necessity for their collection or a change into other notes, with a view to different security. They might have remained with the guardian unaltered, and his duty was not to change them. If a 330 change had been indeed made in good faith with a view to better security, or even if the securities had paid such as were due, or the guardian having the money in hand for the purpose of payment had returned it in his account to his debit as cash received, there might be a color in the position that the securities were discharged.

But to hold it so, under the circumstances of the case would be to declare a discharge because Hart got possession of the notes as guardian, or gave a receipt to procure their possession from one having their temporary charge or custody, or because somebody else may be responsible for their payment. Such is not our opinion. We hold them to be contracts preserved from injury and maintained in force by a fundamental law prevailing at the time of their execution, acknowledged as well by the Constitution of the United States as by this State and every State in the American Union, operating against every action of the legislature or any other power to weaken or impair them.

The case of Dickerson vs. Lockyer, decided by Lord Loughborough bears a near resemblance to the case under consideration, and we have thought it worthy of particular notice. It was a suit brought by an administrator de bonis non, to recover from one of three obligors on a bond which had been delivered up to him and cancelled. The defence was that Lockyer, the general devisee of the estate of Furze (the original obligee) in trust for the widow and children, (with whom the bonds were left by the executrix) had settled and discharged them. They were due by himself and two others as partners, and on a settlement between him and his partners he delivered them up. The defendant contended that but for this arrangement he would have retained assets from the firm—that Lockyer being the agent of the widow and being in possession of the bonds, he was the only person to whom the money could be paid, and that the delivery of the bonds by the executrix to him amounted to an assignment. The court after saying he was not executor but trustee, and that Bener had notice of the trust say: "they took the seal off the bond, but this is not payment—then what is the consideration? there is none as to the estate of Furz, but it is a personal consideration to the trustee. This would not do as a payment at law. The question in this court is whether the trustee of a bond can without the cestui que trust release the obligor. This is a very particular case for he is debtor with the two others. They cannot by management amongst themselves destroy that security. There was no real payment of the 331 money into the hands of Lockyer as money belonging to the estate of Furze to be laid out according to the will. Three co-obligors in a bond by a transaction between themselves, agree that one shall be discharged and the whole security rest upon the two without the privity of the executor."

It is not necessary to enquire what would have been the case if actual payment had been made, and the money was in the hands of Lockyer, &c., &c. The defendant was declared liable although the court said it was a very hard case, they all meant well, &c., and excused them from costs. 4 Vesey, 40.

Another objection is that Chaires, a co-security was excluded as a witness. But we are of opinion there is no error in this. 1 Greenleaf, 440. 2 Phil. on Ev. 1521, notes.

It is next contended that, as these notes are payable "in current Florida money" the value of Florida money only should be recovered, by which is meant that a depreciation should be allowed. To solve this question presents the enquiry as to the legal signification of the terms "current Florida money." Do the words "current in Florida" qualify the word "money" so as to change its meaning? We think not. The legal signfication is certainly not as contended for. If it be insisted that the popular acceptation is to govern, and not the legal, it would be difficult to establish even then we apprehend that current money means differently or otherwise than that the bank notes or specie shall be current and pass for what they purport to be worth. If depreciated they cease to be "current" wherever the depreciation exists. When this takes place, though the note may be the subject of barter as unsound goods or bad merchandize, it ceases to be money. No longer "a standard by which to measure the value of other things," it is itself subject to measurement to ascertain its own value.

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky, where this subject was discussed and considered with great care under circumstances greatly resembling ours, decided that the terms "current money of Kentucky" mean that kind of money made current by the act of Congress which is the only current money of Kentucky. The same Court in Bainbridge vs. Owen interpret "current money to mean constitutional coin." 2 J. J. Marshal, 463.

The Supreme Court of Missouri say, "gold and silver coin by the constitution of the United States constitutes the 'current money of Missouri' as well as of all the other States of the confederacy."
332 9 Miss., 703. So also notes payable in Tennessee money, and in Arkansas money were held payable in gold and silver. Searcy vs. Vaner, Mar. & Yerg., 25. 1 English, 225. We are then of opinion that there was no error in taking the sum fixed by the note as the true measure of damages.

The judgment in this case was rendered on the 23d of May, and as the term for Leon county is directed by law to commence on the 4th Monday of April, and the term of the court in Gadsden intervened after that period, and before the date of the judgment, it is therefore urged that the Leon court must have been continued by adjournment beyond the term in Gadsden, and that this could not be legally done. It might be safe we apprehend, to rely in answer to this objection on the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Hopkins vs. Lee, in which the court say, "the power of adjourning to a distant day is common to all courts." 6 Wheaton, 106. 4 Cond. R. 22.

We think independently of this, that the power will clearly be found to be by law with the courts of this State. "By the common law at the earliest period throughout Christendom, the whole year was one continual term for hearing and deciding causes; for the Christian magistrates to distinguish themselves from the heathens who were extremely supersitious, went into a contrary extreme and administered justice on all days alike." 2 Black., 276. 6 Jacob L. D., 210.

At a later period the Courts of Westminister Hall were prohibited from transacting business on certain holy seasons as Advent, Christmas, &c., on Sundays and some particular festivals, yet this prohibition did not extend to the Court of Parliament, the Chancery nor the Inferior Courts." 6 Jacob L. D., 210.

At the earliest period of our Territorial existence the common law of England of a general nature, and all statutes of a general nature, and not local to that Kingdom, are declared in force and are continued to this day. Duval, 357.

By a law of Congress it was provided "that the Judges of the Superior Courts shall have power to order extra terms of said courts or to adjourn them to any other time or place when the public interest may require it, and when from sickness or other cause the judges cannot hold the regular terms, giving due notice of the same." Laws of Congress 1828.

Such was the state of our law to the year 1839, the time of the formation of the State Constitution, and the framers of that instru- 33 ment so far from altering or repealing the statute and common law of the Territory in this respect, re-enacted them by that remarkable provision of Magna Charta, "all courts shall be open, and every person for an injury done him in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without sale, denial or delay." Thus by the paramount power has the ancient rule of the common law been declared the paramount and fixed law of the land. It is insisted that because the courts are directed by law to be held on certain days, this is in the nature of a prohibiton to hold at other times. Not admitting the power of the Legislature to abridge the action of the courts, thereby closing them in effect, and denying, and delaying justice, in opposition to the express language of the constitution, we by no means admit that such direction is at all inconsistent with the power contended for. The fact that the power to hold extra terms existed in the Territorial Government all the time in conjunction with this direction to hold Courts on particular days, without conflict and without any supposition of contrariety is a conclusive answer. Indeed the use of the term extra precludes the idea of conflict, it is not a provision for the regular term fixed by law; but for a term beyond it required by the public interest, or when the regular term has not been held. If we are to be restricted to the very words of the law, and because the Legislature has said the courts shall be held on the first or other Monday of a month, as is, and has been the case in all our public acts, be required to say that they are confined to the very day, then the entire business must be despatched on that day and no other, there being no authority by law to continue beyond. But where is the reason and propriety of such restriction, why is it that such a rule is to apply to the courts to whom alone of all the public agents the emphatic language of the constitution has been so specially addressed.

The other departments of Government, the Governor, Treasurer, Secretary of State, Judge of Probate, all transact their business whenever required. We venture to say that there is not a doctrine or rule, or principle, of any law sustaining such a distinction, and that it is wholly opposed to propriety and reason. Can it be pretended that a direction to an agent to transact business on a particular day, or a particular hour of a day, is a prohibition to do it at another hour or another day? We imagine not. If authority were needed, we have it expressly in point. "A question sometimes arises whether, when a 33 statute points out a particular mode for the performance of some act therein commanded, its enactments shall be taken to be imperative or only directory; in the former only of which cases, an act done in a different mode from that pointed out by the statute would be void. A clause is directory when the provisions contain mere matter of direction and no more, but not so when they are followed by words of positive prohibiton; thus the statute which directs the quarter sessions to be held at certain times of the year are construed to be directory, and the sessions held at other times are not void." 1 Smith's lead. cas., 170. Rex vs. Jus. Leicester, 7 B. & C., 6. 2 Ad. & El., 96.

So in Frazier vs. Willey, decided at the present term of this court, "Statutes directing the mode of proceeding by public officers are advisory and not essential to the validity of the proceedings, unless it be so expressed. 8 Vermont, 280. 6 Wend, 480.

We have spoken of the act of Congress of 1828 as operative on this subject. That it is in force it is only necessary to refer to the schedule and ordinance of the Constitution, declaring "that all laws and parts of laws now in force, or which may be hereafter passed by the Governor and Legislative Council of the Territory not repugnant to the provisons of this Constitution, shall continue in force until by operation of their provisions or limitations the same shall cease to be in force, or until the General Assembly of this State shall alter or repeal the same." If any doubt existed as to the construction of that act, a transposition of its terms would remove them; thus, the judges shall have power to order extra terms when the public interests may require it, and when from sickness or other cause the judges cannot hold the regular terms, they shall have power to order extra terms.

By law of the State, "the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts of the Territory was conferred on the Circuit Court of the State." Acts, 1845, p. 9.

We hold then, that the action of the court below, in giving judgment in this case at the time was not illegal nor prohibited, but has the sanction of the constitution and laws of the State.

The Judgment is therefore affirmed, with costs.

R. W. Williams, Appellant, vs. W. D. Moseley for the use of P. Smith, Appellee.

335 LANCASTER, Justice.

This cause comes by appeal from Leon Circuit Court. It is an action of assumpsit brought by William D. Moseley administrator of &c., of Arthur Burney, deceased, who sues for the use of Patrick Smith guardian of the heirs of John Farmer, deceased, against Robert W. Williams on three promissory notes, of which one is of the following tenor:

"By the first day of January next, we, or either of us promise to pay Arthur Burney, guardian of the heirs of John Farmer, deceased, nine hundred and sixty dollars in current Florida money for value received, bearing interest at 8 per cent. from date, this the 2d day of January, 1841.

[SIGNED] "WILLIAM W. HART."

The other two notes are of the same tenor, date and amount, and signed in like manner by Hart, but they vary as to time of payment, one being payable by the first day of January, 1843. The other by the first day of January, 1844.

To the Plaintiff's declaration, the defendant pleaded the general issue of non-assumpsit. On the trial the plaintiff gave in evidence the notes aforesaid, also the deposition of Susan C. Murray who proved that she knew the notes sued on. That she had seen them in Wm. W. Hart's possession, and that they were in his possession at the time of his death, and that when she first saw the notes, besides the name of William W. Hart, they had on them also the names of Robert W. Williams and Tom Peter Chaires. That sometime in March, 1843, Chaires came to see Hart, who was sick. After some conversation between them (of which she heard but little) Hart asked for his pocket-book and a pair of scissors, which she gave him. After Chaires had left she saw several small bits of paper on the hearth, with Mr. Chaires' and Col. Williams' names written on them—afterwards saw the notes and Col. Williams' and Mr. Chaires' names were cut off—heard Mr. Chaires say when at Hart's that he wanted his brother, Green Chaires, to do some business for him which he refused to do unless his (Tom Peter Chaires') name was taken from the notes. Witness says that the consideration for the notes sued on, was a tract of land purchased by Hart from Ar-
336 thur Burney, guardian of the heirs of John Farmer, deceased, of whom she was one. She was Hart's wife—and Chaires and Williams were securities on Hart's notes. Says also that Hart settled with Burney as her guardian, her share of the estate in his hands. Plaintiff also gave in evidence a copy of a mortgage from William W. Hart to Robert W. Williams and Tom Peter Chaires, to secure them for becoming his securities on said notes for his benefit and accommodation. Also three receipts in the hand writing of Wm. D. Moseley the plaintiff, with the endorsements on them, but signed by Wm. W. Hart. One is as follows:
